ST. Joseph's congregation, a branch of St. Mary's, was organized by the late Rev. Herman Joseph Holzhauer in 1855. On February 22, 1855, the Catholic families residing in the northwestern part of the city held a meeting, at which the assistant priest to Dr. Joseph Salzmann in St. Mary's Church presided. Of this meeting Mr. Wolfgang Platzer was secretary and Joseph Phillips treasurer. Bishop Henni had previously recommended the purchase of a site on Vliet and Eighth streets, deeming the present one too far west, but when, on the 8th of March, 1855, the Rev. H. J. Holzhauer entered upon his duties as pastor of the new congregation, the church property was located on three lots, 150 by 150 feet, which were bought on the corner of Cherry and Eleventh streets, and for which $2,500 was paid. On the corner of this property stood a small two-story frame house, 18 by 25 feet. The first story of this building was remodeled for a chapel, the upper story containing two rooms, being occupied by the Rev. Holzhauer. During week days Holy Mass was celebrated in the chapel and on Sundays the members of the congregation attended St. Peter's church. Soon after this purchase was made a small tower was erected on the house and provided with a bell. This bell is now in the steeple of the new church, being retained as a relic of those early days. The congregation at first consisted of fifty families. For a school room the lower part of a neighboring house was rented. This school was conducted by Elizabeth and Franziska Kundig, sisters of St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee.

Vicar-General Kundig, there being twenty-eight scholars in attendance. In the beginning of April, 1855, an addition, 60 by 20 feet, was made to the chapel. This building now served as church and school and was dedicated June 8, 1855, by Bishop Henni; on the same day eighteen persons received the Sacrament of Confirmation. Among the first members who took an active interest in promoting the welfare of this congregation were: Wolfgang

Rev. F. P. Grome.

Platzer, Ex-Mayor Joseph Phillips, George Ziegler, John Kastenholz, Eugene Gmeiner, Stephen Roehl, Henry Marquise, James Kern, A. Kuehne, and others. In a short time the church became too small, the congregation having increased from fifty to one hundred and forty families; so a meeting was held at which it was decided to build a new brick church, and in the month of April, 1856, the work was begun. The corner-stone of this structure was laid on Sunday, May 18, by Bishop Henni, assisted by seven priests, about eight thousand persons witnessing the ceremonies. At these services the Rev. Dr. Paulhuber spoke in German and Rev. Father Donahoe in English. The congregation now made every effort to complete the new building, although, owing to the prevailing hard times and scarcity of money, loans were exceedingly difficult to obtain. The church was dedicated November 16, 1856, by Bishop Henni, although at that time it was only partly finished. The Rev. Michael Heiss, then rector of St. Francis Seminary, preached the festival sermon. Many priests were present during the services, among them being Vicar-General Kundig, the Rev. Donahoe, Rev. Dr. Salzmann, Rev. Dr. Urbanek, Rev. P. Bonaventura Frey, O. M. Cap., Rev. M. Weiss, Rev. F. X. Weinhart and Rev. Joseph Sadler. From this time the congregation of St. Joseph's grew so rapidly that a new and larger school house soon became an absolute necessity. Two years later the congregation consisted of three hundred families. In 1867 a new parsonage was erected and in 1872 the interior of the church was painted and decorated. In 1875 a new brick school was built, 110 feet long and 60 feet wide, costing $28,000. In 1883 St. Michael's congregation was organized by the Catholics living west of Seventeenth street, and in 1889 St. Boniface congregation by Catholics living north of Garfield avenue. In 1889 St. Joseph's Church was partially reconstructed, the front part of the structure being removed and a new entrance built. Two large steeples were also erected, and the interior of the church finished with three new altars and new pews. New windows of burnt glass were also put in and the walls decorated with handsome paintings. The congregation consists at present of nearly one thousand two hundred families, and the pupils attending the parochial school number fully one thousand.

The following societies are at the present time represented in St. Joseph's congregation: St. Aloysius Young Rev. H. J. Holzhauer.

(DECEASED.)

Men's Society, St. Boniface and St. Joseph's Societies, the members of St. Boniface, consisting chiefly of the organizers of the congregation, having recently consolidated with the latter; St. Georgius' Society; St. Joachim's Society; St. Mary Young Ladies' Sodality; St. Anna Society, and the Sodality of the Holy Rosary. An incident worthy of mention in recording the history of this parish is to be found in the fact that sixteen priests have been ordained from St. Joseph's congregation. After the death of the Rev. H. J. Holzhauer, on April 6, 1895, the Rev. F. P. Grome, formerly of Kewaskum, Wisconsin, became his worthy successor, and under his efficient charge, assisted by the Rev. Fathers F. M. Berg and F. Ruhmann, the congregation is flourishing.

The Rev. F. P. Grome was born October 4, 1838, at Wollbach, in the diocese of Wuerzburg, Bavaria. He acquired his classical and theological education at Dillingen and Wuerzburg, and was ordained to the priesthood October 4, 1860, at Covington. For seventeen years following ordination he was rector of St. Francis' Church at Dayton, but in 1877 resigned to join the diocese of Milwaukee. He was then given charge of Holy Trinity Church at Kewaskum, where he remained for seventeen years, during which period he enlarged the church, built a parsonage and sisters' house, and when he left the congregation it was entirely free from debt. After the death of Father Holzhauer, in 1895, he was appointed rector of St. Joseph's congregation in Milwaukee by Archbishop Katzer.

St. Lawrence's Church, Milwaukee.

IN the spring of 1888, the Most Rev. Archbishop Michael Heiss appointed the Rev. Louis Barth to organize and found the St. Lawrence German congregation on the South Side of Milwaukee. In this work Father Barth was greatly aided by the Right Rev. Mgr. August Zeininger, Vicar-General, the Very Rev. Laurence Conrad, pastor of Holy

St. Lawrence Church, Milwaukee.

Trinity, the Rev. Anton Michels, spiritual director of St. Joseph's Convent, Greenfield Park, as well as a number of prominent laymen, such as Messrs. F. F. Riedel, cashier of the German American Bank of Milwaukee, Joseph Knurr, retired capitalist, and Peter and Joseph Schmitt, of the "Columbia," a German Catholic publication of Milwaukee. When first established, the parish consisted of about forty or fifty families, while to-day it numbers fully three hundred. The work of organization was naturally slow, the limited number of families making it exceedingly hard to obtain sufficient funds with which to proceed. However, the people were earnest, and by united and persistent effort, were finally enabled to purchase ten lots fronting on Twenty-first avenue, between Greenfield and Orchard streets. Upon this property they erected a church, school house and parsonage, all of which, including the real estate, are to-day practically paid for. There are now in attendance at the school some three hundred scholars, who are under the direction of five Sisters from St. Joseph's Convent, at Greenfield Park. There are several Catholic societies in the congregation, among them being the St. Lawrence Benevolent Society, Catholic Protective Association, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, and Christian Mothers' Society.

Rev. L. Barth.

Thus the parish of St. Lawrence has continued to prosper and grow in numbers, until recently it became a generally recognized fact than an addition of considerable proportions would have to be made to the church in order that it might properly accommodate the rapidly increasing membership. This addition, now well under way, will be completed in June of the present year (1898), thereafter affording comfortable seating capacity for not less than eight hundred.

The Rev. Louis Barth, present rector of St. Lawrence congregation, was born September 10, 1853, at Louisville, Kentucky, in the schools of which place he received his rudimentary education. On December 7, 1872, he came to St. Nazianz, Wisconsin, where he began his studies for the priesthood. In September, 1874, he entered the Salesianum at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he completed his studies in the classics, philosophy and theology, and was ordained to the priesthood June 27, 1880, by the late Most Rev. Archbishop Michael Heiss.

Father Barth celebrated his first Holy Mass in St. Gregory's Church at St. Nazianz on the fourth day of July, 1880. Shortly after this, he was appointed assistant to the Very Rev. Conrad, rector of the Holy Trinity Church at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Subsequently he was placed in charge of the Cura Animiarum at Pine Bluff, Wisconsin, with its out-missions at Perry and Vermont, in Dane County. He next had charge of the church at Kieler, with its out-missions at Dickeyville, in Grant County, and Elm Grove, Waukesha County. His next appointment was to the pastorate at Waterloo, having also in charge the mission of St. Wenceslaus, in Jefferson County. From Waterloo he was transferred to Lancaster, having in addition the mission at Fennimore, and from thence he was removed to Milwaukee, to assume the pastorate of St. Lawrence congregation, which he has maintained ever since.

St. Mary's Church and School, Milwaukee.

ST. Mary's is the first and oldest German Catholic congregation in Milwaukee, the members at the time of its organization belonging to St. Peter's Church. The founders and promoters of the new church were men of more than local prominence, who afterwards became known and celebrated, not only in the State, but throughout the whole country. Archbishop Heiss, Dr. Salzmann, and Msgr. Batz, the first pastors of St. Mary's, extended their pastoral labors far beyond the parish limitations. The congregation was organized by the Rev. M. Heiss, a man of great erudition, whose labors as a pioneer missionary and attendant of the first Bishop of Milwaukee, Rector of the Salesianum, first Bishop of La Crosse and second Archbishop of Milwaukee, place him high among the ecclesiastical lights of to-day. The corner-stone was laid on April 19, 1846, Whit Sunday, by Bishop Henni. Catholics as well as men of other denominations attended this celebration in a grand procession, the line of march being from St. Peter's cathedral, corner of Martin and Jackson streets, to the corner of Main and Biddle streets (Broadway), where Bishop Henni delivered an address in German and Vicar-General Kundig one in English. On September 12, 1847, the Feast of the Holy Name of Mary, the church was consecrated by Bishop Henni, the sermon being delivered by the Rev. Father Shaw of South Bend, Ind. The church was a two-story building, the lower part being, for the time, used as a school. The first Catholic benevolent society was organized by the men of St. Mary's congregation in 1849, under the name of St. Pius' Society. The officers were: Ferd. Sauer, president; Joseph Hoeger, secretary; Joseph Zander, treasurer; John Grott, Math. Brah, John Mear, finance committee. As rector of St. Mary's the Rev. M. Heiss was assisted in his duties as such by the Revs. M. Beitter, A. Urbanek, Joseph Sadler and Dr. Joseph Salzmann, successively. The latter, who was later entrusted with the erection of a new church (Holy Trinity) on the south side, was an eloquent speaker, and the church was crowded each Sunday with people anxious to hear his sermons. Under the direction of Father Salzmann, the parochial school connected with the congregation was opened on January 2, 1851. During a visit, made about this time, Bishop Henni made overtures to the Sisters of Notre Dame, with a view to the establishment of a branch of this Order in Wisconsin. Among the first of these Sisters to come was Sister Caroline Fries, who afterwards became Superior of the Convent. She also conducted St. Mary's school through the earlier period of its existence. In the year 1853, St. Mary's Young Ladies' Sodality was established. Of the twelve original members of this society Miss Trunzer still remains. As pastor of St. Mary's Dr. Salzmann had associated with him, at different times, the Revs. Fabian Bermadinger, F. Fusseder, M. Gernbauer, P. DeBerge, H. J. Holzhauer, A. Schippert, and M. Wiesbauer. In 1855 the Rev. H. J. Holzhauer was entrusted with the organization of St. Joseph's congregation, and in the same year Dr. Salzmann resigned as pastor of St. Mary's Church in order to devote his entire time to the establishment of the Salesianum. He was succeeded as rector by the Rev. Fathers Paulhuber, D. D., 1855 to 1857; P. Fabian Bermadinger, 1857 to 1859, and Fathers F. X. Etschmann and Tappert. On August 19, 1859, the German Catholic Men's Society was organized, which is still in existence. The first officers of this society were: The Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, president; Rev. P. Fabian, vice-president; Ernst Andree, secretary. Father Krautbauer was president for two years, when he was succeeded by the Rev. L. Batz. In June, 1860, the Rev. L. Batz became pastor of St. Mary's Church. Under his administration was organized the Benevolent Society of St. Peter's, whose first officers were: John Traudt, president; W. Casper, vice-president; J. Hufschmidt, secretary; Joseph Heinl, treasurer; Geo. Haertel, Geo. Hautmann, L. Mayer, finance committee. He also organized St. John's Young Men's Sodality. In 1866 a new schoolhouse was erected in the parish, and during the following year the school in the lower part of the church was closed. The floor was then removed and a second gallery built; on the south side of the structure a chapel for the children was built. The church was now quite well provided with necessary appurtenances, the steeple containing three bells as well as a clock which had been purchased in Munich. A pipe organ had also been placed in the building at a cost of $5,450.36. The entire amount involved in the erection of the church, chapel and school and furnishing of the same, were as follows: Church and chapel, $36,661.42; school-house, $9,629.64; other expenses, $2,210.23; total, $70,552.58. In addition to this the bells cost $2,152.77. In 1878 a new high altar was built at an expense of $2,050, and decorative paintings cost an additional $1,500. The altar piece was a present from King Louis I. of Bavaria. On the twenty-fifth anniversary of the congregation, in 1873, a mission was held by the Jesuit Fathers Pottgeisser, Schnitzler and Camp. On the first day of this mission Bishop Heiss from La Crosse said High Mass, and on the last day Bishop Henni celebrated a Pontifical High Mass. When the Rev. L. Batz resigned, August 15, 1875, all debts pertaining to church property had been paid off. The Rev. P. DeBerge succeeded him, remaining until April, 1876, when the Rev. L. Batz returned again and stayed until 1880. On August 15 of that year he withdrew to the old St. Peter's Church, which he bought in 1875, remodeling it for a residence. When the Rev. Father Batz became House Prelate of the Apostolic See, he was invested with the insignia of Monsignor on August 15, 1882, in St. Mary's Church. On October 18, 1883, Monsgr. Batz celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as priest in St. Mary's Church. In 1880 the Rev. D. F. Thill became pastor of this congregation. He purchased property on Broadway, adjoining that already owned by the church, for which he paid $13,700. A building on the premises was remodeled into a parsonage, the entire expense, including land, building and furnishing, amounting to $25,500. The assistant priests were, successively, the Revs. N. A. Thill and T. H. Stemper. In 1889 the congregation of SS. Peter and Paul was organized by Monsgr. L. Batz, the greater number of members residing north of St. Mary's Church adjoining. On November 12, the Rev. D. F. Thill resigned to become pastor of St. John's Church in Jefferson, and was succeeded by the Rev. H. Willmes as pastor of St. Mary's. At about this time several lots on Milwaukee street were purchased for the new St. Mary's school, the amount paid for them being $37,000. The building, which was consecrated by Archbishop Katzer February 4, 1894, cost $35,000. This institution is run on the free-school system, the means for its sustenance being obtained from a society organized for that purpose in 1892, under the approbation of Archbishop Katzer.

St. Mary's Church and School, Milwaukee.

Rev. H. Willmes.

On April 17, 1893, an attempt was made to burn the church; the fire was laid in the organ, which was totally destroyed, and the entire building considerably damaged. The church, however, was soon repaired, and a new organ was bought, the same costing $4,700. This was blessed by Archbishop Katzer, June 18, 1894. On December 25, 1893, the Rev. Willmes celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as priest, receiving many marks of consideration from the congregation. His successive assistants were: The Revs. J. Pronold and F. Pischery. On April 19 and 20, 1896, St. Mary's celebrated its golden jubilee. Sunday, April 19, Bishop Schwebach held a Pontifical High Mass, and Archbishop Katzer preached the sermon. In the evening Bishop Messmer delivered a lecture, the subject of which was, "The Catholic Church." Monday, April 20, Bishop Messmer said a Pontifical Requiem for deceased members of St. Mary's congregation. The following societies are represented in the congregation: St. Ann's Society, organized October 6, 1844, two hundred and fifty members; St. Pius' Benevolent Society, organized 1849, one hundred and twenty members; St. Mary's Sodality, organized 1853, one hundred and thirty-five members; St. Peter's Benevolent Society, organized 1864, two hundred and eleven members; St. Leo's Young Men's Society, organized October 3, 1893, eighty-seven members; Catholic Order of Foresters, St. Mary's Court, organized May, 1888, ninety-five members; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch 134, organized June 14, 1892, thirty-eight members; Children of St. Mary, organized 1888, one hundred and five members; St. John's Boys' Society, organized 1888, sixty members; School Society, organized October 2, 1892, four hundred and eighty-five members; Sodality of the Sacred Heart of Mary, organized August 15, 1849; Sodality of Jesus, Mary and Joseph, organized under Rev. F. X. Etschmann.

The Rev. H. Willmes, rector of St. Mary's congregation, Milwaukee, was born December 25, 1844, at Reichlingen, Grand Duchy of Luxemburg. His parents were Dominic and Elizabeth (Biren) Willmes. Having attended the parochial school at his native place he came to America and Theresa, Dodge County, Wis., in 1857, where they located on a farm. In 1860, Father Willmes entered St. Francis Seminary, where he acquired his classical, philosophical and theological education. He was ordained priest by Archbishop John Martin Henni, Dec. 19, 1868, and said his first Mass at Theresa on the 25th of the same month. His first field of labor was at Sun Prairie, where he organized that congregation. He remained there till May 12, 1870, when he went to Port Washington. At this place he erected a beautiful stone church and made many improvements to the church property during his residence there of twenty-one years. On November 12 1891, he was appointed pastor of St. Mary's congregation, Milwaukee. Here he erected a handsome school building and made a great number of improvements. December 25, 1893, the Rev. Father Willmes celebrated his 25th anniversary in the priesthood.

St. Matthew's Church, Milwaukee.

THE congregation of St. Matthew's was organized in 1893, and incorporated on April 23, 1894, by the Rev. J. M. Naughtin. It now consists of between five and six hundred members and is in a fairly prosperous condition. Besides

St. Matthew's Church, Milwaukee.

Rev. F. C. Ryan.

St. Ann's Society, the Young Ladies' Sodality and the Children of Mary's Society, the Catholic Order of Foresters is the only other organization represented in the congregation.

Father Francis C. Ryan, present pastor of St. Matthew's Church, was born in Fond du Lac, Wis., on October 16, 1859. He received his education at the Seminary of St. Francis, where he was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1884. He then taught in the Seminary until December, 1887, when he was assigned to Cedarburg. He was given charge of St. Matthew's on December 1, 1885.

St. Michael's Church, Milwaukee.

ST. MICHAEL'S congregation was organized in 1883 by members of St. Joseph's, by order of Archbishop M. Heiss. St. Francis' congregation had prior to that time been organized by families living east of Seventh street, as a branch of St. Joseph's congregation, but its numbers increased so rapidly that it was deemed advisable to make still another division. So, on March 13, 1883, the Rev. Herman Joseph Holzhauer called a meeting of the Trustees of St. Joseph's Church, consisting of John Showalter, vice-president; George Ziegler, secretary; Richard Franzen, treasurer; Seb. Kronenberger and George Fuhrman, Herman Marckwiese and John Eisenbach, to whom he made known the wishes of the Archbishop. The Trustees resolved unanimously to assist Father Holzhauer in this undertaking, and the work of construction was immediately begun. George Ziegler and Richard Franzen, appointed as committee to select a suitable site for the new church, at a subsequent meeting held on March 17, 1883, recommended the purchase of two acres of land on Vliet street west of Twenty-fourth street, and three lots from the estate of W. P. Lynde, corner of Twenty-fourth and Cherry streets. The committee's recommendation was approved, $7,950 being the price paid.

Work was at once begun on a church and parsonage, the ground floor of the former being arranged for the time being for school purposes. The church, when finished, cost $15,988 and the parsonage $2,238.50, the entire amount expended on buildings and real estate amounting to $26,177.50. Of this, St. Joseph's congregation donated $12,369.50; lots which were sold brought $4,808, and St. Michael's congregation assumed $8,000 of the indebtedness and paid in cash $1,000. The new church was dedicated by Monsignor L. Batz, November 25, 1883, the Archbishop being absent in Rome at the time. It received the name St. Michael in honor of Archbishop Michael Heiss, who was the original promoter of this congregation; at the same time it was the first church bearing this name under the administration of the Archbishop in Milwaukee. For some time following religious services were conducted at St. Michael's by the Rev. Philip Vogt, assistant priest at St. Joseph's. At the beginning, although the congregation was both small and poor, the people were earnest and zealous, making many sacrifices for the benefit of the cause and thus bringing about results which proved of unusual and lasting benefit to the Church. On January 3, 1884, a school was opened, three Sisters of Notre Dame having the same in charge. Notwithstanding the severe cold and the bad roads, one hundred and twenty children came on the first day.

St. Michael's Church, Milwaukee.

July 3, 1884, was a day of great event for the young congregation, for upon that occasion the Rev. W. Neu, formerly rector of the Teachers' Seminary at St. Francis, entered on his duties as pastor of St. Michael's congregation. Under the able management of this zealous priest, the congregation grew rapidly. In a short time the surrounding property was taken by settlers. October 24, 1884, the erection of the Sisters' house was begun, land for the same having been bought a year previous by Mother Carolina for $2,800. Then a new school building was begun, the quarters used up to that time being entirely inadequate to the demands made upon them. In August, 1887, the school was finished, the entire expenditure for the same amounting to $10,000, and on September 1 instruction was commenced in the new building. On September 29, the school was dedicated by solemn services. In 1890 an addition to the school was built, costing $9,000. The erection of the new, elegant and costly church was commenced in 1891, and on May 15, 1892, the corner-stone was laid by Archbishop Katzer in the presence of many priests and thousands of people. The sermon was delivered in German by the Rev. Father Holzhauer, and in English by the Rev. Father Meyer, S. J. During 1892 the church was enclosed and in 1893 the interior was finished. The splendid altars, pulpit and confessionals were erected at a cost of $6,000. The baptismal font was made after plans prepared by Mr. Brilmeyer, the fresco painting done by Mr. Klose, while the other paintings were by Mr. Zukatinsky. The beautiful stained-glass windows with which the church is decorated were made at Innsbruck, and cost $5,000. The five bells were donated by societies and private persons. The church was dedicated October 1, 1893, by Archbishop Katzer, assisted by many priests, thousands of people attending. The Rev. P. Rottensteiner, O. M. Cap., preached the sermon. The congregation comprises about nine hundred families, and the school, which is conducted by one lay teacher and thirteen Sisters of Notre Dame, is attended by nine hundred and fifty children. In 1894 St. Ann's congregation was organized as a branch of St. Michael's Church. Since 1888 the Rev. M. Ruckengruber has been rector of St. Michael's.

Rev. Michael Ruckengruber.

The Rev. Michael Ruckengruber was born July 9, 1844, at Wallern, Austria. He pursued a classical course of eight years at the College at Linz on the Danube, and in August, 1866, came to America in company with Dr. Joseph Salzmann and other pioneer missionaries. At St. Francis' Seminary he studied theology for two years and three months and was ordained priest December 19, 1869, by Bishop Henni. His first appointment was as assistant pastor to the Rev. Father Holzhauer at St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee. He then became rector of Holy Trinity congregation at Kewaskum, where he stayed for nine months. There were also three missions connected with Holy Trinity's congregation. In May, 1870, he took charge of the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Barton, Washington County, where he erected a school, parsonage and Sisters' house. Here he had also to attend Holy Angels' Church at West Bend as a mission. He stayed at Barton for eighteen years and five months, after which he became rector of St. Michael's Church in Milwaukee, assuming the pastorate on October 11, 1888. In West Bend he erected a school and Sisters' house and renovated the church, and under his administration the beautiful St. Michael's Church was erected and the congregation brought to a high state of perfection.

St. Patrick's Church, Milwaukee.

ST. PATRICK'S parish was organized by Archbishop Henni in 1876. It was an outgrowth of the old St. Gall's parish, and was formed to meet the wants of the large English speaking population on the south side. The original church was dedicated in 1876, its first pastor being the Rev. Father Vahey. This church, together with the pastoral residence, cost in the neighborhood of $20,000. At the end of three years Father Vahey was succeeded by the Rev. Father Willard, who, however, remained only one year and eight months. His successor was the present incumbent, Father Fairbanks, who assumed the charge in 1881. During his pastorate of sixteen years, Father Fairbanks has done much to improve and beautify the property placed in his charge, besides paying off an old accumulated debt of $11,000. This accomplished, the question of a new church was at once agitated, and to such purpose, that in the spring of 1893 work was begun on the new structure, and on August 27 of the same year the corner-stone was laid by Archbishop Katzer in the presence of a large concourse of people. The sermon of this occasion was delivered by the Rev. F. P. Reilly of St. Francis Seminary, and over thirty clergymen were in attendance. From that date the work progressed rapidly, so that by the summer of 1895 the building was to all intents and purposes completed. This structure is built in Gothic style of the transitional period from early English to ornate Gothic, and presents a most attractive appearance, being particularly distinguished for its large and handsome tracery windows. The church occupies a space of 70x150 feet, and is built of pressed brick, the trimmings being of Bedford stone. The tower is 122 feet in height and is surmounted by a Celtic cross. A row of ornamented buttresses projects from each side of the church, and the roof is pierced at frequent intervals by dormer windows. The entire effect is exceedingly graceful and attractive. The interior is also very handsome and substantial. The chancel is fifty-seven and a half feet in width and the recess occupied by the main altar thirty-eight feet deep. There are also recesses occupied by the other altars on either side. The wood work throughout the interior is of oak, and the pews, of which there are a sufficient number to accommodate seven hundred people, are of the same material. The stained glass windows, noticeable for their handsome appearance and beauty of finish, are the work of the Tyrolean Art Glass company, which is under the direction and supervision of the University of Innsbruck. Three of these are the individual gifts of Fathers Keogh, Fairbanks and Ryan, and the others of prominent members of the congregation, while the large one immediately over the main entrance was given by the Catholic Knights and Foresters of the parish. The main altar is twenty feet high and fifteen feet wide, and the side ones each fifteen feet high and ten feet wide, all being of white marble and white onyx. The steps leading to the main altar are of polished marble and three in number. The total cost of the church, without the frescoing, but including the windows and altars, is estimated at $57,000. In addition to the church, a new pastoral residence was also built, and other improvements made at an outlay of $10,000, thus making the total expenditure not less than $67,000. The present congregation of St. Patrick's numbers fifteen hundred souls, and the parochial school connected with it, which is in charge of five Sisters of Mercy, has an average attendance of two hundred and eighty-five scholars.

S t. Fatrick's Church, Milwaukee.

Rev. H. F. Fairbanks.

The Rev. H. F. Fairbanks was born May 25, 1845, in Leon, Cattaraugus County, N. Y., removing to Wisconsin when but eight years of age. When but fifteen he entered Lawrence University, at Appleton, Wisconsin, where he remained for four years. He completed his studies in St. Louis University and St. Francis de Sales Seminary, and was ordained to the priesthood by Archbishop Henni on January 29, 1868. Shortly after, he was appointed assistant to Father J. M. Doyle in St. Patrick's Church at Janesville, Wisconsin, where he remained for eight months. His next pastorate was at East Troy, which he maintained for a year and nine months, after which he was located at Whitewater, Wisconsin, for eleven years. For the past sixteen years he has been pastor of St. Patrick's. Father Fairbanks is the author of a book entitled, "A Visit to Europe and the Holy Land," which is now in its fourth edition.

Of Catholic societies in St. Patrick's congregation there are the following: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Catholic Foresters, Young Men's Institute, St. Ann's Sodality, Young Ladies' Sodality, Children of Mary Sodality, and Boys' Sodality.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Milwaukee.

THE site on the corner of Bradford and Cramer Streets and Murray Avenue, Milwaukee, upon which SS. Peter and Paul's Church, the school building and pastoral residence respectively stand, was the gift of the pastor, the Rt. Rev. Leonard Batz, to the congregation. The corner-stone of the first building, a chapel, was laid on April 1, 1889, and the building was blessed on August 1 following. Two days later the congregation was duly incorporated, and in the following month a parochial school was established. The corner-stone of the present edifice was laid June 1, 1890, and the church consecrated on April 24, 1892. This church was also the gift of Monsignor Batz. The present congregation numbers about one hundred families, and the school, which is conducted by six Sisters from Notre Dame Convent, is attended by over one hundred and eighty scholars. Of the SS. Peter and Paul's Benevolent Society, which is associated with this congregation, F. Baunholzer is president, Henry J. Surges secretary and Joseph Matz treasurer.

Monsignor L. Batz is one of the pioneer missionaries of Milwaukee, and the only priest who has worked in the diocese for over forty years. He was born February 7, 1826, at Arnsberg, Bavaria. He completed his classical course at Eichstaedt and Munich and his philosophical and theological studies at Wuerzburg. On the 21st of September, 1858, he offered his services to Archbishop Henni and prepared himself for holy orders at the Salesianum. On the 18th of October he was ordained priest, celebrating his first Mass in St. Mary's Church, on October 24. Afterwards he was a professor at the Salesianum for two years and on the 3d of June, 1860, became pastor of St. Mary's Church where, with the exception of seven months and a half, he worked for twenty years. The financial crisis, with which this congregation at one time had to contend, was to a great extent overcome by his special efforts. On the 1st of April, 1879, he was made Vicar-General by Archbishop Henni. During this time the diocese was also in financial danger and it is largely owing to his unwearying energy that absolute distress was averted. On the 15th of August, 1880, he resigned as pastor of St. Mary's Church in order to devote himself entirely to the interests of the archdiocese. He renovated the old St. Peter's Church and made it his home. This building was bought by him in 1875. During the absence of Archbishop Heiss in Rome he was Administrator of the Archdiocese. For his many great services to the Church he was raised to the dignity of Monsignor by Pope Leo XIII. on June 9, 1882. On October 21, 1883, he celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as priest in St. Mary's Church. In 1892 he erected two churches, school and sister house on the corner of Bradford and Cramer Streets, dedicating them in honor of SS. Peter and Paul, where he is now taking charge of that congregation.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Milwaukee.

Lower is the original Church of St. Peter's, used as a Cathedral by Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss, and was erected through the assistance of Solomon Juneau. Was bought by Rt. Rev. L. Batz in 1870 and moved to its present location.

St. Rose's Church, Milwaukee.

ONE of the youngest and most flourishing of Milwaukee's congregations is that of St. Rose of Lima, whose church is situated on the corner of Thirtieth and Sycamore streets. This church is for English speaking Catholics, and comprises all that district lying west of Twenty-fourth street. To meet the demand of the Catholic population which was first settled within that territory, St. Rose's congregation was called into existence during the latter part of 1887, by the late lamented Archbishop Heiss, who intrusted the Rev. P. H. Durnin with the formation of the parish. The newly appointed pastor at once secured the historic old frame chapel known as "St. James Episcopal Mission", as temporary quarters, and there held the first services on Sunday, February 19, 1888. During the summer of that year, the congregation purchased a piece of property 135x150 feet, and in the spring following work was begun on the present church edifice. St. Rose's Church is a Gothic structure, 50 by 114 feet, with an imposing tower one hundred and fifty feet high, and was erected at a cost of about $18,000. The cornerstone was laid on Palm Sunday, 1889. On the first Sunday of September following, the structure was dedicated to Divine services. It is an instance worthy of note that this is the last church at the dedication of which the late lamented Archbishop Heiss officiated. During the same year, the parish rectory was built at a cost of about $5,000. Later on the people bought three additional lots, for which $5,000 was paid, making the present dimensions of the church property 135 by 255 feet. It was evident, however, that this was a move in the right direction, for the increase in the membership of the congregation, during the short period of its existence, was something remarkable. From sixty families at the time of its organization, it had by 1893 grown to nearly two hundred, with every prospect for a steady and rapid growth. At about this date it was also decided to begin the erection of the parochial school. This work, together with the building of the new house for the Sisters, was completed in August, 1893, and the school opened in September of the same year. The present building is a solid brick structure containing four large school rooms, and a hall provided with all the most modern improvements, and a seating capacity of about five hundred. This building cost in the neighborhood of $16,000, and the house occupied by the Sisters, $2,500.

St. Rose's Church, Milwaukee.

The parochial school is at present conducted by the Dominican Sisters from Sinsinawa Mound, with Sister Antoninus as Superior, and has an enrollment of over three hundred and twenty-five pupils. The congregation of St. Rose's now numbers about two hundred and fifty families.

The Rev. P. H. Durnin, who organized the parish and brought it into its present flourishing condition, was born in Milwaukee on August 14, 1855. He received his early education in the public schools of that city. At the age of sixteen years he entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he acquired his classical, philosophical and theological education, and was ordained to the priesthood on June 27, 1880. His first appointment was as assistant pastor at St. Patrick's Church in Milwaukee, where he remained for eight months. He was then appointed pastor of St. Francis Borgia's church at Cedarburg, Wisconsin, and continued as such for five years. His next charge was at Racine, whither he was called to the pastorate of a new parish for the English speaking Catholics of that city. After two years as such, he was then appointed by Archbishop Heiss to organize the congregation of St. Rose's in Milwaukee, which has remained in his charge to the present day.

Rev. P. H. Durnin.

St. Stanislaus' Church, Milwaukee.

THE first impetus was given to this congregation in 1862, by the Rev. John Polak, a missionary priest of Minnesota and Wisconsin. He worked assiduously among the Poles who immigrated to this country in large numbers during that year, and in so doing formed a basis upon which his immediate followers were enabled to advance and strengthen the interests of the Church among people of that nationality. In 1863 the Rev. Bonaventura Buczyaski, formerly a priest in China and Chili, was intrusted with the establishment of the Polish congregation in Milwaukee. With this object in view he labored faithfully, finding it, however, anything but an easy task. Finally his efforts were successful, and in 1866 he was enabled to purchase a church on the corner of Grove and Mitchell streets, which was used for religious services until the present church of St. Stanislaus was built. After the Austro-Prussian war in 1866, many Poles came to this country from Prussian Poland, not a few of whom found their way to Wisconsin. In 1867 the Rev. Father Buczyaski removed from Milwaukee to Berlin, and was succeeded as pastor of St. Stanislaus by the Rev. John Jaster, who remained in charge for about one year. His successor, the Rev. John Rudowicz, maintained the charge for five years. In 1872 the present church, an imposing structure with two magnificant steeples, was built on the corner of Grove and Mitchell streets. The dedication of this church took place in 1873. Father Rudowicz was succeeded by the Rev. Kralczyrski, who remained until December, 1876, when he died. His assistant, the Rev. Hyacinth Gulski, then assumed the pastorate, taking charge in March, 1877, and having for his assistant the Rev. Father Gonski. In 1879 a handsome clock, the gift of Mr. Horace Chase, was placed in one of the towers.

St. Stanislaus' Church, Milwaukee.

For seven years following the appointment of Father Gulski to the pastorate, he and his assistants labored earnestly and successfully together in behalf of the congregation, which under their judicious administration had assumed unexpected proportions. As a result of this, Father Gulski in 1884 organized a new congregation, of which he became rector. The church built by these people was dedicated in honor of St. Hyacinth, by Archbishop Heiss, on April 5, 1884. As successor to Father Gulski, as pastor of St. Stanislaus, came the Rev. Father Hippolite Gonski, his former assistant, During his pastorate, which extended over a period of eighteen years, many important improvements were made to the church property. A new foundation was placed under the church and the interior entirely remodeled. A large and commodious school building was also erected north of the church, which is to-day looked upon as one of the most commodious and satisfactory buildings of its kind in the state. The sorrow of these people was deep and heartfelt when in June, 1895, this Rev. Father, whose kindheartedness and zealous and consistent Christianity had endeared him to everybody, died. Over two hundred priests were present at his funeral services, which were conducted by Bishop Schwebach, who celebrated Pontifical Requiem Mass on that occasion. The pastorate now fell to the assistant priest, the Rev. Szulerecki. The first school established in connection with St. Stanislaus congregation was conducted in the frame building which was erected in 1872. Six years later another school-house was built, and this was in turn replaced by the present handsome and imposing structure in 1892. This school is at the present time attended by one thousand children, who are in charge of eleven Sisters of Notre Dame. The present parsonage was erected in 1880. The congregation now consists of over one thousand families. There are nine Catholic organizations connected with St. Stanislaus, i. e., St. Stanislaus' Society; St. Joseph's Society; St. Michael's Society; St. Francis Society; Young Mens' Society; Knights of St. Martin; Young Ladies' Sodality; Sodality of the Holy Rosary, and Sodality of the Immaculate Conception.

The Rev. Hippolite Gonski was born April 2, 1847, at Neuhoff, in the West Prussian district of Loebau. In 1875 he came to America and Wisconsin, his first appointment being as rector to the Polish congregation at Beaver Dam, which he maintained for two years. He then became assistant to Father Gulski at St. Stanislaus, Milwaukee, continuing in that position for seven years, at the end of which time, when the congregation of St. Hyacinth's was established, he became successor to Father Gulski, who had taken charge of the new congregation. Under his able management the welfare of these people was promoted in every way, the poor especially finding a kind and patient friend and benefactor in him. During his administration he made many and costly improvements to the church property. A vast number of people came to pay their last respects to the dead priest, and all of the Polish Catholic societies of the South Side, together with one thousand school children, marched to the South Side Polish cemetery, where a sepulchre was made.

St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Milwaukee.

WHEN, in 1888, it became evident that the congregation of St. Hyacinth's by far exceeded the capacity of the church, those families dwelling in the extreme western part of the parish decided to organize a congregation of their own. So they bought a number of lots on the corner of Mitchell street and Sixteenth avenue, upon which they erected a large brick building, which was arranged to serve both as church and school. The first floor of this building is devoted to the educational interests of the parish, while the second has been arranged as a church, the entire building, including the furnishing of the same, costing in the neighborhood of $30,000. In 1889 a handsome and substantial parsonage was also erected in this parish, as well as a Sisters' House. And at the present time, although still young in years, the parish property entire represents a money value of not less than $60,000.

St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Milwaukee.

This congregation, which has been under the spiritual direction of the Rev. Vincent Lewandowski since its organization, consists of about four hundred families, while the school, in charge of five Sisters of Notre Dame, is attended by four hundred and forty-five scholars.

Father Lewandowski, the rector, was born in 1841, in Poland, in which country he was also educated. In 1875 he removed to America, to Cleveland, Ohio, and was appointed by the late Bishop Richard Gilmour rector of the Poles in Toledo, where he organized St. Hedwig's and St. Anthony's congregations. Then, in 1885, he became associated with the diocese of Milwaukee, and was entrusted with the organization of St. Vincent's parish.

St. Wenceslaus Church, Milwaukee.

WITH the aid of the departed Rev. Leo John Suchy, pastor of the St. John's Nep. Church, a piece of land was purchased by the Catholic Bohemians living on the extreme south side of Milwaukee in 1883. The spot is particularly well chosen, being in an exceptionally pleasant neighborhood, on the corner of Scott street and Ninth avenue. On this spot a building was soon erected, the first story being arranged for a school and Sisters' dwelling, the second for the church, while the basement was used as a hall by the different societies to which the members of the congregation belonged. Later, it is intended to use the entire building as a school and Sisters' residence. The church was dedicated December 16, 1883, by the Very Rev. Monsignor Batz, several priests attending the ceremonies, and the Very Rev. William Coka preaching the sermon. The trustees of the parish at that time were: Messrs. J. Paulu, Mat Smrz, J. Krofta, Mat Kocourek, and Frank Slivka. In 1884 the parish numbered one hundred and sixteen families, and the school, which opened on January 2 of the same year, had an attendance of ninety-five pupils, who were placed under the direction of Sisters of Notre Dame. Of this young but enterprising parish the Rev. Leo Suchy, who had for thirteen years been in charge of St. John's congregation, became pastor.

The merit of founding this parish, at a time when the incubus of unfavorable times was most pronounced, and where the people at best were of very limited means, belongs to this pastor, who, shunning no hardships and ignoring all obstacles, labored with untiring energy for the welfare of his countrymen. That he succeeded is as plainly to be seen in the material evidences which he has left behind, as in the love and reverence with which his memory is preserved by the members of the congregation. Father Suchy took special pride in the growth and progress of the school, which even to the last proved a source of undiminished pleasure. In dying, this loving pastor gave one last evidence of his affection in leaving all that he had of earthly goods for the strengthening and upbuilding of the parish for which he had already done so much.

St. Wenceslaus Church, Milwaukee.

Father Suchy was born in Bohemia July 20, 1841. He was educated by the venerable Benedictine Fathers in the first Bohemian Convent erected by St. Adalbert in 993. Completing his theological studies at the Gymnasium of Prague, he was ordained in 1867, and there labored as a successful pulpit orator in the Bohemian and German languages. In 1873 he came to America, and having spent two years in La Crosse, where he built a church, Father Suchy came to Milwaukee, where he remained until his death, October 20, 1894. The successor of this lamented priest was the Rev. Charles Wotypka, a theological student in Louvaine, Belgium. Although working in the parish but a short time—less than a year—he was active, and left many traces of success. On January 20, 1886, the Rev. Father Machan became spiritual director of the parish. He was born in Moravia April 15, 1865, receiving his education in the schools and institutions of his native city. He was ordained in Brunn by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Francis Bauer. He at once became active in Prague, Bohemia, as catechist and pulpit orator, continuing in the work until July 4, 1895, when he came to New York. After a short stay there he went to Texas, where the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Galveston appointed him pastor of Granger, Williamson County. He also attended the Mission of Corn Hill, some sixteen miles distant. Ill-health prevailing, he was compelled to move North, where he was appointed to his present pastorate by the Most Rev. Archbishop Katzer.

Rev. Chas. Wotypka.

The parish of St. Wenceslaus now consists of one hundred and fifty families, and the schools, under the direction of Sisters M. Anezka and M. Nepomuka, has an attendance of one hundred and forty pupils. The societies represented in the parish are: St. Wenceslaus' Benevolent Society, F. Saíranek, treasurer; Knights of St. Wenceslaus, J. Rotsedl, president, F. Cerny, commander, Ant. Filip, secretary, M. Krofta, treasurer; Bohemian Catholic Singing Society, Joseph Smrz, president, Jos. Kocourek, secretary, F. Ambroz, treasurer; Ladies' Sodality of the Holy Rosary, Mrs. Jos. Straka, president, Mrs. Husek, secretary, Cath. Slivka, treasurer; Ladies' Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, Mrs. E. Krizek, president, M. Flicek, secretary, A. Friedl, treasurer; Young Ladies' Sodality of St. Agnes, Miss M. Cisler, president, Ann Straka, secretary, M. Uchytil, treasurer; Altar Boys' Society, J. Kappel, president, J. Heller, secretary, and J. Benes, treasurer.

Catholic Cemeteries in Milwaukee.

THE first cemetery plotted in Milwaukee consisted of a piece of ground in the First Ward, and near to the lake, which was fenced in and otherwise appropriately arranged as a burial place for citizens of all religious denominations. At a later date, it was used exclusively by the Catholics, remaining in their possession until 1844, in which year Bishop Henni purchased ten acres of land south of Grand avenue and west of Fifteenth street, which was platted for cemetery purposes, a chapel also being erected in the center of the property. To this cemetery the remains of many buried in the First Ward were removed, among them being those of several pioneer Catholic clergymen. Of course, perhaps, none was better known than the Rev. Father Huebner, a Jesuit from Switzerland, whose original purpose in coming to this country was to found a college; but, unfortunately for the enterprise, he was taken suddenly ill and died within a few weeks after his arrival in the United States. Another was the Rev. Father Beauprez, first pastor of St. Gall's congregation.

When Milwaukee began to show those unerring indications which ever pertain to a growing commercial center, it became evident that the new cemetery was still far from being in a desirable location. This belief was emphasized by the fact that the encroachments made for business and residence purposes were already so far beyond all expectations that it had even in that time brought this burial ground within the limits of the city. Besides this, it was absolutely incapable of fulfilling the demands put upon it for a much longer period, and so a new location was sought for, resulting in the purchase of the present site of "Calvary" by Bishop Henni, who duly consecrated that property on November 2, 1857. This property, which at that time and ever since had been regarded as an ideal location, consisted of fifty-five acres. To this place, also, were brought the remains of Solomon Juneau, and other of the older settlers who found their first and temporary resting place in the cemetery south of Grand avenue.

But the city still grew apace, and, as not less than ten thousand three hundred and seven interments were made in this ground between the years 1857 and 1880, it was deemed advisable to enlarge the property already purchased; and so an additional twenty acres were secured, thus giving to the property a total area of seventy-five acres.

Among the many well-remembered members of the priesthood buried here are the Right Rev. Martin Kun-dig, Father Donahoe, and Caspar Schaettin, each of whom has done lasting and valiant service for the Church. Opposite to the main entrance at Calvary, the Capuchins have erected a branch convent, and at each funeral a priest of the Order blesses the grave and also the remains. At the present time, Calvary is used exclusively by the congregations of St. John's Cathedral, Gesu, St. Joseph's, St. Michael's, St. Ann's, St. Boniface's, St. Rose's of Lima, St. Mary's, SS. Peter and Paul's St. Nepomucene's, St. Patrick's, St. Wenceslaus', St. Francis' and St. Matthew's.

Holy Trinity Cemetery is situated two miles south of Milwaukee, in the town of Lake. The congregation from which this property has taken its name first established a cemetery in 1859, in which year they purchased six acres of land on what was known as the New Road; then an additional six acres was blessed on July 8, 1877. For a number of years this cemetery was used exclusively by all of the Catholic congregations on the South Side; but in 1885 those of Polish birth and descent bought a piece of land south of Holy Trinity, and have since used that as a place of interment for Catholics of their nationality.

The present management, or direction, of Holy Trinity Cemetery is the congregation, who elect a Board of Trustees, to whom are given the immediate charge of this property for a term of years. The first Board thus appointed consisted of the Rev. S. Sadler and Mr. H. Millmann. The President of the Board of Trustees is the Rev. L. Conrad.

Holy Trinity Cemetery is supplied with a nice and commodious chapel, which was built at an expense of two thousand five hundred dollars by Father Conrad, and donated by him to the congregation in 1879, on the occasion of his twenty-fifth anniversary in the priesthood. Beneath the chapel is a lofty and commodious vault, built expressly as a burial place for members of the priesthood. Each year on All Souls' Day a Requiem High Mass is celebrated in this chapel. In addition to this, the cemetery has also been adorned with a remarkable life-like group of the crucifixion, in stone, which stands in the center of the property.

Vera Effigie del Volto Santo di Nostro Signore Gesu Cristo
Che si conserva, e si Venera in Roma nella Sacrosanta Basilica Vaticana di S. Pietro

The True Effigy of the Face of our Divine Lord Jesus Christ.

As preserved and revered in the Vatican Basilica of St. Peter at Rome. Presented to Mrs. Solomon Juneau by His Holiness Pope Gregory IX., in recognition of her persistent and meritorious efforts to Christianize the Indians of Wisconsin.

The Archdiocese of Milwaukee—State of Wisconsin.

CHAPTER III.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church and Mission, Addison, Wis.

THE early Catholic settlers in Addison and vicinity first received religious consolation from the hands of missionary priests. Among those who visited that place in or about the year 1840, was the Rev. Michael Heiss, afterwards Archbishop of Milwaukee. He was succeeded in these labors by the Rev. Father Rehrl, and later by Father Schraudenbach. During these visits divine services were held in the private houses of the settlers. In 1848, however, while under the administration of Father Schraudenbach, the congregation of SS. Peter and Paul was organized, and the first church built. Having completed this work of organization, he transferred his labors to another field, and was succeeded as visiting pastor by the Rev. Father Beiter. After Father Beiter, the Rev. Michael Heiss, nephew of Archbishop Heiss, came, taking up his residence at Addison, and thus becoming first resident pastor of the congregation. In 1865 the Rev. Michael Wenker took charge of the parish. He was a very active and industrious worker, for during his residence at Addison, besides attending to the pastoral duties there, and visiting the missions of St. Anthony and St. Bridget, he also found time to build a new church and parsonage at Addison. When Father Wenker resigned, he was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers Engel, Mehlmann, Moes, Wernich, Jansen, John Decker, Salick, and since June, 1890, the present incumbent, the Rev. Pancratius August Schleier.

The congregation of SS. Peter and Paul now numbers some one hundred and five families, and the parochial school, which was founded in 1845 and is at present conducted by three Franciscan Sisters from Milwaukee, has a regular attendance of about sixty scholars. Of Catholic organizations in this congregation there is but one, a Married Ladies' Society.

The mission of St. Anthony's near Allentown, Washington County, Wisconsin, which is also attended by the resident pastor at Addison, was first visited some fifty years ago by the priest from St. Lawrence. The congregation, however, was organized and the first church built in 1855. When the Rev. Michael Heiss became rector of SS. Peter and Paul's the mission was attended from that parish, as it has been regularly ever since. The congregation belonging to the mission is in a fairly prosperous condition, and now possesses a substantial stone edifice, which was erected in the year 1873. The mission at present is comprised of sixty-eight families, most of whom are descendants of early emigrants from Bavaria and Prussia. The school attached to this mission is conducted by two Franciscan Sisters, and has an average attendance of sixty-five scholars. There are two societies connected with the mission, one for men and one for ladies.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Addison, Wis.

The Rev. Pancratius August Schleier was born May 12, 1835, at Oberthulba, Diocese of Wuerzburg, Bavaria.

Rev. P. A. Schleier.

He was ordained to the priesthood August 8, 1858, at Wuerzburg, and came to the United States in 1870, was rector of St. Ann's Church, Calumet County, Wisconsin, for fifteen years, then had charge of St. Mary's Church at Sullivan, Jefferson County, and since 1890 has been in charge of the parish of SS. Peter and Paul at Addison, Washington County, Wisconsin.

St. Joseph's Church, Alverno, Wis.

ST. Joseph Church, at Alverno, Wis., was blessed October 18, 1874, from which time it was regularly attended by the Rev. Joseph Fessler and his assistants, of Manitowoc, until March 19, 1878, when the reverend father became its resident pastor. In September, 1880, Father Fessler removed to Le Roy, Wis., his brother, the Rev. George Fessler, succeeding him as resident pastor at Alverno. During his pastorate, Father Fessler built an addition as well as a steeple to the church, purchased three bells, and added many other improvements to the structure. He died May 28, 1885, lamented by all.

Father A. J. Gerhard was the next to succeed to this pastorate, remaining until September, 1885, when he accepted a professorship at St. Thomas Theological Seminary, at St. Paul, Minn. Following Father Gerhard, came the Rev. I. P. Van Treeck, who was succeeded by the Rev. H. Niehaus, December, 1887. In

St. Joseph's Church, Alverno, Wis.

February 1888, the Rev. P. H. Welbes became successor to the charge. It was during his incumbency of two years that an addition to the Franciscan Convent was made. From July 10, 1890, to November 16, 1892, the Rev. M. Oberlinkels had charge of the congregation, the Rev. N. Dieringer.

Rev. Norbert Dieringer being his successor and present pastor of the congregation, which consists at this time of about 325 members. The only Catholic Society in this parish is that of the Confraternity of Christian Mothers, of which Mrs. Margeret Backhaus is treasurer.

The present pastor of St. Joseph's congregation, the Rev. Norbert Michael Aloysius Louis Dieringer, was born at Theresa, Dodge County, Wisconsin, on April 4, 1858. His education was acquired in the Catholic school at the same place, and he made his first Holy Communion there on May 22, 1868. In September, 1872, he entered St. Francis Seminary, was ordained by the Most Rev. M. Heiss to subdeaconship, March 13, 1880; to deaconship, June 29, 1880; and to priesthood, April 3, 1881, celebrating his first Mass at Theresa, Wis., on April 17 of the same year.

During his residence at St. Francis, Father Dieringer was professor in the Salesianum, from February, 1880, to June, 1881, and in the Pio Nono from Christmas, 1880, till the same time. He removed to Caledonia, Racine County, Wis., June 2, 1881, and from thence to St. George, Sheboygan County, October 12, 1887. He became pastor of his present charge November 16, 1892.

St. Martin's Church, Ashford, Wis.

St. Martin's Church, Ashford, Wis.

THE Parish of St. Martin's, Ashford, Fond du Lac County, was established in 1847 with the Rev. Michael Beitter as first pastor. He was succeeded in November, 1855, by Father Casper Rehrl, and he in December, 1864, by Father August Durst. Then followed the Rev. F. Spath, September, 1865, whose successor, Father H. J. Muckerhaide, was appointed in August, 1866. The pastorate was next assumed by the Rev. A. Michels, who entered upon his duties in April, 1869, but was succeeded by the Rev. J. Wellér in March, 1870. In February, 1877, Father Spath again took charge, remaining until June, 1881, when Father Peter Frieden became the pastor. Then came the Rev. B. Nuttman, from June, 1884, to November of the same year; Rev. J. H. Korfhage, from November, 1884, to October, 1886; Rev. Mathaeus Heigl, October, 1886, to October, 1890; Rev. B. Nuttman, 1890, to September, 1896, at which time the present pastor, Father Henry Blum, was appointed. The congregation consists of about seventy to seventy-five members. There is a parochial school in connection with this church, which is conducted by three Sisters of St. Agnes from Fond du Lac. There are seventy-five scholars.

The Rev. Henry Blum, present resident pastor of St. Martin's, was born in Suerth, near Cologne, in the Province of the Rhine, October 28, 1864. His earlier studies were pursued at the Kaiser Wilhelm Gymnasium, at Cologne, after which he took a course in modern languages at the College Episcopale in Ruremonde, Holland. He then came to America in 1882 and took a four years' course in philosophy and theology at the Salesianum, St. Francis, Wisconsin, where he was ordained June 24, 1887.

Rev. Henry Blum.

There are a number of Catholic societies in the parish of St. Martin's, among them being the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Ladies' Society, Young Ladies' Sodality, Young Men's Society and St. Joseph's School Society.

St. Peter's Church, Ashton, Wis.

THE first Catholic church was built at Ashton, Dane County, Wisconsin, in 1861, the same being attended at stated intervals by pastors from the surrounding parishes. Some years later the congregation was given a resident pastor of its own, the following succeeding each other in that position: The Rev. Fathers Michael Deisenrieder, F. X. Sailer, O. P., J. A. Long, A. Kieser, under whose administration the church was enlarged, J. Decker, G. Wuelffing, and John N. Schmidt. At the present time the congregation comprises between sixty and seventy families, while the parochial school connected with the church has an average attendance of not less than fifty scholars. Of Catholic societies in this parish there are the Married Ladies' Sodality, the Young Men's Society, and the Young Ladies' Sodality.

St. Peter's Church, Ashton, Wis.

The Rev. August Gardthaus, present incumbent, was born at Osnabrueck, Kingdom of Hanover, Germany, in 1838. Having completed his classical education at the Gymnasium Carolinum in his native city, he continued his studies for the priesthood at Munich and Muenster, and was ordained priest at the Cathedral in Osnabrueck in 1863. Twelve years later he emigrated to America on account of the so-called "Kultur-Kampf." After serving actively in different dioceses of the United States, he entered the Milwaukee diocese in 1881, and has had charge of St. Peter's at Ashton since August 21, 1896.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Barton, Wis.

THE congregation of the Immaculate Conception at Barton, Washington County, Wisconsin, was organized on September 12, 1857. Then for a considerable period following, as also prior to that time, the Catholics living in and around Barton were attended by either some of the traveling missionary fathers or resident priests in other localities. Among these was the Rev. Casper Rehrl, who was the first to celebrate Mass in the original church built at Barton. After him Father Pastorah of St. Peter's attended the place as a mission, and following him was the Rev. P. Wickert of Elm Grove, who, unfortunately, died somewhat suddenly after a brief pastorate. Then the Rev. Father Arnold assumed the duties, but was shortly after replaced by the Rev. B. Reindl, who remained from 1861 to 1871. For one month following the departure of Father Reindl the Rev. Father Schilling was pastor, and then came the Rev. M. Ruckengruber, whose residence extended over a period of nearly nineteen years. Then for three years and a half the Rev. P. J. Stupfel remained at Barton, the three years following being taken up by the Rev. J. H. Hellstern. The present pastor, the Rev. Michael Wenker,[1] took charge of this congregation on October 16, 1896. Of the many different improvements made on the church property in Barton since the organization of that parish may be mentioned the brick parsonage built by Father Ruckengruber at an expense of $3,500 and the school and sisters' dwelling, also built by him, which cost $8,400. As a further evidence of the exceedingly healthy and prosperous condition of this congregation it may not be amiss to mention the fact that the parish owns a block of ten lots in one of the finest locations in Barton, on which it is proposed, at a not very remote date, to erect a handsome new church, for which $3,000 in cash is already on hand. The congregation of the Immaculate Conception numbers ninety-eight families, and the school connected with it has an enrollment of ninety-nine scholars who are under the supervision of three Sisters of Notre Dame. The principal Catholic organization in this congregation is St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, which was organized on November 18, 1867. Of this, Mr. Wenzel Herbst is president; August G. Schmidt, secretary, and Andreas Schmidt, treasurer.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Barton, Wis.

The Rev. Michael Wenker,[1] rector of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, was born in Alsace, France, September 26, 1839, and is a son of Sebastian and Mary Wenker, who, with their family, emigrated to the United States in 1843. On arriving, they almost immediately came West, finally settling in the town of Clyman, Dodge County, Wisconsin. Young Michael spent most of his boyhood days in the manner usual to farmer lads. Somewhat later, he attended school at Jefferson, Wisconsin, for twelve months, after which he attended Notre Dame University, Indiana, for several terms. He then went to Montreal, Canada, remaining at the Grande Seminaire in that city for a considerable period, after which he entered the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he completed his theological course and was ordained a priest by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni on November 5, 1865. After ordination he was appointed to the charge of the parish of SS. Peter and Paul's at Addison, Washington County, where he remained for four years and eight months. He was then transferred to Newburg, from which place, some six months later, he was called as instructor to St. Francis Seminary As pastor at Hartford he spent ten years and a similar period at Kenosha. From the latter place he was transferred to his present pastorate at Barton. During his residence at Addison Father Wenker was instrumental in the erection of the present church and parsonage, which cost some $13,000. His work is also noticeable in Hartford, where he built a handsome $12,000 church, and again at Kenosha, where a $4,000 Sisters' house was erected during his administration.

Rev. M. Wenker.
(DECEASED.)

(1) Died March 12, 1898.

St. Michael's Church, Beaver Dam, Wis.

THE Polish congregation of St. Michael's at Beaver Dam, Dodge County, Wisconsin, was established in the year 1875, when the people of that nationality who had previously belonged to St. Mary's Church erected a church and school of their own. The first pastor to administer to the spiritual needs of this congregation was the Rev. Father Gorski, whose successor was the Rev. Father Rodowiczki. Then came in succession the Rev. Fathers Rogozinski, who remained for three years; Dumbrowski, two years; John Zaritowski, one year; Zielinski, three and one-half years—he built the present school house; Barcywski, one year; Skulaski, Greenholz and the present incumbent, the Rev. Father Zarenczny.

St. Michael's Polish Church, Beaver Dam, Wis.

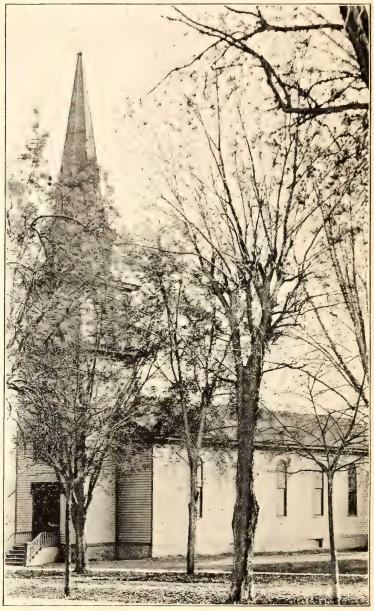
At the present time the congregation consists of about one hundred and twenty-five families. The parochial school, which is under the direction of a lay teacher, is attended by one hundred and twenty-five scholars. The church, a comfortable and substantial building, is of brick throughout.

St. Patrick's Church, Beaver Dam, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Patrick's was organized at Beaver Dam in 1860, by the Rev. J. Deberge. Father Deberge remained there until 1866, when he was succeeded by the Rev. F. Fusseder, who occupied the pastorate for two years. In 1868, the Rev. J. E. Allen assumed the duties as first resident pastor, being followed by Father John Vahey, who, however, remained but a short while, being succeeded in the same year by the Rev. Dennis Tierney. This pastor remained in the same charge until 1871, when the Rev. John Buckley was appointed, he being followed by the present pastor, the Rev. Robert Wall, in 1892. The present congregation consists of about 500 members. Of Catholic societies there are three: Catholic Order of Foresters: Chief Ranger, Thomas Hassett; F. Kebler, vice-chief ranger; M. Gillio, recording secretary; Jacob Bun, financial secretary, and John McDermott, treasurer. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin



St. Patrick's Church, Beaver Dam, Wis.

Branch No. 156: P. Spellman, president; P. H. Malone, vice-president; James Donovan, recording secretary; James Welch, financial secretary and J. P. McGill, treasurer. St. Aloysius' Society: William Nugent, president; James Sullivan, vice-president; William Manley, secretary, and James Christ, treasurer. All of these societies are in an active and flourishing condition.

The Rev. Robert Wall, present pastor of St. Patrick's congregation, was born at Highland, Wisconsin, January 11, 1856. He gained an excellent primary education in the public schools at that place, and in order to thoroughly fit himself for the duties of an active and useful life, he, in the fall of 1873, entered the University of Wisconsin, where he pursued his studies for two years. The succeeding four years he spent in teaching school at Highland, the last year assuming the duties as principal of the High School. In the fall of 1879, feeling a strong inclination toward the priesthood, he entered the seminary at St. Francis, where he completed his course of studies in less than eight years, and was ordained priest by Archbishop Heiss, on the 24th of June, 1887. The first year of his ministry was spent at St. James' Church, Kenosha, where by the untiring zeal he manifested for the welfare of his flock, he commanded the love and respect of all. In August, 1888, he was appointed pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Doylestown, where he accomplished much toward suppressing the evils of intemperance, improving the Church property, and both by word and example instilling into the minds of the people their duty to their fellow-men and their Church. During the month of May, 1892, Father Wall was appointed to the rectorate of St. Patrick's parish at Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, where, by persistent and zealous effort he has accomplished much and lasting good for the cause of Christianity and welfare of the people entrusted to his care; indeed, the results of his labors give to the careful observer irrefutable proof of his well-doing. Father Wall is unassuming in his manner, easy of approach, liberal in his views, loyal to his country, charitable to the poor and a strong advocate of temperance.

Rev. R. Wall.

St. Peter's Church, Beaver Dam, Wis.

THIS congregation was organized by the Rev. Martin Kundig, under whose direction the first Catholic church at Beaver Dam was built. Previous to this time, however, in 1853, the Rev. M. Haider celebrated the first Mass at this place in Frank Liebenstein's private dwelling. After the erection of the church the Rev. M. Gernbauer was appointed pastor of the congregation. During his residence at Beaver Dam a parsonage was built. As successors to Father Gernbauer came the Rev. Fathers James Stehle, Seif, Marschal, Schraudenbach and Deberge; the latter pastor built the present church in 1862 and also organized the parochial school, which he placed in charge of Sisters from the Convent of Notre Dame, Milwaukee. He also purchased the realty at present owned by the church and upon which the building stands. His successor was the Rev. Father Fusseder, who assumed the charge in 1865. By him the present school house was built at an outlay of $8,000. Then the Rev. Joseph Dreis was appointed to the charge, which he assumed in 1876. Among improvements made by this pastor were a large and commodious parsonage, sisters' dwelling house and an addition to the church. The present pastor, the Rev. N. M. Zimmer, was appointed in 1893. While up to the present time no further changes have been made to the church property, it is wholly probable, if times permit, that in the near future a large and more appropriate church edifice will be erected by this congregation. The membership now comprises some two hundred and forty families. The parochial school, having four divisions, is under the direction of six School Sisters of Notre Dame and the average attendance is two hundred and seventy scholars. Of Catholic societies in the congregation of St. Peter's there are a Ladies' Altar Society, organized in 1855: president, Mrs. P. Roedl; secretary, Mrs. Adam Herkert; treasurer, Mrs. H. Zeimet; St.

St. Peter's Church, Beaver Dam, Wis.

St. Peter's School and Parsonage, Beaver Dam, Wis.

Joseph's Benevolent Society, organized in 1869: president, M. A. Jacobs; secretary, Jacob Beers; treasurer, Peter Veling. Young Men's Benevolent Society: president, Joseph Fistner; secretary and treasurer, Andrew Mirlach. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch No. 48; membership one hundred and twenty-six: president, John Miltchen; secretary, John Zweck; treasurer, Peter Gocker; Young Ladies' Sodality, Miss Theresa Fischer, president; Miss Ida Roedl, secretary; Miss Anna Petri, treasurer. Confraternity of the Sacred Heart, two hundred and sixty members.

There is a mission of St. Mary's some short distance from Beaver Dam, which is attended by the pastor of St. Peter's.

The Rev. N. M. Zimmer was born in Menomonee Falls, Washington County, Wisconsin, in 1848. After acquiring an ordinary education at the schools in that locality he entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, completed a thorough course in the necessary branches and was ordained to the priesthood at that place on December 17, 1870, by the Right Rev. John Martin Henni.

Rev. N. M. Zimmer.

St. Mary's Church, Belgium, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary's was established nearly fifty years ago by the Rev. Fathers Hubert Laufhuber and Gernbauer. They were succeeded by the Revs. M. De Becke, Francis Xavier Sailer, O. S. Norbert, Michael Obermueller, Michael Deisenrieder, F. Fusseder, A. Rasch, Father Rief, P. Fabian, Bermadinger, O. M. Cap., J. Friedinger, J. Firbes, C. Schaettin, T. Metzger, F. X. Sailer, Peter Frieden, Anton Leitner, Anselm Lauthner, O. S. B., Henry Stemper, Louis Peschong, and the present pastor, Father M. Oberlinkels. During the pastorate of Father Lauthner, the church was struck by lightning (July 1884) and totally destroyed. He built a new church the same year, which was finished by his successor, who also built a school-house and Sisters' residence. Father Louis Peschong also made some valuable improvxements and among other things erected a new parsonage. The congregation at present consists of a hundred and thirty-five families. The parochial school is conducted by three Sisters of St. Dominic, who have charge of some hundred and twenty scholars. Besides a Married Ladies' and Young Ladies' Sodality, a branch of the Catholic Knights is also represented in this congregation.

St. Mary's Church, Parsonage and School, Belgium, Wis.

The Rev. M. Oberlinkels was born at Hosingen, Grand-Duchy of Luxemburg, on February 24, 1845. Receiving his education in the schools of his native country and in the American college, Louvain, Belgium, he came to America in October 1875 and was ordained to the priesthood on May 14, 1876. He has been pastor of his present charge at Belgium since November 16, 1892.

St. Mathias' Church, Beloit Road, Wis.

IT was as early as the year 1845 that the first Catholic settlers came and took up their residence in this vicinity. For some time following, these people were entirely without the aid of spiritual assistance, the first services of which any account is given being held by the Rev. Father Schraudenbach. The Rev. Fathers Martin Kundig and Keppler also visited there, saying Mass and administering the Sacraments in the homes of Messrs. H. Sauers, W. Fusenich and Peter Trimborn. With all the drawbacks pertaining to frontier life, however, the people exhibited much anxiety for their spiritual welfare, as well as for that of the educational interests of their children. The latter fact is particularly emphasized by their action in establishing a school in the settlement—long before any church was built—which, for want of better accommodations, was held in Joseph Schmit's cow barn and William Kurth's house. When Father Kundig ceased to visit these people, they were attended for a period of time by the Rev. Frank Kendeler, under whose administration and direction the first church, a frame structure, 51x32 feet, was erected in 1851, and dedicated on June 26 of the same year by Archbishop Henni. The land upon which this church was built, some three acres in extent, was donated to the congregation for that purpose by Joseph Schmitz, Herman Sauer and Gebhard Zingsheim. At the same time the congregation was organized, William Jordan, John J. Palmerschien, William Fusenich, Jacob Jaeger, Henry J. Jochemich, H. Schloemmer, Mr. Campmann and Adam Annen being appointed as trustees. Father Kendeler was succeeded by the Rev. Father M. De Becke, from October 1, 1855, to January, 1856; the Rev. J. Maly, from February, 1856, to October, 1857; the Rev. F. X. Pfaller, from October, 1857, to July, 1859; the Rev. John Pollack, from 1859 to

St. Mathias' Church, Beloit Road, Wis.

July, 1860—he resided in another parish; the Rev. John Weikmann, from October, 1860, to October 14, 1861—he built an addition of twenty-two feet to the church; the Rev. Father H. Camenzino, from October 14, 1861, to January, 1862; Father Kieser, from January, 1862, to July 6, 1866—he built a residence for the Sisters having charge of the school; Father Korfhage, from July 6, 1866, to October 6, 1867—he built a new school house in 1867; Father Friedinger, from May until the end of July, 1868; the Rev. Father J. Kramer, from July to September, 1868; the Rev. Anton Michels, from November, 1868, to February, 1869; Father Muckerheide, from March, 1869, to May, 1870; the Rev. L. Neumeier, from May to September, 1870; the Rev. J. Jaster, for two months; the Rev. Catejan Krauthan, O. M. C., from 1872 to September, 1875; the Rev. J. M. Buergler, from August 28, 1875, to September, 1877; the Rev. Bonaventura Meyer, O. M. C., from September, 1877, to October, 1878; Father P. Nicolaus, O. M. C., in 1879; the Rev. O. Beck, from March, 1879, to October, 1881; the Rev. Hubert Jansen, from January, 1882, 1893; the Capuchin Fathers, during the six months of the latter year, and from July 13, 1893, until the present time, the congregation has been under the administration of the Rev. B. July. The present church of St. Mathias was erected in 1893, under the direction of the Rev. Herbert Jansen, the corner-stone being laid by Monsgr. L. Batz, on June 17th, and the building dedicated by him on November 28th of the same year. The entire cost of the same when completed was $13,500. Some of this amount, and whatever outstanding obligations there were in connection with the structure and improvements made to it, were paid for in 1894. The present parsonage, a roomy and comfortable brick-veneered building, was completed by the Rev. Cajetan Krauthan in 1870 at a cost of $1,800. Of recent years improvements have been made on this building amounting to $300, and on the cemetery property. In 1895 the present school house, a two-story frame building, 40x60 feet, was built at a cost of $3,500.

St. Mathias' School, Beloit Road, Wis.

The congregation of St. Mathias at the present time consists of about seventy families, and the parochial school, which is in charge of Franciscan Sisters, has a regular attendance of about seventy scholars. The pastor of this congregation also has charge of the Holy Sacrament mission, which is located at some distance from the parish on the Janesville plankroad. Of Catholic organizations connected with St. Mathias', there are: St. Mathias' Society for Married Men; St. Ann's Society for Married Women, and a Young Ladies' Sodality of the Blessed Virgin.

Rev. B. July.

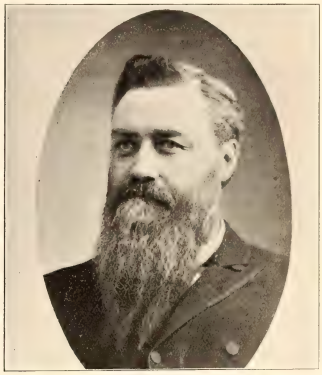
The Rev. B. July was born on the 4th day of June, 1865, in the town of Saukville, Ozaukee County, Wisconsin. He received his primary education in the parochial school at Saukville, which he continued to attend for several years. When a lad of fifteen years, he obtained his first instruction in Latin from the Rev. J. A. Albers, then rector of Saukville parish, under whose guidance he remained until September 8, 1881, when he entered St. Francis Seminary, where he was at once admitted into the second Latin class. Completing a full course at the Seminary, he was ordained to the priesthood on August 13, 1889, his first appointment following being that of assistant at St. Joseph's at Racine, of which the Rev. A. Foeckler was pastor. From there he went to Granville, Wisconsin (December 13, 1889), whence he attended St. Michael's and Mequon (St. James') as missions. He left Granville to assume his present pastorate on July 11, 1893.

St. Thomas' Church, Beloit, Wis.

THE first Catholic services of which any record at all is made in Rock County, were held at Beloit in the year 1846, by the Rev. Father McKernan, who celebrated Mass in the house of Captain Powers. At this time the Catholic community was limited to five families. Of the history of the Church for the following seven years, nothing is given, neither has it been possible to obtain a list of the priests who visited the Catholics at Beloit during that period. However, in May, 1853, the Rev. Father McFaul took charge of this congregation, attending to their spiritual wants until June of the following year. For three months succeeding his departure, Father Kundig had charge of the congregation, when Father Norris assumed the pastorate, maintaining the same until January 1, 1856. Then for two months Father Kundig came again to Beloit, and at the expiration of that time Father Norris assumed the pastorate, remaining this time until February, 1859. His successor was Father Riordan, who was succeeded in August, 1859, by Father Smith. He remained until May, 1862, when Father Herman was appointed, remaining until June, 1866. Then Father Sullivan became the pastor and as such he remained until June, 1883, when he died, and the present incumbent, the Rev. M. J. Ward, was appointed. The first

St. Thomas' Church, Beloit, Wis.



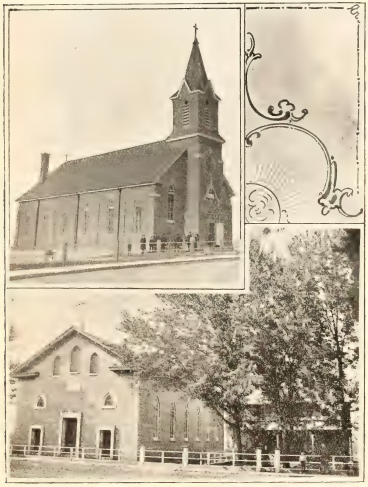
Rev. M. J. Ward.

Catholic Church was built at Beloit by Father Norris in 1854. This building, which was of stone, was destroyed by fire on December 23, 1884. Under the direction of the present pastor, the Rev. Father Ward, a new church was begun and completed in 1885. This building is of solid brick. The congregation of St. Thomas consists of about one thousand members. In this parish the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin and Ancient Order of Hibernians are represented and there are, besides, a Ladies' Aid Society, League of the Sacred Heart, Catholic Reading Circle and Court of Catholic Lady Foresters.

The Rev. M. J. Ward is a native of Wisconsin, having been born in Eden, Fond du Lac County, about fifty years ago. He acquired his rudimentary education in the usual manner and entered St. Francis Seminary, at St. Francis, Wisconsin, where, having completed a thorough course in the classics, philosophy and theology, he was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. John Martin Henni, Archbishop of Milwaukee, in 1872. Father Ward has been the energetic and successful pastor of St. Thomas' congregation at Beloit for the past thirteen years.

St. Patrick's Church, Benton, Wis.

THE Catholic congregation at Benton, Lafayette County, Wisconsin, was established in 1847. From that time until the year 1867, the pastorate was in charge of the Dominican Order, the first appointee to the charge being the Rev. James Causte. He was succeeded at different periods by the Rev. Fathers Drummond, S. Mazzuchelli, M. McFaul, H. J. Neuyts, J. P. Turner, W. C. Verhoef and M. B. Fortune. Other pastors since that time have been the Revs. G. Prendergast, P. Albrecht, M. J. Ward and James C. Bergen, the present incumbent, who has resided at Benton continually since 1883. In 1851 the Sisters of the Dominican Order established an academy at Benton, the building of which was erected at a cost of $30,000. Some years after, they abandoned this building, removing to Sinsinawa Mound, where they have since been established. The structure built and occupied by them at Benton was totally destroyed by fire about two years ago. The congregation of St. Patrick's Church at the present time consists of about seventy families. Of societies connected with St. Patrick's there are a branch of the Catholic Order of Foresters, of which Frank Whaley is chief ranger; Webster Burns, vice chief ranger; P. H. Whaley, past chief ranger; J. Piquette, financial secretary; A. C. Piquette, recording secretary; Ben. Horr, treasurer; Ancient Order of Hibernians; John V. Swift, president; John Timmins, vice-president; John Kearns, recording secretary; R. J. Sherwin, financial secretary; Dennis McCarthy, treasurer; James F. Swift and Charles Stan, advisory committee. There are also a Rosary Society and a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.



St. Rose's Church, Cuba, and St. Patrick's Church, Benton, Wis.

The congregation of St. Rose's, Cuba, Grant County, Wisconsin, was established as a mission by the Rev. Father S. Mazzuchelli in 1852. The church was at this time built at a little railway station bearing that name and was maintained there until about two years ago, when the location was changed to Cuba, where a structure, costing in the neighborhood of $13,000, was erected. The congregation of St. Rose's consists of about sixty-five families, forty-five of whom are Irish and twenty German. Services are held here by the visiting pastor on every Sunday. In this congregation, the Catholic Order of Foresters, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Holy Rosary and Temperance Societies, the latter having a membership of 55, are represented.

Rev. J. C. Bergen.

Another mission of St. Patrick's is that of St. Augustin at New Diggings, in Lafayette County. This mission was established in 1844. During the earlier period of its existence, New Diggings was a large and flourishing mining town and at one time the Catholic church at this place had a membership of one hundred and fifty families. This place has, however, been practically abandoned for some years, and the present membership of St. Augustin's numbers but eighteen families, all Irish. There was also at one time a parochial school in connection with St. Augustin's parish—that, too, has been abandoned.

The Rev. J. C. Bergen, the present incumbent, of St. Patrick's, was born in the town of Farmington, Ontario County, New York, but removed to Wisconsin at an early age, where he lived on a farm and pursued his studies at the public schools in that vicinity. Somewhat later, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he completed a thorough course in classics, philosophy and theology, and was ordained to the priesthood on June 29, 1879. For four years following ordination, he was professor in the seminary, after which he was appointed to his present pastorate, which he has maintained up to the present time.

St. Francis Church, Brighton, Wis.

THIS is one of the oldest parishes in the Archdiocese of Milwaukee, having been established in 1845, under the patronage of St. Patrick. The first pastors to visit this charge were the Revs. Morrissey, Martin Kundig and Moran. From 1848

St. Francis' Church, Brighton, Wis.

View showing the wreck of the old St. Patrick's Church, destroyed by the Cyclone, May 18, 1883.

until 1850 Father F. X. Etschmann had charge of the parish, during which time he built the first (frame) church. The next pastor was the Rev. J. V. Bullock of Kentucky, who, dying a year later, was succeeded by the Rev. Arthur O'Connor. He left in 1853, and from that time until 1854 the congregation was attended by Father F. Fusseder from Burlington. Then Father M. De Becke assumed the charge, being succeeded by Father F. Keenan in 1855. Next followed the Rev. M. Beiter, who prior to his departure in 1860 built an addition to the church. Father L. Hackhofer was pastor from 1860 to 1862, during which time he built a tower and presbytery. Then followed the Revs. J. M. Albers, from 1862 to 1865; Rev. M. Heiss, 1865 to 1869; Rev. H. Reinhardt, 1869 to 1870; Rev. F. X. Pfaller, 1870 to 1872; Rev. Stephen J. Muenich, 1872 to 1876; Rev. Leonard Blum, 1876 to 1881. During this latter pastorate the school and Sisters' dwelling was built. From March, 1881, until 1895, the Rev. F. X. Etschmann was resident pastor. In May, 1883, the church, a frame building, was destroyed by a cyclone, but before the year was ended a substantial brick building had taken its place. This new church was in 1884 blessed under the patronage of St. Francis Xavier. There are five hundred members in the congregation. There are fifty children attending the parochial school at Brighton, which has been in charge of Sisters of Notre Dame Convent since 1866. In this work the directress, Sister Bernarda, is assisted by Sister Theana. Societies represented in the congregation are St. Mary's Society of Married Women and St. Rose's Society for Young Ladies. Of the former Mmes. M. Thom, John Daniels and G. Shanley are the officers, and of the latter the Misses Josephine Reiter and Cecilia Murphy.

Rev. N. Weyer.

The present pastor of St. Francis Xavier Church, the Rev. Nicholas Weyer, was born at Schleisingerville, Washington County, Wisconsin, June 25, 1865. As a child he attended the parish schools at Ashford, New Cassel and Lomira, and later, feeling himself called to the priesthood, continued his studies under the direction of the Capuchin Fathers at Mt. Calvary. He then went to St. Francis Seminary, at Milwaukee, but owing to continued ill health, removed to St. John's University, Minn., where under the instruction of the Benedictine Fathers he completed his theological course. He was ordained at St. Francis, June 16, 1895, and celebrated his first Mass on the 25th of the same month at his home, Lomira, assisted by his two brothers, the Revs. Bernard and Michael Weyer. On July 1 of the same year he was appointed resident pastor of Brighton.

St. Rose's Church, Brodhead, Wis.

PREVIOUS to the formation of this parish, the Catholics around Brodhead, Albany and Footville had been attended occasionally by priests from Janesville and Monroe. The Rev. Father Sullivan was one of these. He was located at Monroe, from whence he came to Brodhead at stated intervals and held services in the homes of the Catholic families

St. Rose's Church, Brodhead, Wis.

there. In 1863 he began to build a church in Albany, which, however, we believe was not completed during his pastorate. The first resident pastor at Brodhead was the Rev. James Kinsella, who came there in 1868 and remained in charge until 1870. During this pastorate the old school house in Brodhead was purchased and fitted up as a place of worship by the Catholic congregation. Father Kinsella was succeeded by the Rev. J. E. Allen, who stayed until 1874, when he was followed by the Rev. N. Stehle, who maintained the pastorate for one year. Father Stehle was succeeded as pastor of St. Rose's by the Rev. M. Wrynn, who built the church in Footville. He in turn was succeeded by the Rev. Father Hegarty, who remained from 1880 until 1885; then the Rev. C. Kelly became the pastor, remaining as such until the time of his death in March, 1892. Since that date, the Rev. John Buckley has been resident priest.

Rev. J. O. Buckley.

The mission of St. Patrick's at Albany, Green County, Wisconsin, is attended by the resident pastor from Brodhead. This mission was established in 1863 by the Rev. Richard Sullivan, who during his administration began the erection of a church there. The congregation, which is composed almost entirely of people of Irish nationality, consists of sixty families. Services are held at this mission every third Sunday.

There is also a mission church at Footville, in Rock County, Wisconsin, dedicated to St. Augustine, which is attended by the pastor from Brodhead. This mission was established in 1875 by the Rev. M. Wrynn, who also built the present church. The congregation is almost exclusively Irish, and consists of about forty families. Services are held at St. Augustine's on every third Sunday in the month.

The Rev. John Buckley, present rector of St. Rose of Lima, at Brodhead, is a native of Ireland, was educated in his native country and ordained to the priesthood in All Hallows College, Ireland. Father Buckley was assistant priest at St. John's Cathedral, Milwaukee, during the years 1870 and 1871, when he was transferred to the pastorate of St. Patrick's church at Beaver Dam, September, 1871. In March, 1892, he was appointed to his present charge.

St. Mary's Church, Burlington, Wis.

AS long ago as the year 1838, when Wisconsin had not yet assumed the dignities of statehood, Holy Mass was first celebrated in a little building at Burlington, Wis. Opportunities for the residents of the settlement to attend divine services were at this time few and far between; and although the parish was founded in 1841, and Father Kundig, who had in the meantime moved to Milwaukee, paid monthly visits to Burlington, some years elapsed before a regular priest was appointed to the charge.

St. Mary's Church, Parsonage and School, Burlington.

In 1844 the Catholic residents of the community set about the construction of a church, and in the following year the Rev. Franciscus H. Kendeler was appointed first resident priest. Three years from the date of its commencement the structure was completed, being dedicated by Bishop Henni on November 9, 1847. The occasion was further emphasized by a confirmation service held by Bishop Henni on the same day, when eighty children received the full rites of the Church at his hands.

In October, 1847, Father Kendeler was succeeded by the Rev. Michael Wisbauer. Under his paternal hand the congregation grew and prospered to such an extent that the church soon became entirely too small for the accommodation of its rapidly increasing numbers. So in 1854 work was begun on a new and altogether more imposing structure. Without means of any kind whatever, and with a depleted treasury staring them in the face, people and priest joined hands in the issue. Five and a half years from the commencement of this stupendous undertaking, the work was accomplished, and on December 8, 1859, the Church of the Immaculate Conception was dedicated. The Rev. Michael Wisbauer remained in charge of this church until the time of his death, which occurred in December, 1889. True and tender in his associations, deeply pious and erudite to a marked degree, this good and noble soul passed from among those to whose spiritual and oftimes material wants he had ministered for nearly half a century, mourned, regretted and revered by all.

Rev. Theo. Jacobs.

An able and worthy successor to that old and much loved pastor, the present incumbent, the Rev. Theodore Jacobs, proved to be, for there was much to be done, and failing the right man at this critical period, it was more than probable that many of the cherished designs of his predecessor would fall unheeded by the wayside. But Father Jacobs soon gave evidence of his mettle, and that, too, in no uncertain tones. He fully realized the immensity of the work before him; the need of larger and better accommodations, and the lack of visible means to procure them with. Then he set to work, his initial effort being the personal gift of a site for the proposed buildings. The congregation, always interested in the welfare of their church, became more so; pledges of a definite and promising nature were secured, and in August, 1890, work commenced in earnest, the foundation of the new church being completed by the following November. Thus matters progressed till December 1, 1891, when the building stood finished and ready for occupancy. The church covers an area of 61x136 feet, and is built in the Gothic style. It has a seating capacity for 1,100, and is heated by steam and lighted throughout by electricity. The interior fixtures, such as windows, altars, pulpit and organ, are rich in design and of the very best. The cost of the structure complete—considered among the finest in the state—was over $60,000, of which amount Father Jacobs personally donated $2,500. The new parsonage is built of brick, two and a half stories high, and furnished throughout with all modern appointments. The congregation of St. Mary's now consists of about three hundred and twenty-five families, and some two hundred and fifty children attend the parochial school, which is conducted by five Sisters of Notre Dame. The new church was dedicated by Archbishop Katzer of Milwaukee, December 10, 1891.

There are five Catholic societies represented in the parish, they being: The Sacred Heart Society, St. Eustachiu's Benevolent Society, St. Mary's Young Ladies' Society, St. Mary's Ladies' Society and the Catholic Order of Foresters.

The Rev. Theodore Jacobs, present pastor of St. Mary's, was born July 9, 1848, in the town of Somers, Kenosha County, Wis. His parents were Mathias and Mary E. Jacobs, natives of Germany. They removed to America some two years prior to his birth, locating in Kenosha County, where the father died in 1889.

Father Jacobs was raised on a farm, receiving his education at St. George's Catholic School, his parents being members of that congregation. Leaving school, he was for some time employed by the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, and later as clerk and bookkeeper in Kenosha. On January 28, 1870, he became a student at St. Francis Seminary, and was ordained to the priesthood June 24, 1878. He said his first Mass at St. George's Church, Kenosha, Wis., June 30, 1878, and was there appointed pastor of St. John's congregation at Paris, Kenosha County, remaining there for two years. From 1880 to 1890 he was pastor at Sinsinawa Mound, Grant County, and while there built the new brick church and parsonage at that place. At this time he was also in charge of the mission at Hazel Green. On the death of Father Wisbauer of Burlington, and at the request of the Rt. Rev. A. Zeininger, Administrator of the Archdiocese of Milwaukee, Father Jacobs accepted the pastorate of St. Mary's, taking charge May 6, 1890.

St. John's Church, Byron, Wis.

MASS was celebrated at Byron, Wisconsin, for the first time in the year 1846, the services being held in the residence of Mr. Philip Sheridan, who lived directly opposite to the location of the present church. During the same year a plot of ground was purchased by the Catholics residing in that vicinity for cemetery purposes, the dedicatory services of the same being conducted by Bishop Henni. In 1847 a small frame church was erected at Byron. The exact date of the foundation of St. John's parish is not given, although it is known that the Catholics of Byron and vicinity were occasionally attended by the Rev. Fathers Bonduel, Rehrl, Strocker, Downy, McGowan, and McIntyre. Succeeding the latler, the parish records inform us, came the Rev. George Matthews as first resident pastor, who administered the duties of his sacred office from 1860 to 1863. Then followed successively the Rev. Fathers J. McGuire, 1863; T. A. Smith, 1863-1870—during this pastorate (in 1864) the present church was erected; M. Hannan, 1870-1876; T. F. Cody, 1876; E. A. Graves, 1877; G. L. Willard and Theodore Dempsey, 1878-1879; H. T. O'Brien, 1879-

St. John's Church, Byron, Wis.

Rev. J. C. Scheidhauer.

1880; J. Cotton, 1881-1883; M. Wrynn, 1833-1886; T. Johnson, 1886-1895; J. M. McFarland, 1895-1896; D. C. O'Donovan, March, 1896, till September, 1897, and Jul. Scheidhauer, the present rector.

It was in July, 1882, during the pastorate of Father Cotton that the steeple originally built on the present edifice was totally destroyed by the memorable storm which swept that portion of the country at the time. This loss, however, was remedied somewhat later by the erection of the present wooden belfry. Among improvements made to the parish property, in addition to those already mentioned, were the erection of a priest house during the pastorate of Father Wrynn, and frescoing of the church interior during that of Father Johnson.

The congregation of St. John's, though at the present time consisting of but in the neighborhood of fifty families, is energetic and thrifty, each individual member being most heartily in accord with the pastor, whose every effort is directed towards bettering both the spiritual and material condition of his people. The only Catholic organization connected with this parish, is a League of the Sacred Heart, organized about seven years ago.

St. Louis' Church, Caledonia, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Louis at Caledonia, Racine County, Wis., was organized in 1857. Two years prior to that time the Rev. J. Obermüller visited this congregation. Then, in 1860, the Rev. Kilian Flasch came there; in 1864 the pastor of St. Louis' was the Rev. G. A. Birkhaeuser; in 1865 the Rev. J. S. Muenich; in 1868 the Rev. H. Reinhart began his pastorate, and in 1876 the Rev. Simon G. Wuelfel took charge. The next pastor was the Rev. W. J. Peil, who administered the pastorate until the end of 1881. Then Father Norbert Dieringer was appointed, taking charge in 1882, and remaining until the fall of 1887; from October, 1887, until January, 1883, the Capuchin Fathers were in charge of this parish. The present incumbert, the Rev. Othmar Mueller, was appointed to this charge in 1896. The congregation of St. Louis at the present time consists of one hundred and twenty-five families, and the parochial school, which is in the care of three Dominican Sisters, has a regular attendance of one hundred and eleven scholars. A Christian Mothers' Society, of which Mrs. P. Emmerich is president, is connected with this congregation.

St. Louis' Church, Caledonia, Wis.

The congregation of the Holy Family, established at Lower Caledonia, is also attended by the pastor of St. Louis' from Caledonia. This mission was established in 1856, and now consists of twenty-two families, the majority of whom are German. Services are held here once a month, and occasionally on week days. There is no school at Lower Caledonia, nor has the mission ever had its regular pastor, but instructions are given in catechism by the priests in attendance.

St. Mary's Church, Cascade, Wis.

ST. Mary's congregation at Cascade, township of Lyndon, Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, was established in the year 1859, after which time it was attended successively by the Rev. Fathers Francis Fusseder, Patrick F. Petit, Patrick Bradley, James McGowan, Henry McMahon, John Tiernan, E. J. Goss, Dennis Tierney, Thomas Maher, M. Dedecus, John Casey and Bernard Joseph Burke, the latter still being the resident pastor. Since assuming the duties here, Father Burke has accomplished many desirable improvements to the property, noticeable among them being the erection of a new church, which was dedicated by the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer, on November 22, 1893. This church complete cost about $10,000. The congregation at present consists of about fifty-six families.

St. Mary's Church, Cascade, Wis.

St. Michael's Church, at Mitchell, Sheboygan County, is a mission of St. Mary's, being attended from that congregation. It was established by the Rev. Patrick Petit, in 1860. The number of families belonging to it is seventy-nine. Services are held here regularly every Sunday and on all holy days. The congregation is composed almost entirely of Irish. Father Burke has also done a great deal for St. Michael's in the way of improvements. Since having charge, he has thoroughly renovated the interior and exterior of the church, which he found sadly in need of repairs, and has, in fact, practically made a new building out of the old one.

The Rev. Bernard Joseph Burke, present incumbent at Cascade, received tonsure, sub-deaconship and deaconship under Archbishop Fabre, Montreal Grand Seminary, Canada, on December 19, 1886. He was ordained to the priesthood at Nicolet Seminary, by the Right Rev. Bishop Elphige Gravel and said his first Mass the following day in the seminary chapel. He was then appointed a professor in the seminary, remaining in that capacity for some time. Leaving the seminary, his next appointment was as pastor of the Dayton, Paoli and Sharon congregations, remaining as such until the first day of May 1889, when he was transferred to his present charge.

Rev. B. J. Burke.

St. Charles' Church, Cassville, Wis.

IN all probability this place was first visited by the Rev. Father L. Galtier, of Prairie du Chien, during 1851, as well as in later years. A father residing at Sinsinawa must also have made occasional visits during the early fifties. In 1852 the Rev. Father Hobs, stationed at Potosi, said Holy Mass in a house several miles from Cassville. At that time Mass was celebrated altogether in private dwellings, there being five or six Catholic families living in the village and about as many in the surrounding country. In 1856 the Rev. Father Vivaldi of Potosi came to this place a few times, saying Mass in the public school house, Cassville now became a regular mission to Potosi, being attended alternately once a month by the Rev. Father Gibson, successor to Father Hobs, pastor of the English, and the Rev. Father Zuber, pastor of the German congregation. In the course of time, the latter had entire charge of the mission. As the congregation increased, the parishioners were encouraged to build a church, and although they were poor and comparatively few in number, still the project was undertaken, and a fair-sized brick church was erected before the close of the year 1857. The Rev. Fathers Voissem, Verhoef and J. M. Albers, all stationed at Potosi, in succession attended this place. In 1866 the Rev. Father Thiele took charge of the congregation, being the first resident pastor in Cassville. During his stay, which lasted about two months, a parsonage was bought. In February, 1867, he was succeeded by the Rev. Father J. A. Moes. In his time the church in Glen Haven was built and attended to as a mission, which it has been ever since. He was followed by the Rev. Father J. M. Albers, who remained from September, 1868, to March, 1871, Father M. De Becke from May, 1871, to January, 1873, and Father Th. F. Schraudenbach from March, 1873, to January, 1876. The Rev. J. Gmeiner assumed the pastorate in February, 1876, remaining until September, 1878. Under his administration a school-house was built and school opened, which was closed for lack of funds after three years' existence. The next pastor was the Rev. Father Meurer, who was at Cassville from October, 1878, to April, 1880. He was succeeded by the Rev. Father J. Decker from May, 1880, to November, 1880. During his time the parsonage was sold and the former school-house built over and adapted for that purpose. Then came the Rev. Father A. Gardthaus from April, 1881, to March, 1882, and the Rev. L. C. Drexel from August, 1882, to April, 1888. In April, 1888, the Rev. A. M. Rossbach took charge of the congregation. As the old church had grown too small, efforts toward the erection of a new one were made and in the fall of the same year the foundation for a new structure was laid. In the spring of 1889, the general work was begun, the corner-stone being laid on the 30th of April, by the Very Rev. A. Leiter, S. J. This structure was completed in November, and dedicated on the 20th of that month by the Right Rev. K. Flasch, Bishop of La Crosse. The building is 50 by 100 feet and Gothic in style. It has three naves and is altogether a very beautiful and commodious structure, costing in all about $14,000 aside from the interior furnishings. After the completion of the church, ground was obtained and in June, 1893, the new school-building was begun. On July 13 the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer, Archbishop of Milwaukee, laid the corner-stone, and on February 1, 1894, the school was opened, sixty-two children attending. The building was dedicated March 7 by the Very Rev. A. Salick. It contains two spacious school-rooms and conveniently arranged departments for Sisters and boarders. The school is conducted by the Franciscan Sisters of Alverno, Wis.

St. Charles' Church, Cassville, Wis.

The congregation of St. Charles now numbers seven hundred and thirty-five souls, while there are about two hundred and eighty-six at the mission of St. Mary's Help of the Christians at Glen Haven. The school has a present attendance of eighty-five scholars. The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin have a representation of twenty-two members in his congregation, of which G. P. Dietrich is president, Wm. B. Dietrich, vice-president, F. J. Dietrich, secretary, and J. W. Miemer, treasurer. There is also a Married Ladies' Sodality of fifty-five members; Mrs. Henry E. Wuest, president, and Mrs. Charles Stabler, treasurer. St. Rose Young Ladies' Sodality, thirty-eight members; Miss Kate Steiger, president; Miss Gertrude Mumm, secretary; Miss Regina Dietrich, treasurer. The Married Ladies' Sodality at St. Mary's has twenty-two members. Mrs. Jacob Kuenster is president and Mrs. John Vogt, treasurer.

The Rev. Anthony M. Rossbach[1] was born May 9, 1858, in Villmar Regbzk, Wiesbaden, Nassau. Came to the United States in 1872, taking up his residence at Elm Grove in Waukesha County, Wisconsin. He remained there on a farm for two years and then came to Milwaukee. For five years he studied at Mt. Calvary, Wis., completing his theological course at St. Francis Seminary, where he was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1887. On July 9 of the same year he was appointed to the pastorate at Cassville, Wisconsin.

Rev. A. Rossbach.

The congregation of Holy Mary Help of the Christians, Glen Haven, Grant County, Wisconsin, consists of fifty-two families and is attended as a mission once each month on Sunday and every Saturday, by the resident pastor from Cassville. This mission was first established by the Right Rev. Bishop Henni in 1864, and is composed almost entirely of German families. The church at this place, a substantial stone building, was erected during the same year, the mission at first being attended from Potosi by the Rev. Father Verhoef, who was resident pastor of that parish at that time. In 1867 the Rev. Father Maes was appointed to take charge of Cassville, with Glen Haven as a mission, and since that time it has been regularly attended from the former place. During its existence, two missions have been held at Glen Haven, the first by the Rev. Fathers Brandstetter and Oberle, and the second in April, 1889, by Jesuit Fathers from Prairie du Chien. Father Maes was succeeded in charge of this mission by the Rev. Father Alber in 1868. He remained until 1871, in which year he was succeeded by Father De Becke, who remained until 1873. Then followed, in succession, the Rev. Fathers Schraudenbach, from 1873 to 1876; Gmeiner, from 1876 to 1878; Meurer, from 1878 to 1880; J. Decker, from May, 1880, to November, 1880; Gardthaus, from 1881 to 1882; L. Drexel, from 1882 to 1888; A. Rossbach, from 1888 to 1897, and the present incumbent, the Rev. Francis C. Pischery, since the latter date. There is but one Catholic organization connected with this mission, an Altar Society for Married Ladies.

(1) Now in charge of St. Joseph's congregation at Alverno.

St. Francis Borgia's Church, Cedarburg, Wis.

THE first Catholic church in Cedarburg was built of logs, fully fifty-three years ago. The location was about two miles distant from where the city now stands, and there the missionary fathers made occasional visits from the larger and more thoroughly established parishes. In 1852 the old log church was replaced by a frame building which was in constant use until 1870. During these years the pastors attending this congregation were the Rev. Fathers Morrissey, 1844; Monaghan, 1846; Prendergrast, 1849; Colton, Bradley, 1851; Tierney, 1853; Doherty, 1854; Mahoney, Harmon and McMahon. The present church, St. Francis Borgia, was built by the Rev. Hugh McMahon, now of Oconomowoc. The church is a fine stone edifice, situated at the head of Main Street, city of Cedarburg, and in the best possible location. Father McMahon was succeeded by the Rev. John Kinsella, who died at Franklin some years later. Following Father Kinsella came Revs. McFarland, now of Byron, P. H. Durnin of St. Rose's Milwaukee, M. Wrynn of Clyman, and F. C. Ryan of St. Mathew's, Mliwaukee. There are about six hundred members in the congregation.

St. Francis Borgia's Church, Cedarburg, Wis.

Rev. J. W. O'Keefe.

Father J. W. O'Keefe, the present pastor, was born in the town of Westport, near Madison, Dane County. He entered St. Francis Seminary, Milwaukee, in 1882, where he made his full course, being ordained to the priesthood June 21, 1891, by the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer. He was then appointed to the assistant pastorate at St. Joseph's Church, Fond du Lac, where he remained for a few months. His next appointment was as pastor of the Holy Assumption Church at Franklin, where he assumed the duties February 19, 1892. Remaining there until December 15, 1895, he was then appointed to his present pastorate at Cedarburg. Father O'Keefe also attends St. Mary's Church at Jackson, as a mission.

The little mission of the Immaculate Conception at Jackson, Washington County, is attended every other week by the Rev. J. W. O'Keefe, pastor of St. Francis Borgia's at Cedarburg. The people comprising this congregation are nearly all of Irish nationality.

St. Charles Borromeo's Church, Charlesburg, Wis.

THE Parish of St. Charles Borromeo at Charlesburg, Calumet County, Wisconsin, was organized March 13, 1866. For the first two years following its establishment, the congregation was attended by the Rev. Father Schraudenbach from St. Augustine's Church at Chilton, and following him by St. Martin's Church, Charlestown, and St. Charles Borromeo's Church, Charlesburg, Wis.

Pater Cajetan, O. M. C., from Marytown, who ministered to the congregation for about six months. Then the Rev. J. Billmani from Trinity Church, West Brothertown, had charge of the parish for about one year, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas von der Thannen, who located at Charlesburg as first resident pastor in 1871. He remained until March, 1883, during which period he labored assiduously and successfully in behalf of the parish. He built a new and substantial church at this place in 1873 and a school house in 1879. Father von der Thannen was succeeded by the Rev. Joseph Schwick, who remained from April, 1883, to November of the same year. He was followed by the Rev. Thomas Albert Reininger, who remained as pastor from 1883 till October, 1888, when the Rev. John Decker took charge of the parish. Father Decker left in December, 1893, but before leaving succeeded in building a new parochial residence. The next to have charge of the congregation was the present rector, the Rev. Leonhard Blum, who assumed the duties on December 8, 1893. The reverend pastor has been an active and zealous worker, making many material and beneficial improvements to the church property at Charlesburg. During the past year he has been noticeably active in this direction, having repaired and decorated the church, both within and without. The present congregation of St. Charles numbers seventy-five families. There is a parochial school connected with the parish, which has a regular average attendance of eighty-seven scholars, who are in charge of two Sisters of St. Francis, from the convent at Greenfield, Milwaukee County. Of Catholic organizations in the parish, there are two—a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, and a Ladies' Altar Society.

The Mission of St. Martin's at Charlestown, Calumet County, is attended by the resident pastor of St. Charles Borromeo's parish at Charlesburg. This congregation was organized some time during the year 1866, and at present consists of forty families, thirty-six of whom are German and four English. Services are held at St. Martin's on every Sunday and holy day, and as a rule on one day each week. There is a parochial school connected with the congregation, which is in charge of a Sister of St. Francis, from Greenfield, Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, and has a regular attendance of forty-four scholars. The Ladies' Aid Society connected with the congregation is a prosperous, active and useful organization. The new or present church was built in Charlestown in the seventies, the stone foundation being laid for that structure in 1876. During the following year the building itself was completed and blessed, this work being brought to a successful issue under the administration of the Rev. Thomas von der Thannen, who was visiting pastor at that time. The old church, which was superseded by this structure, was built at about the time that the congregation was first organized, prior to which, for a period of ten years, services were occasionally held in the private houses of the settlers. Since 1894 a number of valuable improvements have been made to the church, particularly in its interior furnishings, new vestments, new side altars and two new statues having been donated to the parish by private benefactors. The present school-house was built by Father Decker during his administration of the parish.

The Rev. L. Blum, rector of St. Charles Borromeo's at Charlesburg, Brothertown, Calumet County, Wisconsin, was born in the diocese of Cologne, District of Treves, September 5, 1845. He is a son of Casper and Margarette (Finken) Blum, who brought him to America in 1846, settling in Wisconsin and making their new home in Marytown, Fond du Lac County. It was in the schools of this section that he received his primary education, after which, from the first Sunday in Advent, 1863, till August 2, 1868, he was a student at Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin. In September, 1868, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis near Milwaukee, where he completed his courses in classics, philosophy and theology and was ordained by the Most Rev. J. M. Henni in December, 1872. After ordination he was assistant at St. Mary's, Racine, then pastor of St. Joseph's Church at Lyons and St. Kilian's Mission to Lyons in Walworth County, remaining there from Easter, 1873, till May, 1874. He then became pastor of St. Alphonsus' at Wheatland (now New Munster), in Kenosha County, leaving there to assume the pastorate of St. Patrick's, now St. Francis Xavier's, also in Kenosha County, where he remained until the fifth of January, 1881. He then became pastor of St. Kilian's Church in the town of Ashford, Fond du Lac County, remaining there from January 6, 1881, to December 6, 1893. From this place he was transferred to his present pastorate of St. Charles and the Mission of St. Martin's.

Rev. L. Blum.

Church of the Holy Assumption, Clyman, Wis.

WITH the assistance and co-operation of the Irish Catholics of the town of Clyman and vicinity, prominent among whom were William Dowling, Connor Dempsey, Patrick Morgan, Edmund Carey, Lawrence Walsh, Owen McCollow, Timothy Mahoney, Patrick Coughlin, Frank Chapman and others, the Church of the Holy Assumption was built by the Rev. Joseph Smith in 1861. Prior to this time Mass was offered in the houses of those zealous and generous laymen, Connor Dempsey and Edmund Carey. Mr. Hugh Derving also deserves special recognition, as it was he who donated the land upon which the church now stands. The first Mass, however, said in any Catholic Irishman's house in the vicinity, was celebrated by Father Dumphy, pastor of Fox Lake, at Owen McCollow's, town of Oak Grove, in 1853. In these earlier times, too, before the erection of the church, Father McGowan, a native of County Leitrim, Ireland, and other priests, occasionally visited and administered to the wants of the Catholics of Clyman, who otherwise attended services at Watertown.

Church of the Holy Assumption, Clyman, Wis.

The Rev. M. J. Ward was appointed first resident pastor of the Holy Assumption by the Rt. Rev. John M. Henni, in 1873. Seven years later Father Ward was succeeded by the Rev. H. Murphy, now of Columbus, Wis., and he by the present pastor, the Rev. Michael Wrynn, who took charge by the appointment of the Most Rev. Michael Heiss, on February 15, 1888. The congregation, at present, is composed of sixty families. Of Catholic societies there is but one represented in the parish at present, that being the St. Anne's Altar Society.

The Rev. Michael Wrynn was born in 1848, within one mile of Mohill, County of Leitrim, Ireland. He came to America in June, 1862, proceeding at once from New York to Monches, Waukesha County, Wis. Here he resided with his maternal uncle, Rev. John Tieman, then pastor of Monches, Town Vine and Lake Five, the church of which latter place he built in 1863. During the winter of that year he attended the district school, the teacher of which was John Featherstone, a County Kerry man and famous classical scholar, and with him commenced the study of Latin. September, 1864, he entered the Seminary at St. Francis, continuing there until December, 1872, when he received ordination at the hands of the gentle and illustrious Archbishop, John M. Henni. He was then assigned as assistant to the Rev. James Doyle, pastor of Janesville, Wis., where he remained for five months. He was then appointed pastor of Brodhead and outlying missions of Albany and Footville. During the continuance of this pastorate, he refitted, repaired and built an addition to the church there. In Albany he purchased land beside the church for cemetery purposes, and paid for the same as well as for improvement necessary to make it fit for immediate use. He also at this time built and paid for St. Augustine's Church at Footville, Rock County, Wis. In July, 1880, he was appointed by Archbishop Henni to succeed the Rev. E. McGinnity, as pastor of St.

Rev. M. Wrynn.

Victor's in Monroe. Two years later he was appointed by Archbishop Heiss to take charge of the Byron and Eden Missions in Fond du Lac County. Here he found the church and parsonage in an unusually bad condition, both having been nearly destroyed by a heavy wind storm, but he at once set to work and soon succeeded in repairing the church and rebuilding the house. This cost $1,200. In the spring of 1886 he was transferred to St. Francis Borgia's church at Cedarburg, succeeding the Rev. P. Durnin. Here he remained until the 15th of February, 1888, when he assumed his present charge.

In the year 1850, the church now known as St. Isidore, but at that time called St. Sebastian and St. Isidore, was built. The original name is attributed to the fact that Sebastian Winker made the first donation, giving three acres of land to the church and cemetery, besides subscribing his share toward the erection of the building. Others prominent as benefactors to the cause at that time were: Michael Kiefer, Peter Neis, Daniel Fisher, John Spohn, Peter Kocheler, Fidel Enper, Bridget Fallgatter, Patrick Duffy and Chrystopher Lynard. The first priest to attend this church was the Rev. Father Hader, pastor of Jefferson, and later occasional visits were made by priests from Watertown. It is now regularly attended as a mission from the Holy Assumption at Clyman.

The congregation of the Immaculate Conception at Juneau, Dodge County, Wisconsin, is attended twice each month by the Rev. Michael Wrynn, resident pastor at Clyman. This congregation was first established in the year 1873, by the Rev. M. J. Ward, and at the present time consists of thirty-five families, part of whom are German and part Irish nationality. Of the earlier history of this vicinity we find but little, although it is of record that the first Mass was said in the town of Oak Grove, in which the city of Juneau is now located, by the Rev. Father Dumphy, of Fox Lake, at the home Wisconsin in 1895, with T. A. McCollow as secretary, gregation was incorporated under the State laws of of Owen McCollow, in April 1853. The present con- and Anthony Mahoney as treasurer. The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin are represented in this congregation by Branch No. 24, which was organized in the month of July, 1885.

St. Jerome's Church, Columbus, Wis.

THE present congregation of St. Jerome's, Columbus, was formed by the Rev. Martin Kundig in the winter of 1856. Early in the spring of 1857 work was commenced on the foundation of a church on a lot donated for that purpose by A. P. Birdsey, the corner-stone being laid in June of the same year. Previous to this time the Catholics living in and about Columbus attended services in St. Columbkills Church, which was situated in the town of Elba, Dodge County, at which place a church was erected about the year 1850, by Father James D. Roche. He was not a resident there, but attended the people of that locality either from Fox Lake or Portage. The first resident pastor at Elba was Father Martin Kundig, who came there in 1856. He was succeeded by the Revs. Michael Downey and P. Purcell, and they, in 1858, by Father Edward McGurk, who also took charge of and attended to the surrounding missions until 1868. At that time, Father James O'Keefe, now of Mineral Point, took up his residence at Columbus, as its first resident pastor. Father McGurk remained at Elba until the winter of 1869, when he was succeeded by the Rev. H. S. O'Brien, who continued in charge until September, 1879, when Father Thomas Dempsey came. He was followed, in 1881, by the Rev. J. B. McFarland, who remained until the summer of 1893, when Elba became a mission of Columbus and from that time has been regularly attended from that place.

St. Jerome's Church, Columbus, Wis.

Matters went somewhat slowly in Columbus at first, and after laying the corner-stone, in 1856, it was discovered that the people, though willing to do their best, were deficient in means, and unable to complete the undertaking. A less pretentious structure than the one contemplated was therefore built, which served as a church until 1864, when Father McGurk again took up the work and succeeded in erecting a stone structure which forms the center portion of the present stately edifice, which was completed during the pastorate of Father Roche. The first resident pastor in Columbus, Father James O'Keefe, was succeeded in 1870 by Father McGurk, who, however, remained but a short time and was followed by the Rev. E. Grey. Father Grey left in 1872, his successor being Father Roche, who remained until 1892. The Rev. Doctor Joerger was the next pastor, but, after a brief interregnum, the present pastor, Father Henry R. Murphy, assumed the duties in July, 1893.

Rev. H. Murphy.

Of Catholic societies connected with this congregation, there are: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, established January, 1887. The present officers are: President, Conrad Koblitz; Secretary, John Erb; Treasurer, T. C. Conlin. Altar Society: President, Mrs. Stephen Tobin; Secretary, Mrs. T. C. Conlin; Treasurer, Mrs. John Erb. Young Ladies' Sodality: President, Miss Lizzie Conlin; Secretary, Miss Annie Hart; Treasurer, Miss Kelly. The congregation at the present time consists of one hundred and six families, in addition to which there are forty-eight families connected with the mission congregation at Elba.

Father H. Murphy, present rector of St. Jerome's, was born in the month of September, 1852, in Oneida County, New York, and came to Wisconsin in 1868, locating at Elba, in Dodge County. Three years later, he entered St. Francis' Seminary near Milwaukee, from which institution, after having completed a full course in the classics, philosophy and theology, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 4, 1877. After having celebrated his first Mass at Columbus, Wisconsin, he was placed in charge as first resident pastor of the congregation at Doylestown, Columbia County, with Rocky Run as a mission. From this parish he was transferred, in the fall of 1880, to that of the Catholic congregation at Clyman, where he remained until February, 1888, when he took charge of St. Rose's parish at Racine, with which he remained until July, 1893, when he assumed the pastoral duties of St. Jerome's at Columbus.

St. Francis Xavier's Church, Cross Plains, Wis.

ST. Francis Xavier's congregation at Cross Plains, Dane County, Wisconsin (corporate name, St. Francis Xavier's congregation of Berry) was founded October 28, 1854. Some time prior to this, Father Inama, O. P., the pioneer priest, who was among the first to visit the various settlements located around Madison and Prairie du Chien, settled at a place between the present towns of Sauk and Roxbury, where he built a little chapel. To this place, some thirteen miles distant, the people of Cross Plains and Berry journeyed to attend the occasional services held there.

After the establishment of a parish at Cross Plains (Berry), and after the work of building a log chapel upon the fifteen acres of ground donated for congregational purposes by Mrs. Anna Mary Stumpf had well begun under the direction of Father Inama, the Rev. Lawrence Conrad was appointed first resident pastor with St. Martin's (Springfield) and St. Mary's (Pine Bluff) as missions. During his administration as pastor of St. Francis, which lasted a little over three years, i. e., until the end of the year 1857, the church was completed (1855), a parsonage built and the present cemetery laid out. During his last year (1857) the church was considerably enlarged, and furnished with pews. Father Conrad was succeeded at the beginning of 1858 by the Rev. Father Seif; the most noteworthy work of his administration was the translation of the heretofore buried bodies of the dead of the congregation to the new cemetery. Father Seif's stay was terminated by the beginning of March, 1859, and from the spring of this year to that of 1862, the Rev. M. Gernbauer was pastor of St. Francis'. One of the first things he accomplished was the erection of a parochial school (comprising the west wing of the present building), which was opened for the winter of 1859-60. The old enlarged church then received a vaulting, and in 1861 a new parsonage, which was used until the present time, was built. Father Gernbauer was succeeded by the Rev. W. Bernard, who remained until the summer of 1863, and he by the Rev. A. Foeckler, who also remained about a year. Then, in 1864, the Rev. Joseph Voissem assumed the charge, remaining until the spring of 1869. During his pastorate, that portion of the present parochial school which is considered the main part and comprises the Sisters' dwelling, was built. Having been relieved of the charge of his two missions, Pine Bluff and Springfield Corners, in the spring of 1867, and the zealous people of the towns of Berry and Cross Plains having recognized the necessity and the propriety of erecting a new and more suitable church in place of the primitive one, all of his energies were concentrated in contriving plans and means for the accomplishment of this project, upon which work was actually begun in the same year. It devolved, however, upon his successor, the Rev. Hubert Jansen, who occupied the pastorate from the spring of 1869 to the fall of 1873, to lay the foundations and to complete roughly the edifice. The tower was not built until sometime after, misfortune, disappointments and the condition of the times bearing hard upon the people and discouraging them from making any particular effort in the way of improvements. Yet, before Father Jansen left the parsonage in 1873, the church, with the exception of the tower, was substantially finished, the corner-stone having been laid in 1870. Father Jansen was succeeded in the fall of 1873 by the Rev. John Friedl, who occupied the pastorate until January, 1878. He succeeded in imbuing the members of the congregation with new life, making many notable improvements to the church property and furnishing the edifice, among other things, with three new altars. The church was dedicated to divine service during the first year of his administration. As successor to Father Friedl, the Rev. George Tuerck was appointed at the beginning of the year 1878, who remained until the spring of 1879, when Father William Blum took charge, May 28th. During his time the tower, as it now stands, was built. In February, 1881, the pastorate devolved upon the Rev. A. S. Leitner, whose stay, however, was of but short duration, he leaving during the summer of the following year, 1882. The next pastor of St. Francis' was the Rev. C. M. Grobschmit, who remained from July 23, 1882, to the winter of 1883, when Father Peter Frieden was appointed. Father Frieden remained but a little over a year, and during that time managed to pay off the entire debt of the church. His successor, the Rev. Joseph Hartmann, maintained the pastorate for ten years and six months, during which time he built an addition to the parsonage, and radically remodeled the interior of the church. The roof was lowered about sixteen feet and supported by two rows of columns, dividing the Gothic structure into three naves. The old windows were replaced by new ones of stained glass, and the interior of the church ornamented with delightful frescoing. A basement was dug under the church with extraordinary labor, and supplied with two furnaces. To this now really new church, of which the people of Cross Plains and Berry had just reason to be proud, were added three cheerful bells, which were in the future to summon the faithful to divine service. In addition to this, Father Hartmann greatly improved and beautified the grounds. Although these changes and improvements were quite an undertaking and entailed an enormous expense upon the sacrificing people of the community, the whole debt with the exception of a few hundred dollars was paid during his residence at Cross Plains. His successor, the Rev. J. M. Bach, present rector, became pastor of the congregation in July, 1895. Under his administration, the remaining debts were paid off, the school renovated and furnished, the parsonage renovated and an elegant set of new stations placed in the church and dedicated March 11, 1897. An acre of land was also purchased and laid out for cemetery purposes, as an addition to the old cemetery. The congregation now numbers about one hundred and thirty-eight families. The school is attended by about one hundred pupils, who are in charge of Sisters of the Order of St. Francis from Holy Angels' Convent, at Silver Lake. The societies of the congregation under the spiritual direction of their reverend pastor are, St. Francis Xavier Men's Society, of which Henry Kosh is secretary, and Jacob Esser, treasurer, and St. Mary's Married Ladies' Sodality, of which Mrs. Julia Baer is secretary, and Mrs. Theodore Dreser, treasurer.

St. Francis' Church, Cross Plains, Wis.

Rev. J. M. Bach.

The Rev. J. M. Bach, rector of St. Francis Xavier's, the youngest of five brothers and four sisters, was born in St. Augustin, a mission of Newburg, Washington County, Wisconsin, on January 13, 1865. His parents are Mathias and Anna Bach. After attending the district school at St. Augustin, he, in 1880, entered the State Normal School at Oshkosh, where he remained for two years, graduating there in the elementary course. He then, until 1884, taught in the public school, after which he entered the State University, at Madison, where he remained until 1888, pursuing an eclectic, scientific and classical course, in which he graduated during that year. In the fall of 1888, he went to Europe and entered the Convent of the Jesuit Fathers of the Austrian Province, at Innsbruck, Tyrol, there attending the lectures of the Fathers, who are the professors of the theological faculty of the Royal Imperial University of that place. He was ordained to the priesthood July 26, 1892, and continued his studies for a year thereafter at the same University. In 1893 he returned to America and was appointed assistant to the Rev. A. J. Decker, of St. Anthony's congregation, at Milwaukee, on the 26th of July of that year. He then filled the interregnum at St. Joseph's, at Racine, between the pastorates of the Revs. J. Friedl and Frantz, which lasted from June 20th until August 5th, 1894. On the latter date, he was appointed pastor of the congregation at Paris, Kenosha County, and Kansasville, Racine County, continuing as such until June 30, 1895, when he was appointed to his present pastorate at Cross Plains.

St. Frederick's Church, Cudahy, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Frederick's at Cudahy, Wisconsin, which is attended by Father Gerend from St. Francis, was established by Archbishop F. X. Katzer, and dedicated by him to his patron saint. The first pastor to have charge of this parish was the Rev. George Durnin, who three months later, however, was succeeded by the present rector. The congregation was incorporated in the month of June, 1896, by Archbishop Katzer, Vicar-General August Zeininger, Father Durnin, Kenneth Campbell and Barklay Farrell. The membership at the present time comprises some forty families, two-thirds of whom are Irish, the remainder being German and Polish. The present board of trustees are: Kenneth Campbell, secretary; D. P. Harrigan, treasurer; M. J. McNamara, Michael McDermott, M. J. Madden and John Pickford, counselors. Mr. Patrick, a member of the congregation, donated the site upon which the present handsome church edifice was erected.

St. Nicholas' Church, Dacada, Wis.

THE parish of St. Nicholas at Dacada, Sheboygan County, was first established November 25, 1848, at which time the congregation was also given a resident pastor in the person of the Rev. George Laufhuber. His successors were the Rev. Fathers De Becke, Deisenrieder, B. Smedding, Michael Obermueller, Hieronymus Berckman, John Stuchy, Fusseder, John Mehlmann, M. Retzer, Herman Joseph

St. Nicholas' Church, Dacada, Wis.

Muckerheide, T. Willer, Peter Schwaiger, August Zeininger and John Huber. After him the Rev. Joseph Hamn had charge of this congregation from 1870 to 1892, when the Rev. A. S. Leitner, present incumbent, took charge. The congregation is now composed of about one hundred and fifty-two families, or nine hundred and fifty-five communicants. There is one parochial school connected with this congregation, which has an average attendance of one hundred scholars, who are in charge of three Sisters of St. Francis, from St. Joseph's Convent, Milwaukee. The order of Catholic Knights of Wisconsin has a branch of about forty-five members in the congregation; also the St. Nicholas Benevolent Society, numbering about sixty members, and the Altar Society with about ninety members. This parish is in a very flourishing condition.

St. Michael's Church, Dane, Wis.

PREVIOUS to the year 1875, the Catholics of German descent living in Dane County, or its immediate vicinity, belonged to St. Martin's congregation at Springfield Corners, a point lying some nine miles southwest of Dane. At that time, the English-speaking Catholics of the neighborhood attended a small church built during the year 1863 in the town of Vienna, which is but three miles from Dane. The first Mass was celebrated at this place, then a mission of Westport, on July 26 of the same year. The priests successively in charge of this mission were the Rev. F. X. Etschmann; January 1, 1863 to January 1, 1866; Rev. Father Lavin, January 1, 1866 to January 1, 1867; Rev. Father Dorry, March 10, 1867, to June 4, 1869; Rev. Father Hales, July 4, 1869, to March 31, 1870; Rev. Father Stehle, November 13, 1870, to December 30, 1872; Rev. Father Tieman, January, 1873, to September of the same year; Rev. Father Welch, October, 1873, to June, 1874, and the Rev. Jos. Dreis from that time until its abandonment.

St. Patrick's Church, Lodi, and St. Michael's Church and Parsonage, Dane, Wis.

In the spring of 1875, under the supervision of Father Dreis, then of St. Martin's, the Church of St. Michael's was built and dedicated, the congregation at that time numbering about fifty-four families. A year preceding the erection of this church at Dane, a school was kept in active operation in one of the town dwellings; this afterwards was conducted in the church basement. The school was carried on until 1889, by male teachers, when Sisters of the Order of St. Francis took charge of it and have continued to do so to the present time.

For eleven years St. Michael's congregation was a mission of St. Martin's, the Rev. Joseph Dreis attending it, as first pastor, from December 1, 1875, to August 22, 1880. His successors were the Rev. H. Korfhage, September 19, 1880, to July 17, 1881; Rev. George Trimberger, July 22, 1881, to August 15, 1882; Rev. M. Gerend of Westport, May 15 to August 5, 1883, and the Rev. Henry Ries, from August 5, 1885, to October 21, 1889. In the summer of 1886 the congregation built a priests' house, its first occupant being the Rev. Henry Ries, who in addition to his duties as resident pastor also attended St. Patrick's congregation at Lodi as a mission. On October 26, 1889, the Rev. M. Graettinger succeeded Father Ries as pastor of these charges.

At present there are ninety families in St. Michael's congregation, two thirds of whom are German and one third English speaking. The following Catholic Societies are also represented: St. Anne's Women's Society: President, Mrs. Peter Miller. The St. Mary's, Young Michael's Men's Society: President, Mr. John A. Miller, Ladies' Society: President, Miss Mary Kerin. St. Sr. The League of the Sacred Heart: President, Mrs. Michael Karls, and Promoter, Miss Catherine O'Dwyer.

The Catholics living north of Lodi built a small church about five miles northeast of that place, at a point near the city of Portage, in September, 1860, called "The Church on the Sand." There the Rev. James Doyle, resident pastor at Portage, held services up to 1862. Then the Rev. J. O'Neil assumed charge until 1865, he being succeeded by the Rev. Father Lavan, 1865 to 1867, the Rev. Father Currie, 1867 to 1870, the Rev. James Keenan, 1870 to 1879, and the Rev. James Brady, from 1879 to 1894. Each of these Reverend Fathers was at the time stated resident pastor at Portage, driving down once a month to hold services at the "Church on the Sand."

On June 7, 1885, the Rev. Henry Ries, at that time resident pastor of St. Martin's, Springfield Corners, Dane County, Wis., organized a congregation at Lodi, and a new structure being at once erected, the little Church on the Sand was abandoned. This congregation rapidly increased in numbers, until, in 1889, when there were no less than thirty families belonging to it; since that time the Rev. M. Graettinger, resident pastor at Dane, has officiated there, holding services the first three Sundays in every month. This parish is now in a remarkably healthy condition, the congregation at the present numbering fully fifty-seven families. There are two Catholic societies connected with this charge: The Altar Society, of which Mrs. Robert Lang is president, and the Sacred Heart League, whose president and promoter is Mrs. Eliza Woods.

Rev. M. A. Graettinger.

The present rector of St. Michael's parish at Dane, Wisconsin, the Rev. M. A. Graettinger, was educated for the holy priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, St. Francis, Wisconsin, where, after having completed the necessary courses in the classics, philosophy and theology, he was ordained on October 28, 1887. After ordination Father Graettinger was first appointed as assistant pastor at St. George's Church, Kenosha, Wisconsin, serving there as such for twelve months. He then assumed pastoral charge of the same congregation, remaining in such capacity from 1888 until 1889, when he was transferred from there to his present rectorate at Dane. Father Graettinger was born December 25, 1864.

Holy Rosary Church, Darlington, Wis.

OF the history of this stirring and prosperous congregation, there is, unfortunately, but little information to be obtained, aside from the fact that, according to the parish records, the Rev. A. L. David was the first pastor to come there, the date of his arrival being given as August 10, 1864. Here he remained in charge of the congregation until August 19, 1866, when he was transferred to another parish. Father David's successors were the brothers E. M. and D. V. McGinnity, who came to Darlington on October 28th of the same year, and remained there, in the active performance of their duties, until August 1, 1871. They were followed by the Rev. James Fitzgibbon, who assumed the charge on August 27, 1871. When he left the parish, on January 1, 1896, the duties of pastor devolved upon the Rev. M. Hannon, the present rector, who came to Darlington during the same month.

Holy Rosary Church, Darlington, Wis.

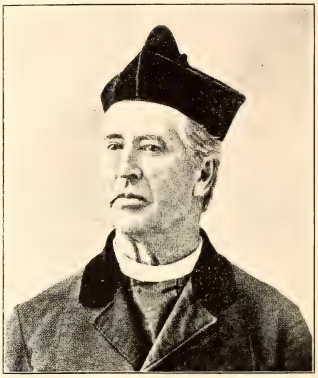
Of Catholic societies connected with the congregation at Darlington, there is a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, organized in 1886, and having a present membership of forty-three. The first election was held by this Society on January 1, 1886, on which occasion the following officers were chosen: Spiritual Director, the Rev. M. Hannon; President, H. J. Gallagher; Vice-President, M. Holland; Secretary, J. A. Duffy; Treasurer, J. H. Keefe; Trustees, Charles H. Ray, P. H. Cauley and James McDermott. Officers elected for the present year (1898) were: Spiritual Director, the Rev. M. Hannon; President, W. D. Flannigan; Vice-President, M. J. Saunders; Recording Secretary, J. A. McCarville; Financial Secretary, J. V. Swift; Treasurer, Frank Moran; Trustees, Charles Ray, J. A. Meehan and A. Mueller. The charter members of this organization were: M. Holland, H. J. Gallagher, J. H.



Rev. M. Hannon.

Keefe, C. H. Ray, P. H. Cauley, P. H. Lappin, James O'Connoe, Jr., James McDermott, J. A. Duffey, T. E. Gallaghan, Matthew Doyle, J. Davies, William Armstrong, J. B. Swift, and T. J. Connell.

The Rev. Mathias Hannon, pastor of Holy Rosary congregation at Darlington, Lafayette County, Wisconsin, is the son of Mathias Hannon, who was a "gentleman farmer," in good financial standing and of ample means, and of Ellen Trant, daughter of Patrick Trant, who was a large landed proprietor in North Kerry, and who was one of the first magistrates appointed by the English Government after the passage of the Act of Emancipation.

Father Hannon was born on the 4th of February, 1830, in the historic village of Lixnaw, County Kerry, Ireland. Lixnaw, on the River Brick, seven miles from the Atlantic Ocean, is noted for its ruins of the ancient castle and court of the earls of Kerry and Lixnaw, whose family name was Fitzmaurice.

Young Hannon's early education was received at home, under private tutors, until the age of twelve years. After that he was under the instruction of a Mr. Moran, a graduate of Trinity College, who was principal of a private seminary in the town of Tralee. The young man graduated after a five years' course in the classics and the modern languages.

In the year 1847, he came to the United States, and became a student at the University of Notre Dame, at South Bend, Indiana, now the first Catholic college in the United States. Here for four years he studied philosophy and theology, completing the course in 1852. On the 19th of December of that year, he was ordained to the priesthood by the first Bishop of Dubuque, Iowa, the Right Rev. Mathias Loras. Immediately after ordination, he was given charge of the Catholics of Iowa City. Some time afterward he had charge of a congregation in Burlington, Iowa. In the year 1868, he came to the diocese of Milwaukee, and for eight years had charge of the congregations of Byron and Eden, in Fond du Lac County.

February 1st, 1876, he took charge of the church of the Holy Rosary, in Darlington, Lafayette County, Wisconsin, and has retained the charge ever since. He has spent several thousand dollars in the payment of mortgages on the church, and in its interior and exterior decorations. During his long pastorate of twenty-one years, his whole time has been devoted to the spiritual and temporal welfare of his congregation.

With his Protestant fellow-citizens, Father Hannon stands in high esteem, for one of the maxims of his life is the Scriptural one: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." In religious controversies, he takes no part and little interest.

On the 19th of December, 1897, Father Hannon celebrated the forty-fifth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood, and next to the Church to which he had given almost half a century of his life and labors, he loves the government of the country that guarantees to all men, irrespective of religion, race or color, its powerful protection in the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness.

St. James' Church, Dayton, Wis.

THE congregation of St. James at Dayton, Green County, Wisconsin, was organized in 1870 by the Rev. James O'Farrell of Oregon, Wisconsin, by whom it was attended until 1872. Father O'Farrell was succeeded as pastor by the Rev. N. Stehle and he by the Rev. Charles Raphael, who removed his residence from Paoli to Dayton. Father Raphael was followed by the Rev. James Stehle and he by the Rev. Father Colvin, who, during his administration, built an addition to the church. The next pastor was the Rev. B. J. Burke, his successor being the Rev. Father Francis Schwinn, present rector of the parish. Among the numerous improvements made by Father Schwinn is the commodious parsonage, which was built in 1894 at a cost of $2,300. The congregation numbers ninety-seven families. There are two Catholic societies in this parish: Branch 117 of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin and an Altar Sodality.

The mission of St. Bernard at Paoli, in Dane County, Wisconsin, was established by the Rev. F. Etschmann in 1854. It was attended from then until 1872, in which year the church was built, by resident priests from Madison. Since 1880, however, it has been attached as a mission to the parish at Dayton. The congregation at present consists of fifty-three families. Services are held in this church on every other Sunday. The Sodalities of the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. Agnes are the only Catholic organizations connected with this congregation.

Rev. Francis Schwinn.

The Rev. Francis Schwinn was born November 26, 1861, at Newburg, Washington County, Wisconsin. He entered the Seminary at St. Francis in 1881 and after completing a course in classics, philosophy and theology, was ordained to the priesthood in June, 1888. His first appointment was as assistant pastor of Holy Trinity Church, Milwaukee, where he remained until July 5, 1889, when he was transferred to Dayton.

St. Andrew's Church, Delavan, Wis.

A MISSION was established at Delavan, Wisconsin, and dedicated to St. Andrew some time prior to the year 1858. In that year the Rev. George Brennan was appointed as first resident pastor of the congregation. He was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers T. A. Smith, from 1859 to 1860; H. J. Roche, from 1860 to 1864; L. N. Kenney, from 1864 to 1866; J. W. Norris, from 1866 to 1869; R. Dumphy, from 1869 to 1878; E. Allen, from 1878 to 1880; M. J. Taugher, from 1880 to 1886. After Father

St. Andrew's Church, Delavan, Wis.

Taugher came the present incumbent, the Rev. J. Smith. The congregation at Delavan was at first of very limited number, but as the country became settled and developed it increased in like proportion with the general surroundings, so that it was not very long before it became necessary to enlarge the church. A few years later, that is, prior to 1890, the same necessity occurred again, as the parish was developing in a most noticeable and satisfactory manner. In 1892 the congregation decided to erect an entirely new structure and also at the same time to locate it in a more desirable portion of the city than the one occupied by the original building up to that time. They therefore selected the present site on Walworth avenue, which is undoubtedly the choicest spot in the city for the location of a church. The building was erected in 1895 and is of solid brick with Waukesha stone foundation, Bedford stone trimmings and slate roof. It is Gothic in style of architecture and when thoroughly completed in the matter of fixtures and furnishings the cost will be no less than $20,000. In 1896, in addition to the expense undertaken in the erection of the church, a parsonage was built at a cost of $5,000. This is also of solid brick and its foundation, trimmings and roof are a counterpart of those used in the church structure. The membership of the Catholic parish at Delavan now numbers about one hundred and fifty families. The congregation has also a beautiful cemetery containing nine acres, which is located within the corporate limits of the city.

St. Andrew's Rectory, Delavan, Wis.

Rev. J. G. Smith.

The Rev. J. G. Smith, present rector of St. Andrew's at Delavan, is a native of Ireland, his parents being George and Catherine (Keller) Smith. In 1880 he came to the United States and after having completed his studies was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, by the Most Rev. Michael Heiss, D. D., in 1882. His first appointment after ordination was as pastor of the congregation at Meeme, Manitowoc County, where he remained for about three years. He was then transferred to St. Joseph's at Berlin, from which place he moved to Delavan in 1886, where he is still in charge.

St. Joseph's Church, Dodgeville, Wis.

THE St. Joseph's congregation of Dodgeville, Iowa County, Wisconsin, was organized in 1883 by Father Weinhardt, then of Mineral Point, who afterwards was the first resident pastor for nearly two years. His successor was the Rev. Andrew Joseph Ambauen, who during the past ten years has by personal efforts and through divine aid been enabled to place the organization in a comparatively flourishing condition. Under his careful administration debts which had been accumulating for years were paid off to the last dollar, while there was still enough left with which to build an elegant and commodious school-house. Nor is this all that may be looked for as a result of Father Ambauen's careful administration, as a number of the members are even now planning to devise the means with which a more adequate and imposing structure may be erected to take the place of the present church.

The Dodgeville parish, with its out-missions included, numbers about one hundred and thirty families, while at least fully seventy or eighty children are attending the parish school, which is under the management of three Franciscan Sisters from the Convent at Alverno.

The present church and school trustees of the parish are Thomas Reigan, Leonard Blotz, Louis Lautz, Theodor Caspar, Joseph Bahl and John Demby.

The congregation of St. John the Baptist, in Iowa County, Wisconsin, is the name of the small mission of about twenty families which is attended by the resident pastor from Dodgeville. The people connected with this congregation are all German, or of German descent.

Another mission attended from the same place is that of St. Peter's, also in Iowa County, which is composed of about fifteen German families.

Still a third, and the oldest and first mission attached to the Dodgeville parish, is that of St. Michael's, at Yellowstone, in Lafayette County. This is composed of about thirty Irish families.

The Rev. Andrew Joseph Ambauen, Roman Catholic priest and author, was born at Beckenried, Canton of Unterwalden, Switzerland, March 7, 1847, son of Michael and Barbara (Zimmermann) Ambauen. His parents were thrifty and pious people—Michael Ambauen being a master ship-builder—and to the best of their ability provided educational advantages for their two sons. At the age of seven, Andrew was placed at the parish school of his native town, whence, after five years of diligent study, he was sent to the Benedictine Abbey at Engelberg, in the Canton of Obwalden. Under the instruction of the Benedictine Fathers, he made rapid progress, but, that he might enjoy the very best educational advantages, he went, in 1863, to the Jesuit college in Feldkirch, Austrian Tyrol, subsequently also attending the college at Brieg, Canton of Wallis, Switzerland, and then at Einsiedeln, where he enjoyed the friendship of that notable poet-priest and philanthropist, Gallus Morel. Having completed his classical and philosophical course, he entered the theological seminary at Mentz, Hesse-Darmstadt, then recently reëstablished by Bishop de Ketteler, and a resort for great numbers of students, as well as some of the most celebrated scholars in Catholic doctrine and history. His health becoming impaired, he was obliged to forego his studies, and rest at home for some time. Meanwhile, the desire grew within him to become a missionary in America, and soon after his recovery he left for the United States. On his birthday, in 1872, he arrived in Milwaukee, Wis., where he was received into the archiepiscopal provincial seminary of St. Francis, then presided over by the venerable Father Joseph Salzmann. In the following December he was ordained to the priesthood, and for thirteen years worked in various pioneer mission stations in the diocese of Milwaukee. In 1886 he was appointed by Archbishop Heiss to St. Joseph's Congregation, Dodgeville, Iowa County, Wis., where he has faithfully ministered for over ten years. In the intervals of exacting pastoral duties he has contributed extensively to church and popular literature. Among his works are "The Friend of Youth," "Roses of Heaven," and "Guide to Our Celestial Home," all in the German language; and in English, the "Devout Companion," "The Catechists' Manual," "Our Christian Duties," and the "Floral Apostles; or What the Flowers Say to Thinking Man." The last named book, first published in 1892, at once attained popularity in the wider literary world, and established his reputation as a clever and forceful writer. Consisting of a series of meditations and disquisitions on the profitable lessons taught by our various familiar flowers, it is at once acceptable, and fraught with many a beautiful and suggestive thought; truly edifying, although with little direct sermonizing. Besides numerous favorable notices in the periodical press, the author received personal letters of appreciation from Bishop Keane of Washington University, Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Satolli, and others notable in the church or literary world. Father Ambauen is widely popular in his community, and recognized, both within and without the Church, as one whose earnestness and thorough devotion to all causes of good and truth are unfailing and sincere. His literary style is clear and expressive, and, like his life and character, attractive and energetic, with a whole-souled consecration to the beautiful and good. Father Ambauen celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood at Dodgeville, on Christmas Day, 1897, on which occasion he was made the recipient of many valuable and pleasing testimonials from his parishioners, the school children and citizens of Dodgeville.

St. Joseph's Church, Dodgeville, Wis.

Rev. A. Ambauen.

St. Michael's Church, Dotyville, Wis.

DURING the years 1847 and 1848, Fathers Caspar and George Rehrl visited Dotyville every second month, saying Mass in a small log house owned by Matthias Engels. Four years later the first church, a structure 24x36 feet, was built by Father Bonaventura, who was at that time the attending clergyman. This building was never used, but another and larger one built by Father Solanus in 1855 was in constant service until 1894, when the present church was erected. In the earlier days of this congregation attendance was given by Fathers Bonaventura, Franciscus, Josaphat, Matheus, Leo, Solanus, Fidelis, Daniel, Luke, Antonius, and Laurentius, all of whom were O. M. C. Then followed the Revs. M. Hannon, N. Stehle, F. Spath and H. Jacobs—who built a parochial school in 1872—Weidlich, W. Bernard—who died and was buried there—J. Krull, Wm. Lette, A. Wibbert, Father Albertus, Philip Vogg, M. Oberlinkels, August Gardthaus, William J. Blum, and the present pastor, Father Edward Meyer, who assumed the duties as such in 1893. There are about ninety members in the congregation. The parochial school, which is conducted by a lay teacher, has an attendance of forty scholars. In the way of societies there are in this parish: St. Mary's Sodality of Married Ladies, with Mrs. Joseph Goebel and Mrs. Robert Leary as officers, and the St. Rose of Lima Young Ladies' Sodality, the officers of which are the Misses Maggie Konen and Mary Foy.

St. Michael's Old and New Church, Dotyville, Wis.

Rev. E. J. Meyer.

Father Edward J. Meyer, who has been pastor of this charge since 1893, was born at Barton, Washington County, Wis., in 1867. After completing his studies at the St. Francis Seminary, he was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. Archbishop Katzer, June 21, 1891. For two years following his ordination he was assistant priest at St. Michael's Church, Milwaukee. He was then appointed to the Dotyville charge, where he at once began the erection of a new church which was completed in 1894 at a cost of $10,000. Last year he built a substantial and commodious parochial school, for which some $2,000 additional was paid.

St. Patrick's Church, Doylestown, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Patrick's at Doylestown, Columbia County, Wisconsin, obtained its first resident pastor in 1877, the Rev. H. Murphy being appointed to that charge in September of that year. After Father Murphy came successively the Rev. Fathers Butler, C. Kelly, E. Pitt, James Nicholas, M. Luby, R. Wall, and the present pastor, Father F. J. Lillis. There are two hundred and ten members of the congregation. Of Catholic Societies in this parish there are St. Patrick's Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters, a Young Ladies' Sodality, and an Altar Society.

St. Patrick's Church, Doylestown, Wis.

Rev. F. J. Lillis.

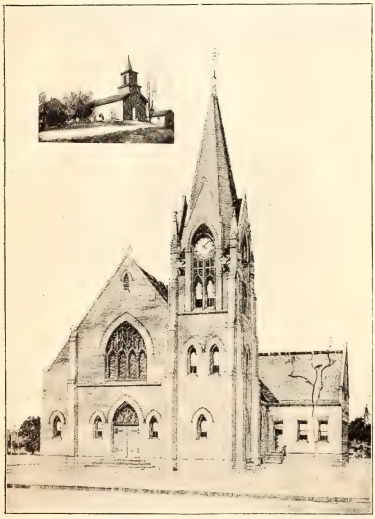
The present incumbent, Father F. J. Lillis, was born in Janesville, Wisconsin. After obtaining his ordinary routine education at the local schools, he entered St. Francis Seminary, where, having perfected a philosophical and theological course, he was ordained to the priesthood, June, 1892. On July 3d of the same year, he was appointed to his present charge as pastor of Doylestown. Father Lillis also has charge of St. Augustine's mission at Wyocena, also in Columbia County.

St. Theresa's Church, Eagle, Wis.

THE parish of St. Theresa's at Eagle, Wisconsin, but at that time known as Eagle Center, was founded in the year 1852, at which time also the first church, a small frame building, was erected. Prior to this time divine services were held in private houses, by the Rev. Father



St. Theresa's Old and New Church, Eagle, Wis.

Kundig, then a resident of Prairieville, now known as Waukesha. After the erection of the church the English speaking members of the parish were attended to by the Rev. Fathers McKinney, Willard, Casey and Fairbanks, all of whom resided consecutively at East Troy, whilst the spiritual wants of the German speaking members were attended to by Father Gernbauer, of Waterford, Father Rief of Brookfield, a pastor from Jefferson, and Father Spath of St. Bruno's, town of Ottawa. After the late civil war, or about the year 1868, an addition was built to the main portion of the church, to which, also, a tower and bell were added. The parsonage at Eagle was built in the year 1870, since which time the parish has always had its resident pastor, who in connection with his duties there, had as an out-mission the congregation of St. Paul at Genesee Depot. The first pastor to take up his residence at Eagle was the Rev.

Rev. A. J. Nickel.

Charles Schilling, who remained there from 1870 to 1877. He was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers Nicolas August Thill from 1878 to 1880; Hugo Victor from 1880 to 1884; J. J. Zawistawski from 1884 to 1885; P. J. Jones from 1885 to 1886; A. S. Leitner from 1886 to 1889; William J. Pischery from 1889 to 1895, and the present pastor, the Rev. J. Nickel, who assumed the duties of that office in the latter year. The present church of St. Theresa at Eagle was built during the year 1896, under the supervision of a committee of six members of the congregation. It is a fine brick structure; is heated by furnace and has in addition to the main portion of the building a large school-room, tower and gallery. The corner-stone to this building was laid on November 3, 1895, and the building dedicated on November 11, 1896. The congregation was incorporated in 1883 under the State laws of Wisconsin, with the Rev. Hugo Victor as ex-officio vice-president; Edmund Lins, secretary, and Aug. F. Breidenbach, treasurer.

The first parochial school established by the congregation of St. Theresa was built in 1853. It consisted of a roughly constructed log building, which was located a mile and a half west of the village, and at a point near the location of the present cemetery. In this log school services were held in the early days by the visiting missionaries. For some time after its establishment the school was in charge of lay teachers. In 1888 this building was removed to a point in the village near to the church. When the present church was erected the old school-house was also disposed of, and the present one erected in its place. The cemetery belonging to the congregation of St. Theresa's was donated by a member several years ago. Of societies in this parish there are the following: Ladies' Altar Society, of which Mrs. Mary von Roueden is secretary; St. Mary's Young Ladies' Sodality: Miss Menerva Bolan, secretary; The Father Kundig Young Men's Catholic Society: the Rev. A. J. Nickel, spiritual director; Henry M. Loebl, president; W. H. Tuohy, vice-president; Carl T. Mueller, secretary; John C. Agathen, treasurer. The congregation at the present time numbers seventy-five families, and the school, which is still in charge of a secular teacher, has a regular attendance of twenty pupils.

Prior to the appointment of a resident pastor at Eagle, the mission of St. Paul at Genesee had been attended from Waukesha. It was at that time, however, transferred to the charge of the pastor at Eagle, and has so remained until the present time. The membership of this congregation, some twenty-five families, is considerably smaller than it was a few years ago, owing to the fact that many of the original Catholic settlers have moved West, disposing of their homesteads to Welsh immigrants, who are fast settling up the country in the vicinity of Eagle.

The Rev. A. J. Nickel, present rector of the congregation of St. Theresa at Eagle, Waukesha County, Wisconsin, is a native of the Badger State, having been born at Saukville, Ozaukee County, Wisconsin, on October 30, 1866. Having devoted the necessary period of years to fitting himself for the services of the Church, and completed a thorough course in the classics, philosophy and theology, he was finally ordained to the priesthood on March 3, 1889. Two days subsequent to his ordination he celebrated his first Mass. He then became assistant pastor of St. Michael's Church, Milwaukee. Here he remained for a number of months, when he was transferred to St. Hubert's congregation at Richfield, Washington County, Wis., which position he maintained until 1895, when he resigned to accept his present pastorate.

St. Joseph's Church, East Bristol, Wis.

FROM the time of the foundation of St. Joseph's congregation in April, 1847, services were conducted at East Bristol by the Rev. Fathers P. Adalbert Inama and Maximilian Gaertner, both of whom resided in Roxbury, Wis., and it was under the latter's administration, prior to 1850, that the few Catholic German settlers in that vicinity built the first frame church. From 1850 to 1853 the Rev. F. X. Etschmann, pastor of St. Raphael's Church in Madison, officiated, and during that period Michael Schmitt deeded six acres of land to the congregation. In 1854 the Rev. Father Haider made occasional visits from Jefferson. He was followed from 1855 till June, 1856, by the Rev. John Baptist Hasselbauer, a Bavarian by birth, who became first resident pastor of the charge. With him he brought a bell, which had not only the novelty of being the first in that vicinity, but was also regarded as an unusual luxury in those times. In June, 1856, the Very Rev. Martin Kundig, later on Vicar General of Milwaukee, took charge of the congregation, he being succeeded by the Rev. Sebastian Seif of Cross Plains, and Jacob Stehle, their period of labor extending from December, 1856, to October, 1857. At this time the log church then occupied received an addition. From October, 1857, to May, 1859, the Rev. Lorenz Conrad, present pastor of Holy Trinity Church, Milwaukee, administered to the wants of the parish, he being followed by the Rev. F. X. Pfaller, who stayed until December, 1860. In January, 1861, Father Comenzind was appointed, but left, owing to ill-health, in August, 1861. The Rev. Father Storr next took charge, leaving again December, 1861, when the duties were again assumed by Father Comenzind, who remained until October of the following year. By this time the congregation had outgrown its original quarters and were making quite extensive preparations for the erection of a new stone church. From October, 1862, to May, 1863, the Rev. Michael Obermueller attended to

St. Joseph's Church, East Bristol, Wis.

Rev. Ignatius A. Klein.

St. Joseph's, the Rev. W. Bernard succeeding him for the following two months. It was during the pastorate of the Rev. P. Fabian Bermadinger, which continued until October, 1864, that actual work was commenced on the new church. In the spring of that year the cornerstone was laid, on which occasion Father De Becke, successor to the pastorate, preached a very impressive sermon. This church, its dimensions being 40 by 105 feet, was completed by him at a cost of $6,000; four years later—November 24, 1868—it was blessed and consecrated by the Most Rev. Archbishop Henni; the Rev. Anton Foeckler was pastor at this time, having assumed the duties in February, 1867. During his rectorate, which ended in May, 1871, Father Foeckler added a large school house to the church possessions, at a cost of $4,000. The Rev. H. J. Muckerheide was next resident priest, remaining until July, 1879. He bought two bells for the church. His successor was the Rev. A. Gstach, D. D., who took charge in August, 1879. During his pastorate the old residence was replaced by a fine brick building, which cost $3,500. He left in October, 1886. The next pastor was the Rev. S. G. Woelfl, who took charge in November, 1886. He died in September, 1895, at Franklin, Wis., at the home of his aged mother, when but 46 years of age. It was during his time that the erection of a new Gothic stone church was begun, the cost of which, when completed, will be fully $28,000. It is in every way an admirable structure, and when complete will undoubtedly be one of the handsomest edifices in Dane County. After the death of Father Woelfl, the present rector, the Rev. Ignatius A. Klein, was appointed, taking charge on September 20, 1895. This Rev. Father was born on September 1, 1863. He received a part of his education at St. Francis Seminary, and was ordained there July 11, 1886. His first duties were as assistant priest to the Rev. Father Conrad, of Holy Trinity Church, Milwaukee, from whence he was assigned to the pastorate of St. John's Church, Paris, Wis., May 1, 1887. On November 7 of the same year, he assumed charge of St. Mary's congregation in Pine Bluff, Dane County, where he remained nearly eight years. During that time he built a new Gothic stone church, Sisters' house and school, at an outlay of nearly $20,000. He also built St. Ignatius' Church, a neat frame structure, at the Mount Horeb Mission and also thoroughly renovated the Church of the Holy Redeemer in Perry, a mission of St. Mary's. When he left Pine Bluff to accept his present charge, the congregation, in spite of this enormous outlay, was entirely out of debt. The congregation of Pine Bluff consisted of seventy-five Irish and German families at this time.

The congregation of St. Joseph's consists of one hundred and fifty families, all of whom are German excepting three. The parish school is attended by one hundred and forty children, the classes being in charge of Sisters of St. Francis. The five Catholic societies represented in this parish are as follow: St. John's Young Men's Society, reorganized October 1, 1895, by the Rev. Ignatius A. Klein, with a membership of ninety; President, W. Belda; Secretary, John Batz; Treasurer, Frank Weber. St. Mary's Young Ladies' Society, reorganized October 1, 1895; membership sixty; President, Miss Barbara Weber; Secretary, Miss Laura Trapp; Treasurer, Miss Nora Schmitt. St. Joseph's Men's Society, organized April 1, 1873; reorganized by present pastor, February 23, 1896; membership forty-two; President, Ernst Hillenbrandt; Treasurer, A. Scheuerell; Secretary, Rudolph A. Schmitt. Archconfraternity of Christian Mothers; branch established by pastor December 8, 1895; membership one hundred and fifty; Secretary, Mrs. Frank Damn; Treasurer, Mrs. George Blatz, Branch of the Family Protective Association of Wisconsin; membership seventeen; Secretary, Frank Stegerwald; Treasurer, Rudolph A. Schmitt, and Spiritual Director and President, the Rev. Ignatius A. Klein.

St. Peter's Church, East Troy, Wis.

UNTIL the year 1848, the Catholics living in the vicinity of East Troy, Walworth County, were attended by the pastors from Waterford, Burlington and Geneva. The first of these of whom any mention is made was the Rev. Father Morrissey, who held services in private houses, or buildings that could be made available for that purpose. The congregation of St. Peter's was organized by the Rev. Martin Kundig in 1848. After Father Kundig, the Rev. Gernbauer attended East Troy as a mission from Waterford, continuing to do so until 1855. The first resident pastor at this place was the Rev. Father Seif, who remained for four months and was then succeeded by the Rev. Michael Haider, whose administration lasted until July, 1857. From that time until May, 1859, the Rev. Thomas Keenan was pastor, and after him the Rev. James Stehle, who remained until 1860. His successor, the Rev. N. Kenney, resided at East Troy until 1864, and the Rev. Geo. L. Willard, who followed him from that year until 1866. For the two years succeeding the Rev. John Casey was pastor, and during the year 1868 the Rev. Father Graves had charge of the congregation. In 1870 several acres were donated by Alex. Porter for the purpose of erecting a new church. The church was built by Rev. Thomas Bergen. He sold the original property in 1872. Then followed, in succession, the Rev. Fathers F. M. Fairbanks, 1868 to 1870; Thomas Bergen, July, 1870, until 1876. Rev. John Kessler bought a few acres and built a school house at a cost of about $4,000 in 1889. J. Fitzgibbon, 1876 until 1881; Father Allen, 1881 to May, 1884; H. Victor, 1884 to 1887; John Kessler, 1887 to August, 1893; Rev. J. T. O'Leary to October, 1895; Charles Schmid, pro tem., 1896 and the present incumbent, the Rev. J. J. Weinhoff, who took charge in August of that year. The congregation now consists of 120 families. There is one parochial school at East Troy, which is attended by twenty children and conducted by a lay teacher. Of Catholic societies in the congregation there are: A League of the Sacred Heart, Altar Society and Branch of the Catholic Order of Foresters. The present trustees of the parish are the Messrs. James Brady and Thomas O'Connor.

St. Peter's Church, East Troy, Wis.

Rev. J. J. Weinhoff.

The congregation of St. James at Mukwonago, Waukesha County, is attended as a mission from East Troy, which was first established as such by the Rev. Charles Schmid, on June 7, 1896. The congregation consists of twenty families, all of whom are Irish. Services are held once in every two weeks. The present trustees of St. James' congregation are Messrs. Michael Mitten and John Clohisy.

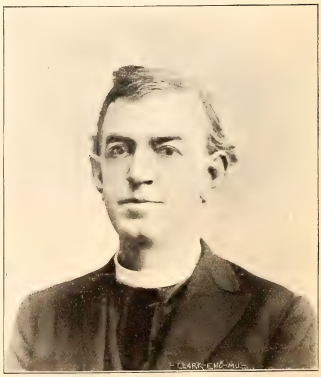
The Rev. John Joseph Weinhoff was born in the township of Franklin, Milwaukee County, on March 13, 1865, his father being a native of Prussia and his mother of Holland. After acquiring his earlier education at the parochial school in Franklin, he attended the normal school at St. Francis for several terms. Then he entered the seminary in 1882, and, after completing a thorough course in theology, was ordained to the priesthood by Archbishop Michael Heiss in 1889. His first appointment was as assistant to the Rev. H. J. Holzhauer, at St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee, where he remained for nine months. He was then transferred to the pastorate of St. Mary's Help of the Christians at Sullivan, Jefferson County, having for mission the congregation at St. Bruno, at Weimer. He remained at Sullivan from 1890 to 1896 and in August of the latter year received his appointment to St. Peter's congregation at East Troy, where he still resides.

St. Mary's Church, Eden, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary's at Eden, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, was until quite recently served as a mission by the resident pastor of St. John's from Byron, the present incumbent, the Rev. J. B. McFarland, being the first to assume the duties as resident pastor at that place. One of the first improvements undertaken in this parish by Father McFarland was the erection of a parsonage in 1895 at a cost of $2,500. The congregation of St. Mary's is an outgrowth of that of St. James at South Eden, which, however, is a mission and as such is attended from St. Mary's. The congregation at the present time numbers some four hundred souls. Of Catholic organizations there are in this parish: St. Mary's Altar Society, Mrs. H. Hayes, president; Sodality of the Immaculate Conception, Miss Nora Mahoney, president, Miss Nellie McCarty, secretary and treasurer, and the Misses Alice Ward, Katie Kelley and Johanna Whalen, consultors, and the League of the Sacred Heart. The mission of St. James at South Eden is one of the older parishes in the diocese, having been established as long ago as 1847, at which time the Catholics in that neighborhood were attended by the Rev. Father Rehrl. The congregation now numbers about fifty families. Services are held at St. James' every Sunday. There are three Catholic organizations in this congregation: an Altar Society, Mrs. P. Flood, president; Sodality for Young Ladies and League of the Sacred Heart.

The Rev. J. B. McFarland, present pastor of St.

St. Mary's Church, Eden, Wis.



Rev. J. B. McFarland.

Mary's and St. James', was born in Watertown, Mass., September 29, 1853. After acquiring an ordinary school education he entered St. Francis' Seminary in 1866, and after having completed a course in the classics, philosophy and theology at that institution, was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. Archbishop Henni at St. John's Cathedral on August 10, 1874. Prior to his appointment to the pastorate at Eden he was, for different periods, stationed at Cedarburg, Elba and Racine.

St. Joseph's Church, Edgerton, Wis.

THE parish of St. Joseph's at Edgerton was given its first resident pastor in the person of the Rev. Father Butler, in 1870. Prior to this time, the Catholics dwelling at Edgerton and vicinity were visited as a mission by the resident pastors from Porterstown. However, with the coming of the railroad, Edgerton naturally forged to the front, and soon became the most appropriate place of the two for the pastor's residence. Consequently, St. Joseph's at Edgerton became the mother parish and St. Michael's the mission.

St. Joseph's Church, Edgerton, Wis.

The congregation of St. Michael's at Porterstown, Rock County, Wisconsin, was organized in the year 1852, the first pastor to attend it being the Rev. Father McFaul, then resident priest at Janesville. He continued to visit this place until 1856, during which year he was succeeded by the Rev. Arthur O'Connor, who remained from 1857 to 1858. Father O'Connor made his home at Porterstown, from which place he visited Edgerton, saying Mass in the private houses of the Catholics there. He was succeeded by the Rev. Edward McQuirke, whose pastorate extended from December 18, 1858, to December 13, 1859. His successor was the Rev. M. Downey, who remained from October 21, 1859, to January 1, 1861. Then followed the Rev. Fathers James Hegerty, from January, 1861, to October 10, 1862; John Murphy, from 1862 to 1866, and James Colton for one and Father Farley for several months during the year following. In addition to these, the congregation was also occasionally visited by Father Hobbs, of Oregon, Dane County, and Father O'Farrell. The congregation of St. Michael's at the present time consists of seventy-eight families, who are afforded regular services by the pastor of Edgerton on every second Sunday. The land upon which the Porterstown church has been erected, a portion of which is also used for cemetery purposes, was donated to the congregation by Mr. Dennis McCarthey, an active and progressive member of the parish. In connection with St. Michael's, there are a number of active societies, among which are the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin and Ladies' Temperance Society.

Rev. James E. Harlin.

As previously stated, Father Butler became the first resident pastor of St. Joseph's at Edgerton in 1870. In this charge he was succeeded by the Rev. Father Devine, who was succeeded by the Rev. J. F. Bowe. This pastor remained until February 1895, when the duties were assumed by the present incumbent, the Rev. James E. Harlin. The congregation of St. Joseph's at the present time consists of about sixty-five families. There are represented in this parish the following Catholic organizations: Temperance Society, established in 1882; Ladies' Aid Society, and Altar Society. The present trustees of St. Joseph's congregation are Messrs. Joseph Loghran and Michael Doran.

Still another mission is St. Ann's, at Stoughton, Dane County, where services are held once a month.

The Rev. James E. Harlin, present incumbent of St. Joseph's, was born in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, in 1858. He was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, in Milwaukee, on June 24, 1883, by Archbishop Heiss, and celebrated his first Mass on the following Sunday at St. Joseph's Church, Fond du Lac. He was then appointed as assistant at St. Patrick's Church, Janesville, from whence, after remaining one year, he was transferred to the rectorate at St. John's congregation at Monches, in Waukesha County. After eleven years' pastorate at this place, he was on February 1st, 1895, appointed rector of St. Joseph's congregation at Edgerton.

St. Patrick's Church, Elkhorn, Wis.

THE history of St. Patrick's Church at Elkhorn, though not made memorable by the blood of martyrs, began as all Christian organizations have begun, that is, there were present those never-failing attendants—privation, difficulty, self-denial and patient working and waiting. The hard times of 1857-61 and the war of 1861-65 might have excused postponement of church building; but yet while in the mid-period of those successive public distresses a substantial frame building was bought, moved to their own lot and there changed from a tannery to a church.

St. Patrick's Church, Elkhorn, Wis.

As far as can be ascertained with any amount of certainty, the first service held in Elkhorn was in 1848, at the home of Michael Fahey, by the Rev. J. Prendergast, who came through storm and sunshine to bring the consolations of religion to the faithful souls whom neither scepticism nor hardships could weaken in the faith in which they had been born and baptized. The Rev. Prendergast's pastorate extended to 1856, when he was succeeded by the Rev. John Brennan, who held services in the courthouse. He finally retired, and is at present, if reports be true, closing an eventful career in the peaceful seclusion of a suburb of Dublin, Ireland. The Rev. H. Roche, at that time a young, active and energetic priest, took charge of the gradually increasing flock, and after a few years of tireless labor was promoted to a more extensive charge. His successor was the Rev. James Morrissey. In 1871 the Rev. James Dumphy became rector, and it was through his ceaseless endeavors that the congregation was finally induced to procure one of the loveliest sites in the city for a church and parsonage. From 1875 to 1878 parish affairs were conducted by the Rev. J. J. Allen, who was succeeded in the latter year by the Rev. J. W. Vahey. This zealous priest, filled with an earnest desire to build his twentieth church, undertook and accomplished the erection of St.

Rev. Jas. Nicholas.

Patrick's, which is to-day regarded as one of the most handsomely adorned and perfectly appointed churches in the State. In 1886 the Rev. M. Luby was installed as pastor and succeeded in reducing the church debt to a considerable extent. A year later the work of still further curtailing this incumbrance fell to the lot of the rector, Rev. J. Nicholas, whose government of parish affairs is cool, conservative, and partakes largely of the "suaviter in modo" kind. It is but fair to state that the efforts of these clergymen were most ably seconded by the activity and generosity of the faithful people.

In 1880 the church was incorporated under the laws of the State of Wisconsin with a committee composed of the Most Rev. M. Heiss, Rev. J. W. Vahey, Thomas H. O'Brien and Thomas E. Slettery. In 1887, the beginning of the present pastorate, a new committee was formed consisting of Anthony Markey and John Keefe, under whose careful administration the debt on the church and property was gradually decreased, until in 1888 it was entirely wiped out. Then improvements of a necessary but pleasing character began to put in an appearance until church, parsonage and grounds have become objects of admiration to all who see them. The death of Mr. Markey necessitated the formation of another committee, which at the present time consists of the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer, Rev. James Nicholas, John Keefe and John Dumphy.

The church to-day has within its jurisdiction nearly six hundred practical communicants, and very closely identified with the workings of the parish is the organization known as Branch 105 of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, with a membership of fifty-five.

Many of the pioneers of this now prosperous parish still live to enjoy with pardonable pride and unwonted pleasure the work in which they so well and faithfully aided in years gone by.

One of the oldest congregations in the State, although through stress of circumstances it is still visited as a mission, is that of St. Catherine's at Sharon, Walworth County, Wisconsin, which was established by the Rev. Father Kundig. This incident transpired in 1846, during which year also the first sacred structure was erected at Sharon. The congregation is at the present time served as a mission by the pastor of St. Patrick's Church at Elkhorn, Wisconsin, who holds services there once a month on Sundays and twice on week days. The congregation of St. Catherine's at the present time is composed of about forty families, all of whom are of Irish descent.

There is an Altar Society and a Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters connected with this parish. The old church at Sharon was replaced by a new and more appropriate structure in 1896 and was built under the administration of the Rev. Father Nicholas.

Church of the Visitation of St. Mary, Elm Grove, Wis.

THE congregation of the Visitation of St. Mary at Elm Grove, Waukesha County, Wisconsin, was organized by a few Catholic families who had taken up their residence in that vicinity in or about the year 1844. At that time these Catholics were receiving occasional attendance from the Rev. Joseph Salzmann, who, it is believed, was the first priest to make regular visits to this congregation. He organized the congregation in 1850 and erected and blessed a church, 24x34 feet, its location being about one mile northwest of the present structure. This building was dedicated in honor of St. Ambrosius. After a four years' pastorate Father Salzmann was succeeded in 1854 by the Rev. Martin Weiss, who continued to attend St. Mary's at regular stated intervals until 1855, when Father Rief assumed the charge for one year, and then Church, School and Convent of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Father Weiss again became pastor, remaining from 1856 to 1859, during which period he was assisted by the Rev. Hieronymus Berckmann. From March 28, 1859, to 1860 the Rev. George Rehrl attended St. Mary's, after which for a time the Catholics of Elm Grove attended divine services in the Sisters' Convent Chapel. This was undoubtedly at a period when it had been necessary to abandon the old building. The next pastors who administered to the spiritual wants of these people were the Revs. F. X. Krautbauer and A. Enders, who visited them from 1860 to 1861. During this year the Rev. Kilian Flasch also officiated at Elm Grove on several occasions.

Father Enders was succeeded by the Rev. P. Wigert, who performed the duties from June 2, 1861, until the following month. He died on July 17, 1862, and was buried in the cemetery near St. Mary's Church. Following Father Wigert came the Revs. P. Leander, O. S. B., Martin Weiss, F. X. Krautbauer, A. Hattenberger from April 14, 1862, to May 31, 1866, Father Hattenberger again from January, 1867, to May 26, 1867, and the Rev. Kilian Flasch. In 1868 a new brick church was built, the corner-stone of which was laid by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Salzmann on June 21 of that year. This building was dedicated November 15, 1868, Bishop Martin Henni performing the ceremony and placing it under the protection of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The Rev. Kilian Flasch was the first resident pastor at Elm Grove, remaining there from May 26, 1867, to August 26, 1875. Under his administration many improvements were made to the church property, including the building of a substantial parsonage. Father Flasch was succeeded by the Rev. John Florian Payer, who stayed at Elm Grove until November, 1876. During this period the Revs. Joseph Rainer and Wappelhorst also occasionally officiated. The next pastor was the Rev. Henry Berhorst, who remained from December, 1876, to May, 1880. From July to November of the latter year the Rev. P. Carolus, O. M. Cap., had charge of the congregation, while from March, 1881, to January, 1882, the Rev. Peter Deberge maintained the pastorate. Then came the Rev. Henry Kampschroer from August to September, 1882, the Rev. L. Barth, from Nov. 26, 1882, to June, 1884; the Rev. John Stephen Muenich, from June to November, 1884; the Capuchin Fathers from December, 1884, to November, 1885, and the Rev. Joseph Huber, from November, 1885, to May, 1889—he built the present parsonage at an expense of $2,500. On the departure of Father Huber the Rev. William Haberstock, present incumbent, took charge of the congregation. He has proved to be an active and zealous worker in behalf of the parish, having accomplished many valuable improvements during his residence there, which, taken altogether, represent an outlay of not less than $7,000. This includes the entire remodeling of the church and the erection of a new steeple, the structure being rededicated by Archbishop Katzer on August 23, 1891. This occurrence is somewhat interesting from the fact that it was the first official act performed by the Archbishop after his elevation to the archiepiscopate. On this occasion there were present Fathers Abbelen, Miller, Becker, Koetting and the present rector of the parish. The congregation now consists of about ninety families and the parochial school has a regular average attendance of fifty-four scholars, and is in charge of Sisters from Notre Dame Convent.

Rev. Wm. Haberstock.

Of Catholic societies connected with St. Mary's there are the Immaculate Conception Young Ladies' Society, St. Aloysius' Young Men's Society, St. Elizabeth Married Ladies' Society and a branch of the Protective Association.

St. Mary's Convent, situated near the church, was founded by Mother Caroline in 1859. In this convent there are thirty-four resident Sisters who have charge of fifteen orphan children. An addition has just been made to the convent which will be used by the Sisters of Notre Dame as an orphan asylum, parochial school and a hospital retreat for aged sisters. South of the church and convent is a cemetery belonging to the Sisters of Notre Dame, which is also the last resting-place of Mother Caroline. In this graveyard and near to each other lie the remains of four of the former pastors of St. Mary's—the Rev. Fathers George Rehrl, who died January 17, 1860, P. Wigert, July 17, 1862, Henry Berhorst, June 21, 1880, and P. Deberge, June 14, 1882.

The Rev. William Haberstock, present rector of St. Mary's, was born February 4, 1856, at Milwaukee. After having visited the Holy Trinity parochial school, he entered the priests' seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he completed the classical course. He then studied philosophy at St. John's Seminary in Minnesota, and theology again at St. Francis, where he was ordained to the priesthood by Archbishop Heiss on Passion Sunday, 1879. He said his first Mass at Holy Trinity Church, Milwaukee, immediately after which he was appointed temporary rector at Cross Plains. After a residence there of one month he was transferred as assistant to the pastorate at New Cassel, where he remained about two months. He was then appointed rector of St. Mary's congregation at Random Lake, where he remained for two years. After that he was for six years stationed at the church of Our Lady of Hope, at Seymour, Lafayette County. After a successful pastorate at this place, he was appointed rector of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary at Marytown, remaining there for two years. On May 19, 1889, he took charge of his present congregation at Elm Grove.

St. Andrew's Church, Farmersville, Wis.

ANOTHER congregation organized over half a century ago is that of St. Andrew's at Farmersville, Dodge County, Wisconsin. Of the earlier visitations to these people but little, if anything, in the way of history has gone on record. As a result of this, we are almost entirely dependent upon hearsay, certainly not the most acceptable authority for an occasion such as the present. Of resident pastors in the parish, there have been quite a number, the first taking charge of the congregation in 1868. This was the Rev. Augustin Lang, who, after a year's residence at Farmersville was succeeded by the Rev. Father Deisenrieder. This pastor remained for eleven years, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Jos. Fessler, who assumed the pastorate in 1880. Two years later, the Rev. S. G. Woelfl was appointed to the pastorate. He resigned in 1886, at which time the Rev. Michael Heiss came there. Father Heiss was succeeded in 1890 by the Rev. Bernard Weir and he, in 1896, by the present pastor of St. Andrew's, the Rev. Ferdinand Raess. The congregation now consists of some thirteen hundred members. The parochial school connected with St. Andrew's has a regular attendance of one hundred and twenty-four scholars, who are in charge of two Sisters of the Order of St. Francis. There is but one Catholic organization in this congregation, namely: St. Mary's

St. Andrew's Church, Farmersville, Wis.

Rev. F. Raess.

Society of the Annunciation, of which Catherine Wittmann and Mary Weinberger are the officers.

The Rev. Father Frederick Raess, present rector of St. Andrew's Church at Farmersville, Wisconsin, was born in the Canton of Appenzell, Switzerland. After completing the necessary studies for the priesthood at some of the more prominent classical and theological institutions of his native country, he was ordained to the priesthood. He came to America August 8, 1867, his first appointment being at Ellenville, in the Archdiocese of New York, where he remained until 1873, when he came to Wisconsin and associated himself with the Archdiocese of Milwaukee. Here he was appointed assistant pastor at St. Nazianz, in which capacity he served for twelve months. In 1874 he was appointed to the congregation of St. Hubert with that at the Mission of St. Augustin attached. While maintaining that charge he built the church on Holy Hill. In 1887 he assumed the pastorate at New Berlin, Waukesha County, and while there built the church which was dedicated to the Apostles. In 1891 he was transferred to Kieler, Grant County, and again in 1896 to Le Roy.

St. Mary's Church, Fennimore, Wis.

THOMAS TORMEY, a native of Ireland, who came to Grant County in 1848, originated the idea of establishing a Catholic church in Fennimore, Grant County, Wisconsin, and furnished the necessary means for carrying out the project. This is by no means the first effort made by Mr. Tormey in behalf of his chosen religion, he also being the leader in a movement towards the erection of the first Catholic church at Lancaster, Wisconsin, to which enterprise he was a liberal subscriber.

St. Mary's Church, Fennimore, Wis.

Fennimore is situated on the old Military Road, lying centrally between the towns of Montfort on the east, Mt. Hope on the west, Boscobel on the north and Lancaster on the south, being about twelve miles distant from each of those places. For many years prior to 1884, the people of Fennimore and vicinity attended divine services at Highland, Lancaster, Boscobel and Mt. Hope.

In 1883 Mr. Tormey and Mr. Patrick Flynn purchased some lots on which to erect a church in the village of Fennimore, which had then a population of about two hundred and fifty people, a fifth of its present size. In the year following, the church was completed, but prior to this these gentlemen called upon Father Schwaiger, then pastor of Lancaster, to consult him regarding the advisability of the undertaking. To this the pastor somewhat demurred, owing to the smallness of the Catholic settlement, and consequent doubts in his mind as to the advisability of attempting to support a separate congregation. These gentlemen then carried the matter before the Archbishop for further consideration, the upshot of the entire proceedings being that Father Schwaiger withdrew whatever slight objections he might have had and at once entered heartily into the work. At the time that this matter was finally settled, there were but two Catholic families living in the village of Fennimore, those of Mr. Flynn and John J. Scanlan. Once having decided to go ahead, Father Schwaiger used every available pretext for perfecting the work, as a result of which he succeeded in erecting a serviceable brick structure, which, when completed, cost $3,051.86. The corner-stone of this building was laid in the summer of 1884, Father Dempsey, then of Highland, preaching in English, Father Weinhart in German, and Father Roudermougher in Polish. As may be naturally supposed, the expense incurred in the erection of this building was a heavy burden on those directly interested, but through numerous liberal donations made by the business men and disinterested parties in the village, the church has been completed and the debt paid. Father Schwaiger was succeeded in the administration of this parish by Father Barth, who succeeded in accomplishing much lasting good for the parish. He was followed by Father Niehaus, a pious and zealous priest, who labored faithfully and with good results in behalf of the congregation. He was succeeded by Father Kaluza, who, after a brief stay, gave place to Father Albers. This pastor also accomplished much good for the parish, wiping out the entire debt which remained upon the church property. It was also during his administration that Fennimore became a separate parish, having Boscobel attached to it as a mission. The present rector of St. Mary's, Father John Feld, is the first resident pastor at Fennimore. At the present time, in addition to other and minor improvements, he is busily engaged in arranging for the erection of a suitable pastoral residence, which will undoubtedly be completed during the present year (1898). Among those who by their generous donations have assisted this parish to its present position of healthy independence, was Mrs. Margaret Kavanaugh (deceased), a relative of Mr. Tormey, who left her entire property, including a house and lot, to the church. Father Niehaus also purchased a number of lots, leaving them to the congregation with the understanding that they be used as a site for a parochial school. Among the oldest residents of this place and active members of the church, may be mentioned: Messrs. John J. Scanlan, John Norris, P. H. Finnigan, Michael Lamanski, Paul Novynski, John, James and Jacob Whitish, John Robinson, Michael Harney (deceased), James Mulrooney, William Rudersdorf, Charles Graser, Dominick Dorer, Mrs. Wehrle, John Nauert, Jacob Potsner, Charles Patzner, Jacob Bremmer, Joseph Bock, and many others who have freely contributed towards building up the congregation.

Immaculate Conception Church, Boscobel.

Rev. John B. Feld.

The first Mass was celebrated at Boscobel, now a mission to Fennimore, in the year 1861, in an old log cabin owned by a family named Smith, which was located near to the site of the present railway station. At this time and for some considerable period subsequently, Father Gaulty, then resident pastor of Prairie du Chien, officiated. At a later date, services were held on different occasions in various houses in the neighborhood until 1872, when the present church was erected. The first pastor to officiate in the new structure was Father James Cleary, his successors being the Rev. Fathers MacMahon, De Becke, Stella and Schraudenbach. After the death of the latter pastor, this mission was attended entirely from Muscoda, among those coming from there being Fathers Weinhart, Heller, Schoeberle, Wurm, Panoch, and the present rector, the Rev. John Feld. Of the experiences of this little mission, one of the oldest members of the congregation says: "The career of the organization from my earliest recollection has been a severe one—lack of means and the attempt to carry out a plan on too large a scale, placing the congregation in a position from which it has been almost impossible to extricate itself."

The Rev. John Feld, present rector of St. Mary's congregation at Fennimore, was born at Eitorf, Archdiocese of Cologne, Germany, on the 9th day of June, 1868. Having completed his classical studies in Europe, he came to the United States on September 29, 1891, and entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, at which institution, after having finished the usual course in philosophy and theology, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 16, 1895. For two years following he served as an assistant and was appointed rector of St. Mary's, at Fennimore, Wis., on July 15, 1897. He has been rector of St. Mary's at Fennimore since the latter date.

St. Joseph's Church, Fond du Lac, Wis.

THE parish of St. Joseph at Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, was, we are given to understand, and as far as any record goes to show, first visited in the year 1847 by the Rev. F. X. Bonduel, one of the very earliest of pioneer missionaries in this State, who administered to the spiritual wants of the Catholic settlers there and held divine service. Many times subsequent to this did the good missionary priest come to this place, prolonging his visit on one occasion long enough to arrange for and superintend the erection of a small chapel upon the site where the present church of St. Joseph stands. Though necessarily of somewhat limited dimensions, this chapel proved of sufficient size to furnish accommodations for all of the Catholics at that time living in the settlement of Fond du Lac or its immediate vicinity, who, eager for such an opportunity, came there at all available times to attend divine services. The work of Father Bonduel as priest was taken up by his successor, the Rev. C. Rehrl, who took his position as the first actual pastor of this community. In 1850 the Rev. E. A. Godfert took charge of this congregation, with whom he remained until July, 1853. He was followed by the Rev. L. Dael. This pastor was very energetic, and a zealous worker. Among other things accomplished by him during his pastorate, he enlarged the church, adding considerably to its interior furnishings, and also building a new and comfortable parsonage. In 1860 Father Perrodin assumed charge of St. Joseph's congregation. But now, owing to the increase in the Catholic population, it became necessary to again enlarge the church building, which he did by the addition of two wings. In 1871 the Rev. George Willard succeeded Father Perrodin as rector of the parish. He was very successful during his administration, and in 1874 laid the cornerstone of the present church edifice. Father Joseph J. Keenan succeeded to the pastorate in 1879. He remained, however, but for a short time, when the duties were assumed by the Rev. Stephen Trant, now of Racine, who maintained the pastorate for a period of six years. In 1886 the Rev. M. J. Taugher became pastor of the congregation, and has remained there as such until the present day. The congregation of St. Joseph now consists of about two hundred and fourteen families, or eight hundred and fifty communicants. Of Catholic societies connected with this congregation, there are: League of the Sacred Heart, founded in 1893: Father Taugher, director; Miss Ella Mahoney, secretary. St. Joseph's Institute: Fred Kolb, president; Frank Brennan, secretary, and Frederick Cumrow, treasurer. Ancient Order of Hibernians; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin; Catholic Order of Foresters, Ladies' Auxiliary: President, Mrs. M. McKenna; Secretary, Miss Mary Nugent; Treasurer, Mrs. M. V. Sullivan.

St. Joseph's Church, Fond du Lac. Wis.

The Rev. M. J. Taugher, the present resident pastor of St. Joseph's parish at Fond du Lac, was born in

Rev. M. J. Taugher.

Buffalo, N. Y., December 12, 1852. A year later his parents moved to Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, where he also remained until September 27, 1869, when he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee. After completing a full course at that institution in the classics, philosophy and theology, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1878. He was then appointed as pastor of the congregation at Oak Creek, but was transferred from there to Delavan on November 27, 1880. Here he remained until February 18, 1886, when he was appointed to his present pastorate at Fond du Lac.

St. Louis Church, Fond du Lac, Wis.

THE organization of the St. Louis congregation in the City of Fond du Lac, Wis., was completed in 1862. Previous to this the French, Irish and German Catholics worshiped together in what is now known as St. Joseph's Church. The earliest settlers in this town and vicinity were undoubtedly from among the French Canadians, a logical conclusion when the name, Fond du Lac, is taken into consideration. Among the first to do missionary work in this settlement were the patriot priests Fathers Bonduel and Godfert, whose history is as that of the very country itself. Their successors in the work were the Rev. Fathers J. C. Perrodin, L. Dael, E. Mazeau, O. Comtois and the present incumbent, Father Charles Boucher, all of whom being resident pastors of the parish.

In 1868 Father Perrodin commenced the erection of St. Louis Church, by no means an easy task in those early and stringent times. Persevering, however, he was successful in the task, holding his first services in the then partially completed building, on Christmas Day, 1870. Father Perrodin continued with this charge until the time of his death, which occurred June 7, 1873. He was a man of earnest, sterling qualities, his demise being sincerely regretted by the people of all classes and denominations. During his pastorate, besides attending to the spiritual wants of a large congregation, the construction of his church and many other duties pertaining to his calling, he found time to publish several valuable and scholarly works, among them being one entitled, "Conversations of a Catholic Missionary with Americans."

St. Louis Church, School and Parsonage, Fond du Lac, Wis.

Father E. Mazeau succeeded to the pastorate, remaining a little less than two years, when he was followed by the Rev. Louis Dael, who died in 1879. He was succeeded by the Rev. O. Comtois, who remained for one year. It was then that the present rector, Father

Rev. Chas. Boucher.

Charles Boucher, began his pastoral duties, taking charge of the parish on September 18, 1880.

Father Boucher was born in Canada, May 10, 1832, and there he received his education at St. Hyacinthe Seminary, from which institution he graduated with the class of '54. Three years later he was ordained to the priesthood, entering at once upon his ministerial duties. His first labors in the field were as a missionary, being appointed as such to the eastern townships, West and North Sheffard, of the Province of Quebec, where he continued for five years. He was assigned to St. Liborius Parish, and later to St. Hilaire, remaining there for seven years. About this time the increasing tide of emigration of French Canadians towards the New England States necessitated an increase also in the priestly force, of their own nationality, to accompany them. To this end, the services of Father Boucher were proffered and accepted by the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Springfield, Mass., who appointed him to superintend the missions of Ware, Warren, West Warren and Gilbertville. During the ensuing seven years he worked faithfully to strengthen and solidify these new untried forces, finally succeeding, but at the cost of health, which necessitated his retirement from active participation in the work for some considerable time. In 1880, while traveling in the West, he received a call from the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss of Milwaukee, who appointed him to the pastorate of St. Louis.

On arriving at Fond du Lac, he found the church begun by Father Perrodin still in a state of incompleteness and the parsonage encumbered with a heavy debt. Energy and capability, however, were not wanting, and as a result both church and priest house were soon put in first class condition and the debt practically removed. The Church of St. Louis and its attendant buildings are among the most imposing and artistic in the State, nearly $50,000 having been spent upon their development.

In 1887 Father Boucher went to Rome, carrying with him the canonical cases of several priests who had incurred the displeasure of their Ordinary. Here he met Cardinal Simeoni, was granted two audiences by His Holiness the Pope, and having brought his mission to a successful termination, sought needed rest and recreation in an intended tour through Western Europe, but more especially in Italy, Switzerland and France. During his pastorate at Fond du Lac, Father Boucher has accumulated some valuable property for the church, besides building a school house and residence for the Sisters, under whose guidance the educational interests of the parish have been placed.

The present congregation of St. Louis consists of one hundred and fifty families, and the parochial school, in charge of five Sisters of St. Agnes, has a regular attendance of one hundred and fifteen scholars.

Of Catholic organizations in the parish there are the Ladies' Altar Society, Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, Sodality of the Child Jesus, St. John the Baptist Society, Living Rosary Society, and St. Louis Court, No. 256, of the Catholic Order of Foresters.

The Chapel of the Sisters of Mercy, at one time attended by the pastor of St. Louis, has been abandoned, the members of that Order having removed to Milwaukee.

In spite of the many laborious, though to him most pleasant and acceptable undertakings pertaining to the duties of his sacred office, the reverend pastor of St. Louis congregation has still found time to devote much thought and energy to the furtherance and general uplifting of educational matters in the parish. As a direct result of such unwearying effort on his part then, the parochial school connected with St. Louis congregation was established in July, 1895. It is in charge of five Sisters of St. Agnes, from the convent in Fond du Lac, and has a regular average attendance of one hundred and fifteen scholars.

St. Mary's Church, Fond du Lac, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary's at Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, was established on the 8th day of December, 1886, being at first spiritually administered to by the Rev. Eusebius Hensler. He was succeeded by the

St. Mary's Church, Fond du Lac, Wis.

Rev. Nicholas Pickel, who erected a parsonage and somewhat enlarged the church structure, which had been built by his predecessor. Following Father Pickel, the Capuchin Fathers were in charge of this congregation some time, being succeeded by the Rev. Sebastian Schwinn. The administration of the fifth pastor of St. Mary's, the Rev. Joseph Fessler, was made noticeable by the fact that he erected a substantial and commodious brick school-house, thus adding materially to the well-being and property value of the parish. He was succeeded by the Rev. Philip Vogt, and he by the Rev. Louis Peschong. Father Peschong's successor was the Rev. Gottfried Wuelfing, the present rector. The congregation of St. Mary's now numbers about five hundred souls and the parish school, which is in charge of four Sisters of St. Agnes, has a regular attendance of three hundred scholars.

Of Catholic societies connected with St. Mary's congregation, there are, St. Joseph's Society: Joseph Hutter, president; B. Richter, secretary. St. Michael's Society:

Rev. G. Wuelfling.

Fred Wagner, president; J. Dreis, secretary. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: Joseph Hutter, president; E. A. Kremer, secretary. Ladies' Altar Society of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and Young Ladies' Sodality of St. Rose of Lima.

St. Patrick's Church, Fond du Lac, Wis.

ST. Patrick's Church at Fond du Lac, the foundation of which was laid in the year 1855 under the supervision of the Rev. Father Dael, is an outgrowth of the old St. Louis congregation of which Father Dael was pastor and which was the mother of all other Catholic organizations in the City of Fond du Lac. The first resident pastor of St. Patrick's was the Rev. Father James Colton. The number of families now comprising this congregation is about three hundred. There never was a parochial school connected with St. Patrick's. Among the different organizations connected with St. Patrick's is a Leo Society, a Temperance Society and also a Society of the Children of Mary. The church is a solid brick structure in good condition, well furnished and decorated, and is entirely free from debt.

The Rev. J. J. Keenan, present rector of St. Patrick's of Fond du Lac, succeeded the Rev. Father Colton in the charge of that parish in 1881. He was born in Tyrone, Ireland, in 1845, and when only eighteen months old was brought by his parents to America, who settled first in Philadelphia. From there at a later date they removed to East Troy, Wisconsin. He studied his classical course at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, and then at St. Mary's of the Lake, called Chicago University, where he remained for two years. He then entered Mount St. Mary's College at Emmittsburg, Maryland, from which institution he was graduated in the class of 1868. He was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where for six years afterwards he was engaged as professor at Pio Nono College. He then became pastor of the Catholic church at Oconomowoc for one year, leaving there to accept charge of the congregation at Portage City. From there he went to Eau Claire, and afterwards became pastor of St. Joseph's Church at Fond du Lac. After two years as rector of that church he returned to Portage and remained there for six months, when he was called to his present incumbency at St. Patrick's. The present flourishing condition of the congregation is owing to his zealous and untiring efforts. Father Keenan has one of the largest and most comprehensive libraries in the Diocese of Milwaukee.

St. Patrick's Church, Fond du Lac, Wis.

St. Joseph's Church, Ft. Atkinson, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Joseph's at Ft. Atkinson, Jefferson County, may be counted among the younger ones in the Archdiocese of Milwaukee, having been first established in 1884. On August 11 of that year, the Catholics of Ft. Atkinson and vicinity purchased of the Universalists of that city a building for which they paid $2,000. The business pertaining to the transfer of this property was transacted by the Rev. Father Fitzgibbon, of Whitewater, from which place the Catholics of Ft. Atkinson had heretofore been attended. After the church was secured, the congregation was in charge of Fathers of the Holy Cross, from Watertown, the first of these being the Rev. A. Morrissey, C. S. C., who is now president of the Notre Dame Convent at Notre Dame, Indiana. His successor was the Rev. J. E. Allen, who had charge of the congregation for about a year and a half. He was succeeded by the Revs. J. M. Toohey, C. S. C., J. W. Clark, C. S. C., and James Bowland, C. S. C. The Rev. F. X. Schneider, the present incumbent of the pastorate, became a resident of Ft. Atkinson in August, 1894. Father Schneider has made considerable improvements to the church since his residence there, among other things building a gallery in the interior and also erecting a communion rail; in addition to this he has built a new parsonage and also bought land for a cemetery which has been carefully plotted and arranged. The congregation of St. Joseph's now numbers about forty-five families, an increase of a dozen at least within the last two years. The parish is a prosperous one as the Fort is a beautiful, prosperous city. Of the Catholic societies connected with the congregation, there are an Altar Society for Married Ladies: Mrs. W. W. Campbell, president; Mrs. Charles Moreil, secretary. Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary for Young Ladies: Miss Catherine Scullin, president; Miss Catherine V. Nee, secretary. Purgatorial Society: Miss Catherine Scullin, president; Mrs. S. C. Asperwall, treasurer.

Immaculate Conception, Milton Junction and St. Joseph's Church, Ft. Atkinson.

Rev. F. X. Schneider.

The Church of the Immaculate Conception at Milton Junction is attended as a mission from Ft. Atkinson. At first this congregation was visited by resident priests from Janesville, one of whom, the Rev. R. J. Roche of St. Mary's Church, advised and materially brought about the building of a Catholic church in Milton Junction. Work on this building was commenced September 3, 1891, the structure being completed in the early part of 1892, under the direction of the Rev. Father J. W.

Clarke, C. S. C., of Sacred Heart College, Watertown. Father Clarke's successor as pastor of the Milton Junction Catholics was the Rev. J. T. Boland, C. S. C., and he was followed by the Rev. F. X. Schneider, of Ft. Atkinson. The congregation of the Immaculate Conception numbers about forty families. It is in a quite prosperous condition and entirely free from debt. Catholic societies belonging to this congregation are an Altar Society for Married Ladies: Mrs. Wm. Vickerman, president; Mrs. Thomas Crowley, treasurer. Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary for Young Ladies: Miss Mary A. Vickerman, president; Miss Maggie Mullen, secretary; Miss Frances McAdams, treasurer. Purgatorial Society: Miss Francis McAdams, president; Mrs. R. Stewart, secretary.

The Rev. Francis X. Schneider was born on June 6, 1869, in Muscoda, on the banks of the Wisconsin River down which the canoe of Pere Marquette once passed on its way to the Mississippi, his parents being Valentin and Josephine Schneider, from Waldmässingen Würtemberg, Germany. In September, 1884, Father Schneider entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where, after completing a full course in the necessary studies, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1893. His first appointment was as assistant pastor to the Rev. Father Conrad of Holy Trinity Church at Milwaukee, which duties he assumed on July 29, 1893. One year later to the day he received his appointment as pastor of St. Joseph's congregation at Ft. Atkinson, of which he took charge on August 6th following.

St. Mary's Church, Fox Lake, Wis.

THERE is nothing about the history of the congregation of St. Mary's at Fox Lake calling for more particular attention than that of many other parishes, which, established for a number of years, have, under the wise and careful administration of their pastors and zealous efforts of its members, grown and prospered with the country in general. The history of this parish dates back for something over half a century, having been in existence since the year 1845, when it was attended as a mission by clergymen stationed at Watertown. In this way the spiritual interests of Catholics residing in the vicinity of Fox Lake were looked after until the year 1850, when the site of the present church was presented to the congregation by Dr. Stoddard Judd, a wealthy Protestant, and one of the first settlers in that part of the country. It was given to them by him with the simple provision that it should be used for church purposes only. It was a kindly and generous act on his part and of especial value to the Catholics, who at that time were few in numbers and naturally had but limited means at their command. Dr. Judd's eldest daughter, by the way, Mrs. Mary Philipson, is now one of the zealous and generous members of St. Mary's congregation, having been received into the Church in 1893. On this piece of property a small frame structure was at once built, which served as a church for some considerable time following. Occasionally, as the Catholic population became larger, additions were made to this little building until in the course of time it had a seating capacity of 500. The present imposing edifice at Fox Lake is the outgrowth of this effort on the part of the little community and the kindly act of Dr. Judd of almost fifty years ago. The structure is very handsome and generally conceded to be one of the most attractive in the State outside of Milwaukee. It is built in the Gothic style of architecture, of solid brick with corner steeple. It was dedicated on November 30, 1892, by Archbishop Katzer of Milwaukee in the presence of a large concourse of people. Twenty-five members of the clergy were also present in the Sanctuary, and the Rev. E. J. Conaty, of Grand Forks, Dakota, preached the dedicatory sermon. The church property at Fox Lake is beautifully situated, the edifice and rectory facing upon the tract which separates them from the Downer College buildings.

St. Mary's Church, Fox Lake, Wis.

Rev. E. J. Blackwell.

Father Blackwell, during whose administration the new church has been built and paid for, was born in Milwaukee, in 1863. There he acquired his rudimentary education at St. John's Cathedral School, and began his preparation for the priesthood at St. Francis' Seminary, near Milwaukee. He was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1887, and at once became chaplain of St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum and St. Mary's Hospital, attending them from St. John's Cathedral. It was during Father Blackwell's chaplaincy at the asylum that the present commodious building, costing $40,000, was erected. Another evidence of Father Blackwell's zealousness and energy was given in his successful management of the fair, conducted upon an unusually large scale, for the benefit of this Orphan Asylum, at which the net proceeds realized, amounted to $14,000. This really remarkable effort on his part cleared off the entire remaining indebtedness upon that building.

Since the organization and establishment of St. Mary's parish and congregation quite a number of pastors have administered to the spiritual wants of the Catholics at Fox Lake. The first to become resident pastor of the congregation was the Rev. James Roche, who assumed the duties as rector in 1850 and remained as such until 1853. Then followed the Rev. Richard Dumphy, who remained from 1853 until 1855, when he was succeeded by the Rev. John Healy, who conducted the pastorate from 1855 until 1857. In the latter year the Rev. James Morris came to Fox Lake, remaining there in the active performance of his duties until 1862. Father Morris was followed in succession by the Rev. Fathers Joseph Smith, 1862 to 1865; William Dougherty, 1865 to 1871; Edward McGurk, 1871 to 1872; J. E. Allen, 1872 to 1878; R. Dumphy, 1878 to 1881; E. P. Lorigan, 1881; Jos. Moder, 1881; A. Mazeau, 1881 to 1883; Christ. Kelly, 1883 to 1885; Jas. Hegarty, 1885 to 1889, and Edward J. Blackwell from 1889 to the present time. The congregation now consists of some 400 souls.

Holy Assumption Church, Franklin, Wis.

THE parish of the Holy Assumption, at Franklin, Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, was founded by the Rev. Martin Kundig, on April 13, 1847. Father Kundig also set about the immediate erection of a church, which was completed within a short time. For twenty years this building did service at Franklin, at the end of which period it was totally destroyed by fire. This severe loss to the parishioners was quickly remedied by the erection of a new and commodious building, which was completed under the administration of Father O'Connor. Father Kundig was succeeded as pastor of the Holy Assumption by the Rev. Fathers James Conway, Quinn, O'Farrel, McGuirk, Graves, Smith, O'Connor, McMahon, Thomas Fagan, Tierney, Thomas O'Niel, Charles Horan, J. W. O'Keefe, and the present pastor, the Rev. J. T. O'Leary. The congregation now consists of about one hundred and sixty members.

Holy Assumption Church, Franklin, Wis.

The church of St. Mary's, which is located at Greenfield, Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission from the Holy Assumption at Franklin. The parish was founded in 1842, or some five years prior to the establishment of the present mother church. An organization was effected and the first church built by the Rev. Father Kelley, who was at that time stationed at Milwaukee. The site used for the original church has since the building of the present one been plotted and arranged for cemetery purposes. After the transfer of Father Kelley, the pastors who have successively attended the congregation at Greenfield, have resided at Franklin. Father Kundig succeeded Father Kelley at Greenfield, while his successor was the Rev. Joseph Smith, who built a new church in place of the original structure. He was then followed successively by the Rev. Fathers James Conroy, Quinn, O'Farrel, McQuirk, Graves, O'Connor, McMahon, Thomas Fagan, D. Tierney, Thomas O'Niel, Charles Horan and J. W. O'Keefe, who erected the present church edifice at a cost of $7,000, and the present pastor, the Rev. J. T. O'Leary. The congregation at the present time consists of two hundred and fifty members. The parish of St. Mary's at Greenfield has the distinction of being one of the oldest Catholic organizations established since Wisconsin became a state. The original church, erected during the administration of Father Kelley, was built by Mr. William Furlong.

There is another little church attended from Franklin, which is located at Muskego, Waukesha County.

Rev. J. T. O'Leary.

This, however, is of later origin than the other mission, and was begun by Father McMahon, at present residing at Oconomowoc, who also organized the parish. The structure was completed by Father Schwaiger, now pastor at St. Lawrence, but who was at that time residing at Waterford. Father Schwaiger was succeeded by the Rev. Father Schumacher, also of Waterford, under whose pastorate the little mission was transformed as a charge to Franklin parish, from which place it has been attended successively by the Revs. Charles Horan, J. W. O'Keefe and the present pastor, J. T. O'Leary. The original church built by Fathers McMahon and Schwaiger was destroyed by fire in 1887, the present structure being erected during the pastorate of Father Horan. The congregation of St. Joseph's at Muskego now comprises some one hundred and fifty members.

The Rev. J. T. O'Leary, present pastor of the Holy Assumption at Franklin, Wisconsin, was born on November 24, 1865, in Brooklyn, New York. He began preparing for the priesthood in September, 1880, and after completing the full course in the necessary studies, he was ordained on June 24, 1889. He celebrated his first Mass on the 30th of the same month, in St. Mary's Church at Springvale, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, and after assisting at Ripon for a short time was stationed at Osceola, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, where he remained for four years. He was then transferred to East Troy, and from there to Franklin parish and missions.

Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary Church, Franklin, Wis.

THE congregation of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary at Franklin, St. Martin P. O., Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, was originally associated with the English church of the Assumption at the same place. In the year 1858, however, the German members belonging to this congregation withdrew from the original organization and built a church of their own, of which the Rev. Father Weinhardt became the first pastor. He was followed in succession and for different periods by the Rev. Fathers Bonenkamp, Neu, Heigl and the present rector, the Rev. George Trimberger. The congregation now consists of one hundred and twenty-eight families. This parish supports two parochial schools, one within the church grounds and the other four miles south of the church, which are in charge of three teachers, two Sisters of St. Francis and one lay teacher. The average number of scholars in attendance is one hundred and thirty. There are also five Catholic societies, to which different members of the parish belong.

Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary Church, Franklin, Wis.

Rev. Geo. Trimberger.

The present church at Franklin, a stone structure, was built by the Rev. Father Weinhardt, first resident pastor of the congregation, its original length being eighty feet. Later, however, owing to the growth in numbers of the congregation, it was—during the pastorate of Father Neu—enlarged, an additional forty-five feet being built on. The most attractive feature of this structure externally it its magnificent tower, which rises to a height fully one hundred and forty feet from the ground. This was built by Father Heigl, who succeeded Father Neu in the pastorate. In the tower is placed a costly clock, the gift of Mrs. Kendricks, which was placed there during the residence of the present rector, Father Trimberger, who has also added a large bell to the property, the resonant tone of which can be heard for miles around. During the past two years the church has also been neatly frescoed, the ceiling and wainscoting of steel paneling is the first used for church interior decorations, it is believed, in the Archdiocese of Milwaukee,

The Rev. George Trimberger, rector of the Sacred Heart Parish at Franklin, Wisconsin, was born in 1856 at St. George, Sheboygan County, Wisconsin. He pursued a course of study for nine years at the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1881.

Mater Dolorosa Church, Fredonia, Wis.

THE Catholic church at Fredonia, Wisconsin, which was dedicated to the Mother of Sorrows, was first established about the year 1847. Prior to this time, the people of that vicinity were occasionally visited by traveling priests, and more immediately subsequent to its organization, at stated intervals, by resident pastors from adjacent parishes. The first that we have in the way of recorded facts regarding the pastors associated with this congregation were given in 1857 when the Rev. Simon Bartosz attended the congregation at Fredonia. He was succeeded by the Rev. J. Stucky, who remained until 1859; the Father Rehrl to 1860; Fathers Hasselbauer and Reif to 1861; the Rev. C. Rehrl to 1863 and the Rev. J. Mehlmann to 1864. During Father Mehlmann's administration, a mission was held by the Rev. Jesuit Father F. X. Weninger, in August, 1863. The next pastor of this congregation was the Rev. M. Retzer, who remained until 1865 when the Rev. George Strickner replaced him. He was succeeded in 1866 by the Rev. J. Welter, who conducted the pastorate until 1871. In 1868 the second church, a stone structure, was erected. After the departure of Father Welter, the Rev. Father Rehrl took charge again until 1878, when he was succeeded by the Rev. W. J. Frantz, who remained until 1880. The year preceding this, a parsonage was built, and it was at this time also that the congregation received its first permanent pastor. After Father Frantz, the Rev. Seb. Weiss took charge. He was succeeded in 1881 by Father A. T. Reininger, who remained until November, 1883, when Father Raess was appointed to the pastorate. During the latter's residence at Fredonia, which lasted until 1888, a commodious brick school-house was erected and the church frescoed throughout. Father Raess was succeeded by the Rev. J. H. Korfhage, who remained until 1890, at which time, the present pastor, the Rev. P. J. Delles, assumed the duties. The congregation now consists of about forty-eight families. There is one parochial school at Fredonia, which is in charge of two Sisters of St. Francis of Assissi, and has a regular attendance of fifty-one scholars. Associated with this congregation is the St. Mary's Ladies' Society of the Rosary, of which the pastor is president; Mrs. Theresa Mertzig, secretary, and Mrs. Walburga Retzer, treasurer. It has thirty-seven members.

Mater Dolorosa Church, Fredonia, and St. John the Baptist, Waubeka, Wis.

Rev. P. J. Delles.

The congregation of St. John, the Baptist, at Waubeka, Ozaukee County, which is a mission to the congregation at Fredonia, was established about the year 1868. There are now about sixty families belonging to this congregation, where services are held every Sunday and all holy days. The members are all German. At one time, that is during the year 1878, a regular resident pastor was appointed to this congregation, but the expenses incident upon such an undertaking were too much for the little community to maintain and so, perforce, the congregation became a mission to the church at Fredonia. There is one Catholic organization, the St. Ann's Society of Christian Mothers, associated with the members of St. John's, of which Mrs. Frantzen is secretary and Mrs. Elizabeth Watry is treasurer.

The Rev. P. J. Delles was born in the town of Belgium, Ozaukee County, Wisconsin, in the year 1866. When but five years of age he removed with his parents to Port Washington, where he attended the parochial school until 1880. He then went to St. Lawrence College of the Capuchin Fathers at Mt. Calvary, taking there the five years classical course. In the summer of 1885 he entered the seminary at St. Francis, where he completed a course in philosophy and theology, and was ordained to the priesthood October 18, 1889, by the Most Rev. Archbishop Michael Heiss. Father Delles celebrated his first holy Mass at Port Washington two days later, after which he was assigned to St. George's church at Kenosha as assistant, where he remained until July, 1890, when he was appointed to his present pastorate.

St. Anthony's Church, Fussville, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Anthony's church, at Fussville, Waukesha county, Wisconsin, celebrated its Golden Jubilee on January 17, 1896. Just fifty years previous to that date and occasion, the first Mass had been said in this congregation by the Rev. Maria Anton Meyer, who remained until August, 1847. The first church built about this time at Fussville was a small log structure. The Rev. Anton Urbanek, who succeeded Father Meyer, stayed until January 18, 1850, when he moved some three miles away to a place called Engelsburg, or West Granville, in Milwaukee County, where he built a new church called St. Martin's and established a school. On November 25, 1850, Father Urbanek was called to Notre Dame Convent. He was followed by the Rev. P. J. Fander, who remained until November 30, 1851. From this time the congregation was made a mission of St. Anthony's at Fussville. The Rev. Joseph Sadler succeeded Father Urbanek as pastor of St. Anthony's, remaining until September 10, 1850, when the Rev. F. X. Obermueller was appointed. He left on August 18, 1852, and was succeeded by the Rev. Simon Bartosz, who maintained the pastorate until July 30, 1854. Following Father Bartosz came the Rev. Martin Weiss, who built the second log church at Fussville. He took his departure on August 1, 1864, his successor being the Rev. Ludwig Mueller, who during his pastorate built a new stone church at a cost of $23,000. He was succeeded July 15, 1871, by Father Anton Foeckler, who made way for Father J. B. Wenning on September 27, 1876. He resigned on May 1, 1881, when the Rev. H. J. Korfhage was appointed. On November 6, 1884, Father Korfhage was succeeded by the present pastor, the Rev. Nicholas Schaaf. At one time the congregation of St. Anthony's consisted of fully two hundred and fifty families. A number of these, however, left for other parts, so that at the present time the entire number does not exceed one hundred families. The congregation at West Granville also suffered from the same cause, where there are at present but twenty-three families. There has been a parochial school in active operation at Fussville since 1857. This is now in charge of Sisters of St. Francis, and has an attendance of eighty scholars.

St. Anthony's Church, Fussville, Wis.

The congregation of St. Martin's at Engelsburg, which place is commonly called West Granville, Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, was established by the Rev. Antonius Meyer on July 12, 1846. The congregation, which is composed of twenty-one German families, receives attendance from the resident pastors at Fussville every other Sunday and once during the week. Twice during its history this mission has had a resident pastor of its own, the first being the Rev. A. Urbanek, who resided there for five or six months during the year 1849, and the second and last, the Rev. P. J. Fander, who assumed the charge on December 8, 1850, and remained until February or March of the year following. There was also a school at one time at this mission which was conducted by two Christian Brothers, the time of their residence at Engelsburg being from 1847 to 1849. At one time in its history, that is from 1850 to 1853, the mission of St. Martin's numbered about one hundred families, most of whom, however, left for Kansas, Minnesota and Texas. The mission has almost without exception been attended from Fussville since the time of its organization.

Rev. Nicholas Schaaf.

The Rev. Nicholas Schaaf, resident pastor of St. Anthony's congregation, was born in Luxemburg on January 16, 1841. He came to Wisconsin in 1857, locating at Ashford, Fond du Lac County. Later he entered St. Francis Seminary at Milwaukee, where he completed his clerical studies, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1870, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni, at Milwaukee. He then took charge of St. Mathew's Church at Neosho, Dodge County, remaining until 1884, when he was appointed to the pastorate of St. Anthony's at Fussville, Waukesha County.

St. Boniface's Church, Germantown, Wis.

THE Catholic congregation at Germantown, Washington County, Wisconsin, was first established in the year 1845. In these early days, when settlers were scarce and money scarcer, it was useless to look for great achievements, in the way of large and expensive structures, although an almost untold amount of good was done and zealous labor achieved in behalf of the Church, by those having but little in the way of worldly goods, or time, for that matter, to spare for any cause, no matter how laudable it might be. The good people who first settled in and around Germantown were no exception to this rule, and, hence, the small and roughly constructed log building which, divided into two separate parts, represented both church and pastoral abode, was in itself an example of zealous devotion to and love for the faith of their fathers. It was this willingness exhibited on the part of the pioneers that did so much in forwarding the interests of the Church throughout the great West, and which, also, in a manner, if not wholly, rewarded the devout and self-sacrificing spirits whose love for God and their fellowmen led them unhesitatingly to dare those dangerous and untrodden wastes of unknown country, that the Cross might be born, as it were, to the utmost ends of the earth.

St. Boniface's Church, Germantown, Wis.

In the little log house, then, erected by the Rev. M. Heiss, later archbishop, who also came out from Milwaukee occasionally to give services at Germantown in 1845, the missionary fathers preached and dwelt during their visits to the community. Of the earlier priests to attend the Catholics at Germantown but little is said or known, with the exception, perhaps, that the Rev. Fathers Meyer and F. X. Obermueller were among the number, and that the Rev. Dr. Joseph Salzmann was the first to take up a permanent residence there. He came on October 17, 1847, and at once made a move towards the erection of a new church. In this he was successful, and though the work was necessarily slow—owing undoubtedly to existing financial conditions and the fact that the settlers had to do everything themselves—a fair-sized frame building was completed within two years. At this place, which Dr. Salzmann was wont to call his "Little Seminary," he prepared Fathers Gernbauer, Fusseder and Peter Deberge for ordination. Since Dr. Salzmann's time, the pastorate of this church has been held by many different priests, among whom were the Rev. Fathers Saddler, Paulhuber, J. N. Pfeifer, A. X. Manclere, Hasselbauer, M. Heiss, Strickner, Spath, Foeckler, J. Gamber, A. Michels, J. Gmeiner, Zuber, B. Smedding, J. Trottenberg, Chas. Drees, B. Bellinger, H. Jansen, Chas. Grobschmit, H. Korfhage, H. Blum, and the present rector, the Rev. Jos. Wurm.

Rev. Jos. Wurm.

It was during the pastorate of Father Foeckler that the erection of a new stone church was begun. This building, 100x45 feet, was completed by his successor, Father J. Gamber, who also added a comfortable parsonage to the church property. In 1886 the parish of St. Boniface was duly incorporated according to the laws of the State, by the Rev. Chas. Grobschmit, who also had the church beautifully frescoed, and three years later the present parochial school house was built, by Father H. Blum, who was pastor of the congregation at that time. The congregation now consists of about ninety families, and the parochial school, conducted by the School Sisters of St. Francis, from Milwaukee, has a regular attendance of ninety children. The present trustees of the church property are Messrs. George Merkel and John Braun. There are three Catholic societies represented in the congregation—St. Boniface Men's Society, Married Ladies' Sodality, and League of the Sacred Heart.

The Rev. Jos. Wurm, present rector of St. Boniface congregation, was born January 20, 1871, at Bilstein, Kreis Olpe, Westphalia, Germany. When ten years of age he came to the United States, arriving in Milwaukee on August 30, 1881. He entered the Seminary at St. Francis in September, 1884, and, after taking the regular course in classics, philosophy and theology, was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1893. His first appointment was as assistant of St. George's Church, Kenosha, where he remained till December 15, 1893, when he was sent to Muscoda. He was transferred to his present pastorate on November 15, 1895.

St. Mary's of the Assumption congregation of Richfield Township, Washington County, Wis., which is attended by the pastor of St. Boniface at Germantown, was established somewhere between the years 1855 and 1858. The congregation at present consists of some seventeen families, all German, whose spiritual wants are supplied twice every month, besides on holy days and occasionally during the week. The present church was built in 1895 at a cost of $2,500, and the new Stations of the Way of the Cross were erected during the present year.

St. Joseph's Church, Grafton, Wis.

ST. JOSEPH'S congregation at Grafton, Ozaukee County, was first organized on November 7, 1849. From that time until 1860, it was attended at different intervals by the resident pastors of surrounding parishes and other priests who in their journeyings passed through that neighborhood. In the year 1860, however, the Rev. William Storr was appointed first resident pastor of St. Joseph's, and as such remained until the latter part of 1865. He then resigned, and on May 31 of the year following the Rev. Father Schraudenbach assumed the pastorate. During the interval preceding this date, and the departure of Father Storr, the congregation was attended by neighboring priests, although the names of such, or their location at that time, is not a matter of record. Father Schraudenbach continued at Grafton until September 9, 1866, and was succeeded on the 3d of the month following by the Rev. Father Strickner, who remained until January 27, 1868. The pastorate was then vacant until June 25, when the Rev. Father Durst was appointed. He, however, left on October 11, his successor, the Rev. J. N. F. Moes, taking up his residence at Grafton on December 1. He left again July 7, 1869. It was during this year that the second church was erected at the mission of St. Francis Xavier, the building occupying an area of 35x70 feet. From September 16, 1870, to December 26, 1873, the Rev. Father Gstach was pastor of St. Joseph's, his successor for a short period being the Rev. Father Marshall. From 1873 until 1876 the Rev. S. Woelfl was pastor, and from 1876 to 1880 the Rev. B. H. Korfhage. Then, from 1881 to 1886, the Rev. Andrew Ambauen maintained the charge, being followed by the Rev. Phillip Vogg, who resided at Grafton from May

St. Joseph's Church, Grafton, Wis.

11, 1887, to July 5, 1895. Then the present pastor, the Rev. Ign. Pronold, assumed the pastorate. For two weeks preceding the arrival of Father Pronold, the duties were assumed by the Rev. Father Drees, who, however, owing to failing health, was compelled to discontinue the work. The present congregation of St. Joseph's consists of about sixty families. There is a parochial school connected with this parish, which is conducted by a lay teacher, and has a regular attendance of thirty-five pupils.

The church of St. Francis Xavier, which is attended as a mission by the pastor of St. Joseph's, was visited occasionally by different priests over a half century ago. The first of these, however, of whom record is made, is the Rev. M. Heiss, who held services at that place, at stated periods, from October 14, 1844, to June 13, 1845. The work was then continued by the Rev. Father Obermueller and Dr. Salzmann, the latter visiting there from March 27, 1847, until 1849. From June 7, 1849, until August 15, 1850, the Rev. Jos. Sadler attended St. Francis. On August 19, 1850, the Rev. P. Fabian was appointed as first resident pastor of this congregation, and remained as such until December 4, 1851, when the Rev. Leo Mann succeeded to the pastorate. He remained until November 21 of the following year, and was then followed by the Rev. Conrad Beck, who stayed until May 20, 1853. On June 19, of that year, Father Fabian again assumed the duties, in which he continued until May 27, 1855, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Father Bermadinger, who remained until March 21, 1856. The Rev. Seb. Seif was then pastor from May 26, 1856, to September 20, 1857; the Rev. Father Sailer from September 26, 1857, to August 28, 1859; the Rev. S. Weikmann, from October 2, 1859, to August 28, 1860; Father Fabian from 1860 to 1865, and then again the Rev. W. Storr, who, it will be remembered, was the first priest appointed to the pastorate at Grafton. The first church of St. Francis Xavier was built at that mission in the year 1848. The second and present one was erected twenty years later, at which time the congregation consisted of twenty-eight families. For some reason, not given, possibly, however, owing to the gradual changes wrought by time in almost every community, this congregation is now comprised of only twelve families.

The Rev. Ign. Pronold completed his studies for the priesthood at the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, in June, 1892, on the 24th day of which month he was ordained. He was then appointed assistant pastor at St. Mary's Church, Milwaukee, as which he remained for three years, when he was transferred to Grafton, by the Rev. A. Schinner at that time administrator of the Archdiocese of Milwaukee.

St. Catherine's Church, Granville Center, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Catherine's at Granville Center, Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, was established and a church built at that place in 1855, and was attended for some time after by the Rev. Martin Weiss from Fussville. Father Weiss was succeeded by the Rev. L. Mueller, who, during his administration, established a school, and erected a building for that purpose. His successor, the Rev. C. Schilling, was the first resident pastor at Granville Center, and he was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers August Durst, Joseph Lang, Aloysius Heller, Theodore

St. Catherine's Church, Granville Center, Wis.

St. Michael's (Mission) Church, Granville Center, Wis.

B. Meyer, John Schober, August Gardthaus, James Schwik, Philip Vogt, Michael Heiss, Pere Hyacinth,

O. M. C., Pere Charles, O. M. C., J. Stehle, Pere E. Aegidius, O. M. C., Pere Dominic, O. M. C., and the Rev. B. July. The congregation at the present time consists of about thirty-five families. There are two Catholic organizations connected with this parish, an Altar Society, of which Mrs. James Batzler and Mrs. John Schmit are the officers; and the Sacred Heart

St. James (Mission) Church, Mequon, Wis.

Sodality. The parish school at Granville Center has a regular attendance of about thirty scholars, and is conducted by Sisters of St. Agnes from the convent at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin.

The congregation of St. Michael's at Granville Center is attended as a mission from St. Catherine's. Prior to its coming under the domination of the Granville pastorate, this community was attended by the Rev. Fathers Tierney, James Colton, W. B. Daughterty, Wm. Mahoney, James Hannon, and Hugh McMahon. Since that time its spiritual interests have been ministered to by the successive pastors at St. Catherine's. The congregation at the present time numbers about twenty families.

Another mission of St. Catherine's is that of St. James' at Mequon, Ozaukee County, Wisconsin. This is quite an old parish, the first services having been held in the vicinity of the present church at the house of Peter Backes, in 1842. The parish was regularly organized, and the church built in 1845. For three years following that date, the congregation was attended by a missionary priest, of whose name, however, no record is to be found. From the year 1848, priests attending this congregation were as follows; The Rev. Fathers Obermueller, Simon Bartosz, Martin Weiss from Fussville, B. Smedding, H. Kampschroer, Hier. Berckmann, Dr. Joseph Salzmann, Schraudenbach, Storr, A. Sigg, A. Foeckler, L. Mueller, J. Birkhaeuser, M. Gernbauer, A. F. Michels, Geo. Strickner, F. X. Katzer, present Archbishop of Milwaukee; Gaster, P. M. Abbelen, C. Schilling, C. Schaettin, Constantine von Droste Huelshoff, Ivo Prass, August Neumann, Durst, Pere Solanus, Joseph Metzger, Nicholas Limacher, A. M. Hork, Pere Aegidius, O. M. C., Pere Dominic, O. M. C. and Rev. B. July. The second church built at this place, a stone structure, was erected by Father Weiss and the parsonage by the Rev. H. Kampschroer. Father Limacher built a new school house during his administration, and Father July the present church in 1891, leaving the property unincumbered. The members of the congregation now number about forty families, and the parochial school is attended by about thirty-five children, who are under the direction of John M. Brandmueller, a lay teacher. There is in connection with this congregation an Altar Society, the officers of which are Mmes. Nicolas Thielen, Matthew Barth and Nicolas Barth. During part of its existence the congregation of St. James had its own regular resident pastors, the first of whom was the Rev. C. Schaettin, and the last Father Hork.

Rev. W. Nellen.

The Rev. W. H. Nellen, present rector of St. Catherine's Church at Granville Center, Wisconsin, was born in Germany on November 25, 1866, and was brought by his parents to the United States in the following year. They located in Waunakee, Wisconsin, where young Nellen attended the parochial school. He received his first instructions in Latin from the Rev. M. M. Gerend, then in charge of the congregation at Waunakee. Later he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where, having completed a thorough course of studies, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 21, 1891. His first appointment was as assistant pastor of St. Joseph's Church of Milwaukee, where he remained for two years. He was then transferred to his present position at Granville Center.

St. Joseph's Church, Gratiot, Wis.

THE first of any particular interest that is known of this congregation was in 1869, when the Rev. J. J. Kinsella of Shullsburg built a comfortable and commodious church structure. Four years later the Rev. W. Bernard became first resident pastor of St. Joseph's, remaining as such from December, 1873, to March, 1876. He was succeeded by the Rev. J. Tiernan, who maintained the pastorate until October, 1880, when the Rev. R. S. Tucker took charge. Father Tucker continued to minister to the wants of these people until May, 1886, when he died. During his pastorate much good was accomplished in the parish, and improvements made to the property, among other things being an addition to the church, which was built during the year 1882. Father Tucker was succeeded by the Rev. R. J. Smith, who remained from August, 1886, to April, 1888, when he resigned to assume his present duties as a professor in the seminary at St. Francis. Then the present pastor, the Rev. John P. Croke, became rector of St. Joseph's, taking charge of the congregation in May, 1888. Including those attending St. Philomena at Wiota, La Fayette County, the congregation numbers about seven hundred souls. There is no parochial school at either place. Of Catholic societies in St. Joseph's Congregation there is but one, an Altar Society having forty members. St. Thomas' Library Society, of which Miss Mary Clark is Librarian, has a membership of thirty-five. There are at present a hundred and sixty volumes belonging to this organization.

St. Joseph's Church, Gratiot, Wis.

Rev. John P. Croke.

The Rev. John P. Croke, present pastor of St. Joseph's, was born in the city of Milwaukee thirty-seven years ago. Here he attended school until 1876, when he removed to Shullsburg, Wis., remaining there for three years. He entered the Seminary of St. Francis in September, 1880, and was ordained to the priesthood, at that institution, by the Most Rev. Michael Heiss, Archbishop of Milwaukee, on June 24, 1887. Soon after ordination he was appointed temporary pastor of St. Matthew's Church at Shullsburg, remaining as such during the absence of the Rev. J. F. Kinsella. After having served for ten months in that capacity, he was made resident pastor of St. Joseph's at Gratiot.

St. Kilian's Church, Hartford, Wis.

THE parish of St. Kilian's was established in 1863 under the direction of the Rev. Father Deisenrieder of St. Lawrence. In January of the following year the Rev. P. Schwaiger was appointed to the pastorate, remaining until May, 1867. Then the Rev. J. S. Muenich assumed the duties. He was transferred in May, 1872, the Rev. J. A. Marshall being his successor. Father Marshall was followed in November of the same year by the Rev. Michael Wenker, who stayed at Hartford until September, 1883. This pastor added many improvements to the parish property during his administration, the most noticeable among them being the erection of a new church in 1876. In September, 1883, the Rev. Nicholas M. Zimmer became pastor of St. Kilian's. He continued the work of improvement, building a new parsonage in 1884, and a school-house in 1891. The present pastor, the Rev. John A. Bertram, took charge of the parish on December 28, 1893. He has done considerable in additions to the interior furnishings of the church, the most noticeable being a handsome new High Altar. Since its establishment in 1863, the parish of St. Kilian has shown a steady increase, being fully one-third larger than it was in 1867. The nationality of the congregation has also undergone somewhat of a change, for while in 1867 it was composed of fifty-six German and forty Irish families, the ratio is now one hundred to twenty-five. The mission of St. Patrick's, at Erin, Washington County, which is also attended from St. Kilian's, has a congregation of seventy families, all of whom are Irish. The parochial school connected with the parish was founded in 1864. It is in charge of three Franciscan Sisters, and has a regular attendance of seventy-five scholars. Of the Catholic societies in the parish there are St. Kilian's Benevolent Society, the Familien Schutz Gesellschaft, Branch No. 61 of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, St. Elizabeth Society, St. Rose Young Ladies' Sodality and Mite Society.

St. Kilian's Church, School and Parsonage, Hartford, Wis.

The Rev. John A. Bertram was born January 25, 1857, at Welherata, Rgsbzk Coblenz, Germany. He came to Johnsburg, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, in May, 1867, and in September, 1872, entered the Seminary of St. Francis at Milwaukee. Here he completed a thorough course in classics, philosophy and theology and was ordained to the priesthood December 1, 1879. His first appointment was as pastor at New Cassel, Fond du Lac County, where he resided from January 1, 1880, to December 28, 1893. He was then appointed to St. Kilian's at Hartford, from which he attends the mission of St. Patrick's and Holy Hill.

Rev. John A. Bertram.

St. John's Church, Highland, Wis.

THE Parish of St. John's, formed from a division of the congregation of St. Phillip's at Highland, Iowa County, Wis., was founded in 1860. At this time the congregation, numbering about fifty families, had for its first pastor the Rev. Peter Voissem, who remained until 1862. He was followed successively by the Revs. F. X. Weinhart, 1862 to 1870, who also attended the congregations at Muscoda, Union Mills and St. Mary's Church at Mineral Point; J. A. Lang, 1870 to 1872; F. X. Sailer, 1872 to 1877, who organized a number of benevolent societies in the congregation during his pastorate, among them being a branch of the D. R. K. C. V., established with 90 members, on January1, 1872; Valentine Rademacher, 1877 to 1885; J. J. Zawitowsky, 1885 to 1889, and the present incumbent, who has had charge of the pastorate since that time. The congregation now comprises one hundred and fifty families, five-sixths of whom are German and the rest Bohemian. Of these two-thirds are engaged in farming and one-third in mining. The parochial school, which was established in 1865, has an enrollment of one hundred and thirty-five scholars, who are in charge of three School Sisters of St. Francis. Since 1891 the expenses of the school have been defrayed by the general church fund. This has been the means of adding fully 100 per cent. to the regular attendance. The St. Boniface Society: G. H. Imhoff, Sr. president; Louis Bahl, secretary; John Klingele, treasurer; St. Mary's Women's Society; Young Ladies' Sodality and the Sacred Heart League, established July 1, 1896, with a present membership of three hundred and twelve, are the Catholic organizations with which the members of St. John's congregation are associated.

St. John's Church, Highland, Wis.

St. John's New Church, Highland, Wis.
(Accepted Plans.)

Rev. F. A. Wambold.

The present rector of St. John's congregation at Highland, Wis., the Rev. Father F. A. Wambold, is a native of the Badger state, having been born at Saukville, Wis., in the year 1862. It was in this locality also that he spent the earlier years of his life, obtaining an ordinary routine school education in the educational institutions of his native parish and town. Having a long time previously decided upon his future vocation in life, he now entered the Seminary of St. Francis, St. Francis, Wis., having thoroughly acquitted himself in the usual classical, philosophical and theological courses, he was ordained to the holy priesthood in 1888. He was then appointed assistant pastor at St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee, where he remained for a year, and was then transferred to the pastorate of St. John's at Highland.

St. Philip's Church, Highland, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Philip's at Highland, Iowa County, Wisconsin, was established in the year 1846, the Rev. Father McDonald being the first pastor to attend the same. Previous to this time the Catholics living at Highland and in its vicinity received occasional visits from traveling priests and others who had resident charges within a reasonable distance from there. Father McDonald was succeeded by the Rev. Father Flannery, and he by the Rev. Fathers M. J. Dolan, Stephen Trant, Thomas Dempsey and the present incumbent, the Rev. H. O'Brien. The congregation of St. Philip's at present consists of about one hundred families.

St. Philip's Church, Highland, Wis.

The little mission at Otter Creek, dedicated at the time of its organization to St. Malachy, is attended from Highland. Services are held at this mission once every three weeks, the congregation in attendance numbering fifty families.

The Rev. H. O'Brien, pastor of St. Philip's and St. Malachy's, was born in Clinton, Oneida County, New York. His father moved West in 1853, locating at Eagle, Wisconsin, from which place he was sent as a student to St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, in 1860. After eight years of continuous study at this place he was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. Archbishop Henni in 1868. His first appointment after ordination was as curate in Watertown under the Rev. Dr. Norris. He was then transferred to the pastorates at Elba, Eden, South Milwaukee, Monroe, and finally to his present incumbency at Highland.

Rev. H. O'Brien.

St. Patrick's Church, Hollandale, Wis.

IN the early days, the few Catholic farmers who had taken up land in the towns of Walwick and Mosco, attended Mass at Mineral Point. The first Catholics to locate in that vicinity were Messrs. Thomas Riley, John McKee, Francis McKenna, James Foley, Patrick McDonnell and Daniel Dornan, who came there about the year 1844. In 1851 the Rev. James Causse, pastor at Mineral Point, began visiting St. Patrick's Church and Parsonage, Hollandale, Wis.

these people, saying Mass occasionally in the private houses there, but generally in that of James Foley, near the present site of Hollandale. In 1864, the number of Catholics having greatly increased, they decided to build a church, Messrs. Thomas Riley, Francis McKenna and Daniel Dornan being appointed a committee to solicit subscriptions for that purpose. Not long after, a small building, 36x24 feet, was erected, the entire cost of same being $1,200. At this time, the Rev. Francis McGann, who was pastor at Mineral Point, assumed charge of this little mission, holding services there once each month. From then on, the good Catholics of Walwick and Mosco were recognized as a regular congregation, and, as the number of Catholic settlers increased in that vicinity, in 1869 it became necessary to build an addition of 18x20 feet to the church. The church property consisted of three acres of prairie land, and was situated about two and a half miles from the present site of the church of Hollandale. Father McGann was succeeded in the administration of this parish by the Rev. James O'Keefe, who took charge in 1870. He built a parochial residence at Ridgeway. In 1872 the people of Walwick and Yellow Stone, desiring the services of a priest between them, sent a committee to Archbishop Heiss, requesting that one might be appointed for that purpose. His Grace willingly acceded to their request, granting them a permit to build a parsonage in Walwick, which they did at once. At about the same time, the Rev. James O'Keefe, then in charge of the congregation at Ridgeway, concluded that the spiritual welfare of the Catholics of Iowa County could be better conserved if there were a resident pastor located at that place. He therefore built a parsonage at Ridgeway, but soon after resigned from that pastorate, removing to Mineral Point, from which place he attended the congregation at Walwick twice each month. Thus matters continued during his entire pastorate, which covered a period of twenty-four years, and until, in fact, Walwick was elevated into a parish and given a pastor of its own in the person of the present incumbent, the Rev. James A. Condon, who was appointed to the charge in 1894. The congregation of St. Patrick's numbers about fifty families.

Rev. J. A. Condon.

The present pastor, the Rev. James A. Condon, was born at Hustisford, Dodge County, Wisconsin, on April 27, 1866. He acquired his education for the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, at which institution he was ordained, by the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer, on June 21, 1891. His first appointment after ordination was as assistant at St. Patrick's at Janesville, Wisconsin, where he remained from July 1, 1891, until August 1, 1894. He was then rector of St. James, at Templeton, from August 1, 1894, to February 1, 1895, being transferred to the charge of St. Patrick's Church at Walwick, the name of which, however, has been changed to Hollandsdale since June 2, 1895. In 1896 a new church, 42x80, was erected.

The mission at Blanchardville, Wisconsin, consisting of about thirty families, has been attached to St. Patrick's since November 1, 1896. A new church, 32x60 feet, was recently completed at this place by the energetic members of the congregation.

Holy Cross Church, Holy Cross, Wis.

THE parish of Holy Cross was organized September 14, 1845—over half a century ago—so that it can very properly be counted among the oldest of the Catholic congregations in Wisconsin. Of course, the place received occasional visits even prior to this time, although such events were naturally of rare occurrence. The first Catholic clergyman to visit Holy Cross of whom any authentic record is given was the Rev. Michael Heiss, afterwards Archbishop of Milwaukee. Others followed, among them being the Rev. Fathers Mathias Steiger, Anton Meyer, F. X. Obermueller, Laufhuber—who built the first school and introduced the Sisters of Notre Dame as teachers—P. F. Bermadinger, M. Deisenrieder, B. Smedding, De Arnold—who built the present stone church—J. M. Obermueller, F. Fusseder, Strickner, J. Welter, H. F. Muckerhaide, L. Mueller—he built the tower and sacristy, besides furnishing bells for the church—William Frantz—who built the present schoolhouse and parsonage—and the present rector, Father P. H. Welbes. Father Welbes has accomplished a great deal of successful work during his incumbency, among other things a thorough renovation of the church, including the frescoing of the whole interior, and the arrangement and direction of that most important event—the fiftieth anniversary of the congregation. The latter was an unusually interesting occasion, the services being conducted by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Schwebach, assisted by a large number of the diocesan clergy. The congregation of Holy Cross now numbers one hundred and forty-one families. The parochial school is under the care of three Sisters of St. Dominic from Racine, and has a regular attendance of about one hundred and sixty scholars. The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin are represented in the congregation by Branch 163, of which J. Palus is president, P. L. Pierron, secretary, and Peter Schommer, treasurer. There is also the St. Martin's Benevolent Society, of which J. P. Vey is president, D. F. Moyer, secretary and Peter Schommer, treasurer.

Holy Cross Church, Holy Cross, Wis.

The Rev. P. H. Welbes was born April 26, 1853, at Stadt Credimus, Luxemburg. He came to the United States in 1867, arriving on May 10. He entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, in 1870, where, after having completed his studies in philosophy and theology, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 29, 1879. After having served in several other parishes, he was, on July 15, 1890, appointed rector of the church of the Holy Cross, in Ozaukee County, Wisconsin.

St. Mary's Church, Janesville, Wis.

DISSATISFACTION with the financial management of St. Patrick's congregation led to the building of St. Mary's Church, at Janesville, Wis., the first meeting for the consideration of this project being held on Sunday, January 16, 1876. At two subsequent meetings, February 21 and March 2, Patrick Connors, James Torney, Benjamin George, Patrick Cunningham, William Cunningham, Owen McDermott, Patrick Collins, William Norton, Martin Barron, Thomas Leech, Andrew Barron, James Campion and Martin Ryder subscribed money enough to purchase ground on which to build a new church. On March 3, a lot, eight rods square, at the northwest intersection of North First and Wisconsin streets was bought of Mrs. Margaret Grant for $580, and on the 14th of the same month the contract for the erection of the new church was let for $1,927. The area occupied by the basement was 40x80 feet, and on this an exceedingly plain wooden structure was built. By the last Sunday of July, the 30th, the building being to all intents and purposes completed, the Rev. Michael Obermueller, pastor of St. Mary's Church, at Monroe, Wis., said Mass for the new congregation. This he did also twice during the following month. On Monday, September 4, the Rev. John Stephen Muenich took charge of St. Mary's Church as its first resident pastor. He found the new church without altar, vestments, chalice, or, in fact, any of the necessary paraphernalia, and with characteristic energy at once set about securing everything needful for the decent celebration of the Holy Mysteries. He also found the building too small for the needs of the rapidly growing congregation, and therefore had it extended about twenty feet at an expense of about $1,000. This addition was finished before the dedication of the church, by the Very Rev. Martin Kundig, V. G., on Thanksgiving day, November 30th, on which occasion the Rev. E. M. McGinnity, pastor of St. Victor's Church, Monroe, Wis., preached the English sermon and the Rev. Dr. Joerger of Jefferson, Wis., the German. In 1878 Father Muenich caused to be built, on the west half of the church lot, a modest brick-veneered parochial residence, which cost $1,637. In 1880 Father Muenich took a vacation, going to Europe, and from April 15 to November 15 the Rev. Bernard B. Smedding discharged the duties of pastor. When he resigned the pastorate on June 1, 1881, Father Muenich left $2,904 in the treasury, an amount lacking but $220 of the sum needed to satisfy all outstanding claims against the congregation. During Father Muenich's administration St. Mary's congregation had the honor of its first episcopal visitation, when on Sunday, July 7, 1878, the Most Rev. John Martin Henni confirmed a class of 100 persons. In July of the same year the Rev. John G. Collins, son of Patrick Collins, one of the founders of the new congregation, said his first holy Mass in St. Mary's Church. The next pastor of St. Mary's was the Rev. Robert James Roche, who took charge of the congregation on Thursday, January 1, 1882. The incorporation of St. Mary's congregation under the laws of the State of Wisconsin took place on August 17, 1883, the articles of incorporation being signed by his Grace, the Most Rev. Michael Heiss, D. D., and James H. Burns, lay member of the congregation. The by-laws were adopted on September 3 and signed by Archbishop Heiss, the Very Rev. Patrick J. Donohoe, V. G., the Rev. Robert J. Roche, pastor, James H. Burns and James Campion, lay members of the board of directors. Messrs. Burns and Campion have since that time succeeded themselves at each recurring election, the former as secretary and the latter as treasurer. Under Father Roche's direction, St. Mary's congregation has spent much money on improving the church lot, decorating and furnishing the priest's house, painting and frescoing the church, building a new main altar, costing $600, and procuring an $1,800 organ. Property costing $3,000 was also secured for school purposes, besides which, however, a snug sum was left in the treasury to apply as a building fund when needed. The present purpose of the congregation is to build in the near future a fine brick church, when the old building will be removed and remodeled into a school-house.

St. Mary's Church, Janesville, Wis.

Of Catholic societies connected with St. Mary's congregation, there are: The Sodality of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for young women, diploma granted December 8, 1882: Margaret E. Roche, prefect; Mary Klein, first assistant; Amelia Schmidley, second assistant; Julietta Whelan, secretary; Frances Koehler, treasurer. Sodality of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for married women and widows, diploma granted August 21, 1891: Mrs. Sara Jane Baker, prefect; Mrs. Elizabeth Dilzer, first assistant; Mrs. Mary Kneff, second assistant; Mrs. Mary Johnson, secretary; Mrs. Anna Doran, treasurer. League of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, diploma granted April 27, 1893: Officers, the Rev. Robert James Roche, director, and about sixty promoters.

Rev. R. J. Roche.

The parents of Rev. Robert James Roche came from Ireland to America late in the forties and to Wisconsin in the spring of 1855, settling on a small farm in the township of Otsego, Columbia County, where on the 19th of December the same year the subject of this sketch was born. When about eight years of age he first began to attend the district school where is now the village of Doylestown. In the spring of 1869 he was sent to live with his uncle, the Rev. Henry J. Roche, then pastor of St. Henry's Church, Richwood, Dodge County. While there, besides doing the work naturally falling to the lot of a "priest's boy" in the country, he attended the district school, paying some attention to the study of Latin after school and working hours. On the first Tuesday of September, 1872, he entered as student the Seminary of St. Francis de Sales near Milwaukee, where he continued his studies until his ordination. He received tonsure and the minor orders in the spring of 1879 from Archbishop Henni. He was ordained deacon and sub-deacon on the 13th and 14th (Passion Sunday) March, 1880, by the Right Rev. Michael Heiss, D. D., Bishop of La Crosse; and on Sunday, June 27, he was ordained priest by the same learned prelate, then Coadjutor Bishop of Milwaukee. Father Roche offered up the holy sacrifice of the Mass for the first time on Sunday, July 4, in St. Jerome's Church, Columbus, Wis., then in charge of the Rev. Henry J. Roche, where many years before he had received his first Holy Communion and the Sacrament of Confirmation. In that church also he heard confessions for the first time, and preached his first sermon. His first appointment was to succeed the Rev. H. R. Murphy in the care of Doylestown and Wyocena; but on his expressing a reluctance to take these congregations on account of his parents and a large number of other relatives attending the Doylestown church, he was sent to take charge of St. Isidore's Congregation in Meeme, Manitowoc County. This was in the latter part of August, 1880. Here he remained until June 1, 1882, when in compliance with the wish of Archbishop Heiss he took charge of St. Mary's, Janesville, and has remained there until the present time. In 1883 Archbishop Heiss offered him a promotion in the form of a professorship in the Seminary of St. Francis de Sales; but feeling himself to be better suited to parochial work, he declined the proffered honor.

St. Patrick's Church, Janesville, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Patrick at Janesville, Wisconsin, was organized in the year 1850, and in October of that year the Rev. Patrick Kernan was appointed first resident pastor. Prior to the coming of Father Kernan, St. Patrick's was attended occasionally as a mission by the resident pastor from Lake Geneva. In 1852 Father Kernan was succeeded as rector of St. Patrick's by the Rev. Michael McFaul, who remained in charge until 1857. He was succeeded by the Rev. John Conroy, who, during his pastorate, which covered a period of nearly seven years, succeeded in raising a sufficient fund to erect a comfortable and commodious church structure. He also remained long enough to see this building partially completed, saying Mass in the basement in December, 1863, but it remained for his successor, the Rev. J. M. Doyle, who assumed the charge in January following, to complete the work. In addition to this he also built the convent of St. Joseph for the Sisters of Mercy.

In building St. Patrick's Church, it became necessary for the committee in charge to incur a considerable debt, which, for a long time, it was impossible for them to pay off. As a result of this, a mortgage given by the parish on the property was foreclosed in 1880, sold in 1881, and bid in by Dr. Butler, a non-Catholic. Then, for one month, the doors were closed, during which period, however, Father Doyle said Mass in the little winter chapel, which, on account of its limited size, could only accommodate about fifty people, preventing many from attending the services. At about this time, Father

St. Patrick's Church, Janesville, Wis.

Doyle left for Ireland, coming back in a few months in ill health, and died at St. Mary's Hospital in Milwaukee. Then St. Patrick's came under the administration of the Rev. Father McGinnity, the present rector, who assumed charge of the pastorate in June, 1880. Upon coming to Janesville, Father McGinnity quickly realized the serious condition of affairs, and as a first move towards repossessing the congregation with its own, gave a personal guarantee for the payment of $500, provided the church was thrown open for three Sundays. This was done, more particularly, for the purpose that pastor and people might talk over the affairs of the parish, and determine upon some proper course to pursue. The proposition was accepted, and on the third Sunday a collection was taken up, amounting to the neat little sum of $800. Father McGinnity then began a personal canvass of his parishioners, in which he was so successful that a sufficient sum was quickly raised to pay off the greater part of the indebtedness of the parish. During the seventeen years of his pastorate, Father Mc-

Ginnity has made many improvements to the church property, among other things being the handsome and comfortable parsonage, which cost in the neighborhood of $6,000, and a beautiful new altar costing $1,200. The congregation of St. Patrick's is now a rather extensive one, consisting at the present time of 2,500 souls.

The parochial and select schools which have been established in connection with St. Patrick's have a combined attendance of two hundred and fifty pupils, who are under the direction of the Sisters of Mercy. The mother house of this organization, which was established in Janesville during the year 1870, has a chapel in connection with it, in which services are regularly held. There are, also, in connection with St. Patrick's, a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Holy Rosary Confraternity, St. Patrick's T. A. and B. Society, Young

Rev. E. M. McGinnity.

Ladies' Sodality, Union Catholic League, Altar Society, League of the Sacred Heart, and Ladies' Aid Society for the Benefit of the Poor.

The Rev. Father McGinnity was born September 1, 1840, in County Monaghan, Ireland, his parents being farmers. With them, in 1848, he came to America, when they immediately moved West, and located at Willow Springs, Wisconsin. At this place, for eight years following, he attended the district school. When sixteen years of age, he entered St. Francis' Seminary, near Milwaukee, then but recently established, where he remained for over seven years, completing a thorough course in the classics, philosophy and theology. He was ordained to the priesthood at that institution by Bishop Henni, who immediately appointed him to the pastorate at Meeme, Manitowoc County, where he began his life's labors. At this place he built St. Isidore's Church. He was then sent to Fort Howard, where he succeeded in completing St. Patrick's Church, and from there to Darlington, where he completed the church of the Holy Rosary, the first to bear that name in the diocese. This brought him to the year 1871, when he secured leave of absence from his Ordinary in order that he might go to Denver. Upon his return, he was appointed to the Catholic parish at Lake Geneva, from whence, after a ten months' pastorate, he removed to Monroe, where he found a heavily indebted and dissatisfied congregation. Fortunately, after a few months of persuasion and effort on his part, he was able to rectify this unhappy condition of affairs, so that the two mortgages held upon the church were paid, and the property thus released from debt. In June, 1880, Father McGinnity was transferred to his present pastorate of St. Patrick, at Janesville, where he has accomplished a great deal of good for the people of his parish. He is a man whose every action is directed by the overwhelming interest which he exhibits for his work, and whose genuine but modest pride in what he has accomplished, and his zealous piety, have made him a mark of respect and affection of all denominations. Father McGinnity is ably assisted by the Rev. John Collins, who was born in the town of Gratiot, Lafayette County, Wisconsin, and was educated at St. Francis.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Jefferson, Wis.

UNTIL the year 1859, the original founders of St. John the Baptist Congregation at Jefferson, Wisconsin, belonged to that of St. Lawrence. In that year, however, the members of the latter living in the village organized a congregation of their own, buying the Methodist Episcopal church, which served for divine services for the following nine years. As shown by the existing church records, the Rev. Wendelin Bernard was the first pastor of this parish, entering upon his duties as such in 1861. He was succeeded by the Rev. Michael Beiter, who remained until 1864, in which year the Rev. Hubert Jansen took charge. In 1866 the present church was begun, the same being dedicated two years later by Bishop Henni. It is a comfortable looking brick building and has a massive steeple. The next pastor was the Rev. A. Sigg, after whom came the Rev. M. Gernbauer, he being succeeded by Father John Friedl in 1871. Father Friedl built the present parsonage, which is also entirely of brick, during his first year at Jefferson. In 1873 Dr. M. J. Joerger was appointed to the pastorate at Jefferson, remaining there in active service for eighteen years. During his administration many improvements to the church property were made. The interior of the structure was entirely renovated and provided with new altars, the high altar being an especially handsome piece of work, costing $3,000, while the two side altars cost $500 apiece.

St. John's Church, Jefferson, Wis.

The pulpit, a handsome piece of work, was built at an additional expense of $600. The spire which at present adorns the church was built by Father Thill, the present rector. On October 14, 1891, Dr. Joerger resigned and was succeeded by the Rev. Dominic F. Thill. In the fall of 1892 Father Thill's brother, the Rev. Nicholas A. Thill, rector of the Holy Name Congregation at Sheboygan, changed places with him and since that time the latter has attended to the spiritual wants of the members of St. John's. The congregation at the present time consists of about two hundred families and the school, which is under the direction of four Franciscan Sisters from Greenfield Park, Milwaukee, is regularly attended by one hundred and twenty-three children. The school building, a large brick structure built by Dr. M. J. Joerger, stands just east of the church. The cemetery attached to St. John's is located about a mile and a half northeast of the church and was presented to the congregation by Mr. John Blaser. There are six Catholic organizations connected with St. John's, namely: St.

Rev. N. A. Thill.
(DECEASED.)

John's Benevolent Society; Branch No. 48, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin; St. Aloysius Young Men's Society; St. Ann's Altar Society; St. Mary Young Ladies' Sodality.

This congregation has the distinction of giving five members to the priesthood, the Rev. Father Joseph Berg, professor at the Salesianum, Father F. Berg, assistant priest at St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee, Father Sebastian Weiss, Father George Weiss and the Rev. Edward Muench, now stationed at Nebraska, having at some time belonged to it.

The Rev. Nicholas August Thill, present rector of St. John's, was born on the 15th of February, 1849, at Holy Cross, Ozaukee County, Wisconsin. Having completed his studies at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, he was ordained priest on December 22, 1872, by Bishop Henni. Among the different pastorates maintained by him since ordination are those of St. Lawrence, Washington County; Holy Name, Sheboygan, where he remained from 1889 to 1892, erecting a handsome school building at a cost of $16,500. Through his efforts also a hospital was erected near the church. In the fall of 1892 he became rector of St. John's at Jefferson.

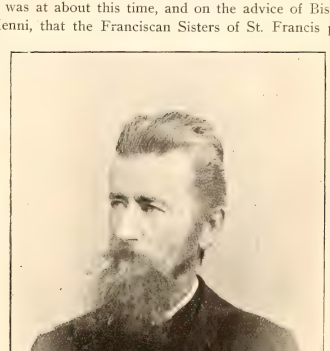
St. Lawrence's Church, Jefferson, Wis.

PRIOR to the year 1850, the early Catholic settlers in and around the village of Jefferson were visited by missionary priests, and at a later date by the resident pastors from neighboring parishes. The first resident priest appointed to this charge was the Rev. Michael Haider, who came to Jefferson in December, 1850. He did much for the benefit and advancement of this congregation, one of the first things undertaken by him being the enlargement of the old church and erection of a commodious frame school house, over which he in person presided. Besides these, and the other numerous duties attached to his position at this time, he was also called upon to attend the missions at Watertown, Clymanstown, Rome and Ottawa, which necessitated much laborious effort on his part. Father Haider remained in charge of this congregation from December, 1850, to March, 1856, being succeeded as rector of the parish by the Rev. F. X. Minderer, who remained there from April, 1856, to November, 1860. He, in turn, was succeeded by the Rev. Wendelin Bernard, who administered the duties of this parish from January, 1861, to February, 1862. Sometime preceding this pastorate, that is in 1859, the members of the congregation living within the city of Jefferson separated from St. Lawrence, and purchasing the Methodist Church in that town, used it for divine services for a period of nine years. In the meantime the St. Lawrence's congregation was attended by the pastor of this church as a mission.

When in the early '60's the Rev. Michael Beitter took charge of the Catholic parish, he erected the present church edifice, a solid and imposing structure, which stands on a considerable eminence about a mile east of Jefferson. Father Beitter remained at Jefferson from February, 1862, to April, 1864, and he was succeeded in January of the following year by the Rev. Hubert Jansen, who remained until the following November. It was at about this time, and on the advice of Bishop Henni, that the Franciscan Sisters of St. Francis purchased a plot of land near to the church, on which they erected a convent, henceforth to be the mother house of the Order. In this undertaking, they met with considerable opposition at the hands of Father Jansen, who made marked and strenuous objections to their coming, refusing absolutely to act as chaplain to them, or conduct services in the convent chapel. This, of course, necessitated other arrangements, the Sisters finally obtaining the services and coöperation of the Rev. F. X. Obermüller, who assumed the duties in January, 1866. He remained at Jefferson until July, 1871, at which time the Sisters removed to La Crosse, and erected a new convent there. At the present time only a very few of the Sisters of this Order reside at the Jefferson Convent, their living being almost entirely obtained from the earnings and products of a farm of eighty acres, which is also owned and conducted in connection with the institution. Some of these Sisters are engaged in conducting the parochial school connected with St. Lawrence's congregation. In 1871, after the departure of Father Obermüller and to December of that year, the Rev. Thomas Van der Thannen (Fidelis, O. M. Cap.) was pastor of the congregation. He was succeeded by the Rev. Valentine Rademacher, who was in charge from January, 1872, to July of the same year. Then followed the Rev. Fathers Anton Michels, July, 1872, to August, 1872; Joseph Buergler, December, 1872, to March, 1873; Ferdinand Zuber, April, 1873, to June, 1875; C. Hergenroether, July, 1875, to December, 1876; Henry Bernhard, March, 1877, to December, 1880; Clemens Hahn, February, 1881, to December, 1882—Father Hahn died December 14th of the latter year, and was buried in the cemetery near St. Lawrence's Church; Michael Heiss, January, 1883, to April, 1885; Father Anselmus, O. M. Cap., May, 1885, to December, 1887; John Friedl, August, 1887, to June, 1890; Father Korfhage, July, 1890, to October, 1893, and Rev. John Friedl again from August 18, 1894, until the present time. Of numerous improvements made from time to time to the property of this parish, might be mentioned the building of a new school house by Father Obermüller in 1869, and the enlargement of the church and addition of the sanctuary and sacristy to it by Father Friedl in 1888. The latter pastor also built a new rectory in 1894. The present congregation of St. Lawrence numbers eighty-three families, all of whom are German, while the parochial school has a regular attendance of seventy-five children. The present convent chaplain is the Rev. J. Ryan. There are connected with this congregation, two Catholic organizations, a Ladies' Altar Society, with thirty-six members, and the Third Order of Franciscans.

St. Lawrence's Church, Jefferson, Wis.



Rev. John Friedl.
(DECEASED.)

The Rev. John Friedl,[1] present pastor of St. Lawrence's congregation, at Jefferson, is a native of Reichenthal, Diocese of Linz, Upper Austria, where he was born on the 12th day of June, 1842. Having acquired an ordinary school education, he entered the Gymnasium at Linz, where he completed a classical course. In 1866, in company with the Rev. Dr. Jos. Salzmann, he came to America and entered the Salesianum at St. Francis, where, having completed the necessary studies in philosophy and theology, he was finally ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. Martin Henni, Bishop of Milwaukee, on January 29, 1869. For some time following ordination, he was assistant pastor to the Rev. Martin Weiss, rector of St. Lawrence's congregation, Washington County, Wisconsin. Subsequently, he had charge of the congregation of St. John's, at Jefferson; St. Francis Xavier's, Cross Plains, Dane County, and at Marytown, Fond du Lac County, after which, for some time, he was professor in the Seminary at St. Francis. He was then appointed rector of the Saukville congregation, in Ozaukee County, from which place he was transferred successively to Mineral Point, St. Joseph's, at Racine, and his present charge of St. Lawrence's, at Jefferson.

(1) Died April 21st, 1898.

St. John's Church, Johnsburg, Wis.

IN 1841 six families coming from Germany settled at Johnsburg, Wisconsin, and they were soon followed by others. For some time occasional pastoral visits were made to these people by the Rev. P. Theodore John Van den Broek, from the Dominican Order, who said Holy Mass in private houses. He was then living at Little Chute. On September 26, 1845, the Rev. Caspar Rehrl arrived at Johnsburg, being sent by Bishop Henni to organize a congregation. In spite of unpropitious surroundings, he at once set about the accomplishment of his mission, and as a result of his zealous efforts, a small log church was completed in 1846 and dedicated in honor of St. John the Baptist. When Bishop Henni visited Johnsburg, on September 8, 1846, for the purpose of administering the Sacrament of Confirmation, he was pleasantly surprised and highly gratified at witnessing the successful work accomplished in behalf of the church. As St. John's was the first church established in that section of the country, it was attended by Catholics residing many miles around. At this time also, that is in 1845, a Catholic school was also established; of this Mr. Herman Joseph Thelen was teacher for one year, when he was followed by Mr. Geo. Rehrl, a brother of the Rev. Father Rehrl. When Mr. Rehrl resigned in order to prepare himself for the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, Father Rehrl went to Europe to engage some School Sisters for the work. During his absence Rev. Father P. Fabian Bermadinger, a Capuchin, took charge of the congregation. He came in company with lay-brothers, who assisted him in his work. The Rev. Father Bermadinger bought and built his own house. The school was now taught by Mr. Ant. Duhs and later by Mathias Olig. As the congregation rapidly increased in numbers it became necessary to increase the capacity of the church. Now the only feasible manner of doing this, it was soon decided, was to build a new one. The undertaking being decided upon, it soon became evident that a majority of the congregation favored another and more central location. In consequence of this pronounced feeling the Rev. Father Bermadinger sold his farm and left the place. Father Rehrl, who had in the meantime returned from Europe, disliked the plan of removal, and finding also that there was no place for the Sisters at Johnsburg, he resigned his pastorate, leaving in June, 1850. This vacancy was filled by the Rev. L. Susan, who left the congregation in 1851. The Rev. John Michael Obermueller then took charge of the pastorate, and during the following year a mission was held by the Rev. F. X. Weninger with the most gratifying results. At a meeting held at about this time, it was decided to build the new church of stone, the location chosen, being more centrally situated than the one formerly used, and for that purpose five acres of land were donated by Mathias Kalt. This, however, created some dissension in the congregation, and, as a result, some of the members began the erection of the new church on the old site. The Rev. Obermueller resigned in October, 1853, and for nearly one year the congregation was without a priest. In August, 1854, the Rev. Michael Deisenrieder became pastor again and a temporary church was built. The new church was commenced in the spring of 1855, and on Ascension Day the corner-stone was laid by Bishop Henni. On the old place the school was conducted by Mr. Lang, Olig and Geissler, while at the new one the Rev. Father Deisenrieder taught school in the priest's house. In 1856 a stone school house, two stories high, was erected and three School Sisters of Notre Dame placed in charge of it. In 1857 the church was dedicated by Bishop Henni on the Feast of St. John the Baptist. There were present on that occasion: The Rev. Michael Heiss, secretary to the Bishop, Rev. Father Dael, Father Fusseder and the Rev. Father Hasselbauer, P. Bonaventura Frey, and the Rev. Father Max Mueller; on the same day a bell was consecrated and the cemetery dedicated. The Rev. Deisenrieder resigned in 1858 and his assistant, the Rev. M. Mueller, became pastor, but he died after a few months, on July 13, 1858. During the following three years the congregation was attended by Capuchin Fathers from Mt. Calvary. In 1861 the Rev. F. X. Pfaller became resident pastor, and stayed till May, 1862. During this period, instead of School Sisters, a teacher, Math. Wickert, was placed in charge of the school. The Rev. Pfaller organized the St. Mary's Society for married ladies, August 15, 1861. He was succeeded by the Rev. Jos. Lutz in 1862, who, however, left on account of sickness in January, 1863. Succeeding him were: the Rev. Fathers John Sanner, who remained for two months, Comenzin, John Welter, in 1865, P. Leo Gauche, in 1866, and Aloys. Kieser; under the latter's administration, the steeple was erected, also many repairs were made on both church and school, and the interior of the church furnished. In 1868 Father Kieser went to Germany, the Rev. P. Oeschger taking charge of the congregation during his absence. After his return in 1869 Father Kieser resumed the pastorate, remaining until 1873, when he resigned. Then the Rev. M. De Becke took charge of this congregation till July of that year. His successor was the Rev. Hubert Jansen. In 1874 a new priest house was erected and two bells were presented by Messrs. Michael Blonicn and Joseph Schnorrenberg. September 16, 1878, the Rev. John Wernich became pastor and remained till March, 1879. April 1, 1879, the present pastor assumed the pastorate, and for eighteen years has worked faithfully and zealously in behalf of the congregation. During this period the interior of the church was entirely renovated at an expense of $2,500. The Rev. John Bertram, now pastor of Hartford, Wisconsin, an offspring of this congregation, said his first Mass on December 8, 1879. On June 24, 1880, the High Altar was consecrated by Archbishop M. Heiss. Two years later the cemetery was enlarged. In 1883 a residence was built for the teacher and in 1886 the new school house was erected. In 1894 a steeple was erected and the church enlarged and in 1895 the Sanctuary, Sacristy and Winter Chapel were completed. In 1895 the Rev. Michael Schmitz, now pastor of Kiel, Wis., born in this congregation, said his first Mass the 26th day of June. Of Catholic societies in this congregation, there are: The Young Ladies' Society, Society of Married Ladies, Sacred Heart of Jesus, Young Men's Society, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Society of the Precious Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ, Society of the Gebetsapostolat and Confraternity of Scapulary.

St. John's Church, Johnsburg, Wis.

Rev. Jul. Hellweger.

The Rev. Julius Hellweger, present pastor of St. John's, was born April 11, 1846, at Dt. Crone, Germany, was ordained priest on July 13, 1873, came to America in September, 1875, and was appointed to his present pastorate on April 1, 1879.

Immaculate Conception Church, Kendaltown, Wis.

THE parish of the Immaculate Conception at Kendaltown, Lafayette County, Wisconsin, is situated in the township of Kendal, Lafayette County, about nine miles northwest of Darlington, twelve miles north of Shullsburg and twelve miles southeast of Mineral Point. It consists of between eighty and ninety families, mostly Irish, with a few of German descent. The holy Sacrifice of the Mass was celebrated for the first time at a private house in 1855 by Father Hobbs, then of Shullsburg. The following year a church was erected under the supervision of Father O'Connor, of Willow Springs, who had recently been placed in charge of the parish, and who for sometime attended it as a mission. Father O'Connor's successor was the Rev. Father Stroker, also of Willow Springs. The mission was then placed in charge of the pastors of St. Matthew's church at Shullsburg and attended successively by Fathers Conroy, Colton and James Kinsella. In the meantime a church had been erected at Darlington, and Kendaltown was attached to that place as a mission. From here it was attended by Father O'Neil, who in turn was succeeded in charge of the mission by Father Welsh, of Willow Springs. After some time, Kendaltown was again attached to Darlington and remained as a mission to that place until 1882. During this period, the spiritual wants of its members were attended to by the following clergymen: Fathers David, E. M. McGinnity, James Fitzgibbon and M. Hannon. In 1882 the Rev. William Haberstock of Seymour was given charge of Kendaltown mission and began the erection of the new church at that place, which was completed under his administration during the following year. In September, 1883, the Rev. Wm. F. O'Mahoney was appointed resident pastor of Kendaltown, and during the first year of his residence there built the present pastoral residence. Father O'Mahoney remained in charge of this parish until his death, which occurred September 29, 1884. He was succeeded by the Rev. E. J. Goss, who maintained the pastorate from September, 1884, until August, 1887. Father Goss was then succeeded by the Rev. Father Luby, who remained there until about the first of April, 1888. The next pastor was the Rev. Dennis Tierney, whose term as pastor began in April, 1888, and continued until September, 1893. His successor was the Rev. N. J. Doyle, who died while still in charge on April 29, 1895, being then only twenty-seven years of age. After Father Doyle's death the congregation remained without a pastor until July, 1895, when the Rev. M. B. Norton, present rector of the parish, was appointed. During the summer and fall of 1896, Father Norton remodeled the interior of the church and at the present extensive improvements, which will add greatly to the stability and beauty of the structure, are in contemplation.

Immaculate Conception Church, Kendaltown, Wis.

There are at present no Catholic societies in the parish, except an Altar Society, but steps have already been taken for the organization of a Court of Catholic Foresters, which will be perfected during the present year.

The parish of the Holy Assumption at Willow Springs, Wisconsin, consisting of about thirty families, is situated in the township of Willow Springs, Lafayette County. As nearly as can be ascertained, the holy Sacrifice of the Mass was offered up as early as 1835 by Rev. James Causse of Mineral Point. This he continued until the year 1849, when under his supervision the first church in the parish, a small wooden structure, was erected. The next priest who attended Willow Springs was Father McCann, who succeeded Father Causse at Mineral Point. His administration of the parish continued until sometime in 1854 or 1855, when Father O'Connor was appointed as first resident pastor. In 1854 the rapid growth of the congregation necessitated the building of an addition to the church about equal in size to the original edifice. Between the expiration of Father O'Connor's pastorate and the appointment of his successor, Willow Springs was again attended for a short time as a mission by Father McCann of Mineral Point. Father Stroker, who was appointed to succeed Father O'Connor as resident pastor, was in turn followed by Fathers Welsh and McGowan, both of whom resided successively in Willow Springs. Father McGowan was the last resident pastor appointed to that place. From his time until 1883 the congregation was attended from Darlington by the following pastors of that place: the Rev. Fathers David, E. M. McGinnity, James Fitzgibbon and M. Hannon. In 1883, when Kendaltown was allotted a resident pastor, Willow Springs was attached to it as a mission, from which it has been attended ever since by the following priests in the order named: The Rev. Fathers Wm. F. O'Mahoney, E. J. Goss, Michael Luby, Dennis Tierney, N. J. Doyle and M. B. Norton.

Rev. M. B. Norton.

Willow Springs is one of the oldest congregations in southwestern Wisconsin. The first church erected in the parish, which for years served as a land mark in the section in which it is located, continued to be used by the congregation for divine services until the summer of 1896, when under the supervision of the present pastor, Father M. B. Norton, it was replaced by a beautiful new edifice. The new building is without doubt one of the prettiest mission churches in the archdiocese. With the exception of an Altar Society, there are no Catholic organizations in the parish, but it is the intention of the pastor to establish a Court of Catholic Foresters in the near future.

The Rev. Michael Bernard Norton, present rector of Kendaltown, was born on the 21st day of October, 1858, in the town of Emmett, Dodge County, Wisconsin, and two miles from the city of Watertown. His parents were among the pioneer settlers of the state. At an early age he entered the College of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart at Watertown, remaining there until he had completed his classical studies in 1881. In September of that year he repaired to St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, and devoted the next four years to the study of philosophy and theology. He was ordained to the priesthood in the chapel of this institution on June 29, 1885, by the late Archbishop Heiss. Father Norton celebrated his first holy Mass at St. Bernard's Church, in Watertown, on Sunday, July 12, 1885, and was shortly afterwards appointed to his first pastorate at Osceola, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin. His labors in this parish, from which he attended Dundee as a mission, covered a period of four years. He afterwards held charges at Mapleton, Waukesha County, and at Meeme, Manitowoc County, and was assigned to his present congregation about July 1, 1895.

St. George's Church, Kenosha, Wis.

THE first church organization of German Catholics at Kenosha, Wisconsin, formerly known as Southport, was perfected in 1848, the Rev. Fathers Kundig from Milwaukee and Schraudenbach from Racine attending to their spiritual welfare. On January 1, 1849, these people held a meeting in the basement of St. Mark's (now St. James') Church, at which it was decided to erect a church building. Father Kundig presided over this meeting, the result being that a frame building was erected on the spot where the present church stands. The church was blessed by the Rev. Martin Henni, Bishop of Milwaukee, and so satisfactorily did the new organization thrive that an addition was built on to the main structure during the following year. The first parochial school was established and a school house built in connection with this parish by the Rev. Father De Berge, in 1849. He was succeeded as pastor of the congregation by Father Huber, and he, in turn, by the Rev. Fabian Franenhofen, after whom came the Rev. Father Fusseder, whose successor was the Rev. Father Sailer. Then, for several years, Father Obermüller had charge of St. George's congregation, he being finally succeeded by the Rev. Father Bernhard. In 1858 the Rev. Father Bardarsch then being pastor, the Ven. Sisters de Notre Dame were engaged to take charge of the parochial school. During the next pastorate—that of the Rev. Father Beiter—a disastrous fire destroyed the parochial buildings, the parsonage being the only building to escape. This was on January 12, 1875. Then a temporary church was erected. During the time immediately after the fire, the girls of the parish attended school in the basement of the Second Ward public school, while an old blacksmith shop was arranged as a temporary school room for the boys. In the meantime, work progressed rapidly on the new church, the result being the present substantial building, 150x50 feet. In addition to the expense thus incurred at that time, the congregation also purchased the site of the present school house, and erected that building upon it. Thus matters progressed satisfactorily until, at the end of seven years of active and successful pastorate, Father Beiter was succeeded by the Rev. Father Moder, who built a substantial and commodious dwelling for the School Sisters. As will naturally be supposed, the success of the parish was to a considerable extent due to the large-heartedness and generosity of individual members; for instance, soon after the fire Mrs. Souen donated the northeast corner lot of the present church property to the parish, as a site for the parochial dwelling. This idea was carried to its fulfillment in the erection of a suitable parsonage on that property by the Rev. Father Moder. This pastor was succeeded in the charge by the Rev. Father Strickner, who did much to place the congregation on a good financial standing. Father Strickner was succeeded by the Rev. Michael Wenker, who remained in charge of the parish for a period of ten years. It was through his influence that the southeast corner lot of the present property was purchased, and also that the present Sisters' dwelling was built. In 1887 the first assistant pastor was appointed to this congregation in the person of the Rev. W. Pischery, who was succeeded by the Rev. M. Graettinger. He remained for two years, during which time an addition to the parsonage was completed. Father Graettinger was succeeded as assistant pastor successively by the Rev. Fathers P. Delles, W. Pape, Philip Klein, and J. Wurm. At the time of the establishment of the first parochial school in connection with St. George's, the attendance numbered sixty children, while at the present day there are five hundred and forty-six who are regularly instructed by eight Sisters of Notre Dame and one lay teacher. The girls' department is under the immediate supervision of the venerable Sister M. Angelina, while the boys' department is in charge of Professor Glasch. Under this really remarkable growth in numbers, the school house has become entirely inadequate to the demands put upon it, so that the congregation has decided to add four more rooms to the building, and to ask for four additional teachers, so that the educational interests of the parish may be thoroughly and satisfactorily subserved. When the parish was first organized, the congregation numbered thirty families, while at the present time there are five hundred in the parish. The present edifice has a seating capacity for eleven hundred, all of the pews at the present time being rented. There is also, in connection with this congregation, a choir of sixty voices, which is under the able direction of Professor Raymond Flasch. The present rector of St. George's congregation is the Rev. Joseph Dreis, who was appointed to this charge on December 17, 1893, while his brothers, Revs. Henry and Philip Dreis, came there on March 20, 1894, and July 17, 1897, respectively. Under the zealous administration of these three, the church property has been greatly improved, the school repaired, and the outstanding obligations of the congregation reduced to a nominal sum, so that both school and church are in a flourishing condition. Moreover, active preparations are being made at the present time to fresco the interior of the edifice, and also to furnish it with stained-glass windows, so that St. George's Church promises to become one of the most beautiful and tastefully decorated churches in the archdiocese of Milwaukee.

St. George's Church, Kenosha, Wis.

Rev. Joseph Dreis.

St. George's School, Sisters' Residence and Parsonage.

Rev. Philip Dreis, Assistant.

Of Catholic organizations connected with St. George's parish are: St. Joseph's Society, of which Mr. J. Meyer is president; St. George's Benevolent Society, Mr. Brockhaus, president; St. Michael's

Rev. Henry Dreis, Assistant

Benevolent Society, Mr. Pentzger, president; Heiss Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters, Mr. N. Werner, chief ranger; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Mr. Fack, president; St. Aloysius' Cadets, Mr. M. Joachim, president; Married Ladies' Society, Mrs. M. Wirtz, president; Young Ladies' Society, Miss Lena Jacobs, president.

St. James' Church, Kenosha, Wis.

NEARLY sixty years ago St. James' Parish at Kenosha, Wis., was visited by missionary priests, among them being Father Kelly, at that time resident pastor of Beloit. It was not, until 1845, that the Rev. Martin Kundig received the appointment to that charge, where he continued to officiate during the following two years. While incumbent at Kenosha, Father Kundig erected a substantial brick church, the first of its kind in Wisconsin, which was dedicated under the name of St. Mark.

Upon the appointment of Father Kundig to another parish, he was succeeded by the Rev. Michael McFaul, who remained until 1852, his successor being the Rev. John Conroy. Then followed, in succession, the Rev. Francis Turney, from 1855 to 1856; Rev. James Colton 1856 to 1857; Rev. James D. Roche, 1857 to 1859; Rev. G. Riordan, 1859 to 1867; Rev. P. F. Petit, 1867 to 1869; Rev. E. McGurke, 1869 to 1870; Rev. Thomas Kirwin, 1870 to 1871; Rev. William Dougherty, 1871 to 1876; Rev. John Casey, 1876 to 1880, and the Rev. James Cleary, from 1880 to 1892. The present pastor, Rev. Henry J. Roche, assumed the duties of the pastorate in

St. James' Church, Kenosha, Wis.

1892. During the incumbency of the Rev. James Roche, the first Catholic school building in Kenosha was erected. This school was conducted until 1870 by lay teachers, when the Rev. Edward McGurke, at that time resident pastor, secured the services of some Dominican Sisters. In 1883, during the administration of Father Cleary, the present church was built, and in the following year dedicated under the name of St. James. Another marked improvement consisted in the erection of a new school building and parsonage in 1887. The different active Catholic organizations and societies now in the parish, are: League of the Sacred Heart: President, Mrs. Peter Daley; Secretary, Miss Stacia Conden; Treasurer, Miss Anna Hanley. Altar Society: President, Mrs. E. Bryant; Secretary, Miss M. Kelly; Treasurer, Mrs. James Tully. Children of Mary: President, Miss Maggie Burns; Secretary, Rose Tully; Treasurer, Josephine Tyson. St.

Aloysius Society for Boys: President, James Slater; Secretary, Robert Hanley; Treasurer, Henry Bienimann. Holy Angels Sodality: President, Sadie Carr; Secretary, Callista English; Treasurer, Julia Donnelly. A. O. H.:

Rev. Henry J. Roche.

President, Bernard McGivern. The Convent of the Most Precious Blood, which is also at Kenosha, was founded by the Dominican Sisters in 1890. The parochial school, also conducted by the Sisters of this Order, has eight grades and a daily attendance of two hundred and thirty children. The congregation of St. James' parish is at the present time composed of some twelve hundred souls.

The present resident pastor, Rev. Henry J. Roche, was born in Wexford County, Ireland, in 1834. He and a twin brother were among the first class ordained from St. Francis' Seminary. Soon after entering the priesthood, he was appointed to a mission near Delavan, Wis., going from there to Richwood, where he remained for eight years. While a resident of this place he built St. Joseph's Church. He was next sent to Columbus, from whence, after a continuous pastorate of twenty years, he assumed his present duties.

Holy Trinity Church, Kewaskum, Wis.

PRIOR to the year 1861 the Catholics living at Kewaskum were obliged to journey to neighboring parishes in order to attend to their religious duties. In that year, however, two lots were presented to the Catholics of that place by Mr. Mathias Altenhofen, upon which a medium sized brick church was erected. From 1861 to 1868 the congregation thus formed was attended as a mission by resident priests from Barton, among them being the Rev. Father Reindl. The first priest to take up his residence at Kewaskum was the Rev. John Mueller, who came there in 1868 and remained just one year. At that time the mission of St. Michael was attached to the parish at Kewaskum. Father Mueller's successor was the Rev. Father Ruckengruber, who remained from August, 1869, to April, 1870. Then the Rev. Henry Boers had charge for three months, and his successor,

Holy Trinity Church, Kewaskum, Wis.

the Rev. Father Schmitz, remained but sixty days. The Rev. Nicholas Stehle then came to Kewaskum, remaining there for five months. In July, 1871, the Rev. Father Edelmann took charge of the parish and continued to administer the duties of the same until the fall of 1877, when he returned to his native country, Switzerland. His successor was the Rev. Father Grome, present rector of St. Joseph's Congregation in Milwaukee, who entered upon his duties at Kewaskum in 1878 and remained for seventeen years. While pastor of this congregation he built an addition to the church at an expense of $1,000, a school house costing $3,000, and a parsonage at an outlay of $3,000. In July, 1895, the present incumbent, the Rev. Philip Vogt, took charge of the parish.

The congregation of Holy Trinity now consists of about seventy families. The parochial school, although at first conducted by lay teachers, is at the present time under the management of Sisters of St. Agnes and has a regular attendance of about eighty-five scholars. Of Catholic societies in the congregation there are several, among them being: St. Francis Benevolent Society, organized June 3, 1888, thirty-five members, President,

Rev. Philip J. Vogt.

William Muckerhaide; branch of the Catholic Protective Association, ten members; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, twenty members, President, William Muckerhaide; Married Ladies' Society, forty-five members, and Young Ladies' Sodality, twenty-five members.

The congregation of St. Bridget at Wayne, in Washington County, is attended as a mission from Kewaskum. This congregation was organized in 1856 and was at first attended by the Rev. Father Rehrl, who, while resident pastor at Barton, visited that place regularly until 1865. During the year 1868 and for some time following it was attended from Kewaskum and later from St. Kilian by the Rev. Fathers Schumacher and Jacobs. Since 1878, however, it has been permanently attached to Holy Trinity congregation at Kewaskum. The parochial school connected with this mission is conducted by Sisters of St. Agnes, the attendance being about thirty-five children. The congregation is composed of fifty-one families.

The Rev. Philip J. Vogt, present pastor, was born July 3, 1859, at Kilbourn City. In 1873 he entered the Salesianum at St. Francis, and after finishing the classical, philosophical and theological studies necessary, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1883. He celebrated his first Mass at West Bend on July 5th following. He was then appointed first assistant to the Rev. Father Holzhauer at St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee, where he remained for thirteen months.

During that time St. Michael's congregation was organized and Father Vogt became its first attendant pastor. He was next appointed rector of the parish in Granville, where he stayed one year, and was then transferred to the pastorate at Theresa, where he remained for three and one-half years. From Theresa he went to Fond du Lac, became rector of the German Catholic parish and continued as such for three and one-half years. His next appointment was to the pastorate at Marytown, which place he left in eleven months to assume charge at Platteville. After a pastorate of one and one-half years at Platteville he was appointed rector of Holy Trinity Congregation, Kewaskum, in July, 1895.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Kiel, Wis.

THE Catholics residing at Kiel, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, were first attended as a mission from St. Anna by the Rev. Father Schleier. He was succeeded as pastor by the Rev. Father Schiefen, who continued to visit that place at stated intervals until 1892. At that time the Rev. G. Weiss was appointed by the Ordinary as first resident pastor, remaining as such until August 26, 1896. At that time the present rector, the Rev. M. J. Schmitz, assumed charge of the parish, having for a mission the congregation of St. George, at Elkhart Lake. The congregation of SS. Peter and Paul at present consists of about seventy families. There is a parochial school, with an average attendance of forty to fifty children, connected with this parish, which is in charge of a lay teacher. There are, also, a number Catholic organizations, to which members of the congregation belong, among them being St. Mary's Society, St. Cecelia's

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Kiel, Wis.

Rev. J. Schmitz.

Young Ladies' Society, St. Aloysius Young Men's Society, and a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

The congregation of St. George, at Elkhart Lake, is attended as a mission by the resident pastor at Kiel. This congregation, which consists of about fifteen families, all German, was organized by the Rev. G. Weiss in August, 1896. Services are held at this Lake every two weeks. There is a Ladies' Altar Society in this parish, to which a number of the congregation belong.

The Rev. M. J. Schmitz, present rector of SS. Peter and Paul, was born on the 31st of January, 1870, at Johnsburg, Wisconsin. After acquiring his earlier education at the parochial school he began studying for the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, in 1887, where he completed a full course in classical, philosophical and theological lore, and was ordained in 1895.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Kieler, Wis.

THE establishment of this congregation was attended with more than the usual difficulties surrounding such an undertaking, owing to the fact that the country in Grant County, and particularly in and around Kieler, is of an exceedingly rough and hilly character, a condition the unsatisfactoriness of which is considerably augmented by numerous bluffs which predominate along the banks of the Mississippi River. This condition of course makes traveling quite difficult at all times, but especially dangerous at night; consequently, there were occasions when it was next to impossible for one to make the journey to that place with any degree of safety. Kieler is itself a small country village of about one hundred and ten families, and is situated eleven miles distant from the Northwestern Railroad station at Cuba City, and twelve miles from that at East Dubuque in Illinois. There is no connection from this place with the outside world, either by telegraph or telephone, the only method in force to this day being the old time country stage, which makes its daily journeys from Kieler to Louisburg.

The Catholic congregation at Kieler was first organized in the year 1855, prior to which time the settlers in this locality, which was for a number of years better known as Jamestown, attended divine services at Potosi and Sinsinawa Mound. The year following the organization of the parish, a small church was built and the same is in evidence to-day, being now used for a Catholic school. It is a small frame structure 38x24 feet in dimensions and maintains its original form with the exception of the necessary repairs which have been made from time to time. In this little church, the holy sacrifice of the Mass was offered up for the first time in July, 1858.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Kieler, Wis.

by the Rev. Ferdinand Zuber, who was at that time rector of St. Andrew's congregation at Potosi. To this pastorate, the little mission at Kieler remained attached until 1867, during which time it was attended by the following pastors, who succeeded one another at intervals as incumbents at Potosi: The Revs. Ferd. Zuber, L. Lux, Herman Joseph Muckerheide, Father Rasch and the Rev. Charles Exel. After Father Exel, the Rev. Andrew Gstach, Ph. D., became resident pastor of the Kieler congregation, remaining there from February, 1867, to January, 1869. His successors were: The Rev. Fathers Seif, February 2, 1869, to May 9, 1869; Peter Oeschger, June, 1869, to August 20, 1870; Aloysius Oehler, October 29, 1870, to February 18, 1871; Father

Rev. Rudolph Ollig.

Schraudenbach, May 23, 1871, to April 18, 1873; J. E. Halbenkann, May, 1873, to April, 1882; Lawrence Barth, May, 1882, to August, 1882; George Trimberger, August, 1882, to January, 1886; James Stehle, January, 1886; August Albers, January, 1886, to September, 1891; Ferdinand Raess, September, 1891, to September 8, 1896, and Rudolph Ollig, the present rector, since September 16, 1896. Of the above resident pastors at Kieler, the Revs. Peter Oeschger and J. E. Halbenkann deserve especial mention. Under the administration of the former, the corner-stone of the present church was laid by the Right Rev. John Martin Henni, D. D., Bishop of Milwaukee. The dimensions of this building are 84½x45 feet, the cost of the structure complete being $6,000. It is a plain but very substantial building and is arranged interiorly with a view to the comfort and accommodation of the members. The church bells, however, have been woefully neglected, being perched on an open platform, seventy-five feet above the building, in which condition they have, in spite of the congregation's ability to do otherwise, remained exposed to all kinds of weather for the past thirty years. The originator of this structure, Father Oeschger, was born on July 29, 1822, at Hernu Sen, District of Laufenburg, Canton Aargau, Switzerland. The unfortunate cause of his death will long be remembered by the people residing in this vicinity. While the church was still under course of construction he one day, while passing along a portion of the interior scaffolding, fell to the ground and was so badly injured that he died immediately. He was buried in the little cemetery at Kieler, where a small monument marks his last resting place.

The Rev. J. E. Halbenkann, present rector of St. Mary's Church at Mineral Point, Wisconsin, is remembered not only for his churchly zeal but also for the great interest he took in the interior decoration and furnishings of the church. Of the latter, which were added to that building during his administration, were a large pipe organ, costing $1,900; two side altars, $1,100; one high altar, $1,100; two bells, $500; pulpit, $260; a candelabra and candlesticks and numerous other accessories. The present parsonage at Kieler, poorly built and poorly furnished, was erected by Father Gstach. At one time, the part of this building, now used as a kitchen, was devoted to school purposes, but when the new church had been completed and was occupied by the congregation, the old church was built over for a school, for which purpose it has since been used. This institution is run under the free school system and is in charge of Sisters of St. Francis, from Greenfield, Milwaukee, who have conducted the same since September, 1892. Prior to their coming, the school was in charge of a lay teacher. The present enrollment of scholars numbers one hundred. Since its organization, three missions have been held in the congregation at Kieler, one during July, 1860, by the Rev. Francis Xavier Weninger, S. J.; one in January, 1883, and another in March, 1895, by the Redemptorist Fathers. The congregation of the Immaculate Conception at the present time consists of one hundred and ten families, almost all of whom are emigrants from the Prussian Dioceses of Hildesheim and Paderborn. A few of them, however, are from the Dutch Diocese of Roermond. There are four Catholic societies connected with the congregation at Kieler, namely: Branch No. 138 of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin; Young Men of St. George; Society of the Sorrowful Mother, and St. Cecil Society for Young Ladies. The present trustees of the church are Messrs. Michael Kirchberg, secretary; Henry Vosenberg, treasurer, and John Jansen and Bernard Terfruechte, consultors.

Four miles from Kieler is Dickeyville, a small mission attached to that pastorate. The congregation at Dickeyville was established in 1873, prior to which time the people residing in that locality attended divine services at the Kieler church. During the years 1873 and 1874, the Catholics of Paristown erected a church of their own at Dickeyville, which was dedicated to the Holy Ghost. It is a small frame building, plain in exterior but of comfortable dimensions, which cost $2,700. A noticeable feature in the furnishings of this church is a rather elaborate painting, done in Munich, Bavaria, which represents the descent of the Holy Gost upon the Blessed Virgin Mary and the twelve Apostles on the day of Pentecost. This was imported from Munich by Father Raess in 1893. The village of Dickeyville consists of about fifty-three families, and, like the mother parish, is located about eleven miles from Cuba City and sixteen miles from East Dubuque. Neither is there any communication with the outside world from this point, excepting by telephone and daily stage to Louisburg. The congregation at the present time is composed of forty-eight families. There are in connection with the parish a Society of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary and a St. Catherine's Society. The present trustees of the church are George Weiderhold, treasurer, and Henry Busch, secretary. The parochial school at Dickeyville is conducted by one lay teacher and has an average attendance of thirty pupils.

The Rev. Rudolph Ollig, present pastor of the Immaculate Conception at Kieler, was born at Cologne, on the Rhine, in Rheinish-Prussia, February 11, 1859. After having completed the classical as well as nearly all of the ecclesiastical studies necessary for ordination, he served as "Ein-Jaehriger Freiwilliger" in the German army. He then served for three years as tutor in the family of Henry Stollwerck at Cologne. In December, 1888, he came to the United States, where he was ordained to the priesthood by His Eminence, Cardinal James Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore, Md., April 4, 1891. The day following, he said his first holy Mass in the Most Holy Redeemer's Church in New York. He was then for a little over a year assistant priest at St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Oshkosh, after which he became rector of St. Wendel's near Manitowoc. He was then for three years rector of the parish at Theresa and since September 16, 1896, has been pastor of the Immaculate Conception congregation at Kieler and mission of the Holy Ghost at Dickeyville. Since coming to the archdiocese of Milwaukee, Father Ollig has given numerous evidences of his earnest desire to advance the interests and conditions of the parishes over which he has been placed. Among the many things done by him in this way may be mentioned the re-opening of the parochial schools at St. Wendel and Theresa, both of which had been in a dormant condition for nearly four years. He also built a nice and comfortable parsonage at St. Wendel and restored the school-house at Theresa. In these undertakings he was well and actively sustained by his parishioners, who did all that was in their power to assist him.

St. Francis of Sales' Church, Lake Geneva, Wis.

IT IS now fully sixty years since the first Catholic families settled in the neighborhood of Lake Geneva, Walworth County, Wisconsin. Five years later Father Kundig organized a congregation there.

St. Francis of Sales' Church, Lake Geneva, Wis.

Prior to his coming, the scattered Catholic families in and about this settlement were occasionally visited from Milwaukee by the Rev. Father Morrissey, who was, at that time, assistant at old St. Peter's Church, and a few years later became the first pastor of St. John's Church, Monches, Wisconsin. In 1847 this parish was given its first resident pastor in the person of Father Patrick McKernan, who, in addition to his labors at Lake Geneva, attended, as missions, the churches at Janesville, Whitewater and Jefferson Prairie. In December, 1849, Father P. J. Fander assumed the pastorate, adding the congregations at Beloit and Delavan to the list of missions attended from there. After him followed in succession, as pastors of St. Francis of Sales', the Rev. Fathers Fusseder, Francis Prendergast, P. J. Mallon, H. P. Kenny, G. H. Brennan, F. O'Farrell, James Stehle, E. O'Connor, James F. Kinsella, E. McGinnity, J. Casey, John Kinsella, B. Smithings, N. M. Zimmer, M. Wenker and Eugene Reilly, who is the present rector.

Interior of St. Francis of Sales' Church.

Lake Geneva is a well-known Wisconsin summer resort, and, as a result, at certain seasons of the year the congregation of St. Francis of Sales is considerably larger than at others. The number of permanent residents who attend this church, however, may be fairly estimated at about one hundred and twenty-five families. There is an Altar Society connected with the congregation, of which Mrs. J. Ward is secretary and treasurer. There is also a League of the Sacred Heart, of which Miss Electa Ward is secretary and treasurer, and St. Francis' Literary and Debating Society, of which Mr. C. Deigan is president, Miss Winnie Nohelty is secretary, and Miss Maggie Quincanon is treasurer. The congregation of St. Francis is, at the present time, occupying the third church erected since its organization, over half a century ago.

The Rev. Eugene Reilly, present pastor of St. Francis of Sales,' at Lake Geneva, was born in Sangarties, Ulster County, New York. When but four years of age, he removed with his parents to Wisconsin. After completing his course in classics, philosophy and theology, he was ordained to the priesthood in 1876, after which he was, for some time, one of the assistant pastors of St. John's Cathedral, Milwaukee. November, 1876, he was appointed pastor of St. John's Church at Monches, where he remained until July, 1884, at which time he became pastor of St. Francis of Sales', at Lake Geneva.

Referring to the history of this parish, after it had completed a growth of five and twenty years, a recent article says: "A quarter of a century ago the congregation of St. Francis de Sales' had completed the first twenty-five years of its existence. At that time the present Dean of St. Patrick's Church, Janesville, Wisconsin, the Rev. E. M. McGinnity, was its pastor. During the brief time in which he was in charge, he was exceedingly active; and, among other improvements, had a large addition attached to the church so as to render it capable of accommodating all the members of this prosperous and rapidly growing congregation. In 1874 the Rev. Father McGinnity was succeeded by the Rev. H. J. Smittings (according to our authority,

Rev. Eugene Reilly.

Fathers Casey and John Kinsella came between these two), who was in time followed by the Rev. N. M. Zimmer. The latter remained in charge for over nine years, and during the time of his pastorate many necessary and important improvements were made.

Among these may be mentioned the vestibule of the then parochial church; also the spire, and a large bell suspended in the belfry; and, most important of all, it may be stated that during Father Zimmer's pastorate the present rectory was planned and erected. From Lake Geneva, the Rev. N. M. Zimmer was transferred to Hartford, Wisconsin, and later on he was given charge of St. Peter's congregation at Beaver Dam. Wisconsin, where he is at present engaged in parish work.

"In 1884 the Rev. Eugene Reilly was appointed, by the late lamented Archbishop Heiss, to the rectorship of St. Francis de Sales' Church, which charge he has since retained. His efforts in advancing the spiritual and temporal interest of the parish have met with gratifying success. During his pastorate, the present imposing church edifice—the third erected in the parish —was built a few years ago. The cost of the church amounted to about $18,000, and at the time of dedication no debt worth speaking of remained. The old structure has been changed into a commodious and comfortable hall for social and literary entertainments. The new church, Gothic in style of architecture, is one hundred and twenty-six feet long by fifty feet wide. The beautiful stained glass windows and stations of the Cross, which add so greatly to the beauty of the interior, were donated by members of the congregation. The same may be said of the stone of which the foundation is constructed, as well as the labor of excavation. The grounds surrounding the church are artistically arranged and neatly kept, and the value of the labor expended upon them during the past ten years would, if actually paid for in money, be equivalent to an outlay of one thousand dollars. A few years ago a new barn was erected on the premises, at a cost of over six hundred dollars. Besides, several hundred dollars have been spent since that time in fencing and beautifying the Catholic cemetery.

"In the prosecution of all this work, and in the necessary outlay of money, the greatest harmony and good will have continued to prevail among the members of the parish. This is, perhaps, the great secret of the success that has attended all their undertakings.

"The members of St. Francis de Sales' parish are not, however, unmindful of the kind and generous assistance which they have in all their important undertakings received from the numerous visitors who come annually to spend the hot summer months on the beautiful shores of Lake Geneva. Among many may be mentioned, in particular, Messrs. P. J. Healy, the donor of the beautiful church organ; George L. Dunlap, N. K. Fairbank and John S. Cooke."

St. Clement's Church, Lancaster, Wis.

IT WAS in 1846 that the Rev. Andrew Tusch was assigned to the German settlement near Potosi, Wis., as first resident pastor, remaining there until 1851. During that time he also attended the few Catholic families living around Pigeon, saying Mass in the homes of John J. Ertz, who died in 1893, and Nicholas Wisbaum, at present a resident of Kansas, these people having removed with their families from the German settlement to Pigeon some three years prior to this time. In 1851 the Rev. Father Schraudenbach, who died at Boscobel in 1883, succeeded Father Tusch, and by extra exertions made that year was enabled to erect a small chapel. This structure was built of rough sawed oak, its dimensions being 16 by 20 feet, and the land upon which it stood was donated for that purpose. The first Mass was said in this chapel on December 7, 1851, and in honor of the day it was called St. Ambrose. The land donated, lying about a mile north and a quarter of a mile west of the present postoffice of Hurricane, comprised in all five acres, two of them being given by Henry Schuster, two by Peter Schuster and one by John J. Ertz. Later this land was deeded back to the original owners, who in lieu thereof gave twenty-five dollars for each acre towards the erection of a new church. These people formed the nucleus of the German branch of what is now the flourishing congregation of St. Clement's.

St. Clement's Church, School and Parsonage, Lancaster.

During the '50's the Irish Catholics and others residing in and about Lancaster were attended, with very few exceptions, by priests from Potosi, Mass being said by Fathers Voissem and Gibson and Bishop Henni in the homes of Adam Kyle, John Pollock, James Carmody, A. Crosby, and at Mr. Grady's, near Flora Fountain. In 1859 the Rock church was built in the village of Lancaster, being attended by outside priests until the Rev. T. P. Hodnett, who was stationed at Potosi in 1868, was assigned to that charge two years later. This church, which stands just west of the courthouse, obtained its name from the fact that a rock was placed over the entrance, upon which is carved a chalice with the inscription, "St. Bartholomew, Pray for Us," and the date 1850, intended however for 1859. The building was erected by Father M. W. Gibson, the first Mass being said on Christmas day, 1859. The land upon which the present church stands was purchased of J. Allen Barber for a consideration of $200, and a deed to that effect, on file in the courthouse at Lancaster, is witnessed by James Carmody, H. W. Gibson, George H. Cox, N. P., and J. H. Evans, register of deeds. In 1867 the church was re-seated by the Rev. H. J. Albers,[1] a relative of the present pastor. The dedicatory services were conducted October 28, the year following, by the Rt. Rev. John Martin Henni, Bishop of Milwaukee, assisted by the Rev. T. P. Hodnett and Rev. H. J. Albers. It was originally intended to name the church after St. Bartholomew, but on the Bishop's suggestion that there were already a number bearing that title, it was changed to St. Clement's. The church is without a belfry, nor had it a basement until 1882, when a furnace was put in.

Rev. A. Albers.

In 1870 John M. Hurley of Lancaster, Thomas Carmody of Mt. Hope and John Lawless of Patch Grove were sent to Milwaukee with a petition asking that a resident priest be given to Lancaster, with missions at Mt. Hope and Patch Grove. Bishop Henni, being in attendance at the Council of the Vatican, the request was granted by Vicar-General Martin Kundig, and Father Hodnett, now of St. Malachy's Church, Chicago, was stationed there as first resident priest in November, 1870. During that same year Father Hodnett purchased for a parochial residence a house standing on the present site of the new church and a block west of the old one. Just three years later he was succeeded by the Rev. R. J. Scott, who during his pastorate established a large and very successful temperance society, called the St. Patrick's C. T. A. U. All of the missions in this section had churches at an early date, that at Patch Grove being built in 1850, and the frame church at Mt. Hope dedicated August 15, 1862. These churches received some attendance from Prairie du Chien and Potosi, although altogether recognized as attached to the pastorate of Lancaster. In August, 1884, Mt. Hope became an independent parish, having Patch Grove as a mission, the present pastor, Rev. McNulty, being appointed to the charge at that time. During its first few years under the administration of resident priests the church at Lancaster made but little progress, but after Father Scott had been succeeded in February, 1876, by the Rev. H. Victor, and he, in turn, by the Rev. Peter Schwaiger on April 11 of the next year, a change for the better became apparent. A new vitality took hold of the people; debts hanging over both church and parsonage were cleared away, a new altar and furnace were placed in the building, the Rock church—St. Lawrence O'Toole—was built at Mt. Hope, St. Mary's brick church at Fennimore, a new frame chapel was erected in the cemetery at Pigeon and various other and noticeable improvements effected at Patch Grove. Having placed the church in really excellent condition, Father Schwaiger, who is at present located at St. Lawrence, Wis., severed his connection with the parish of Lancaster on March 17, 1885. His successor, the Rev. Louis Barth, who arrived May 1, 1885, continued the good work by still further improving the church property. Within two years from the time of his coming the new St. Clement's, a brick structure costing over $10,000, and which as a work of art both in interior and exterior finish has not a superior in southwestern Wisconsin, was built, paid for and consecrated. The Building Committee which brought this undertaking to a final and most successful termination was composed of the Rev. L. Barth, John Pink, John Zens, Jacob Ertz, Peter Hoffman, Sr., who died in October, 1891, Philip Muench, Anton Wilhelm, Bernard Fuerstenberg, Thomas Carmody, and Michael Fahey, who died in 1893. St. Clement's, as it now stands, is a handsome Gothic structure, covering an area 45 by 100 feet. It is built entirely of red brick, the trimmings being of the same material in white. The spire is 116 feet in height, and in the tower beneath ample provision has been made for bells and clock. The ceiling of the main interior is arched and quite lofty, being at the highest point thirty-six and a third feet above the surface of the floor. The altar and interior decorations are quite tasty, and the windows of a fine quality of stained glass. The building is well lighted, heated and comfortably seated throughout, a gallery being provided for the choir. There is also a small chapel in the west end of the basement, large enough to seat 100 people. The corner-stone of St. Clement's was laid June 6, 1886, by the Rt. Rev. Mgr. L. Batz, then Vicar-General of the Milwaukee Archdiocese, and the consecration of the building took place on December 1 of the same year, the Most Rev. M. Heiss officiating. On this occasion the Rev. Vahey of Ridgeway, Wisconsin, preached in English and the Rev. Statter, D. D., of Dwyer, Indiana, in German.

(1) Who has since retired, but is now living at Racine.

Added to, and just west of the church stands the Sisters' school and residence, which was erected by the Rev. J. H. Niehaus in 1889. School was first held in this building January 2, 1890, and dedicatory services on February 12 following, when the Rev. T. P. Hodnett of Chicago made the address. The first school held at Lancaster, however, was in the little chapel in the basement of the church, commencing September 2, 1889, and continuing until December 20. At first the school was placed in charge of the Franciscan Sisters of Milwaukee, but since June, 1892, it has been under the management of the Sisters of Notre Dame. The annual amount paid to these sisters for their services is $475, and the total enrollment of scholars is one hundred and one. Father L. Kaluza took charge of the parish September 2, 1892, and remained until July 18, 1893. During the spring of the latter year he commenced the erection of a parsonage, which was completed by his successor, the Rev. Father Albers, in the following November.

The original missions of this parish were located at Mt. Hope and Patch Grove, but in 1876 Mt. Hope became annexed to Boscobel and continued so until 1880, when it again came under the charge of Father Schwaiger. The priests who up to this time had attended the mission from Boscobel were Fathers Stehle and Schraudenbach, who built the chapel at Pigeon. It was some time subsequent to this that it was decided to build a parochial residence at Mt. Hope and make Patch Grove a mission of that parish.

At Fennimore[1] the rapid and remarkable growth of the Catholic population induced Father Schwaiger to pay regular visits to that place. During 1883 he said Mass there in Govier's Hall, but the year following built a church, which was thereafter attended by priests from Lancaster on every second Sunday in each month. This church was not procured without difficulty, the priest interposing his personal objections to the undertaking. However, Mr. Thomas Tormey, Sr., and Patrick Flynn, after having purchased two lots for a church site, called on the Archbishop to obtain his sanction, and that gained, a committee consisting of Messrs. Thomas Tormey, Sr., P. H. Finnegan, M. Lameski and John J. Scanlon was appointed to secure the necessary means. The church resulting from the zeal and enterprise of these people is of brick, has a steeple and bell and is comfortably seated, heated and lighted. The corner-stone was laid in June, 1884, the Rev. Fathers Dempsey, Weinhart, Schwaiger and Rademacher performing the ceremonies. The building was dedicated by Father Niehaus. This church, aside from work donated, cost $3,000.

Some years prior to this time, when Father Schraudenbach was attending priest, the early settlers around Fennimore used to hear Mass at the home of Mr. Tormey and also paid occasional visits to Highland for the same purpose; the majority, however, attended the services given in the homes at Lancaster by Father Causa, then resident priest at Potosi. About that time Mr. Tormey gave six acres for a church site, but the people being too poor then to undertake the expense of erecting a building, the land was deeded back again by the Bishop. In 1886 the congregation purchased a tract of six acres one mile west of the village, which was platted for burial purposes. The first cemetery at Lancaster consisted of one square acre, the gift of Nicholas Wisbaum to the church at Pigeon, in 1851. Father Schwaiger built a chapel on this plat in 1883, and twelve years later an acre and a half was added to the grounds. This land lies along the road to the Hurricane postoffice and is used exclusively by the Germans. Another cemetery, comprising just an acre, was donated to the church by Adam Kyle, in the early '50's, and is used by all, without distinction as to nationality. In 1869 Mr. Kyle left Lancaster and removed to Greene, Butler County, Iowa, where he still lives. At the time of his leaving he made the deed of this gift over to the parish, although the land had already for some years been used for burial purposes.

The first Catholic mission was held at Lancaster in 1874 by the Rev. Father Corby, C. S. C. Another was conducted by the Passionist Fathers Lange and Alphonsus, of New York, in 1876. Still another was held by the Rev. Weninger, S. J., June 22, 1878, and a fourth by a Jesuit from Prairie du Chien in 1882. A fifth mission, begun in December, 1886, was held by the Revs.

(1) Fennimore has recently been given its own resident pastor in the person of the Rev. John Feld.

Schrageman and Niluer, German Redemptorists from St. Louis, and the sixth and last by the Fathers Bosche and Boorman, November 17-24, 1895.

The parish was practically established with the building of St. Ambrose Chapel at Pigeon in 1851, although the church of St. Clement was not built until eight years later. Resident pastors at Lancaster since the establishment of this church have been: Rev. T. P. Hodnett, 1870, to November, 1873; Rev. R. J. Scott, November, 1873, to February, 1876; Rev. H. Victor, March, 1876, to April, 1877; Rev. Peter Schwaiger, April, 1877, to March, 1885; Rev. L. Barth, May, 1885, to May, 1888; Rev. J. H. Niehaus, May, 1888, to September, 1892, and Rev. L. Kaluza, September, 1892, to July, 1893, on which date the present pastor, the Rev. A. Albers, assumed the duties. The congregation now consists of over 800 people.

Of Catholic societies in the parish there are the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch No. 121, which was organized June 17, 1891, with the following charter members: J. H. Alcom, John M. Hurley, Matthias Flesch, Rev. John H. Niehaus, George Rudersdorf, William Spaight and Herman Schroeder. On the same day James Townley was voted a member, and Dr. P. L. Scanlon admitted by ticket from the Potosi branch. There are now twenty-eight members. In addition to this there is the Young Ladies' Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary with thirty-eight members, an Altar Society with thirty members, and St. Aloysius Boys' Society with fifteen members.

The congregation of St. Clement's at Lancaster was incorporated, October 9, 1883, by the Most Rev. M. Heiss, Archbishop, Very Rev. L. Batz, Vicar-General, Rev. Peter Schwaiger, pastor, J. M. Hurley, secretary, and Anton Wilhelm, treasurer.

The Rev. August Albers, present pastor of St. Clement's, was born in Neuenkirchen, Bramsche, Province of Hanover, Germany, on August 27, 1852. Receiving his earlier education in the schools of his native country, he came to America in 1872 at the age of twenty. He remained with an uncle at Cincinnati, Ohio, for a short period and began his clerical studies in 1874 at St. Francis' Gymnasium in that city, under the guidance of the Franciscan Fathers. In 1877 he came to St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he was ordained to the priesthood by Archbishop Heiss in June, 1884. His first appointment was to St. Hubert's Church, at Richfield, Washington County, in August of that year, where he remained until January, 1886. His next pastorate was at Kieler, in Grant County, which he left in September, 1891, to assume similar duties at Racine. He was then appointed to his present pastorate, assuming charge in July, 1893.

St. Mary's of the Nativity Church, Lomira, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary's of the Nativity was established in the spring of 1870, at Lomira, Dodge County, Wisconsin. It was at about this time that the Rev. Father Welter, then attending the congregation, built a small church at Lomira and attached it as a mission to Ashford, of which he was at that time the resident pastor. Father Spath, who succeeded Father Welter as pastor of the Ashford congregation, built a school, parsonage and Sisters' residence at Lomira in 1876. This mission was then for some years alternately attended by resident pastors from Ashford and Theresa, among them being the Rev. Fathers Schwinn, Hellstern, J. P. Van Treeck, P. J. Vogt and B. Nuttmann. The first resident pastor of St. Mary's was the Rev. G. Decker, who assumed the duties of that office in 1896. There are some eighty families in the congregation of St. Mary's. There is also a parochial school connected with it which is conducted in the new building, erected in September 1895, by two Sisters of St. Agnes from Fond du Lac; it has a regular attendance of about fifty scholars. There is a Married Ladies' Sodality in connection with this parish and a Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters, which was organized in May, 1897. The present trustees of the church are Messrs. P. Wolf, A. Schmid, Mat. Weyer and H. McCarthy.

St. Mary's of the Nativity Church, Lomira, Wis.

The Rev. S. Bernard, pastor of St. Mary's of the Nativity, at Lomira, was born at Mt. Calvary, Fond du Lac County, on February 25, 1871. Until thirteen years of age, he attended the parish school at that place and then entered St. Lawrence College, at Mt. Calvary, where he remained until eighteen. In 1889 he entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he completed his studies for the priesthood. He was ordained priest in Green Bay Cathedral, on July 9, 1883, by the Right Rev. S. G. Messmer, and said his first holy Mass on the 12th of the same month at Mt. Calvary. He was then for three years assistant pastor at St. Michael's Church, Milwaukee, and since August 1896 has been rector of St. Mary's at Lomira.

Rev. S. Bernard.

St. Mary's Church, Lost Lake, Wis.

THE parish of St. Mary's at Lost Lake, Dodge County, Wisconsin, was organized in the year 1865, after which time it was successively attended by the Rev. Fathers Dougherty, McGirt, Gray and Roche, the latter occupying the pastorate continuously for eighteen years, attending there from Columbus. The Rev. Father Gardthaus was the first resident pastor of this congregation and he was succeeded as such by the present incumbent, the Rev. John F. Decker. There are altogether fifty-four families or two hundred and seventy souls in this parish. Connected with the congregation of St. Mary's are the St. Mary's Sodality, of which Mrs. Mary O'Brien is president; Mrs. Catherine Hepp, secretary; and St. Rose's Sodality, with Lizzie O'Brien as president and Mary Hepp, secretary.

The Rev. John F. Decker was born on the 2d of

St. Mary's Church, Lost Lake, Wis.

Rev. John Decker.

May, 1856, in Germany. When 17 years of age he came to America and Milwaukee, where he entered the seminary at St. Francis. After taking a full course of philosophy and theology as prescribed by that institution, he was ordained to the priesthood in 1879 by the Most Rev. Archbishop Henni.

St. Joseph's Church, Lyons, Wis.

THE parish of St. Joseph's at Lyons, Walworth County, Wis., was founded in 1870. In the same year a small frame church, 32x48 feet, and a two-story parsonage, 16x24 feet, were built under the personal supervision of the Rev. J. Smedding, at that time pastor at Lake Geneva. In 1880 a seventy-foot steeple was built on the north side of the church, in which was placed a bell purchased from the congregation of St. Mary's at Burlington. In 1889, during the residence of Father Charles Drees, who was third to assume the pastorate, a brick school house was built at a cost of $700. Six years later a new two-story frame parsonage was built, and the church enlarged by transforming the old priests house into a sanctuary and sacristy, the whole costing in the neighborhood of $1,500.

St. Joseph's Church, School and Parsonage.

After the departure of Father Smedding from Lyons in 1872, the congregation being poor as well as small, the parish was without a resident priest until 1874. In the meantime services were held once or twice a month, modo excurrendo, by different priests, who came from New Muenster or Lake Geneva, and later by Capuchin Fathers from Milwaukee. In the spring of 1884, however, the Rev. August Gardthaus was appointed resident pastor and remained until November 1888. He was at once succeeded by Father Drees, who left during the summer of 1890. Father William Lette, of the archdiocese of St. Paul, Minn., was next to assume the pastorate, but after a stay of about two years he again returned to his former place in Minnesota. From that time until March, 1893, the congregation was attended by neither resident nor visiting priest. Then the vacancy was supplied each alternate Sunday by the Rev. Cyril Kufner, who went there from Milwaukee. In this manner the congregation was attended until 1894, when the Rev. John Diebold became the resident priest. The congregation at present consists of some twenty-five families. The parochial school at Lyons has an attendance of twenty-five scholars, and is under the management of Mr. William Robers.

Rev. John Diebold.

Attached to the parish of St. Joseph's is the little mission of St. Kilian's, which is situated about five miles south of Lyons. This congregation was founded about forty years ago and a small church built during the attendance of Father Charles Schraudenbach, at that time resident pastor at Muenster. It became an out-mission of St. Joseph's in 1884, since which time it has been regularly attended from there every second Sunday. There are fifteen families in the congregation.

The Rev. John Diebold was born in 1847 and ordained to the priesthood in 1872 at Munich, Bavaria. In this beautiful capital and great center of learning, art and science, at its celebrated University and grand theological Seminary Georgianum, he also studied philosophy and theology for five years, passing all of his examinations summa cum laude. From 1872 until 1881 he held different positions as parish priest, and later as professor of Christian doctrine and Oriental languages.

In 1876 he was created, with high honors, Doctor of Theology by the famous theological faculty of the University at Wuerzburg. In 1882, owing to failing health, he resigned his professorship and made a tour through Austria and Switzerland. From the latter, he in 1887 came to America, and after considerable travel finally arrived in Wisconsin in 1893. In the earlier part of the following year he took charge of his present pastorate at Lyons. Aside from his priestly duties, Father Diebold has devoted considerable time to literary pursuits, having published in German the following widely known works: "The Essence of the Eucharistic Sacrifice," Augsburg, 1876; "The Building of the Temples at the Times Before and After Christ," Leipzig, 1878, and "The First Leaves of a History of the Christian Monumental Theology," Augsburg, 1882.

Holy Redeemer Church, Madison, Wis.

MASS was celebrated for the first time at Madison by the Rev. Martin Kundig in 1843, on which occasion he conducted the services at the residence of James Sullivan. At this time there were but a few Catholic families in the neighborhood, all of whom were of German birth or descent. Subsequent to this occasion, Mass was celebrated in the house of Mr. Xavier Jordan, a German Catholic who came to Madison in 1845, and in the same year Bishop Henni came there and administered the Sacrament of the dying to Mrs. Julia Slaughter, whom he converted to the Catholic faith. During the years 1846, '47 and '48, divine services were held on different occasions at Madison by Bishop Henni, the Rev. Martin Kundig, the Rev. Max Gaertner and the Rev. Adalbert Inama, each of whom succeeded the other in the manner given. The last two mentioned came from Sauk City and Roxbury, besides which they occasionally said Mass at the Fox Settlement. The Catholic congregation at Madison received a notable increase in 1847 and 1848, during which period a number of mechanics and laborers were brought into that section for the purpose of constructing a canal to connect the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers. Another cause for this increase in the population was undoubtedly the fact that Madison had become the generally recognized location for the future capital of Wisconsin.

In 1848 Mass was celebrated in the new capitol building by Fathers Inama and Gaertner. During the same year ex-Governor Doty donated a number of lots to the Catholics in Madison, a fact which afterwards caused not a little trouble, the question being raised as to the legitimacy of Governor Doty's title in them at the time the gift was made. This dispute, however, must have been satisfactorily arranged, as the present St. Raphael's Church stands upon that property to-day. The first pastor appointed to the Catholic congregation at Madison was the Rev. Father Whitehead, who remained for about six months during the year 1848. He lived in a house near to the present Northwestern depot. It was during his administration that he, together with a Mr. Thomas Reynolds, prepared plans for the erection of a church 20x24 feet, to which a brick addition was made in the following year. At this time there were about thirty Catholic families, all told, in and around Madison, four of whom were of German nationality, they being the families of Haver Jordan, John Engelberger, Joseph Lohr, Moritz Brinks, and Hornung, who came to that settlement with Father Gaertner in 1847, while John Heim and his two sons, Joseph and Antony, arrived in July, 1848. Mr. Caspar Mohrhaeuser and John Adam Zeier, two other early-day Germans, came to Madison in 1849. At the time that Father Whitehead resigned his pastorate and returned to Ireland (1849), the Catholic families belonging to the Madison congregation were attended as a mission by the Revs. Adalbert Inama and Max Gaertner, who, as previously stated, came from Roxbury and Sauk City, respectively. These journeys were accomplished on foot, at which time they also deviated to some extent from the direct route, in order that they might call upon the Catholic families who lived along the way and notify them of the day and time when the services would be held. Two of the three earlier settlers, who regularly attended these services at Madison at that time, were Messrs. John Platte and Joseph Heim. In 1850, and for the second time since its organization, the congregation at Madison was given its resident pastor in the person of the Rev. Francis Xavier Etschmann, who came there from Milwaukee. His first impressions of the place would certainly not have been the most comforting, for, upon arriving there, he discovered that there was no parsonage, and but a half-finished church. He at once took the matter in hand, however, and worked with so much interest and zealousness that the church was soon finished and an addition built on to it, which was arranged and furnished for the parochial residence. Here, then, he lived, taking his meals daily at the American House, a condition of affairs which certainly could have afforded him very little satisfaction or comfort.

Besides attending to the now considerable duties which devolved upon the pastor of this congregation, Father Etschmann also attended, at regular intervals, the missions at Westport, Fox Settlement, Columbus, New Franklin (East Bristol), Sun Prairie, Montrose, Cross Plains, Vienna, Cottage Grove, Deerfield, Dunn and Dayton. In 1853, the congregation by that time having become considerably larger, Father Etschmann took steps toward the erection of a larger edifice to take the place of the small brick church then in use. To inaugurate that undertaking, he started out on a collection tour, being accompanied at that time by Mr. McGlynn. Leaving Madison, they visited Grand Rapids, Stevens Point and Big Bull Falls (Wausau), meeting with much encouragement and excellent success wherever they went. The lumber camps of Northern Wisconsin also proved a valuable accessory to the undertaking, those alone donating twenty thousand feet of material toward the building. Unfortunately for the congregation, however, this valuable gift proved of but small benefit, as but very little of the lumber was ever brought to Madison. It was during the same year that Father Etschmann began work upon the foundation of the new St. Raphael's Church, and as the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway was then extending its lines from Milton Junction to Madison, he made a number of visits to parishes adjacent to the road in order to secure additional means. Later Father Etschmann extended his field of operations, visiting the East for the purpose of securing additional aid with which to complete the church. During his absence the services were regularly administered by the Rev. Max Gaertner. This journey was a notable event in the career of Father Etschmann, who worked successfully as well as diligently for the benefit of his parishioners. During the three weeks of his absence from Madison, he visited New York, Brooklyn, New Jersey, New Haven, Boston, Baltimore and Washington, securing aid from each of these places. In 1854 he returned to Madison, having secured, during his absence, a total of $1,200. From this time the work on the church progressed quite satisfactorily, the corner-stone being laid by Bishop Henni on May 28, 1854. Besides the Bishop there were present, on that occasion, Vicar-General Martin Kundig, the Rev. Father Riordan, and the rector, Father Etschmann. It was during this year that the people of Madison and vicinity were afflicted by the scourge of cholera, which attack, however, was fortunately not of long duration. Towards the latter part of the year, having nearly exhausted all the ready money in sight, Father Etschmann made a second collection tour to the East, his position at Madison being filled during his absence by the Rev. Martin Kundig. On this occasion, he visited Niagara Falls, Rochester, Salina, Utica, Troy, Albany, Burlington, and Montreal, Canada, securing several hundred dollars, with which he returned to Madison in November, 1854. During the following winter, he held divine services at Stoughton, making the journey to and from that place on a handcar. The work on the church was somewhat retarded at this time, owing to the fact that some of the members were making preparations to separate from the mother church, and organizing a parish of their own. Here, too, some difficulty arose as to a suitable division of the property, the Germans claiming a right to several lots, which was disputed by other members. In order, if possible, to settle the matter amicably and satisfactorily to all parties concerned, Bishop Henni came to Madison on September 8, 1856, and, after hearing the situation discussed by both sides, apportioned to the German faction $1,000 from his own private means, and an additional $1,000 which he decided the Irish members of the congregation should pay to them. With this amount, three lots were purchased on Johnson street, where the present Holy Redeemer's Church now stands. Among those who thus seceded from St. Raphael's and organized the new parish, were the families of John Heim, Joseph Heim, Anthony Heim, Caspar Hauck, Gottlieb Grimm, Aloysius Haak, John Zehnpfennig, Adam Kretz, John

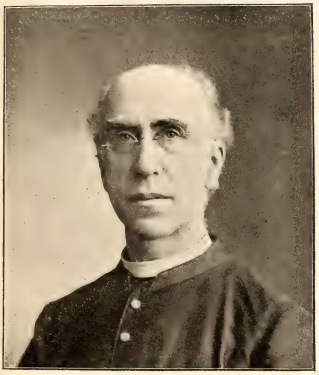
Holy Redeemer Church, Madison, Wis.

Zeier, Peter Meffert, Leopold Eichmann, Georg Esser, Jacob Esser, Mathias Blied, Ludwig Haak, John Haak, Ludwig Sutter, Peter Gersbach, John Mausbach, Joseph Mausbach, Mathias Ruland, Georg Breitenbach, Caspar Mohrhaeuser, John Straub, Jacob Breitenbach, Frank Cezar, Joseph Lohr, John Simon, Frank Schmitz, Joseph Schweinem, Anton Jesberger, Frank Nolte, Joseph Bayer, Michael Haak, Peter Sitzmann, Valentin Muth, Leonard Nolden, Frank Vallender, Joseph Statz, Michael Pauli, Kilian Link, Mathias Oberempt, Mathias Weck, Francis Esser, Peter Hamacher, Joseph Fleckenstein, Mathias Burger and Richard Hensler.

The first resident pastor given to the new congregation was the Rev. Michael Haider, who arrived at Madison in July, 1857, coming here from Jefferson, where he had maintained the pastorate for five years. The first church built by this congregation was of brick, 58x25 feet, and cost, when completed, $1,000. Mass was said in this building for the first time on July 12, 1857, by Rev. Michael Haider, the congregation at that time consisting of about eighty families. In September following, a parochial school was opened in this parish, at which there was an average attendance of ninety scholars. Of this school the reverend pastor took personal charge, being occasionally assisted in that work by Mr. Joseph Lohr and George Bunts Schmidt. On the ninth of August, 1857, the month preceding the opening of this school, Bishop Henni visited Madison, on which occasion he administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to forty-nine persons in the new church.



Rev. Aloysius Zitterl.

There was another Holy Confirmation administered by Bishop J. M. Henni on June 5, 1859, when the following were confirmed: Jacob Esser, Jr., Jacob Omen, Mrs. Heiliger (Meng), Jacob Schroeder, Theresia Schroeder (Vallender), Mathias Vallender, Mrs. Mathias Grass. For six years following this occasion, the parish records made the following showing: Baptisms conferred in 1857, forty-one; 1858, seventy-eight; 1859, one hundred and one; 1860, ninety-seven; 1861, seventy-six; 1862, eighty-nine. Marriages: 1857, nine; 1858, fifteen; 1859, fifteen; 1860, five; 1861, eleven; 1862, thirteen. The first parsonage, a brick structure, was erected during the administration of Father Haider, and cost, when completed, $800. During his residence at Madison, Father Haider also administered to the spiritual wants of the Catholics at Monroe, coming there once in every four weeks, at which time he stayed for two days, Saturday and Sunday. During this enforced absence from Madison, Mr. Conrad Heim said the Rosary. In 1860 the church was enlarged by an addition of 16x16 feet. It was in September of this year that the Rev. Father F. X. Weninger, S. J., came to Madison and held quite a successful mission there. After rounding out a very successful pastorate of five years' duration, Father Haider resigned his charge of the Holy Redeemer to accept that of a German congregation at Sheboygan, and was succeeded in his former pastorate by the Rev. Leonard Hackhofer. This pastor remained but a short time (somewhere about a year), being at the expiration of that time compelled to discontinue his labors on account of increasing ill health. The charge then fell to the Rev. Michael Obermüller, who came from East Bristol, and said his first Mass as rector the first Sunday after Ascension Day, 1863, and remained at Madison from March 3, 1863, until September, 1874. Two years after the beginning of Father Obermüller's incumbency a meeting of the parishioners was held, on which occasion it was decided to erect a new stone church, 110x50 feet, in place of the existing one. On this occasion, also, Father Obermüller and Mr. Joseph Bayer were appointed a committee to solicit subscriptions, in which work they were very successful. Among those particularly noted for their handsome donations at that time, were Mr. Peter Hamacher, who gave two hundred and fifty dollars, Philipp Schoen, two hundred and seventy-five dollars, and L. Nolden, one hundred and twenty-five dollars. The church was completed and dedicated in 1869, the Right Rev. Bishop Henni conducting the services, while the sermon on that occasion was delivered by the Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, late Bishop of Green Bay, at that time chaplain of the School Sisters de Notre Dame. Later a handsome steeple was added to the church, the cupola of which was unfortunately greatly damaged by a heavy storm in 1873. This necessitated the taking down of the upper tower frame structure, and for about seven years following the church was without this useful and necessary adornment. During the administration of Father Obermüller, the parochial school in connection with the Holy Redeemer congregation was at first in charge of Mr. Michael Zeimet, who conducted it until 1864, when it was placed in charge of the Sisters of Notre Dame from the Milwaukee Convent. About that time, a bell was purchased for the church by the congregation, and a plot of land secured and arranged for a cemetery, the old one being abandoned. Other valuable improvements were also made to the interior of the edifice, a handsome $700 high altar being donated by the Married Ladies' Society; a side altar of the Blessed Virgin Mary by the Jansen family, and a side altar of St. Michael, which was bought by St. Michael's Society, an organization which had been formed on May 1, 1865. A second mission was held at Madison in 1869 by Father Agatho, O. S. B. This was also quite successful and largely attended. Upon the suggestion of the missionary a Young Men's Society was organized at that time, but it disbanded in 1875. In September, 1874, after a quite successful pastorate, Father Obermüller resigned his charge of the Holy Redeemer Church to assume that of St. Mary's congregation at Monroe, Wisconsin. He was succeeded at Madison by the Rev. Henry Reinhart, who stayed from September, 1874, to March, 1877. During his administration a Holy Mission was given by the Jesuit Fathers, William Becker, Henry Wachner and S. Haag, from the 9th to the 16th of April, 1876, with one hundred and seventy-five Holy Communions. In 1875, in Holy Week, a pipe organ was built in the church, and the windows in the structure were made over and strengthened. Upon the departure of Father Reinhart, the Rev. A. Zitterl took charge of the congregation, arriving at Madison Thursday evening, March 8, 1877, and holding his first service on March 11, 1877, it being the fourth Sunday in Lent. On July 15th of the same year, Bishop Henni again visited Madison, on this occasion confirming one hundred and eighty-one persons. It was in the same month, also, that a Young Men's Society was organized in the congregation with thirty members, but for some reason or another the undertaking failed in its intent, and within two years the Society had ceased to exist. On July 27, 1879, the Rev. Hubert Esser, of San Francisco, California, but a native of Madison, Wisconsin, celebrated his first Mass in the church of the Holy Redeemer, the Rev. Kilian Flasch, afterward Bishop of La Crosse, delivering the sermon on that occasion. October 23, 1879, is a day that will long be sadly remembered by the people of Madison, owing to the fact that it was the occasion of the funeral of the Rev. Michael Obermüller, a former rector of the congregation. At these services there were present the Rev. Fathers Haider, Reinhart, Murch, Dr. Joerger, Xavier Obermüller (brother of the deceased), Schwaiger, Friedl, Dreis, Miller, Haigl, Kieser, Gerhard, Pettit, Raphael and A. Zitterl. The funeral sermon was delivered by Dr. Joerger. In the spring of 1880, the church edifice was thoroughly renovated within and without, and the steeple rebuilt at a total cost of $6,540. The rededication of the church took place on August 8, 1880, the house collection on that occasion amounting to $3,700. On October 24th of the same year, Bishop Heiss visited Madison, on that occasion confirming eighty-eight persons. During the year following, a number of additional improvements were made to the property, among which was a clock costing $425, which was placed in the steeple on April 16th. This clock was the gift of Mr. Farrell O'Brien, who made a further donation of $330 toward the erection of a new pastoral residence. In October the structure was fitted with a hot air heating apparatus, which cost $432. In the year following, another collection was taken up, which amounted to $950, and in 1883 the church was supplied throughout with gas fixtures, at a cost of $190. The pastoral residence, built in 1885, cost $5,200, of which amount $2,000 was taken up in house collections during that year. The parsonage building has a stately appearance, is a solid brick building, and was built by John Starck and James Leivesy. On June 30, 1884, the Rev. Joseph Hartmann, of Madison, said his first Mass at Holy Redeemer Church at Madison. From May to August 15th, 1885, Father Zitterl was absent from his pastorate on a visit to his native country, Upper Austria, and during that time the congregation received spiritual attendance from the Capuchins, Fathers Capistran and Raphael. The new parsonage was blessed on March 21, 1886, by Mgr. Batz. In the January preceding that date, the third mission was held in this church by the Redemptorist Fathers, Adolph Ebel, J. Grüner and Joseph Beil. In September, 1887, the parsonage was supplied with a new furnace at a cost of $240. At the present time Holy Redeemer's congregation consists of about four hundred families, and the parochial school, which is under the direction of Sisters of Notre Dame, has a regular attendance of three hundred and sixty scholars. Of Catholic organizations in the congregation, there are, at the present time, a Married Ladies' Society, with two hundred and fifty members, Young Ladies' Society, Society for Men, and a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

The Rev. Aloysius Zitterl was born in 1845 at St.

Oswald, near Freistadt, Upper Austria, in the diocese of Linz. For a period of eight years, he studied at the State Gymnasium in that diocese. In 1866 he came to America and entered St. Francis' Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he remained for two years and a half, at the end of which time (December 19, 1868) he was ordained to the priesthood. His first appointment after ordination was as rector of St. Martin's congregation, Dane County, Wisconsin, where he remained from January, 1869, to March, 1873. He was then given charge of the Sacred Heart congregation, at St. Francis, maintaining the same from March, 1873, to March, 1877. He then was transferred to his present charge of the Holy Redeemer congregation at Madison.

The new parochial school building, the corner-stone of which was laid April 20, 1892, cost $24,000, in addition to ground values amounting to $6,000, which had been paid for the land alone. The area occupied by this building is 55x97 feet. The committee having this matter in charge, and who succeeded in carrying it to such a satisfactory completion, were Messrs. John B. Heim, Charles Speth, John Grimm, John D. Starck, Henry Schulkamp, John Simon (treasurer) and Jacob Esser, Jr. (secretary). To this most worthy enterprise the members of the congregation also contributed largely, the entire amount subscribed by them being twelve thousand dollars. Nor was this generosity limited alone to the Catholics at Madison, among the larger amounts given being the following, subscribed by non-Catholic residents of the city: The Honorable William F. Vilas, $100; Mr. B. J. Stephens, $100; Mr. George B. Burrows, $100; the German-American Bank, $100; State Bank, $100; Hausman Brewing Company, $300; Fauerbach Brewing Company, $100, and Capital City Bank, $50. In addition to this, a grand fair was held in October, 1892, which resulted in total receipts amounting to $6,730.41, the net amount accruing to the enterprise above all expenses being $6,387.37.

In 1894 a new dwelling was erected for the School Sisters on Goreham street, the same costing $3,596.80. This building was a brick-veneer, and fitted throughout with all modern conveniences. To liquidate the expenses thus incurred, a "Rainbow" bazaar was held in January of that year, which resulted in total receipts amounting to $4,172, which entire amount, less $320, was therefore at hand to apply on the enterprise.

Since early in the '90's the growth of Holy Redeemer congregation has been so steady and pronounced that for some years past it has been necessary to maintain an assistant pastor to Rector Zitterl in this parish. With that purpose in view, then, the Most Rev. Frederick X. Katzer sent an assistant in the person of the Rev. James A. Ritger, who went to Madison in July, 1892, remaining there in the fulfillment of the duties until 1896. In the latter year, the Rev. John Feld was appointed to succeed him, and in 1897 the Rev. Joseph Heyde, who still retains that position, succeeded to Father Feld. It was also in 1892 that, owing to the increased demand put upon it by the rapidly growing congregation, it became necessary to increase the seating capacity of the church; so a new sanctuary, twenty-five feet in length, was added to the main structure at a cost of $4,000. This additional expense was defrayed by private subscription and a gift of $300 made by the Married Ladies' Society connected with the congregation. An additional expense of $1,100 was also incurred in the elaborate and tasteful frescoing of the entire interior of the edifice. The structure as it now stands occupies an area of 135x50 feet.

An additional feature was added to the history of this congregation on December 25, 1893, on which occasion the rector, Father Zitterl, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood. Interest was created in this event by the presence of the Rev. Dr. S. Lebl and the Rev. Father Gerend, from St. Francis' Seminary, the latter delivering the sermon. Father James A. Ritger, former assistant pastor of the congregation, was also present.

St. Patrick's Church, Madison, Wis.

IN the year 1888, a number of Irish Catholic families, residing at Madison, Wisconsin, or in that vicinity, and formerly belonging to St. Raphael's, organized a congregation of their own. All of the usual formalities and arrangements being thus far properly attended to, the members, having purchased a number of lots in a most excellent and desirable locality, set about the erection of a suitable church edifice, work on which was begun in May of the same year. This building was completed in the spring of 1889, being dedicated on March 17, in honor of St. Patrick. At about this time, also, the Rev. Patrick B. Knox was appointed rector of the congregation, and has remained as such ever since. There has never been any school connected with this parish, the children attending that conducted by St. Raphael's. Of Catholic organizations represented in this congregation, there are the Ancient Order of Hibernians, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, and Catholic Order of Foresters.

St. Patrick's Church, Madison, Wis.

The Rev. Patrick B. Knox, pastor of St. Patrick's congregation, at Madison, Wisconsin, was born in

Rev. P. B. Knox.

County Limerick, Ireland, on the 8th day of December, 1867. After having acquired an ordinary education in the parochial schools of his native place, he took up the higher studies necessary to the education of one fitting himself for the duties pertaining to a life in holy orders. He completed his courses in the classics and philosophy in the ecclesiastical colleges at Limerick and Tunic, Ireland, and, after having read to some extent in theology, he, in 1881, came to the United States and entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where, after having completed his education, he was ordained to the priesthood by Archbishop Heiss, January 25, 1882. In September of the same year, he took charge of the Catholic congregation at Oregon, Dane County, where he remained until May, 1888, when he was appointed rector of the newly organized congregation of St. Patrick's at Madison.

St. Raphael's Church, Madison, Wis.

IN 1842 the Rev. Martin Kundig, afterwards Vicar-General of the Archdiocese of Milwaukee, held the first Catholic services in Madison, gathering the whole Catholic population, which scarcely numbered ten families, in the old Capitol building. During that visit he made arrangements for the purchase of grounds for church buildings. Soon after this a small frame structure was erected and a few years later a brick building was completed on the property now owned by St. Raphael's congregation, corner of Main and Henry streets.

St. Raphael's Church, Madison, Wis.

About the time the first brick church was built a parsonage was also erected by the builder of the present St. Raphael's Church, the Rev. F. X. Etschmann. In 1854 the foundation of the present church, a massive stone structure, was begun and the corner-stone laid. The church was dedicated by Archbishop Henni of Milwaukee, the Rev. G. W. Riordan preaching the sermon. But work on the church progressed slowly, and not until 1862 was it ready for use. The cost of the church, exclusive of spire, was about $30,000. To-day it would cost twice that amount. About 1885 Father Pettit crowned the building with a lofty spire of graceful and elegant lines.

From the summit of the spire the cross occupies the highest place in Madison, overtopping any other object in the town. It may be seen from miles away in any direction one may approach the city. The cost of the spire alone was about $8,000. In 1868 the old church and school buildings were removed and a new parsonage built, which in turn was removed in 1897, and a handsome new parsonage takes the place once occupied by the first church.

St. Raphael's School and Parsonage.

The priests who have successively had charge of the spiritual administration of St. Raphael's are: the Rev. Francis X. Etschmann, from October, 1850, to September, 1857—Father Etschmannn began the stone church; the Rev. George W. Riordan, from September, 1857, to October, 1858; the Rev. John Norris, D. D., from January, 1859, to November, 1862, when the Rev. F. X. Etschmann returned and remained until June, 1865; the Rev. Joseph Smith from June, 1865, until June, 1870; Father Vahey, from October, 1870, until August, 1875, when the Very Rev. Patrick F. Pettit was appointed and remained until October, 1895, serving a little more than twenty years and doing in that time heroic work. Father Pettit built the beautiful spire on the church and purchased additional ground, until the congregation now owns a full block on Main street, between Fairchild and Henry streets.

Father Pettit's work was unceasing and tireless; he saw the congregation grow in numbers and usefulness until under his fostering care St. Raphael's became one of the most substantial as well as successful congregations in the State. Twice in its history this congregation was divided; in 1850, when Holy Redeemer Parish began their own church, and in 1888, when the present St. Patrick's Parish was established by Father Knox. Father Pettit's work, so wide-spread and enduring, almost passes belief. On November 14, 1895, the present pastor, the Rev. John M. Naughtin, was appointed to succeed Father Pettit. The congregation of St. Raphael's now consists of four hundred families. The present trustees of St. Raphael's are Richard F. Taylor and Benijah Warnes.

The first school-house built in connection with this parish, a small frame structure, was erected in the year 1850, about the time the first little frame church was built.

In 1870 the handsome three-story school building, corner of Henry street and Washington avenue, was built and later the school building on Fairchild street was acquired by purchase made by Father Pettit. This school is now in charge of eight Dominican Sisters, Mother Baptist, O. S. D., Superioress, and has an enrollment of three hundred and fifty scholars.

Of the Catholic organizations in this parish there are the following: Young Ladies' Sodality: Spiritual Director, the Rev. J. M. Naughtin; Miss Hannah V. Cunningham, prefect; Miss Anna Dunn, first assistant prefect; Miss Libbie Klusmann, second assistant prefect; Miss Della Dinneen, secretary; Miss Mary Lavin, treasurer. St. John Baptist Boys' Sodality: Spiritual Director, Rev. J. M. Naughtin; George O'Connel, prefect; James Lavin, assistant prefect; Joseph Kelly, secretary; Matthew Lavin, treasurer. Children of Mary Sodality: Spiritual Director, Rev. J. M. Naughtin; Lillian Taylor, prefect; Catherine Synon, assistant prefect; Helen Dunn, secretary; Frances Dunn, treasurer. St. Thomas' Literary Club: Ernest Farringer, president; John Doris, vice-president; Matthew Lavin, treasurer; William Trainor, censor. St. Raphael's Boys' Library: Walter Dean, librarian; Emmet Lyons, assistant librarian; Thomas Kelly, treasurer. St. Aloysius Literary Club: Frank Regan, president; Walter Heiliger, vice-president; Walter Dean, secretary; William Trainor, censor. Dane County Branch No. 1, A. O. H.: William L. Dowling, president; William A. Devine, vice-president; Charles O'Neill, recording secretary; John H. Kernan, financial secretary; L. B. Murphy, treasurer. Marquette Council No. 448, Y. M. I.: Chaplain, Rev. J. M. Naughtin; Louis R. Taylor, president; Thomas Brahany, first vice-president; Joseph Purcell, second vice-president. Frank T. Hayes, recording secretary; Joseph Maffet, financial secretary; John R. Cantwell, secretary; Maurice Power, treasurer; William O'Dea, M.; Frank Foran, I. S.; William Powers, James Hyland and Pierce Purcell. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch No. 37: Rev. J. M. Naughtin, chaplain; Henry Casserly, president; Jerry Sweeney, vice-president; Arthur J. Gill, secretary; Patrick J. Lynch, treasurer; R. F. Taylor, John Lyons and John O'Neill, trustees; Dr. D. B. Collins, medical examiner. St. Joseph's Court, No. 535, Catholic Order of Foresters: Rev. J. M. Naughtin, chaplain; R. C. Dallas, past chief ranger; Thomas C. Purcell, chief ranger; John Luick, vice-chief ranger; E. B. Corry, recording secretary; Max Wahl, financial secretary; M. H. Stumpf, treasurer; Dr. D. B. Collins, medical examiner; Barney Lyons; Theodor F. Ballering, Matthew Lavin, trustees; Nicholas Behrend, senior commander; Paul J. Boemke, junior commander; W. J. Wehrle, John Eichmann, sentinels. St. Raphael's Court, No. 188, Women's Catholic Order of Foresters; Rev. J. M. Naughtin, chaplain; Mrs. Mary Lavin, chief ranger; Mrs. Mary Tormey, vice-chief ranger; Miss Sara Z. Moran, recording secretary; Miss Kittie Corry, financial secretary; Mrs. Cathrine Taylor, treasurer; Mesdames Emilie Bass, Jessie Gill and Catherine Gleason, trustees; Mrs. Margaret Lyons, senior commander; Mrs. Margaret Utzerath, junior commander; Mrs. Catherine Conlon, sentinel; Dr. Selena Severson, medical examiner.

Rev. J. M. Naughtin.

The Rev. J. M. Naughtin, present rector of St. Raphael's Church, was born at Zanesville, Ohio, June 24, 1854, and came West to Wisconsin with his parents in 1855. The family settled in Madison, remaining until 1857, when they moved to Juneau County, where his father engaged in business at Mauston. For several years following young Naughtin remained in the employ of his father, but in 1873, having concluded to adopt the priesthood as his life's calling, severed his connection with the business world and entered college. Completing the necessary courses at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, he was ordained to the priesthood in that institution on June 25, 1882. From that time until 1884 he was a professor at Pio Nono College, being transferred on the latter date as assistant at St. John's Cathedral, Milwaukee, where he remained until 1892. In the latter year he was appointed to establish a new parish on the south side (Milwaukee), remaining with that congregation (St. Matthews), for three years. In November, 1895, he assumed his present charge as rector of St. Raphael's Church.

St. Boniface's Church, Manitowoc, Wis.

THE parish of St. Boniface, a mixed congregation of German and Irish, was established at Manitowoc, Wis., in 1853, and on March 15 of that same year the Rev. H. J. Nuyts, Ord. S. S. Crucis, began erecting a small frame church. After the departure of Father Nuyts, the pastorate was occupied by the Revs. Michael Beitter to April 13, 1857; Joseph Maly to August 23, 1857; Mathew Gernbauer, August 23, 1857, to July 24, 1859; Max De Becke, for a short period; M. Pfeiffer, August 20, 1860, to April 13, 1863; E. Van Steenwyk, June 14, 1863, to October 8, 1863; James Stehle, November 15, 1863, to April 26, 1868; Joseph Fessler, May 10, 1868, to March 10, 1878, and H. Jacobs, March 17, 1878, to March 1, 1881, and the Rev. George Fessler, who had charge of the parish after the death of the Rev. H. Jacobs, till May 1, 1881. The Rev. W. J. Peil, present pastor of St. Boniface, assumed the duties on May 1, 1881. During Father Fessler's pastorate an addition was built to the church and a parish school established. Other improvements, but of minor importance, were also made. His successor, Father Jacobs, bought a lot on which he erected a dwelling for the School Sisters. In 1883 the Rev. W. J. Peil bought two additional lots on which, in the fall of 1884, the foundation for a new brick church was laid. This building, Gothic in style, and occupying an area 136x60 feet, was consecrated by the late Archbishop Heiss on November 25, 1886. A new school building, 92x40 feet, was built in 1887, and another house and lot purchased in 1891. At the present time a substantial and commodious rectory has just been added to the church property. The congregation of St. Boniface, consisting of about three hundred and seventy-five families, has been duly incorporated under the state laws, the present local officers being: The Rev. W. J. Peil, president; J. P. Schreihart, secretary; Wm. E. Murphy, treasurer, and Joseph Staehle, Sr., and Urban Gagnon, trustees. The parochial school, which has an enrollment of three hundred and fifty scholars, is in charge of Sisters of St. Francis, from the Convent at Alverno, Manitowoc County, Wis. A number of Catholic societies are represented in this congregation, some of them being as follows: St. Boniface Catholic Benevolent Society; Peter Schreihart, president; Anton Wilfer, secretary; Joseph W. Peil, treasurer. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: Mathew Koch, president; Henry Muilholland, recording secretary; John P. Schreihart, financial secretary and treasurer. Catholic Order of Foresters: Urban Gagnon, chief-ranger; Tim. Kelly, vice-chief-ranger; Joseph Simon, post chief-ranger; W. E. Murphy, recording secretary; Joseph Becker, financial secretary; W. Urbanek, treasurer.

St. Boniface's Church, Manitowoc, Wis.

Rev. Wm. J. Peil.

The Rev. Wm. J. Peil, rector and dean of St. Boniface parish, was born in Racine, Wis., October 3, 1849. After acquiring his earlier education at the parish school at that place, he entered St. Francis Seminary on September 1, 1862, where he completed a full course in philosophy and theology. He was ordained on August 6, 1872, by the Most Rev. M. Henni. His first appointment was as assistant at St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee, where he remained for ten months. He was then sent to St. Louis parish and mission at Caledonia, Racine County, Wis., on June 10, 1873, remaining there until May 1, 1881, when he received his present appointment.

St. Mary's Polish Church, Manitowoc, Wis.

THIS parish was established on February 24, 1870, at which time the congregation built a small church which is still in existence, being used as a hall. When this church became too small to accommodate increasing numbers, the people in 1883 bought the old Lutheran church and enlarged and dedicated it to the Immaculate Conception. Five years later the foundations for a new and more appropriate structure were laid, but nothing towards completing the building has been done up to the present time. Of the resident pastors of this congregation Father Francis Xavier Kralczynski was the first, he remaining from July, 1872, until August of the same year. To him succeeded the Rev. Peter Kuncz, who left on April 4, 1873, he being followed by Father Alex Michnowski, who remained from September 2, 1873, until December 28, 1874. Then came the Rev. Simon Wieczorek, from January 6, 1875, to December 25, 1876; Rev. Erasmus Bratkiewicz, August 4, 1878, to October 28, 1878; Rev. A. Bagacki, January 6, 1879, to about the middle of that month; Rev. Joseph Musielewicz, January 19, 1879, to July 23, 1882; Rev. Felix Orzechowski, September, 1882, to February 13, 1884; Rev. Joseph Duticwicz, April 6, 1884, to October 20, 1884, and the Rev. Ladislaus Zwczycki, September 2, 1886, to September 20, 1890. This Father founded a Polish asylum for the aged and orphans and introduced Polish Felician Sisters into that house, which now cares for one hundred aged people as well as from forty to fifty orphan boys. There is also quite a large chapel connected with this institution, which is dedicated to the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The first chaplain of this asylum was its inceptor, he being succeeded in that office by the Rev. E. Stefanowicz. A hospital of St. Mary's is connected with that house, of sufficient size to accommodate one hundred persons. The present chaplain is the Rev. H. Klimecki. About twenty sisters are in charge of the inmates. Father Luczycki was succeeded as pastor of the congregation of Immaculate Conception parish by the Revs. Horbaczewski and Monczyoski from May 11, 1891, to October 1, 1893, and they by Father Henry Cichocki, who remained until October 1, 1894. A year's vacancy followed, when the position was filled by the present pastor, Rev. Wenceslaus Krzywonos, who assumed the charge on October 1, 1896. The congregation at present numbers about three hundred families, there being seven hundred communicants. The school connected with this church has an attendance of three hundred and twenty children and is in charge of five Sisters of St. Francis, Greenfield Park, St. Joseph's Post, Milwaukee. Of Catholic societies represented in this parish are the Archconfraternity of the Most Holy Rosary, the membership of married women being one hundred and fifty, of girls ninety and of boys forty-five; St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, of which Mr. V. Ziarnik is president and L. Budysz secretary, one hundred members; St. Adelbert's Benevolent Society, Mr. M. Bonk president and Stanislaus Dembski, secretary, eighty-nine members, and the Kosciuszko's Band, of which Mr. M. Wnuk is director, fifteen members.

St. Mary's Polish Church, Manitowoc, Wis.

Rev. Wenceslaus Krzywonos.

The Rev. Wenceslaus Krzywonos, the present rector of Immaculate Conception, was born at Borek-Stary, Rzeszow, Galicia, Austria, Sept. 28, 1852. He completed his classical and philosophical education at Rzeszow, Galicia, in 1871, and in September of that year he entered the Austrian military service, being sent to the Military Academy at Krakau, Galicia. In October, 1872, he was transferred to the same institution at Lemberg. He was proclaimed "Cadet" by the Emperor in 1874, and in the January following made Lieutenant of the Fortieth Infantry Regiment. He continued in the service until September, 1879, when he entered the Archbishops of Lemberg, Galicia, Seminary, remaining there until August, 1880. He then came to America, completing his theological studies at the Benedictine Monastery, at Conception, Nodaway County, Mo. He was ordained to the priesthood March 13, 1883, and in October of that year founded a Polish SS. Peter and Paul Church at St. Josephs, Mo., and organized a Polish parish. He resigned this position June 12, 1894, to become administrator of St. Michael's Church (Polish) at South Chicago, where he remained for three months. On October 1, 1896, he was appointed to his present position as rector of Immaculate Conception Church at Manitowoc.

The parish has now a nice pastoral residence and large cemetery, with a big chapel in connection.

St. Mary's Chapel, Manitowoc, Wis.

ST. MARY'S Chapel at Manitowoc is connected with St. Mary's Asylum, and as such is attended by the present chaplain, Father J. Schneider, O. F. M. For a long time prior to December, 1896, the Asylum maintained its own chaplain, but at that time the Rev. H. Klimecki was transferred, and the dual charge of the Immaculate Conception and St. Mary's fell to the rector of the former, the Rev. William Krzywonos. At a later date, however, the present arrangements were effected by which the Asylum has again obtained its own spiritual director.

St. Catherine's Church, Mapleton, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Catherine's at Mapleton, Waukesha County, Wisconsin, was established in the year 1847, at which time the Rev. Father Morrissey was appointed the first resident pastor. He was followed by the Rev. James Hegarty, whose successors were the Rev. Fathers P. Kernas, M. Hobbs, James Vahey, Thomas Corry, M. Monaghan, M. Condon, M. Norton, E. Pitt, P. J. Burelbach, D.

St. Catherine's Church, Mapleton, Wis.

Rev. W. F. McCarthy.

Tierney and W. F. McCarthy. The present church was erected during the regime of the Rev. M. Condon, and the house during that of the Rev. M. Norton. The congregation at the present time numbers about two hundred members. The Catholic societies in the parish are the Ann's Altar Society, president, Mrs. William Ennis; secretary, Mrs. B. Kearns; treasurer, Mrs. Francis Nugent; Young Ladies' Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, prefect, Nellie Bonney; assistant prefect, Fannie Ennis; secretary, Catherine Daily, and treasurer, Catherine Nugent.

The Rev. W. F. McCarthy, present incumbent at St. Catherine's, was born in Madison, Wisconsin. After finishing his early education in the parochial and public schools, he entered St. Francis Seminary, where he studied for the priesthood. At the completion of the course of studies in that institution, he was ordained priest by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Vertin of Marquette, Michigan, on June 16, 1895. Soon after he was appointed pastor of St. Catherine's congregation at Mapleton.

Church of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Marytown, Wis.

THIS parish was founded in 1849. The first resident pastor was the Rev. Fabian Bermadinger, who was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers Caspar Rehrl, Fusseder, J. M. Obermueller, Seif, Gerhard Rehrl, Max DeBecke, Michael Beitter, Mueller, Deisenrieder, Nicholas Pickel, John

Church of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Marytown, Wis.

Stucky, Bonaventura, O. M. C., Leo, O. M. C., Solanus, O. M. C., Daniel, O. M. C., Pacificus, O. M. C., Kajetan, O. M. C., Dominic, O. M. C., Fidelis, O. M. C., Ferd, Zuber, And. Gstach, Geo. Tuerck, John Friedl, Wm. Blum, Nicholas Pickel, Otto Groenebaum, Peschong, Sebastian Schwinn, Wm. Haberstock, A. S. Leitner, Philip Vogt and H. J. Korfhage. The corner-stone of the second church built at Marytown was laid on October 17, 1880. The church covers an area of 135x64 feet and is 45 feet in height on the inside. The second school house was built in Marytown in 1870, during the administration of Father Kajetan. The school, which has an average attendance of one hundred and two scholars, is under the direction of three School Sisters of St. Agnes, from

Rev. H. J. Korfhage.

Fond du Lac. The congregation numbers about one hundred and ten families. There are three Catholic Societies connected with this church, they being, a Ladies' Rosary Society, thirty-two members; St. Joseph's Society, twelve members; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin with a membership of twenty-seven. Of this latter John Langenfeld is president; Mr. Lechner, vice-president; Paul Langenfeld, recording secretary; Michael Heus, financial secretary, and J. Winkel, treasurer.

The Rev. H. J. Korfhage, present rector of the Church of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was born in Loeningen, Oldenburg, Germany, April 25, 1830. His early education was obtained at the parochial school and other institutions in that country. In April, 1860, he came to the United States, and went to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he studied theology for two years. He then spent one year at the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he was finally ordained to the priesthood on June 29, 1863, saying his first Mass on the first Sunday in July following at St. Joseph's Church, in Milwaukee.

St. Mary's Church, Mayville, Wis.

ST. MARY'S Congregation was organized in the year 1856, the Rev. Father Real, first missionary of all the old churches around that neighborhood, attending it for a number of years. At that time among the early settlers who took an active and earnest interest in the advancement of Catholic affairs were Messrs. Henninger, M. Ziegler,

St. Mary's Church, Mayville, Wis.

Boehmer, and Schwartz, all of whom are now deceased. The first priest to assume the duties as regular pastor of this congregation was the Rev. Father Hennsler, who, with his successors, Fathers Lange and Metzger, conducted the affairs of the parish up to the year 1875. Occasionally one of these priests would take up his residence at Mayville for a short period, but it was by no means a regular service.

From 1875 till 1881, during the latter part of which period a new church was built at Mayville, the Rev. Father Woelfl resided there as permanent pastor. In the latter year he was transferred to another parish, Mayville becoming a mission to Theresa and being attended from that parish by the regular incumbent until 1896. The pastors having the mission in charge during that period were the Rev. Fathers Luette, Huber and Ollig. The congregation at Mayville, though earnest and willing to do its best towards maintaining the church affairs in a proper manner, has always to a great extent been handicapped for want of means, a majority of the people having but a limited amount of means with which to aid the church. As a result of this, the expenses of the parish have for years past been borne by some twenty-five members, none of whom, perhaps, were really able to assume their own share of such an undertaking. Be it said to their credit, however, that the parish at the present time is in a most excellent and really prosperous condition, and can now with apparent ease support its own pastor.

Rev. W. Jos. Heder.

In its earlier years this parish, though limited in its membership, had its own church, the same being kept in constant use until the year 1881, when the present brick edifice was erected. This work was accomplished under the direction and personal supervision of the pastor then in charge, the Rev. Father Woelfl, since deceased, at which time the membership of the congregation did not exceed twenty-five families in number.

The first resident pastor to assume charge of St. Mary's was the present one, Father W. Joseph Heder, who came to Mayville August 2, 1896. Subsequent to the erection of the new church and prior to Father Heder's coming, but little if anything had been done in the way of improvements to the church structure, but in September following his arrival the building was thoroughly renovated within and without, the interior being quite handsomely frescoed. The building, originally intended to be used for a school, is at the present time occupied by Father Heder as a temporary dwelling, although it is an almost assured fact that a comfortable and substantial parsonage will be built and furnished for him in the near future. This is certainly greatly to be desired, as when the undertaking is accomplished it will enable the parish to renew its school.

The present Board of Trustees of St. Mary's is composed of Messrs. J. Bernard and Edward Boehmer.

There is a small mission at Horicon, Wisconsin, consisting of some twenty English-speaking families, which is now attended by Father Heder at regular intervals from St. Mary's.

The Rev. W. Joseph Heder was born March 19, 1868, at St. Lawrence, Wisconsin. He began studying for the priesthood at an early age, acquiring his entire education at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he was ordained to the priesthood June 24, 1893, by Archbishop Zardetti. After his ordination he was assistant priest at St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee, for two years, until the death of the Rev. Joseph Holzhauer, when he was transferred to Templeton, Wisconsin, and a year later to St. Mary's Church, his present charge at Mayville.

St. Barnabas' Church, Mazomanie, Wis.

THE first resident pastor of the St. Barnabas' congregation was the Rev. Thomas Walsh, who came there in 1862. He was succeeded in 1863 by the Rev. J. Karney, and he, in 1864, by Father D. V. McGinnity. The Rev. T. J. Kenny succeeded to the pastorate in 1867, and was followed in 1869 by Father James F. Morris, who died at Mazomanie in March, 1873. The vacancy was then filled by the Rev. M. Monayhan, who came in the early part of 1874, remaining only, however, for six months. Father Mazeaud came next, and remained until 1878, when the Rev. R. J. Scott was appointed to the pastorate. Father Scott died while in charge, and was buried at Mazomanie, November 30, 1879. The ninth pastor of this congregation was Father A. S. Leitner, who came in 1880 and left December 28, 1896, being followed by the present rector, the Rev. P. J. Jones, who assumed the duties on that date. There are seventy-four members in this congregation. Among the societies represented in this parish, are the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch No. 3, of which Michael Aylward is president, and the Altar Society, Mrs. John Patt, president, Mrs. Joseph Winnige, treasurer. There is also a Cemetery Association, of which Miss Sadie Walsh is president; Miss Nellie Carey, vice-president; Miss Emma Hutter, secretary, and Miss Alma Schmitz, treasurer.

The Rev. P. J. Jones was born in Ozaukee County, Wisconsin, June 27, 1861, a son of Peter and Margaret (Schumacher) Jones, the former a native of Belgium, the latter of Luxemburg. Both came to America in childhood. The father was well educated, and has for the past thirty years been engaged in teaching school, his present residence being at Holy Cross, in Ozaukee County. Father Jones, the second of six children, first attended school at Mount Calvary, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, where he spent five years. He was then for two years in the University of Montreal, Canada, after which he entered the Ecclesiastical Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee. After three years of close application at this institution, he was ordained priest, June, 1885, his first charge being at Eagle, Waukesha County. A year and a half later, he was appointed to the living at Mazomanie, where he has remained ever since. Many valuable additions and improvements have been made to the church property since Father Jones first assumed this charge. One particular feature is the noble structure, commenced in 1890 and completed in 1891, which superseded the old and time-worn structure of former days, and is a monument to the devoted energy of the pastor. This building cost $18,000. Father Jones also organized a parochial school, which is now in charge of the Dominican Sisters. In addition to his Mazomanie congregation, Father Jones has charge of Mill Creek Mission, Iowa County, consisting of thirty families.

St. Barnabas' Church, Mazomanie, Wis.

Rev. P. J. Jones.

Mill Creek, which is now attached as a mission to Mazomanie, was formerly attended from Ridgeway, Iowa County, Wisconsin. The first pastor to assume the duties of this mission from St. Barnabas' was Father A. S. Leitner, who was succeeded in that work by the present rector, the Rev. P. J. Jones. This, at the present time, is an exclusively English speaking mission, of about thirty families.

St. Isidore's Church, Meeme, Wis.

INITIAL steps for the formation of a regular congregation in the town of Meeme, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, were taken in the fall of 1850, when Father Bremer, a Jesuit missionary, came from Manitowoc Rapids, then the county seat, and held Mass in the house of John Mollitor, in the German settlement, about two miles from the location of the present church. All of the people in the settlement had been notified to attend and after Mass a meeting was held for the purpose of organizing a regular congregation. At this meeting a Mr. Simon offered an acre of woodland for a church site and also for the erection of an academy. It was at the same meeting that Mr. Mulholland, Sr., since deceased, proffered as a gift three acres of cleared land for the same purpose. On account of the liberality of this offer and the more desirable location of the land—it being situated in the middle of the settlement and on a main thoroughfare—the congregation concluded to accept Mr. Mulholland's proposition. This being decided upon, work was at once begun, the farmers cutting suitable logs for the structure and hauling them to the site with ox teams. Nearly all of the material thus obtained was cut from the land of Mr. Mulholland, while some came from the Waltbach farm just across the road.

The raising of the church was one of the most notable and long to be remembered events in that section of the country, the entire population for miles around turning out almost to a man to render whatever assistance might be demanded of them. The church was a quite roomy one, being 50 x 30, without including the sanctuary. The structure completed, quite a strong, though good-natured controversy arose among the parishioners as to what name should be given to it. The German element wanted it called St. Joseph's, while those of Irish nationality were equally persistent in claiming the right and privilege for their patron saint, St. Patrick; so, in order to settle the dispute with satisfacton to both parties, without showing preference to the demands of either, Bishop Henni decided that it should be named St. Isidore. Mr. Mulholland, who, besides donating the land, was both active and liberal in the interest he exhibited in the new parish and church, was a trustee of the congregation for a number of years and, in fact, until after the building of the present large frame church. In recognition of his many and valuable services he was later awarded, by the unanimous vote of the congregation, a front pew, which he continued to hold until, disposing of his farm, he moved to another part of the country. After the completion of the log church, services were held at Meeme regularly by Father Bremer, who continued to visit that church for some considerable period. His successors at the "Rapids" and other resident priests from Sheboygan and neighboring pastorates also visited St. Isidore's at regular intervals, among the former being Rev. Fathers Nuyts and Young, while Father Maly came there from Francis Creek. Somewhat later, we are informed, the Rev. Josephat Kleber, S. J., made an effort to remove the old chapel to a new site a mile or two south of Meeme, or at least to build a new one at that point. This attempt, however, proved an utter failure, as did also the one to establish a convent at the same place.

St. Isidore's Church, Meeme, Wis.

In 1864 the present church of St. Isidore was built east of the site of the old chapel by the Rev. E. M. McGinnity, now dean of Janesville. Prior to his coming, and for some time between 1862-64, the spiritual wants of the congregation were administered to by the Rev. Lawrence Kenney, at that time a newly-ordained priest from St. Francis' seminary, near Milwaukee. After a short pastorate, Father Kenney died and was buried under the sanctuary of the new church. Father McGinnity, who came to Meeme on August 4, 1864, was followed in the pastorate successively by the Revs. Thomas McDonnell, November, 1865, to November, 1868. Father McDonnell died February 24, 1869, and is buried under the sanctuary of the church at Meeme beside the grave of Father Kenney; vacancy from November, 1868, to July, 1870; E. R. Goss, July, 1870, to August, 1871—he died somewhat later and was buried at Milwaukee; Dennis Tierney, August, 1871, to November, 1874; vacancy, October, 1876, to October, 1878; J. A. Butler from October, 1878, to August, 1879; Thomas Corry from October, 1879, until May 24, 1880—he died on the latter date and is buried in Milwaukee; R. J. Roche, October, 1880, to May, 1882; A. J. Gerhard, August to November, 1882; then another vacancy from November, 1882, to April, 1883; J. J. Smith from April, 1883, to May 18, 1885; E. A. Graves from August, 1885, to April, 1886; E. F. Pitt, August, 1886, to November, 1890; M. B. Norton, December, 1890, to August, 1894, and A. Henderson, the present pastor. The congregation at this time numbers about five hundred members all told. The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin are represented in St. Isidore's parish by Branch No. 68, which was established April 14, 1887. There are now twenty-five members, the present officers being: James Sullivan, president; John Hofud, vice-president; Martin Shanahan, secretary, and Albert Schneider, treasurer. There is also a Holy Rosary Society, of which Mrs. Mary Maloney is prefect; Mrs. Helen Hayes, sub-prefect; Mrs. Margaret Morris, secretary and Mrs. Mary Morris, treasurer.

St. Bernard's Church, Middleton, Wis.

THE parish of St. Bernard's at Middleton, Dane County, Wisconsin, is comparatively a new one, having been organized in March, 1889, under the direction of the Rev. M. M. Gerend, at that time pastor of St. Mary's of the Lake, at Westport, and St. John's, at Waunakee, Dane County, Wisconsin. The first services were held by this congregation on March 31st of the same year, in the public high school building, the Catholics at that time not having a church of their own to worship in. On that day, also, a meeting was called after the services, and soon after the congregation was duly incorporated, with F. W. du Fruene, Sr., as secretary; Jacob Strickner, treasurer, and John Clark, John Walsh, Walter Whalen and Bernard Gritter, as consulters. In the fall of the same year, a site was procured and the church built. At the present time the congregation of St. Bernard's is somewhat limited in numbers, but, in spite of that fact, is entirely out of debt, although having to its credit a handsome and well-equipped church, and a large and well-kept cemetery. It is also probable that a substantial school will be erected at Middleton in the near future. The congregation consists of about fifteen families. This parish is still in charge of Father Gerend, who attends it from St. Francis.

St. Bernard's Church, Middleton, Wis.

St. Mary's Church, Mineral Point, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary's at Mineral Point, Iowa County, Wisconsin, was founded in 1870. The first pastor to attend this congregation, of whom any record has been made, was the Rev. F. X. Weinhart, who, with Mr. Graeber, built the first church; a pastoral residence and school house were also erected by them. As successor to Father Weinhart came the Rev. Father Wiedlich, and after him the Rev. Jos. Huber, who completed the church and furnished it with altars and pulpit. On his retirement from the pastorate, Father Weinhart again took charge of the congregation, remaining until the time of his death, when the Rev. J. Friedl was appointed to the charge. He was succeeded by the Rev. Father Halbenkann, who is the present rector of the parish. The number of families in this parish is now estimated at one hundred and twenty-five. There is one parochial school connected with this congregation, which has been conducted since 1871 by three Sisters of St. Dominic from Racine, Wisconsin. It has a regular attendance of about sixty-five scholars. The following Catholic societies are connected with this congregation: St. Joseph's Society, one hundred members, Mr. J. Gorgen, president; Jacob Dresen, secretary; J. Horn, treasurer. St. Mary's Young Ladies' Society, sixty members; Miss Lizzie Blatz, president; Miss Annie Thies, secretary; Mrs. William Jenck, treasurer. Christian Mothers' Confraternity, seventy members, president, Mrs. C. Kieffer; Holy Childhood Association for Children.

St. Mary's Church, Mineral Point, Wis.

Rev. J. E. Halbenkann.

The Rev. Father J. E. Halbenkann, present rector of St. Mary's congregation at Mineral Point, is a native of Germany, having been born in that country about fifty years ago. In 1852 his parents emigrated to America, bringing young Halbenkann, who was still of a very tender age, with them. Upon arriving, they almost immediately moved west, locating in Wisconsin, and it was consequently in the parochial schools of this State that he received his earlier education. He was ordained by Archbishop Henni, July 9, 1872, and has labored ever since in the Archdiocese of Milwaukee.

St. Paul's Church, Mineral Point, Wis.

THE location of this parish is at a point in Iowa County, Wisconsin, about fifty miles from Dubuque, Iowa, on the Mississippi River, and is consequently in the southwestern part of the State. At one time Mineral Point and the country in its immediate vicinity became of more than usual interest as a mining settlement, and as large deposits of lead were continually being found, the population grew in advance of that of any other section of the state. From 1836 to 1840, the place presented a fine picture of activity, and was, in fact, in every respect a representative and typical mining town. Here was to be found a community of all sorts and conditions of men, good, bad and indifferent, the former, however, probably being in the minority. Here a man may be said to have carried his life in his hands, for in the numerous altercations, which were bound to be of frequent occurance, it was generally a word and a blow, and the blow came first. Among these settlers were a sprinkling of Catholics of all nationalities, although the Irish predominated. This was owing to the fact that these people, accustomed to following a similar life in their native country, as well as in England, naturally sought for like conditions and surroundings to those amongst which they had previously lived. Nothing, however, was done for many years in the way of organizing these people into a congregation, and all that they received of spiritual assistance was at the hands of traveling priests from the diocese of Dubuque, from which point that section of the State, which had heretofore been under the domination of the diocese of Detroit, was attended. The first priest to say Mass and hold Divine services in Mineral Point, was the Rev. Father Mazzuchelli, an Italian clergyman, attached to the Diocese of Dubuque, who came there in 1839. He was afterwards appointed pastor at Benton, La Fayette County, Wisconsin, some thirty miles from Mineral Point, where he built a church, and some time later founded the Third Order of St. Dominic. This Order, which is now located at Sinsinawa Mound, and is in an altogether flourishing condition, has a membership of one hundred and twenty Sisters, conducting a large academy for the education of young ladies, and, besides, has charge of many and important schools in the States of Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota. Father Mazzuchelli celebrated his first Mass at the "Point," in a log shanty owned by Mrs. Uren, an English woman, but at that time occupied by an Irish Catholic named James Smith. This old building was located near the site of the present German Catholic church, and north of High street. At other times subsequently, Mass was celebrated in what is now the present residence of the same person. At about this time a new and larger house than ordinary being erected by Mr. Crawford, at Mineral Point, it was rented by the Catholics, and used by them about a year. Of necessity, the services were held somewhat irregularly, as Father Mazzuchelli had an extensive territory to cover, and the means of transportation were, besides, of a limited character, and the roads at nearly all times bad. In 1841 Catholics at Mineral Point were given in charge of the Rev. Father Causse, a French priest then stationed at Potosi, Wisconsin, which was about forty miles from Mineral Point. Under his administration services were held regularly every month. Thus matters continued for a couple of years, the efforts, if any, to procure a site and material for a new church, being but slight, owing largely to the fact that the Catholic community was very limited in numbers as well as in means.

St. Paul's Church, Mineral Point, Wis.

At about this time several speculators, among whom were Moses M. Strong, John F. O'Niel, a Catholic, Thomas P. Burnet and Frank J. Dunn, who, partially from a desire to establish the cause of religion, and possibly not a little owing to the fact that in so doing they might enhance the value of adjacent properties, together donated four lots to the parish, the same to be used for the erection of the necessary church buildings. It had been originally intended to give five lots for this purpose, but Mr. Strong was unable to fulfill his part of the contract, owing to the fact that his wife refused to sign the transfer. This same lot, however, was finally procured by the parish, in 1892, $300.00 being paid for the same, to Mrs. Patrick McGann, sister-in-law of the Rev. Francis McGann, who had in the interim purchased the property on his own account from the Strongs. At this time, therefore, that is, in the year 1877, the congregation at Mineral Point owned five lots, upon which had been erected a church, parsonage, school house and barn.

But to return to the year 1842; the four lots having been secured, it now became an evident and earnest desire on the part of both pastor and the laity to erect a suitable structure in which the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass might be offered up. It was also deemed advisable to urge forward this matter, from the fact that the very existence of the church, and consequent duties devolving upon all good Catholics, would still further strengthen and cement the general interest in the growth and prosperity of the parish. The move was generally and freely started by all classes among the settlers, including the miners and farmers at a considerable distance from the town. It was further decided that the structure should be built of lime-rock and sandstone, a fine quality of which was to be found in abundance within convenient distance of the site selected for the church. As a result of this general effort on the part of priest and people, an unpretentious, though comfortable stone structure, 40x28 feet, was erected, and completed during the year 1842. To this church gathered regularly the good Catholics, not only from the immediate neighborhood, but also from outlying settlements, which lay at a distance of twenty-five and even thirty miles from Mineral Point. Thus many evident sacrifices were made by those people, in behalf of their religion, as traveling such a distance with ox teams, which were the principal means of locomotion then in vogue, caused a protracted journey, covering a period of from two to three days. It was such undaunted spirits as these who laid the foundation of Catholicity in the West, and are in a great measure responsible for the magnificent growth and progress of the Church throughout that region during the past half a century. At the time of the completion of this church, it was still an out-mission of Potosi, which was also under the clerical charge of the Rev. Joseph Causse. In this condition the affairs of the church continued for a period of four years, the congregation receiving spiritual attendance once each month from its visiting pastor. At the end of that time, the Right Rev. Bishop John Martin Henni, recognizing their zealous efforts to advance the cause, appointed the Rev. Victor Jowanneault, a Frenchman, first resident pastor of Mineral Point, who assumed charge as such on September 24, 1846. It was not the brightest of outlooks which greeted him upon his arrival, and, while the Catholic worshipers were, as always, sincere and untiring in their efforts to advance Catholic interests, the town itself was made up largely of rough, uncouth and godless characters, to whom nothing whatever was sacred. Neither was there at this time a pastoral residence. In addition to these and similar obstacles, with which he was met on every hand, he had thrust upon him the care of missions at Platteville, Ridgeway, Willow Springs, and Waldwick, at that time an area of unbroken timber land and prairie, now included in the four counties of Grant, La Fayette, Iowa and Green. With no given path to travel to these various settlements, and beset on all hands with a hoard of vicious characters, it is doubtful if the first incumbent of the pastorate at Mineral Point can be said to have enjoyed many of the luxuries of life. He, however, took up the work intrusted to his charge with a cheerful and uncomplaining spirit, obtaining much solace from the evident desire of his people to do the best in their power for his welfare and comfort. Soon after becoming a resident of Mineral Point, Father Jowanneault purchased a building adjacent to the church in which he lived during the term of his administration. He also built a small red brick house next to the stone building, in which he established a school. This was undoubtedly one of the very first of these educational institutions established by the Catholics in the State. Father Jowanneault was particularly interested in the education of the Catholic children, taking personal supervision of this school himself, and even teaching as often as his parochial labors would permit. This school house, as well as the parsonage, were the personal property of the pastor, who had purchased them with his private means. After three years of very successful service among the Catholics at Mineral Point, and its missions, Father

Rev. Jas. O'Keefe.

Jowanneault resigned the charge. The next pastor to assume charge of the congregation was the Rev. Michael McFaul, whose administration, however, was of a very uneventful character. This may possibly have been owing to the fact that he is said to have been in an unusually poor state of health at that time, to a better condition of which the general surroundings could not have been very conducive. Father McFaul's residence at Mineral Point continued until April, 1850, when the Rev. Joseph Causse succeeded to the pastorate and that of its missions. Thus he came back to the fields of his early labor, for it was nine years previous to that time that he had, while pastor of Potosi, attended Mineral Point as a mission, and built a church at that place. As pastor of St. Paul's, Father Causse took up his residence at the house purchased by Father Jowanneault, living in the same until sometime during the year 1851, when he succeeded in inducing the congregation to build a parsonage of their own. For this purpose he circulated a subscription list among the residents at Mineral Point and the missions, to which both Catholics and non-Catholics gave quite liberally. As a result of this effort, a small and comfortable building was erected close to the church during that same year. Other minor but telling improvements were made to the property, so that in spite of its isolation from the immediate business portion of the town, it assumed a well-groomed and orderly appearance, which was in distinct contrast with the rest of the place. An additional and much needed improvement was also effected during the same year, in the purchase of land for a cemetery. For this purpose a plot of about an acre, formerly belonging to Father Jowanneault, which was situated a short distance south, on the Galena road, was secured. It is now a serious matter of regret that the people had not at that time evidenced sufficient forethought to secure a more extensive property, as at the present time almost every available spot has been taken up, and it is next to impossible to secure additional adjacent lands at any figure. There was also a dispute as to the land secured, Col. D. W. Jones claiming the title on an unsatisfied judgment for $200, secured previous to its transfer by Father Jowanneault to the Bishop. Upon investigating the records, it was found that the Colonel's premises were correct, but that the legal time required to make good the title to the church had expired before the claim was made. During the pastorate of Father Causse the Catholic school at Mineral Point was brought into a still more flourishing and prosperous condition, under the management of Miss Mary Torpey and Mr. John Cummings, a lay teacher who succeeded her. The duties devolving upon the pastor at Mineral Point were at this time still further increased by the establishment of other missions, which were also placed under his charge. This was in most instances owing to the fact that miners who had proved unsuccessful in their original undertaking had turned farmers, thus forming the nucleus of new settlements which here and there sprang up throughout that region. The tide of immigration was also slowly but surely following in that direction, and as a consequence the territory around Waldwick and Ridgeway and throughout Iowa County became largely augmented in the number of its settlers, who made persistent demands for frequent if not more regular attendance from the Catholic pastors located in that region. Of the missions thus attended from St. Paul's, that at Waldwick had no church, Mass being celebrated in the houses of different Catholic families. At Ridgeway the same condition of affairs also pertained until some time during 1852, when a small church was erected on a piece of land donated by Mr. Owen Kelly. There was also a small frame church at Willow Springs, and one as well at Plateville, both of which were built at about the same time. During the year 1851 Father Caussee was given as assistant the Rev. William B. Dougherty, who proved a most zealous and efficient aid as attendant upon these numerous missions. Father Dougherty is remembered at that time as a most devoted worker in the cause of religion. At a later date he is spoken of most feelingly as one who had about completed a life of goodness and mercy; who was kind, forgiving and generous, from his own purse taking and preparing for the holy ministery his two nephews, the Rev. Fathers Campbell and W. D. Murphy, both of whom were afterwards ordained for the diocese of Chicago. To his life's labor he gave himself most faithfully and untiringly, as members of his mission by their fond and reverential reference to his name and works attest. He died during the summer of 1876 at Kenosha, Wisconsin.

After serving a year as assistant at Mineral Point Father Dougherty was succeeded by the Rev. Arthur O'Connor, who remained from August, 1853, to October, 1854. Thus matters continued with the church, progressing in a favorable manner until 1849, during which year the terrible epidemic of cholera devastated the entire southwest portion of Wisconsin. The effect of the terrible mortality consequent from the spread and progress of this disease was deplorable, the fears of the living for their own safety even overshadowing the almost universal sorrow felt at the loss of those who had been so suddenly and ruthlessly removed. Thus for some time Mineral Point remained the center of one continuous and unremitting wail of anguish, where those who mourned the loss of dear ones dwelt in horrible uncertainty for their own safety or that of those who had been left to them. Of course, every effort known to science, and whatever means were in reach or obtainable by finite power, were brought to bear against this altogether disastrous calamity, but seemingly without the slightest advantage being gained. But the principles of that holy faith which teaches mankind to put its trust in God, had been so firmly inculcated in the minds of the poor people of this plague-ridden district, that almost frantic, as they were, with the terrible and ever-increasing disaster which was bearing so hardly upon them, they turned in their wretchedness and distress to the Comforter of the afflicted, beseeching the intercession of the Blessed Virgin Mary. As an evidence of the efficacy of this prayer, and in acknowledgment of the wonderful interposition of the Mother of God in their behalf, the Catholics of Mineral Point issued the following statement.

"In the year of our Lord 1850, on the 6th day of the month of October, the date of the solemnity of the Most Holy Rosary, we, the undersigned members of the Catholic parish of St. Paul at Mineral Point, diocese of Milwaukee and State of Wisconsin, truly desire to give our merciful God and Redeemer a lively expression of our profound and lasting gratitude, as well as to promote the honor of the Blessed Virgin Mary, assembled for that purpose on this day of the Holy Rosary, most solemnly declare that while the scourge of the cholera was raging in this town for two months, August and September, we, following the pressing invitation of our pastor, placed ourselves under the protection of the Blessed Virgin Mary, under the title of Mother of Sorrows, and offered seven Paternosters in her honor during the time of the scourge. Our confidence was not misplaced, our humble prayers were not despised, but while others were dying around us, her maternal hand removed the scourge from us. In a word, for two successive years, 1849 and 1850, we and our families have been preserved from the cholera, and if we live it is owing to the mercy of God, rendered propitious by the intercession of her who is, after Jesus, our hope and our life.

"Wishing, therefore, to give glory to God, and honor to the Mother of Jesus, by transmitting to future generations the memory of that great blessing, and the expression of our lasting gratitude, we have cheerfully affixed our names to the above statement, in the Catholic Chapel of St. Paul's, Mineral Point, the day and year as above." This statement or certificate, which is in the handwriting of Father Causse, is signed by Patrick Dowd, John Shanly, Patrick McGulgan, John Logue, Thomas Foley, James and Francis Foley, Andrew Shanley, Andrew Kearnes, James Lenchan, Andrew McDermot, William Flaherty, John Cullins, and numerous others. Many of these people who are still living vouch for this fact as literally true.

During the year 1850, the Arch-Confraternity, in memory of the Most Sacred Heart of Mary, was organized in the congregation, and also a Sodality of the Scapulars of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, neither of which, however, are now in existence. The year 1851 is made memorable at Mineral Point by the visit of the Right Rev. John Martin Henni, Bishop of Milwaukee, who on the 26th of July administered the Sacrament of Confirmation. He again visited that town for the same purpose on October 6, 1854. A total Abstinence Society was also established by the Catholics at Mineral Point on January 21, 1851. During the year 1854 the congregation of St. Paul's showed such visible increase in numbers that it was deemed necessary to arrange for the erection of a larger and more suitable church. It was, therefore, decided to erect a structure 40x80 feet, and so successful was the undertaking that in May, 1855, about one year from the time that the project was first mooted, the corner-stone was laid. In the fall of that year Father Causse resigned his charge of the parish, and returned to his native country, France. During the year that followed the departure of Father Causse, several clergymen administered to the pastorate, none of them, however, remaining a sufficient length of time to effect anything of material advantage to the congregation. Work on the church, however, went steadily on, the people being greatly encouraged in their efforts by the Rev. Martin Kundig, for many years Vicar-General of the Diocese of Milwaukee, who remained among them from January 1 to March 1, 1856. He was succeeded by the Rev. M. P. Kenney, who in return was followed by the Rev. James McGowan, the latter coming there on May 11th. His successor was the Rev. F. G. Bonduel, a Frenchman, who entered upon his spiritual duties September 28, 1856, remaining until May, 1857. He was succeeded by the Rev. Francis McGann. In spite of the excessively hard times prevailing this church was finally completed, being dedicated sometime during the month of June, 1859 or 1860. In 1861 the Rev. F. H. Weninger, a Jesuit priest, gave a very successful mission in this building. Up to the time that the new church was completed the Catholic congregation of St. Paul's consisted principally of Irish families, but for the few years following the tide of German immigration to this point was so extensive that by 1865, or thereabout, the membership was about equally divided between the two nationalities. From that time on, however, though still using the same church, the Germans held regular monthly services by themselves, being attended by the German pastor residing at Highland, Rev. Peter Voissem, and later by Father Weinhart. It will be readily seen from the foregoing, that, while no claims have been made to that effect, to the Irish members of the congregation was almost entirely due the honor of having built the new church. An improvement was made at the mission of Waldwick in 1864, by the erection of a small but comfortable frame church, 24x36 feet, at a cost of $1,200. Catholic interests were thus steadily progressing in this section, as, besides the improvements already mentioned as having been made at Mineral Point, each of the missions attended from there, namely, Waldwick and Ridgeway, having its own church. A settlement called "Knobbs," near Helena, on the Wisconsin River, was also attended from St. Paul's, Mass being said in the house of Mrs. Moriarity, and sometimes at the home of Mr. Patrick King. The congregation at this place consisted of from twenty-five to thirty-five families, who, as a rule, attended services at the Mill Creek Church, which was located near the village of Arena. Some of these, however, occasionally attended the church at Ridgeway, and others that at Otter Creek, all, however, considering themselves under the spiritual domination of the pastor at Mineral Point. As a result of the total destruction of the old parsonage at Mineral Point, in 1863, a new and commodious one and one-half-story building was erected, the same being still in use. The next noticeable improvement made to the church property at this place, was in the advent of the Dominican Sisters of Sinsinawa Mound, who came at the solicitation of Father McGann, to assume charge of the parochial school. During this year a Sisters' residence was also built and furnished. In 1869 it became evident that the new church was no longer capable of furnishing suitable accommodations for the members, whose number had been augmented to a considerable extent. The Germans, therefore, decided to withdraw, and in the beginning of the following year organized with a view to the immediate erection of a new church. Having procured a desirable site, they immediately set about the erection of a church and parsonage, which were completed in the following September. On the 18th of the same month Father McGann, whose health, owing to continual exposure, had been failing for some considerable time, died. His loss proved a severe blow to the congregation, who had found in him an able and trusty adviser, zealous alike in behalf of their spiritual and material welfare. The vacant pastorate was filled on October 1st by the Rev. James O'Keefe, and at about the same time the Rev. F. X. Weinhart, former pastor of Highland, and who for some years had been in the habit of attending the Germans at Mineral Point, also assumed the duties as resident pastor of the new church at that place. Thus but a little over thirty years from the time that the first Mass was celebrated at Mineral Point, two distinct, well-to-do and representative congregations were established at that place.

At about this time a rather unexpected difficulty arose in the parish, in regard to the ability of the people to continue the parochial school connected with St. Paul's. This was owing to the fact that when the Germans established a congregation of their own they also built a school, thus withdrawing their children and support from the one which had been conducted under a joint expense. Father O'Keefe, however, was very energetic in his endeavors to maintain the original institution, and to make that possible, guaranteed an annual compensation to the Sisters in charge of $500, some of which was liquidated by a pro-rata assessment made upon each scholar, the residue being paid by the congregation. Thus matters were conducted for a period of five years when the Irish school was still more firmly established, by being conducted under the free school system. Another rather unfortunate contretemps about this time was the misunderstanding between the two congregations regarding their financial obligations to one another. The Germans, it seemed, claimed $1,700 as the amount paid by them towards the erection and furnishing of St. Paul's, which the others seemed unwilling to allow. The demand, however, was further emphasized at a joint meeting of the committees appointed for that purpose, and held at the residence of Father O'Keefe, and in the presence of Vicar-General Kundig. After several meetings, the committees being unable to arrive at any satisfactory decision, the matter was referred to the pastors of their several congregations, who finally brought affairs to a satisfactory determination. A copy of the original document certifying to these facts is now in possession of the Most Rev. Archbishop of the diocese. Improvements made to the property of St. Paul's Parish at about this time were the renovation and refurnishing of the parsonage, and the addition of several ornaments and handsome vestments to the furnishings of the church. The grounds about the place were also beautified to a considerable extent, so that the property took on a remarkably pleasing and prosperous appearance. In the spring of 1875, owing to its distance from Mineral Point, some seventeen miles, the mission at Ridgeway was established as a parish. To further that end a subscription was raised and a parsonage built, and in August of that same year the Rev. Hugh McMahon took charge of same as first resident pastor. In 1882 an addition was made to the church property by the purchase of a two-story building known as the Sisters' house, and adjacent to the other property, so that now, with the exception of one small lot, the church owns an entire block. During the same year the church was repainted, the interior frescoed, and a hot-air furnace placed in the basement. A summary of the history of this old and interesting congregation shows, among other things, that since October

1, 1870, at which time Father O'Keefe assumed the pastorate, two parishes have been established, one thousand one hundred and ninety-seven members confirmed, two hundred and seventy-nine deaths, not including infants, recorded, eight hundred and fifty-four have received their first communion, and that eight young men of the parish have been directed into the priesthood. During that period also, in attending missions and sick calls, Father O'Keefe has traveled a distance of thirty-four thousand miles. The mission at Waldwick, which was attended continuously from Mineral Point for a period of twenty-four years, became an independent parish and was given a resident pastor of its own in 1894. There is at present a flourishing Ladies' Altar Society and Young Ladies' Reading Circle in the parish, and the congregation, which numbers some one hundred and twenty-five families, is well united, and in an altogether prosperous condition.

The Rev. James O'Keefe, pastor of St. Paul's congregation at Mineral Point, was born in the State of New York, July 29, 1845. Three years later he removed with his parents to Milwaukee, and thence to Portage City in 1852. He entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, in 1857, where he completed the usual courses in the classics and philosophy. This much accomplished, he in 1863 went to Europe and entered the American College at Louvain, Belgium, where he studied theology and attended the courses at the University as well. After a period of three years spent in one of the most celebrated of European theological institutions, Father O'Keefe, in 1866, returned to the United States and entered the University of St. Mary's, at Chicago, remaining there until the fall of 1867 when he again entered St. Francis Seminary, from which institution he was finally ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. John Martin Henni, Archbishop of Milwaukee for the Archdiocese, on January 29, 1868. His first appointment after ordination was as assistant to the Rev. E. McGuirk at Elba, who besides that parish had charge of missions at Columbus, Doylestown, Mt. Pleasant and Wyocena. After a few months, at the request of Father McGuirk, and with the consent of his Bishop, he bought a brick house and four lots in Columbus of the congregation at which place he was made pastor. He left Columbus in May, 1870, as pro tempore pastor at Madison during the absence of Father Smith, who was on a visit to Ireland. While at Madison he let the contract for a new brick school-house for $5,000, which was nearly completed when Father Smith returned. He was then appointed to Mineral Point and out missions, of which he took charge October 1, 1870, and where he has since remained.

St. John's Church, Monches, Wis.

As near as can be ascertained, the first Catholic settlers to locate in the neighborhood of Monches came there on September 2, 1842. These people came from Milwaukee, the party being comprised of Messrs. John Whelan, Peter Whelan, Andrew Shields, John Grady, Michael Shields, John Shields, Patrick and Michael Gallaher, William McGrath, Jeremiah Flynn, William Mountain, James Knealy, John Kennedy, John Beston, John Sullivan, James Murphy, James Lynch, Barney McConville, John Lynch, William Courtenay and Thomas Fitz-Gerald. Services were first held at the home of William McGrath in the town of Erin by the Rev. Martin Kundig, in November, 1842. The same house is occupied at the present time by Joseph Whelan. In the fall of the following year, however, the congregation of St. John's was established and a log church completed, the latter being duly dedicated by the Rev. Father Kundig. This church was located where the present district school stands, a little west of Joseph Whelan's residence. After Father Kundig came the Rev. Thomas Morrissey, who remained from 1845 to 1850. He was succeeded by the Rev. Patrick Callanan, from 1850 to 1851; the Rev. William O'Brien, from 1851 to 1852; the Rev. P. Kernan, from 1852 to 1856; the Rev. Francis McGann, from 1856 to 1858; the Rev. John Tiernan, from 1858 to 1868; the Rev. T. J. Quinn, 1868 to 1869; the Rev. M. Hannon, from 1869 to 1870; the Rev. Thomas Corry, 1870; the Rev. J. F. McSweeney, from 1870 to 1871; the Rev. N. R. Stehle, from 1871 to 1872; the Rev. J. J. Keogh, from 1872 to 1873; the Rev. J. P. Cassody, from 1873 to 1876;

St. John's Church and St. Columba's Mission, Monches.

the Rev. C. Devine, 1876; the Rev. Eugene Reilly, from 1876 to 1884, and the Rev. J. E. Harlin, from 1884 to 1895. Since the latter date the Rev. James F. Bowe, present rector, has been in charge. The congregation at the present time consists of about one hundred families. Of Catholic organizations in this parish there are, an Altar Society, of which Mrs. J. J. O'Neil is secretary and Mrs. Dr. Donnelly, treasurer, and a League of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, which was established in 1893 and has for its promoters the Misses Nellie Stapleton, Mary O'Neill and Mary Powell.

The mission of St. Columba at Lake Five, Washington County, which is attended by the resident pastor from Monches, was established in the year 1842 by the Rev. Martin Kundig. Prior to this time Father Kundig said Mass at Lake Five in the house of John Donnelly, which was located on the shores of the lake. The time of this occurrence is given as November, 1842. Among the first Catholic families to settle in the neighborhood of Lake Five were those of Messrs. M. Cosgrove, P. Flynn, Edward McCartan, John Fleming, M. Claffey, M. and John Redmond, William Dunn and M. Denney. The present congregation consists of forty families and is attended every Sunday by Father Bowe. There is an Altar Society connected with St. Columba in which most of the lady members are actively interested.

The Rev. James F. Bowe, present rector of St. John's, was born in the town of Mequon, Ozaukee County, Wisconsin, in 1851. After pursuing his studies for a considerable time at St. Michael's, Toronto, Canada, he entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where, after completing a full course in the classics, philosophy and theology, he was ordained to the priesthood on July 25, 1876, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni. Following his ordination he served at St. Patrick's Church, Janesville, St. Patrick's Church and St. John's Cathedral, Milwaukee, and at Edgerton, being transferred from the latter place to the charge of his present congregation.

St. Mary's Church, Monroe, Wis.

THE German Catholic congregation of St. Mary's at Monroe, Green County, Wisconsin, was established in 1861. The first pastor of this parish, who attended it from Madison, Wisconsin, was the Rev. John Michael Obermueller, resident pastor of the Holy Redeemer Church at Madison, in 1867. He was succeeded consecutively by the Rev. Fathers, Thill, Willmes and Jaster. The first resident pastor who took charge of the congregation in 1871, and remained for six months, was the Rev. John Huber. He was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Von der Thannen, he in turn being followed by the Rev. John M. Obermueller, who remained from 1874 to October, 1879, when he died at Monroe. Then the parish again became a mission, being attended monthly from the Capuchin Convent at Milwaukee, by the Rev. Father Mathews, until 1881, when the Rev. Caspar Schaettin became resident pastor, remaining as such until 1885, when he retired to St. Joseph's Hospital at Milwaukee, where he died February 4, 1889. From 1885 to 1893, Monroe was again a mission, being attended part of the time from St. Victor's Church at Monroe, by the Rev. Father O'Brien, and his successor, the Rev. Thomas Dempsey, and part of the time by the Rev. Capuchin Fathers, Solanus, Capistran, Aegidius, Joseph Dominicus, Angelus and Kostbul, from the Convent of St. Francis at Milwaukee. The present resident pastor of St. Mary's is the Rev. Sebastian Rohr, who assumed the charge in November, 1893. The congregation of St. Mary's has been in such a peculiar condition for the past ten years that its membership cannot be properly estimated, although there is a church, school building and parsonage, which are furnished with every necessary convenience.

St. Mary's Church, Monroe, Wis.

The parochial school in connection with St. Mary's, which was established in 1872, was in charge of Sisters of St. Francis from September of that year until October 1876. From October, 1876, however, until November, 1893, the school remained closed, but was re-opened on the latter date under the management of the pastor, Father Rohr. The number of scholars in attendance at this school is about twenty-five.

The Rev. Sebastian Rohr was born July 9, 1847, and ordained to the priesthood at Rottenburg, Kingdom of Wuerttemberg, Germany, August 2, 1872.

The Rev. Caspar Michael Schaettin was born November 11, 1811, at Hinterwaeggithal, Canton Schwyz, Switzerland, where his parents died when he was but a few years old. Having received a common school education in the schools of his native place, he completed his studies at the Convent Maria Einsiedeln, and was ordained priest on September 24, 1836, by Bishop Joannes Georgius. He then became assistant priest at Tuggen, where he stayed until 1863, at which time he left Switzerland and went to the Grand Duchy of Baden. His first appointment there was Zell at the Andelsbach, where he remained for several years. On November 9, 1866, he became assistant priest in Stetten, a. K. M., where he had to attend three missions besides. In the summer of 1869 he came to America and was for a short time assistant priest to the Rev. Father Holzhauer at St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee. On November 27 of that year he became rector of St. James' Congregation in the town of Mequon, Ozaukee County, and on September 10, 1870, he came as such to Belgium, where he stayed until May, 1876. During his administration at that place many improvements on church property were made. In May, 1876, he was appointed rector of his former congregation at Mequon, remaining there until July, 1881. Archbishop M. Heiss then appointed him rector of St. Mary's Congregation at Monroe, where he remained till 1885, when failing health compelled him to retire to St. Joseph's Hospital, Milwaukee, where he acted as chaplain up to the time of his death, February 4, 1889. On September 24, 1886, Father Schaettin celebrated his fiftieth anniversary in the priesthood. The funeral services of Father Schaettin were held at the Capuchin Church, Milwaukee, and his remains were buried at Calvary Cemetery. He was a pious and benevolent man in whom the poor found a generous benefactor, and during his fifty-three years of priesthood did much for the welfare of mankind.

Rev. S. Rohn.

Rev. Caspar M. Schaettin.
(DECEASED.)

St. Victor's Church, Monroe, Wis.

PREVIOUS to 1860, the Catholics of Monroe, Green County, Wisconsin, were attended from Shullsburg. In January, 1860, the Rev. Richard Sullivan was appointed the first resident pastor, and continued as such until July, 1866. It was at the beginnig of Father Sullivan's administration that the congregation of St. Victor's was established and a church and parsonage built. During that time he also attended to the spiritual wants of the people living in the township of Adams, where he built St. Francis Xavier's Church. Father Sullivan was succeeded as pastor of St. Victor's by the Rev. William O'Connell, who continued in charge until June of the following year. Then Father John Murphy became pastor, remaining until April, 1868, when he was relieved by the Rev. John Casey. Father Casey resigned on August 23, 1871, to enter into partnership with Dr. Nolan in the publication of a Catholic weekly paper, called The Vindicator. The next pastor was the Rev. Michael Wenker, who resigned in November, 1872, and was succeeded by the Rev. E. M. McGinnity, who continued in charge until July, 1880. His successor was the Rev. Michael Wrynn, who remained until October, 1883, and was followed by the Rev. Henry O'Brien, whose pastorate extended to July, 1892. During Father O'Brien's residence at Monroe the old church was destroyed by fire. The present pastor, the Rev. Thomas Dempsey, who succeeded Father O'Brien, built a new church and parsonage. The church is Gothic in style, occupies an area of 50x100 feet, and has a seating capacity for four hundred, which is about the accommodation required by the present congregation.

The Rev. Thomas Dempsey was born on December 17, 1849, in Clyman, Dodge County, Wisconsin. After acquiring a common school education, he entered St.

St. Victor's Church, Monroe, Wis.

Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, in January, 1867, where he took a full course in philosophy and theology. He was ordained priest by Bishop Heiss on June 9, 1876, and was then appointed assistant pastor to the Rev. George Willard of St. Joseph's Church at Fond du Lac. He subsequently became pastor of St. James' and St. John's at Eden and Byron, Fond du Lac County, and from there was transferred to Elba, in Dodge County. A year later he was appointed to Highland, in Iowa County, and after remaining there for eleven years received his present charge at Monroe.

The congregation of St. Francis Xavier at Adams, Green County, Wisconsin, has, since its organization into a parish by Father Sullivan in 1862, been attended as a mission from Monroe. This parish intends building a church next spring (1898), in the village of Argyle, and when the building is completed Adams will be given a resident pastor of its own.

Rev. Thos. Dempsey.

Holy Cross Church, Mt. Calvary, Wis.

THIS congregation was founded by a missionary priest, the Rev. Casper Rehrl, in 1848. The building, which was of logs and but limited dimensions, was dedicated in honor of St. Nicholas, but on June 25, 1853, Bishop Henni gave to the church its present title of the Holy Cross. On this date, too, the Rev. George Rehrl became its pastor. His successor, the Rev. Michael Deisenrieder, assumed the charge on April 14, 1856.

In 1857 Bishop Henni gave the charge of this parish to the Rev. Fathers Gregory Haas, O. M. Cap., and John Frey, O. M. Cap., granting them permission to erect a Monastery, which was to be the Mother House of the Province of St. Joseph of the Order of the Capuchins. One wing of the monastery was then built, the log church remaining as monastery chapel and parish church until 1866, when a brick structure was erected and solemnly dedicated by Bishop Henni.

In 1867 the monastery was completed, one wing being used as a college for young men aspiring to the priesthood. Unfortunately for the progress of this institution, the entire property with the exception of the church nave was destroyed by fire in December, 1868. The church was at once repaired and the monastery rebuilt, the students in the meantime being sheltered as well as circumstances would permit. This condition of affairs lasted until 1872, when St. Joseph's Hall was erected, thus providing more spacious and comfortable quarters for those residing at the monastery. Two years later the size of the church was increased. In 1881 the "Laurentianum," a large and beautiful edifice, was erected and dedicated as the College of St. Lawrence of Brundusium, by Archbishop Henni, assisted by several bishops and a great number of the clergy.

This college was founded with the view, first, to obtain and prepare candidates for the Order; second, to enable poor students of good character to qualify themselves for the priesthood; third, to give future business men a strictly Catholic moral training.

The present rector is the Rev. Antonius Wilmer, O. M. Cap., who is assisted in the various educational departments of the college by nine fathers, two lay brothers and one layman as musical director. The number of students in attendance is one hundred and twenty-five. On Sundays and holydays ten fathers, who during the week are engaged in the education of youth, are kept busy ministering to the spiritual wants of the several neighboring parishes, of which they are in charge. To this circumstance, undoubtedly, is due the fact that Catholicity has taken such firm root, the surrounding country being settled almost exclusively by people of that denomination.

Within a circuit of five miles from Calvary there are three mission churches with regular services on all Sundays and holydays, which are also attended from Mount Calvary. Of these, that of St. Joseph, established at Marshfield, Fond du Lac County, about the year 1864, is the oldest. This mission, consisting of about fifty families, also supports a parochial school, which is in charge of two Sisters of St. Agnes and has an attendance of about sixty-five scholars.

Another, St. Peter's, was organized at Summit Station in 1867. This mission, which also supports a parochial school in charge of two Sisters of the same Order, consists of about sixty families. This school has an average attendance of eighty pupils.

The third Mission is at St. Cloud, where it was established in 1870. Sixty-five families belong to this congregation, which also maintains a parochial school, having an attendance of about seventy scholars, who are under the direction of Sisters of St. Agnes.

In addition to the foregoing, there is a station of St. John the Baptist at Lamartine, Wis., where services are held every second Sunday.

The congregation at Mount Calvary consists of one hundred and sixty-six families. There is a parochial school, in charge of three Sisters of Notre Dame, who have under their direction an average attendance of one hundred and sixty scholars. Of Catholic organizations there are also quite a number, among them being the Sacred Heart Society for Men, St. Anthony's Benevolent Society, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, St. Clara Ladies' Society, St. Rose Young Ladies' Society and the Third Order of St. Francis.

The Guardian of the Monastery is ex-officio pastor of the congregation. Of the various reverend fathers who succeeded to this pastorate after the Rt. Rev. Francis Haas had served for a period of twenty years were the following: Rev. Father Ivo Prass, O. M. Cap., who assumed the charge February 17, 1876; Pacificus Berlemann, O. M. Cap.; Dominic Mersmann, O. M. Cap., October 16, 1879, to August 25, 1881; Lucas Rasch, O. M. Cap., August 25, 1881, to October 19, 1882; Anthony Rottensteiner, O. M. Cap., October 9, 1882, to March 18, 1888; Lawrence Vorwerk, O. M. Cap., March 18, 1888, to August 27, 1891; Lawrence Henn, O. M. Cap., August 27, 1891, to August 9, 1894, and Lawrence Vorweck, O. M. Cap., who assumed the charge for the second time on August 9, 1894. In 1897 the Rev. Lawrence Henn became rector again.

St. Lawrence O'Toole's Church, Mt. Hope, Wis.

THERE is but little authentic data from which history of the earlier times of the Catholic church in Mt. Hope can be obtained. The information is all of a verbal character, and very meager at that. However, it is positively known that Father Gibson built the first Catholic church at this place in the year 1860, and Father Schwaiger commenced the present new church July 4th, 1883.

For a period of twenty-three years, Mt. Hope was only a mission, being attended from Potosi, Boscobel and finally from Lancaster. Prior to 1860, Mass was read occasionally at a farmer's house.

Father Gibson was succeeded, as an attendant pastor of this mission, by the Rev. Father Verhoef. Then followed the Rev. Fathers Daniel McGinnity, Thomas P. Hodnett, Scott, McMahon, Stehle, Chas. Schraudenbach, Peter Schwaiger and M. H. McNulty, the present pastor, who, in addition to other improvements, built the new parsonage and finished and furnished the church throughout. It was on August 1, 1884, that Father McNulty took charge of St. Lawrence's congregation and it was from that date that this place has been officially recognized as a parish. The church of St. Lawrence is located in Section 11, northeast corner, Mt. Hope Township, and is about three miles from Wesley, a station on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad. The congregation consists of fifty-six families, of somewhat mixed nationality, there being Irish, German, French and Polish members, although the English and German predominate. There is a public school at Mt. Hope, which, however, is conducted as a general thing by Catholic teachers. The building occupied by this school is situated near to the church.

St. Lawrence O'Toole's Church, Mt. Hope, Wis.

The congregation of St. John's is a mission to the St. Lawrence pastorate. It was established as long ago as the year 1845, by Father Bonwell, and some five years later, that is in 1850, a small church was built by the Rev. Father Galtier. The present church was erected in 1878. The congregation, which is somewhat mixed as is that at Mt. Hope, numbers about seventy-two families; services are held there regularly on alternate Sundays and holy days, and instructions in catechism are given during the summer months on every Wednesday. There are no Catholic societies in connection with this congregation other than a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin. Since Father McNulty became pastor of St. John's, he has built a large addition to the church and remodeled and renovated the building within and without, and added new pews and a new organ to the interior furnishings. He also had a substantial fence built around the cemetery and the grounds generally improved. The congregation of St. John's is entirely out of debt and in an althogether promising condition.

The Rev. Miles H. McNulty, the present incumbent of St. Lawrence pastorate, was born June 26, 1852, at East Medway, Norfolk County, Mass. On March 19, 1862, he came with his parents to Darien, Walworth County, Wisconsin, where, on October 16 of the same year, they bought a large farm near Delavan, where they still reside. At an early age, he determined to study for the priesthood, so, in September 1874, he commenced a long and thorough course at the seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee. In September, 1879, he entered St. Mary's University, in Maryland, where he studied philosophy for two years. He then returned to St. Francis Seminary, where he completed a full course in theology, and was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. M. Heiss, Archbishop of Milwaukee, at the Seminary on June 24, 1884. His first Mass was said on the 29th of the same month at St. Andrew's Church, Delavan, after which he was appointed by the Archbishop as first resident pastor at Mt. Hope, which position he has maintained to the present day.

Rev. M. H. McNulty.

St. Ignatius Church, Mt. Horeb, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Ignatius at Mt. Horeb, Dane County, Wisconsin, was first established in the year 1894, at which time, also, the Rev. Ignatius Klein built a church. The congregation at this time consisted of but ten families. The first meeting was held February 24, 1894, there being present: Messrs. M. Rephan, F. Rephan, J. Reilly, B. Murphy, M. Cunneen, Eugene Allen and the Rev. Ignatius Klein. On December 19 of the same year, the corner-stone of the church was laid by Father Klein. On January 9, 1895, the building was also dedicated by him. On May 5, 1895, the present pastor, the Rev. J. J. Salentin, said Mass for the first time in this church. The congregation of St. Ignatius now consists of twenty-one families. During his pastorate, Father Salentin built a commodious pastoral residence at Mt. Horeb and made other improvements to the church property.

St. Ignatius' Church, Mt. Horeb, Wis.

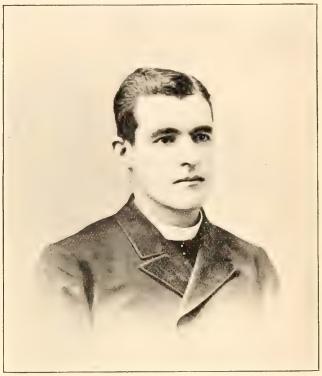
The congregation of St. Salvadore, at Perry, in Dane County, Wisconsin, is a mission of St. Ignatius, services being held there every fourth Sunday and on all holy days. The first priest to visit the Catholics at Perry was the Rev. Father Haider, who at that time said Mass in the house of Mr. John Keller. After him, the Rev. L. Conrad, at present of Milwaukee, paid occasional visits to these people, saying Mass in the different houses in the settlement. As successor to him came Father Gernbauer, under whose administration the first church was built. This was in 1856, at which time the little congregation numbered some twenty-one families. Following Father Gernbauer came the Rev. Fathers Voissem, Bernard and Foeckler, all of whom were stationed at Cross Plains, a parish some nineteen miles distant from Perry. The several pastors of St. Salvadore's congregation were the Rev. Fathers Schwaiger, Uhlimeier, Raphael (who attended from Paoli), Ambauen, Barth, Halbenkann, and Ignatius Klein, these last with the exception of Father Raphael coming from



Rev. J. J. Salentin.

Pine Bluff. The present pastor, the Rev. J. J. Salentin, attends the mission from Mt. Horeb. The congregation now consists of twenty families. A school was established and a building erected in connection with this congregation by Father Hamm in, or about, the year 1866.

The congregation of St. James at Vermont, Dane County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission from Mt. Horeb. This congregation was established in 1860 by the Rev. Father Stroka, then stationed at Mazomanie. Prior to that time, the Rev. Weinhardt of Sauk City celebrated Mass in the private houses of Catholics residing in that vicinity. Father Stroka continued to attend this church from 1860 until 1862, after which the services were held there by the succeeding resident pastors at Mazomanie, as follows: Rev. Father Walsh, from 1862 to 1863; Rev. J. Kenny, January, 1864, to October, 1864; Rev. D. V. McGinnity, October, 1864, to 1866; Father Lawrence Kenney 1866 to 1869; Rev. J. Morris, 1869 to 1874; Rev. Monaghan, for four months in 1874; the Rev. Father Mazeadue, 1874 to 1878; Rev. Father Scott, 1878 to 1879; Rev. A. Leitner, 1879 to 1886; Rev. P. J. Jones, 1886 to 1895; since the latter year, the present pastor of St. Ignatius, Father J. J. Salentin, has had charge of that mission. During the incumbency of the Rev. Father Scott, from 1878 to 1879, a very satisfactory mission was held by the Rev. Father Weninger. The congregation of St. James now consists of thirty-six families and services are held there three Sundays in every month. In the year 1893 the St. James Total Abstinence Society was founded by the Rev. P. J. Jones.

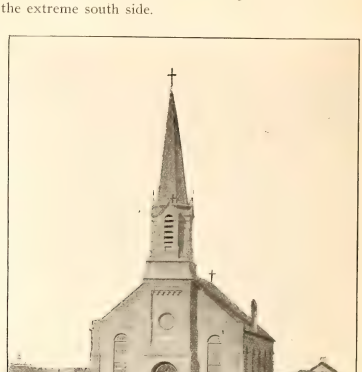
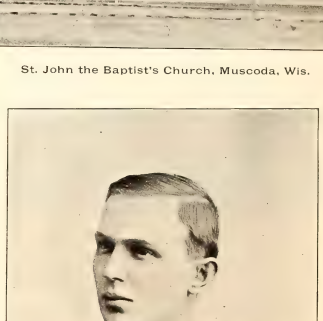
The Rev. J. J. Salentin entered the seminary at St. Francis on January 7, 1885, at the age of 22 years, and completed a full classical, philosophical and theological course at that institution on June 24, 1893, at which time he was ordained to the priesthood. On July 5, of the same year, he was appointed assistant pastor at St. Mary's Church, Racine, where he remained until October 30, 1894, when he was transferred to Sheboygan as assistant to the Rev. Father Thill. On May 1, 1895, he was appointed to the pastorate at Mt. Horeb, where he still remains.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Muscoda, Wis.

THE congregation of St. John the Baptist at Muscoda, Grant County, Wisconsin, was established in 1859, by the resident pastor from Mineral Point, who at that time attended, occasionally, to the spiritual wants of the people in that vicinity. He visited Muscoda, regularly, once each month. Thus matters progressed until the year 1875, when a parsonage was built, and the Rev. Albert Heller became the first resident pastor. Succeeding him, came the Rev. J. Seberle, who took up his residence at Muscoda in 1882. This priest was an energetic worker, and succeeded, during his residence there, in securing sufficient funds to build the present church. This was a very necessary undertaking, as the old building had become entirely inadequate to the demands put upon it by the congregation, which had greatly increased in numbers. So Father Seberle set to work to secure the necessary means, and in 1884 a new structure, 80x44 feet, constructed of solid stone, was ready to take the place of the original church. In 1888 a parochial school was established in connection with this congregation, three Sisters from Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee, being called to take charge of it. The school is now well attended, there being four Sisters in charge at the present time. The congregation here is constantly increasing in numbers, so that the present church is put to its utmost to afford accommodations for those attending the services. The property at Muscoda now covers an entire block, with the exception of two lots on the extreme south side.



St. John the Baptist's Church, Muscoda, Wis.



Rev. Leo Panoch.

The pastor in charge of this congregation also attends the missions at Avoca and Castle Rock once a week, the former place being about six miles distant from Muscoda. The church at this place, which was erected some time ago, is dedicated in honor of St. Joseph. Father Leo Panoch visits this mission as well as the Immaculate Conception, on every other Sunday. At Castle Rock he conducts services on feast days. The church at Muscoda possesses a nice set of chimes. The main edifice is in the middle of a block of solid buildings, the school and convent flanking it on the north side, while the pastoral residence is located to the south. There are five Catholic societies connected with this congregation: U. S. Society and Wisconsin Society, two Ladies' Societies, and Catholic Knights. A court of the Catholic Order of Foresters was organized in this congregation by Father Leo, on December 8, 1897, with a membership of thirty.

The Rev. Leo Panoch was born November 24, 1868. He acquired his early education in St. Vincent's Seminary, Beatty, Pennsylvania, and also in Florida, in which State he was ordained to the priesthood in St. Augustine's Cathedral September 24, 1891.

St. Matthew's Church, Neosho, Wis.

IN the year 1848, at a point about two miles from the village of Neosho, Dodge County, Wisconsin, a small log church was erected and dedicated to St. Bartholomew. This was the origin of the present parish at that place. In 1863 this building was replaced by one of stone, in which services were held regularly, though at long intervals, by the Rev. Fathers Rehrl and Deisenrieder. In the same year St. Matthew's Church, a small frame building, was erected on the present site, near the village, and dedicated by Dr. Joseph Salzmann. There were not at this time a sufficient number of Catholics residing in that part of the country to support both churches, so when the matter was referred to Archbishop Henni he decided that the entire congregation should henceforth attend services at St. Matthew's, which was visited from that time until 1867 by the resident pastors at Hartford. The Rev. D. Thill was the first resident pastor of this parish, remaining at Neosho from 1867 until 1871. He built the school house and an addition to the parsonage, besides making other improvements. His successor, the Rev. N. Schaaf, maintained the pastorate from 1871 until 1884. During his residence the church was enlarged and the interior decorated. The next pastor was the Rev. F. X. Heller, who remained from 1884 until December, 1893. On September 3, 1894, the church and contents were totally destroyed by fire, and as the season was then too far advanced to complete a new building, a basement was hurriedly finished and furnished with a temporary roof, and here during the winter months services were held regularly. Early in the following spring work was begun on the church structure, which was completed during the following summer at a cost of $8,000. The congregation of St. Matthew's numbers seventy-five families. The parochial school has a regular attendance of forty scholars, and is in charge of a lay teacher. A Ladies' Altar Society and League of the Sacred Heart are connected with this congregation.

St. Mary's Church, at Woodland, Dodge County, is attended as a mission from Neosho. The first church at this place was built in 1862, when the people living in Woodland and vicinity erected a small frame structure. The present church, however, begun in 1871, is of solid brick. It was completed and furnished during the pastorate of Father Schaaf and enlarged by the Rev. F. X. Heller. St. Mary's congregation consists of thirty-five families, mostly Germans. Services are held on every second Sunday. Of Catholic societies connected with this congregation, there are a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Society of the Apostleship of Prayer and Ladies' Altar Society.

St. Matthew's Church, Neosho, St. John's, Rubicon, St. Mary's, Woodland, Wis.

The church of St. John at Rubicon, Dodge County, is also a mission of St. Matthew's. This congregation was established by Father Thill in 1870 and now consists of fifty-four families, all of whom are German. Services are held every second Sunday. The parochial school at Rubicon is conducted by a lay teacher and has an attendance of fifty pupils. Connected with the congregation are a Ladies' Altar Society and Society of the Apostleship of Prayer.

The first church was of logs, erected in the town of Hermann, between Rubicon and Woodland, some time during the year 1854. It was at first attended from St. Lawrence and later from Hartford. In 1870 the present church was built in the village of Rubicon, and in 1885 this building was somewhat remodeled and greatly improved. In the same year, also, a two-story brick veneered schoolhouse was built under the supervision of the pastor, the Rev. Father F. X. Heller.

Rev. W. Pischery.

The Rev. W. Pischery, present pastor of St. Matthew's, was born on August 4, 1861, at New Lisbon, Wisconsin. He spent the greater part of his childhood at Beaver Dam, where he attended the parochial school until after his First Communion. When about twelve years of age he entered St. Lawrence College at Calvary, Wisconsin, which he attended for a year and a half. From that time until eighteen years of age he was clerk in a drug store at Oshkosh. In 1880 he entered the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, and after completing the usual course in classics, philosophy and theology, was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1887. He was then appointed assistant pastor at St. George's Church, Kenosha, Wisconsin, where he remained for three months. After this he was assigned successively to Pio Nono College, from 1887 until 1889; Eagle, Wisconsin, 1889 to 1891; Newburg, Wisconsin, 1891 to 1893. From the latter place he was transferred to his present charge, in December, 1893.

Holy Apostles' Church, New Berlin, Wis.

FOR some considerable time previous to the year 1855 the Catholic residents of what is now known as New Berlin, and vicinity, in Waukesha County, attended divine services at St. Mary's Church in Milwaukee, and later at the church of the Holy Trinity. In 1855, however, they concluded to organize and establish a parish, which was done, and arrangements were at once made for the erection of a church. The carrying out and completion of this work was left to a Building Committee, composed of the Rev. F. Polak, Andrew Schneider, Bernard Casper, Phillip Puetzer and Joseph Michael, and the first trustees placed in charge of the congregation's property were the Rev. Father Polak, John Schaefer and James Marks. After this church had been completed, it was attended for some time as a mission by the following pastors: F. Polak, from 1859 to 1860; John Weikmann, from 1860 to 1861; Hubert Janssen, from 1861 to 1865; William Bonenkamp, from 1865 to 1869; Peter Seibold, from 1869 to 1871, and then again Father Bonenkamp.

Holy Apostles' Church, New Berlin, Wis.

from 1871 to 1876. During the second administration of this pastor a meeting of the members of the congregation was held at which it was unanimously decided to erect a parochial school. A one-story brick veneered building was quickly erected at a cost of $583.64, and at the same time a house was purchased from Mr. Bernard Casper, to be used for the time being as the pastor's residence. The next pastor was the Rev. John Wenning, who assumed the pastorate in 1876 and remained until 1877. During his administration the present priesthouse was built, a structure which, at that time at least, was considered one of the handsomest and most commodious for many miles around. The next pastor was the Rev. Anton Foeckler, from 1877 to 1878. Then came the Rev. Joseph Metzger, who died after a six months' pastorate and is buried in the cemetery at this place. Then followed in succession the Revs. B. Edelmann, from 1878 to 1880; C. Schilling, from 1880 to 1881; William Blum, from 1881 to 1883; Joseph Moder, from 1883 to 1885; Anton Leitner, from 1885 to 1886; A. Gstach, P. D., from 1886 to 1887, Ferd. Raess, from 1888 to 1891; during the residence of this pastor at New Berlin the new church of the Holy Apostles was built, the committee having charge of the work being the Rev. F. Raess, Nicholas Stephens, Mathew Stephens, Phillip Salentin, Frederick Stigler and Nicholas Lauer. Work on the building was begun on October 23, 1888, High Mass being sung by the pastor, the cornerstone was laid on the 14th of the following May, the Rev. W. G. Miller from Waukesha celebrating High Mass and the Rev. B. Nuttmann delivering the sermon on that occasion. Later in the year the church was solemnly dedicated by the Most Rev. Archbishop M. Heiss, the Rt. Rev. Mgr. A. Zeininger delivering the sermon. This was the last church blessed by the Most Rev. Archbishop M. Heiss. The church of the Holy Apostles is a beautiful Gothic structure, having a steeple 134 feet in height, and in its general finish and interior furnishing it is probably one of the handsomest and finest structures in the State. It cost, $10,353.40 and is built of solid brick with cut stone trimmings. Father Raess exhibited much energy and zeal in behalf of this congregation, for which he did much during his residence at New Berlin. The next pastor, the Rev. A. Gardthaus, assumed the pastorate in 1891, remaining until 1893, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, the Rev. Joseph Koester. The parish now consists of about eighty families. The present trustees of the congregation are Joseph Kau, treasurer, and Mathias Beres, secretary.

Holy Apostles' School, New Berlin, Wis.

Of Societies in the parish there are: Society of the Blessed Virgin Mary for Women, established many years ago, present membership fifty-four; St. Rose of Lima Young Ladies' Society, established by the present pastor on May 24, 1896, with forty-six members, and a branch of the Family Protective Association, organized in 1895.

The Rev. Joseph Koester was born May 20, 1868, in the village of Aplerbeck, Kreiss Dortmund, Westphalia, Germany. When but twelve years of age young Joseph came with his mother and brother to America and at once settled in Watertown, Jefferson County, Wisconsin. There he attended the parochial school of St. Henry's Congregation for two years, after which he commenced his studies for the priesthood at the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, September 5, 1882. On March 22, 1890, he received minor orders. On the 14th of March he was ordained sub-deacon, on the 15th deacon, and to the priesthood on the 21st of June, 1891—the feast of St. Aloysius of Gonzaga—orders having been conferred by the Most Rev. Archbishop F. X. Katzer, D. D., of Milwaukee. After saying his first holy Mass at Watertown, he was appointed as assistant priest to the Very Rev. Father Conrad, at Holy Trinity Church, in Milwaukee, where he remained for a period of two years. He then was transferred to the pastorate of the Holy Apostles' Church at New Berlin, Wisconsin, taking charge on June 30, 1893.

On coming to New Berlin, Father Koester at once exerted every energy to effect the reopening of the parochial school, which had been closed for some considerable time. This he succeeded in accomplishing, the school being opened on September 3, 1893. The thirty-five scholars in attendance were placed in charge of Sisters of the Order of St. Francis of Assissi from St. Francis, Wisconsin. Father Koester's next move was to make a house to house visit throughout the parish, which resulted in his collecting $2,200, with which the debts of the new church, amounting to $1,335.12, were paid. Of the remainder, $423 was expended in the purchase and fitting up of handsome new pews for the church; $170 for a pulpit; $100 for two chandeliers and something over $250 for vestments and a ciborium. In addition to this, the Ladies' Society of the congregation had also invested some $250 for vestments, and the young men $125, with which a handsome confessional and furniture for the sanctuary was purchased. The church now having been handsomely cared for, a further sum of $425 was applied in making a number of necessary interior and exterior improvements on the parsonage. Father Koester next turned his attention to the erection of a new schoolhouse and sisters' dwelling, the building in use being altogether too small for the proper accommodation of the scholars in attendance. He therefore called a meeting on September 15, 1895, and presented the matter to the people in such a clear and persuasive manner that, although they had but recently expended $3,000 on the parish buildings, they decided that this new obligation should be met. A Building Committee was therefore appointed, consisting of the Rev. Joseph Koester, president; Frederick Stigler, treasurer, Matthew Puetzer, Phillip Salentin and Joseph Snyder, who superintended the erection of the present handsome and serviceable building at a cost of $3,250. This school has at the present time a regular average attendance of sixty-two children.

Rev. Jos. Koester.

Father Koester next turned his attention to the cemetery, with which nothing had thus far been done in the way of improvement; but as to accomplish such purpose would have doubtless necessitated an expenditure of a greater amount than the occasion warranted, it was concluded by the congregation, with the Archbishop's consent, to purchase a new cemetery. For this purpose, therefore, a little over an acre of land lying north of the old cemetery was bought and the same laid out and put in proper condition. This work necessitated an additional expense of $425.00, which, however, was cheerfully met by the parishioners. Furthermore, the church has been very beautifully frescoed at the cost of $500.00. This work was begun on March 7, 1898. The work was done by the well-known church fresco-decorator Mr. Paul Klose from Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Also a peal of new bells were bought by the congregation. The heaviest bell, named Nicholas-Mathias, weighs 2,100 pounds, the second bell, named Josephus, weighs 1,100 pounds, and the third one, with the name of Veronica, has a weight of 650 pounds; total weight is 5,100 pounds. They have the following tones (during accord), E, G sharp and B. They are from the Van Duzen Company (old Buckeye bell foundry), in Cincinnati, Ohio, and cost $685.00. The bells were dedicated on the 29th of June 29th, 1898, on the Patron Feast of the Church.

The New Berlin congregation has to-day a new cemetery, new church, new schoolhouse and sisters' dwelling, and a substantial and satisfactory parsonage, all of which are entirely free from debt. It is also pleasant to note that two of the sons of this congregation have taken to the vocation of priesthood—the Revs. J. J. Salentin and Julius Burbach. Father Salentin celebrated his first Mass on June 29, 1893. Father Burbach performed the same services on June 29, 1897.

Holy Trinity Church, Newburg, Wis.

THE congregation of Holy Trinity, at Newburg, Washington County, derived its origin from the mission of St. Peter, which is about three miles north of Newburg. The early history connected with this place and congregation is about as follows: In 1850 Peter Schwinn, his brother and Peter Welker bought some uncultivated farm land near a small lake, which is known now as Schwinn's Lake. On this land they erected a small log house, in which they lived while bringing the land into a proper condition for cultivation. Other settlers followed, so that soon there was a small colony in and about Newburg. These people were first attended by the Rev. M. Obermüller and Father Mayer, two Redemptorist Fathers, while the Rev. Fathers Laufhuber, Schmilling and Deisenreider also came occasionally to this place. In 1853 the Revs. Dr. Joseph Salzmann, Father Gernbauer and Father Fabian visited the Catholic families at Newburg, the services being held in the log house of Peter Schwinn.

Holy Trinity Church, Newburg, Wis.

On the occasion of one of these visits some of the settlers expressed a desire to erect a church, but Dr. Salzmann humorously remarked that the cattle were not born with which the logs for such a purpose would be drawn together. When, however, he again visited Newburg, he was astonished to find a great pile of logs awaiting his orders. So the church was built, Peter Schwinn and Peter Welker each donating eight acres of ground for church purposes. In 1855 the little church was dedicated by Dr. Salzmann. The congregation now received its first resident pastor in the person of the Rev. Simon Bartozs, who also attended the neighboring missions. He remained two years. As the congregation was now rapidly increasing, it was decided to erect a larger church, of stone. This undertaking was easily accomplished, and the building soon afterward dedicated by Bishop John Martin Henni. The congregation of the Holy Trinity was organized in 1855, in which year forty Catholic families who had settled near the Milwaukee River some time previous decided to erect a brick church and establish a congregation. This settlement was called Newburg. Under the supervision of the Rev. Father Bartozs, the church was erected, and after this a frame parsonage and a one-story building for a school. With the consent of Bishop Henni, Father Bartozs took up his residence at Newburg, also attending St. Peter's congregation as a mission. In October, 1857, the Rev. P. Wigert became pastor of the Holy Trinity, and remained until May, 1858, when the Rev. Caspar Rehrl took charge of the congregation. In January, 1862, the Rev. John Reindl assumed the pastorate, and remained until November, 1866. His successor, the Rev. G. Strickner, was at Newburg but for a short time—from October to December, 1866. Then the Rev. W. Engeln was appointed, remaining from January, 1867, to April, 1869. His successor was the Rev. M. Wenker, who again left in January, 1870. Then followed in succession the Revs. P. A. Schumacher, who stayed until March, 1871; Father M. Albers, remaining one year, from March, 1871, to March, 1872; Father Aloysius Klein, March, 1872, to April, 1873; the Rev. August Joseph Lang, 1873 to July, 1875; Father August Durst, December, 1875, to October, 1880; Father Stupfel, October, 1880, to October, 1888. Under the administration of this zealous and energetic priest, much was done for the benefit of the congregation. He bought a $700 organ for the church, in 1882 erected a brick parsonage which cost $1,500, and in 1887 built a new school house at an outlay of $3,000. His successor was the the Rev. B. Dieringer, who stayed till July, 1891, when the Rev. B. Elskamp was appointed. In the following November, the Rev. W. J. Pischery came to Newburg, remaining until December, 1893, when the Rev. Joseph Huber and the present incumbent, the Rev. B. Nuttmann, took charge of the congregation. Under his administration, the interior of the church has been renovated, and an addition to the front of the church been built. Under Rev. P. J. Stupfel, the two missions of St. Peter and St. Finbar were discontinued, and the families attending them now belong to the congregation at Newburg.

Rev. B. Nuttmann.

Rev. Jos. Huber.

Holy Trinity congregation at present consists of one hundred and twenty-seven families, and the parochial school, under the direction of the Sisters of Notre Dame, is attended by ninety-five children. Of Catholic societies to which members of this congregation belong, there are: St. Joseph's Society, Society of Christian Mothers, Young Ladies' Society, St. Agnes, two St. Aloysius' Societies, and Branch 163 of Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

In connection with Holy Trinity congregation, is St. Augustine mission, which was organized in 1855 by Messrs. Bach, Michael Weiss, Engelhard and others. To this end, Messrs. Weiss, Bach and Wolling donated thirteen acres of land. After the mission's organization, the place received occasional visits from missionary priests, who held services in the log house of Mr. Bach. In 1857 a church was erected and dedicated by the Rev. Father Bartozs. The former mission, St. Finbar, is three miles northeast of Newburg, and consisted principally of Irish families. It was organized in 1843 by Messrs. Bradley, J. Cotter, McCarthy, Safford, Hagerty, Gough, Gorman and others. At first the services were held in private houses, but in 1850 a frame church was built. During his lifetime, Father Bradley, one of the visiting priests, did much for the good and advancement of this congregation. He died and was buried at St. Finbar. The two societies connected with this congregation are: The Married Ladies' Society and Young Ladies' Society.

St. Matthew's Church, New Cassel, Wis.

THIS parish was established in 1864, when a church was erected. The first resident pastor was the Rev. Mickels, who was followed in succession by the Rev. Fathers Nicholas Nives, William Wilkens, A. Mickels, Charles Drees, J. Bertram and Francis Xavier Heller, the present incumbent. The congregation of St. Matthew's at the present time consists of about one hundred families. There are two schools in connection with the Catholic interests at New Cassel, one being the parochial school, which is conducted by two Sisters of St. Francis, and has an average attendance of ninety-five, and St. Joseph's Convent. This institution was established by the Order of Sisters of St. Francis, and is the mother house of the institution conducted by that Order at Greenfield Park. The convent was erected at a cost of $35,000. Of Catholic societies connected with St. Matthew's congregation, there are a Ladies' Altar Society; Young Ladies' Sodality; Young Men's Sodality, and a Branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

Rev. F. X. Heller.

St. Matthew's Church, New Cassel, Wis.

The congregation of St. Mathias, in the township of Auburn, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission from New Cassel. It was organized in 1862, and numbers some twenty-five families, all of whom are German. Services are held on every other Sunday. The parish school connected with this congregation is conducted by a lay teacher four months in every year. There is an Altar Society in connection with this parish.

The Rev. Francis Xavier Heller was born December 1, 1847, at Aschach on the Danube, Diocese Linz. He came to this country on August 14, 1866, and was ordained to the priesthood on August 24, 1869, at St. Francis. He at first worked successfully in the Diocese of Leavenworth, from 1869 to 1871. In the latter year he removed to La Crosse Diocese, where he was appointed to the parish at Keyesville, remaining from 1871 until 1875, after which he maintained the pastorate at Wausau from 1876 till 1879; New Cassel from 1879 to 1880; Golden Lake from 1880 to 1882; Templeton from 1882 until 1885; Neosho from 1885 till 1894; New Cassel from 1894 until the present time.

St. Stephen's Church, New Coeln, Wis.

AS long ago as the year 1845, Mass was said in the log house, owned by a man named Schneider, at or in the vicinity of the place now known as New Coeln, in Milwaukee County. Here traveling priests, as well as those located in adjacent parishes, occasionally visited until the year 1847, when the parish of St. Stephen's was founded. At about this time, and even a little prior to it, Archbishop Heiss also occasionally attended the people here. However, in this year a church was erected, of which the Rev. S. H. Kendeler was the first resident pastor. The year following the erection of the church, a parsonage and school-house were also built. The land upon which these buildings were erected, and which covers an area of five acres, was donated to the church by the Hon. P. V. Deuster of Milwaukee. Following Father Kendeler, as pastor of St. Stephen's, came successively the Rev. Fathers Michael Beitter, from March 17, 1848, to July, 1849; M. Steiger, from August 14, 1849, to April 14, 1850; S. A. Keppler, from May 12, 1850, until September 8, 1851; S. Bartosh, from December 8, 1851, to January 14, 1852; A. Tusch, from February 5, 1852, to August 4, 1852; J. Huhs, from January 30, 1853, to February 29, 1853; N. Peifer, from March 6, 1853, until September 25, 1853; J. Obermueller, from October 5, 1853, to April 17, 1856; H. Berckmann, from May 12, 1856, to June 8, 1856; M. Beitter, from June 29, 1856, until September 14, 1856; J. Stucky, from October 5, 1856, to January 4, 1857; J. Polack, from July 5, 1857, until August 26, 1859; Kilian Flasch, from December 4, 1859, until December 5, 1860; J. Reindl, from December 30, 1860, until May 31, 1861; J. Minderer, from June 23, 1861, to November 1, 1868; A. Gstach, from February 10, 1869, to April 5, 1869; T. Bruhin, from May 9, 1869, to July 11, 1875; J. Korfhage, from September 26, 1875, to October 15, 1876; S. Beck, from September 8, 1876, to March 12, 1879; G. Tuerk, from March 15, 1879, until May 9, 1879; N. Limacher, from June 5, 1879, to August 1, 1881; S. Weiss, from August 2, 1881, to July 5, 1882, who died here July 5, and was buried in St. Stephen's Cemetery; O. Groenebaum, from July 8, 1882, until January 9, 1883;

St. Stephen's Church, New Coeln, Wis.

L. Peschong, from July 22, 1883, until December 18, 1889. This pastor built a new church in 1884, a parsonage in 1886 and a school-house in 1888. He was a very zealous worker, and it was greatly to his credit that when he left the debt incurred in the erection of these buildings had been reduced by fully one half. The next pastor was the Rev. W. Frantz, who remained from December 21, 1889, to August 1, 1894. He also was an earnest worker in behalf of the church and while a resident at New Coeln added new pews, side altars and a confessional to the interior furnishings of the church. Besides this, he also reduced the outstanding debt to the extent of $3,000. His successor was the Rev. Philipp J. Klein, who took charge of the congregation on August 2, 1894. He has also done much for the good of the church, and besides erecting a handsome new high altar, and otherwise embellishing the interior of the church edifice, he has succeeded in paying off the entire debt remaining. In 1896 the congregation purchased five well located acres in the town of Oak Creek for a cemetery. It is named St. Joseph and the intention is to erect a chapel and the Way of the Cross upon the same. The present trustees of the church are Messrs. Peter Schmitz and Mathias Barbian. The congregation of St. Stephen's is at this time comprised of some sixty families. The parochial school, which is under the direction of Dominican Sisters of Racine, has an average attendance of seventy scholars. In the way of societies in connection with the congregation, there are a St. Stephen's Young Men's Society, thirty-five members: Adam Noll, president; Stanislaus Zerlinski, vice-president; N. Barbian, secretary; Martin Haase, treasurer. Married Ladies' Society of the Blessed Virgin Mary, forty-five members: Mrs. Anna Drydyk, president; Mrs. Julia Beilfus, treasurer. Young Ladies' Sodality of the Immaculate Conception, thirty members: Katie Schneider, president; Mary Dinnauer, vice-president; Emma Schmitz, secretary; Mary De Younge, treasurer; membership thirty.

Rev. Philipp Klein.

The little mission of St. James at Oak Creek, which is attended by the resident pastor from New Coeln, was established in 1857, and dedicated on November 30th of the same year. In the church, which is located on the Kilbourn road, services are held every other Sunday, the congregation, of some twenty families in all, being composed entirely of farmers.

There is a school in connection with this little community, which is conducted by a lay teacher, four months during the year, and has an average attendance of about fifteen children. The origin of this congregation, the erection of the church, and establishment of the school was all largely owing to the indefatigable efforts of Mr. S. Hagemann, who, besides giving his time and influence, subscribed a large sum of money to the undertaking. Mr. Hagemann still lives to enjoy the fruits of his liberality.

The Rev. Philipp Klein was born at Burlington, Racine County, Wisconsin. He began and finished his studies for the priesthood at the seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee. He was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. Archbishop Katzer, on July 26, 1892, in St. John's Cathedral, Milwaukee, and said his first Mass in St. Mary's Church at Burlington on the 9th day of the following month. He was then for one year assistant at St. George's Church, Kenosha, one year assistant pastor of St. Patrick's at Whitewater and was appointed to his present incumbency at New Coeln in August, 1894.

St. Alphonsus' Church, New Muenster, Wis.

THE first Catholic settlers came to New Muenster (formerly called Wheatland), in the town of Wheatland, Kenosha County, Wis., between the years 1840 and 1845, and prior to forming any organization of their own attended and helped to build the church at Burlington. This they continued to do until some time in 1847, when the resident pastors at that place visited them, saying Mass in different private houses. The St. Alphonsus congregation was organized on August 16, 1849, with thirty members, and in the same year the building of the first church was commenced. The new church was blessed by Bishop J. M. Henni, October 14, 1851. The first officers of the congregation were: Henry Toelle, president; Henry Brueggemann, treasurer; Henry Schuermann, secretary. This church, as well as the parsonage built at the same time, was of stone, the first resident pastor being the Rev. Martin Weiss, who remained from 1852 to 1854. He was succeeded by the Revs. J. B. Haslbauer and Berkmann, and in the latter part of 1855 the Rev. C. Schraudenbach assumed the duties. He left in 1857 to be followed by the Rev. James Aegidius Marschall, who remained until 1858. Then Father James Stehle was pastor from October, 1858, to March, 1859. After him followed in succession the Revs. Joseph Lutz, March, 1859, to April, 1862; James Stehle, May, 1862, to September, 1862; J. B. Haslbauer, September, 1862, to July, 1863; Henry Korfhage, September, 1863, to February, 1866; F. Diepenbrock, February, 1866, to June, 1870; J. A. Marschall, November, 1870, to May, 1872; B. Smedding, May, 1872, to July, 1872; William Wilkens, a few weeks; Nicholas M. Zimmer, November, 1872, to June, 1874; Leonard Blum, August, 1874, to October, 1876; A. Gstach, October, 1876, to July, 1879; Francis Xavier Pfaller, August, 1879, to December, 1882; J. W. Blum, February, 1883, to September, 1891; Henry Dreis, September, 1891, to March, 1894; Joseph Zalokar, pro tem., April, 1894, to July, 1894, and the present pastor, the Rev. J. H. Schiefen, who has been in charge since the latter date. Of the many improvements to the church property at New Muenster since the parish was first organized over half a century ago, the first were made by Father Zimmer, who during his administration built a frame addition to the parsonage and erected a new school which he placed in charge of Sisters of Notre Dame. The present church, a handsome Gothic structure occupying an area of 110 by 46 feet and the complete cost of which was not less than $12,000, was consecrated by Archbishop Heiss, September 8, 1885, during the pastorate of the Rev. W. J. Blum. Father Henry Dreis, who succeeded Father Blum, built an addition to the schoolhouse, procured new Stations of the Cross for the church, turned the old stone church into a concert hall and made several improvements to the sisters' house. In addition to the foregoing, the present pastor, Father Schiefen, in the summer of 1895 built a new and substantial parsonage at a cost of $2,000. The congregation of St. Alphonsus numbers one hundred and ten families.

St. Alphonsus' Church and Parsonage, New Muenster.

Attached to this parish is the mission at Wilmot, in Kenosha County. The Holy Family congregation was organized by Father Schraudenbach in 1856, when a small frame church was built. This afterwards gave way to a larger frame structure, the present church. The congregation at present numbers twenty-five families and was attended at times from Bristol and New Muenster, but now from New Muenster every other Sunday.

The parochial school at New Muenster is in charge of Franciscan Sisters of Charity from the Convent at Alverno, and has a regular attendance of seventy-one scholars. Of Catholic societies represented in the congregation there are the St. Alphonsus School Society, the members of which pay annual dues of $1.20, which goes to support the parochial school. Of this organization Frank J. Schuermann, Alphons Richter and John Lais are the officers. The St. Alphonsus Mutual Aid Society was organized in 1895, the present officers being: John T. Scherrer, president; Joseph Toelle, secretary and Frank J. Schuermann, treasurer. Of St. Mary's Married Ladies' Sodality the officers are Mmes. John Elvermann, Frank Krift and Alphons Richter. The officers of St. Rose Young Ladies' Sodality are the Misses Carrie Elvermann and Frances Tanking, and those of a branch of the Family Protective Association, B. M. Schilz, Frank J. Schuermann and Herman Hofner.

Rev. J. H. Schiefen.

The Rev. J. H. Schiefen was born December 29, 1860, at Schiefen, near Eitorf, in the government district of Coeln, Rhenish Province, Germany. He studied the classics at Eitorf, Siegburg and Essen, Germany, coming to the United States October 29, 1880. He then took a course in philosophy and theology at St. Francis' Seminary, Milwaukee, where he was ordained to the priesthood June 24, 1884. He was in charge at Kingston, Green Lake County, from August 7, 1884, to March 19, 1886, and St. Anne's Church, St. Anne, Calumet County, from March 20, 1886, to July 26, 1894.

St. Casimir's Church, Northeim, Wis.

THE Polish Catholic Congregation at Northeim, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, consists of about forty-eight families. The village of Northeim lies about one and one-half miles northeast of Newton Station, and is surrounded on all sides by a number of lofty hills. St. Casimir's Congregation was organized in 1868, at which time a frame church was erected and the first resident pastor given to these people in the person of the Rev. B. Bunzynski. Prior to the establishment of this congregation, the Catholics of Northeim had to content themselves by visiting Manitowoc when desiring to attend divine services. Father Bunzynski remained with this congregation until October 15, 1870, when he was succeeded by the Rev. F. X. Kralczynski, who stayed at Northeim until May 9, 1872, and was followed in succession by the Revs. P. Konz, from May, 1872, until August 20, 1873; Alexander Michnowski, from August 25, 1873, until December 1, 1874; Simon Wieczorek, from December, 1874, to January 16, 1877—he erected the first parsonage at Northeim; Father Goerik, from January 20, 1877, to January 15, 1878; J. Fessler, the duration of whose pastorate is not known to us, and the Rev. Fathers Rogozinski and Gulski, who held divine services in St. Casimir's during the year 1878; then came the Revs. R. A. Bukowski, from August 11, 1878, to January, 1879; Joseph Musielwicz, from January, 1879, to January 20, 1880; Aenitas Goch, from December 22, 1880, to June 26, 1881; George Fessler, from June, 1881, to April, 1882; Felix Ozechowski, from April, 1882, to July 25, 1884; J. Dutkiewicz, from December 29, 1885, to January 12, 1887; J. Horbaczewski, from October 2, 1887, to June 25, 1888; John Maczynski, from March 7, 1889, to April 26, 1891; Z. Luczycki, from May 24, 1891, to January 16, 1893; Henry Cichocki, from February 19, 1893, to May 18, 1893, and the present rector, the Rev. Ignatius Paluch, who took charge of St. Casimir's Congregation on the latter date.

St. Casimir's Church, Northeim, Wis.

Rev. Ignatius Paluch.

The loss of the church by fire on July 21, 1880, badly crippled the congregation for some time. At a meeting held on the 18th of the following month, however, it was decided to erect a new brick church, 70x40 feet, with a steeple 80 feet high. This building was completed and edicated in 1881 by the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss. The congregation of St. Casimir's at the present time comprises forty-eight families, thirty-eight of whom are Polish and the rest German. At one time this congregation numbered nearly twice as many, but in recent years many of the settlers disposed of their farms and moved away, as a result of which the congregation became greatly diminished. The parochial school connected with St. Casimir's was established in 1874, the instruction at that time being given by lay teachers. At the present time, however, the resident pastor takes personal charge of the school, giving instruction to the thirty children who comprise the general attendance. The entire church property includes an area of several acres of land, part of which is set aside and properly arranged for cemetery purposes. Upon this property stands the church and parsonage, the former in close proximity to the cemetery. The present school building was formerly used as a parsonage, but on the erection of the residence it was remodeled and fitted up to suit the purposes for which it is now used. The trustees of St. Casimir's at the present time are Messrs. Walenty, Stefaniek and Xavier Bonk.

The Rev. Ignatius Paluch, present rector of St. Casimir's congregation at Northeim, was born at Galicia, Austria, in 1842. He acquired his education in the schools of his native country, completing his studies for priesthood at Lemberg, where he was ordained in 1883 by Archbishop Severin von Morawski. In 1893 he came to America, where he worked as assistant priest for a short time. In May of the same year he joined the Milwaukee diocese as rector of his present congregation.

St. Jerome's Church, Oconomowoc, Wis.

THE Congregation of St. Jerome's, at Oconomowoc, Waukesha County, Wisconsin, was established about thirty-six years ago. The first pastor to visit Oconomowoc as a mission was the Rev. Father Hobbs, who came there from his pastorate at Mapleton. He was succeeded as visiting pastor by Father Vahey, also, at the time of his attendance, the pastor at Mapleton. The first resident pastor given the Catholics at Oconomowoc was the Rev. Father Allen, who came there about twenty-six years ago. He remained there but for a very short time, when he was succeeded by Father Scott, who remained for about two and one-half years. His successor was the Rev. Father Casey, who remained for a similar period, after whom the present incumbent, the Rev. Hugh McMahon, assumed the pastorate, which he maintained continuously for twenty-two years. The congregation is composed of about eighty families.

In the way of Catholic organizations there are connected with St. Jerome's a Temperance Society and a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, of which James Moran is president and Judge Rogan, secretary.

The Rev. Hugh McMahon, pastor of St. Jerome's at Oconomowoc, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, on November 2, 1823. His parents were Hugh and Bridget (Donnelly) McMahon. He commenced the study of Latin and Greek at an early age with a private teacher, under whose supervision he remained for about two years. Then he entered St. Patrick's College at Armagh, where he remained for six years, completing his classical course. On leaving Armagh he went to All Hallows Seminary in Dublin, where he passed the examination in logic. He then read philosophy for two years in the same institution, and was also, while there, affiliated with the Right Rev. Francis Patrick Kenrick, Bishop of Philadelphia. He came to the United States in 1844 and went to Philadelphia, where he entered the Seminary of St. Charles Borromeo. There he studied theology for four years under the Lazarist Fathers, who then had charge of St. Charles Seminary. He was ordained to the priesthood on July 16, 1848, by the Most. Rev. Peter Richard Kenrick, Archbishop of St. Louis, who was then on a visit to his Right Rev. brother, Bishop of Philadelphia. The Archbishop on that day ordained many other deacons to the priesthood. His first mission was as pastor of the congregation at Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, where he remained for one year. From this place he was transferred to Beaver Meadows, where he remained for two years. He was then called to Philadelphia, where in 1852 he built St. Bridget's Church at the Falls of Schuylkill. This is a really magnificent structure, and the site upon which it is erected one of the most beautiful in the city of Philadelphia. He remained at the head of this pastorate for four years. In 1855 he volunteered for the West, coming to Bishop Henni of Milwaukee, and has remained in the diocese and archdiocese for the past forty-two years. His first appointment on coming here was at the Cathedral of St. John's, in Milwaukee, where he remained, however, for but a few months, when he was appointed to attend all of the missions around Madison. These were at Sun Prairie, Cottage Grove, Deerfield, Dayton, Fitchburg and Oregon. During his administration of these missions he built a church and parsonage at Fitchburg, and while not the actual promoter of all, was the indirect cause of the erection of a church and other buildings at all of the other missions under his charge at that time. After two years in this work he was transferred to the pastorate at Chilton, then county seat of Calumet County. There he built St. Augustine's Church and the parochial residence. He also bought for the congregation the tract of land for the cemetery and made many other valuable improvements to the property. He was the first resident pastor appointed to the parish of Chilton and remained as such from seven to eight years. He was next appointed to the pastorate at Cascade and its attendant missions. During the three years of his residence at this place he made numerous improvements, not only at the home parish, but at each of the missions under his charge. He next went to Cedarburg, where he built the magnificent church of St. Francis Borgia.

St. Jerome's Church, Oconomowoc, Wis.

Rev. H. McMahon.

This structure is built entirely of sandstone and is considered one of the handsomest, in point of architecture, in the state. He also built a parsonage and made several other improvements during the six years of his residence there. In 1875 Archbishop Henni transferred him to the pastorate at St. Jerome's at Oconomowoc, of which he is still in charge. In spite of an exceedingly active life of nearly seventy-four years, Father McMahon is still enjoying the best of health. Among the improvements made by Father McMahon since coming to Oconomowoc is the building of the present handsome brick edifice at that place, considered among the finest in the archdiocese.

Holy Mother of Consolation Church, Oregon, Wis.

THE Holy Mother of Consolation congregation at Oregon, Dane County, Wisconsin, was organized in the year 1856. A few years prior to that date, the Rev. F. X. Etschmann, then pastor of St. Raphael's Church, Madison, attended to the spiritual wants of the Catholics at this place. The parish comprises the townships of Fitchburg, Oregon, Dunn and Ruthland, all of which are in Dane County. The Rev. Hugh McMahon, now of Oconomowoc, was the first pastor appointed to the congregation, taking charge of the same in the year of its organization. In the summer of the year following, he built a frame church and parsonage in the township of Fitchburg, which is about two miles distant from the present village of Oregon. At that time the parish was known as the Fitchburg congregation and so continued to be until 1885, when the new church was built in Oregon village. Father McMahon was succeeded as pastor of this church by the Rev. Father Murphy, early in 1858, who remained for nearly six years. Then the Rev. James Colton became its pastor, and he, after two years, was succeeded by the Rev. Wm. O'Connell, whose stay was rather brief, being somewhat less than a year. Rev. Father Hobbs took charge of the Parish in July, 1866, and remained until March, 1869, when he was succeeded by the Rev. James O'Farrell, who was pastor from that time until the spring of 1877. His successor was the Rev. J. A. Butler, who was replaced in September, 1878, by Father A. J. Gerhard, who maintained the office from October, 1878, until August, 1882. In September of that year, the Rev. P. B. Knox, having taken holy orders a few months previous to that time, was appointed to the pastorate. By this time, both the church and parsonage had become delapidated; besides this, the church was too small to accommodate the requirements of a growing and prosperous congregation. Another difficulty arose in the fact that part of the lot on which the church buildings stood was used as a cemetery, and this, too, was sadly in need of extension. With these facts in sight, it became evident that something would have to be done in the way of securing a more eligible and commodious site. Now as the land adjacent to the church property was not for sale, it became necessary for the people to make a choice between a new location and that of erecting new buildings on the old site, the whole of which was badly needed to enlarge the cemetery. Here a division arose among the congregation, some of whom were in favor of one plan and some of the other. Hence, quite a difficulty arose, and it was nearly three years before a final decision was arrived at, when a majority of the congregation decided in favor of a site in the village of Oregon. These were three years of mental and physical strain to the young priest, who had many difficult and trying situations to overcome in order to bring about a satisfactory result. The final decision of the congregation having been made, Father Knox secured a nice plot of ground, some five acres in extent, on the west side of North Main Street, in the village of Oregon, and began work at once on the new church. The foundation of this building was completed in the fall of 1885, and the superstructure erected during the following summer. The new edifice was dedicated by the Most Rev. Archbishop M. Heiss on September 26, 1886. Artistically, the church is everything that could be desired, and its interior is commodious and well arranged. When completed it had cost $12,000. Father Knox remained with this congregation until the spring of 1888, when he was transferred to St. Patrick's Church at Madison. The next pastor appointed to the Oregon parish was the Rev. P. J. Lavin, who remained in charge from 1888 until 1889, when, on July 26 of the later year, the present pastor, the Rev. M. A. Condon, assumed the duties. At the time that the new church was erected, Father Knox was of the opinion that it would be too heavy a burden on the congregation to also attempt the erection of a parsonage, and as a result, he, as well as his successor, lived in a rented house in the village. When Father Condon came, however, he found the parishioners both anxious and willing to build a home for their pastor, so he immediately went to work and a few days before Christmas in that year had the satisfaction of moving into a handsome and thoroughly appointed parsonage, which had been erected at a cost of $3,000. The following year the grounds round about this building were greatly improved, shade trees set out, and other effects produced, which make it one of the most tasty residences in the village. The church property at Oregon is entirely free from debt, and improvements which are added to it from time to time bid fair to make it one of the representative parishes in the diocese. The congregation of the Holy Mother of Consolation consists of one hundred and ten families of six hundred souls.

Holy Mother of Consolation Church, Oregon, Wis.

Rev. M. A. Condon.

The Rev. Michael A. Condon was born of Irish parents, at Hustisford, Dodge County, Wisconsin, December 1, 1855. His boyhood days were spent on the farm, where he received the common school education afforded in that locality. When the Sacred Heart College of Watertown was opened in September, 1872, he was among the first students who entered that institution, remaining there for five years, and completing his classical course in June, 1877. In September of that year, he entered the seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he took a four years' course in philosophy and theology. There he received his sub-deaconship and deaconship, respectively, on April 2 and 3, 1881, from the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss. He was ordained to the priesthood in the Seminary Chapel by Bishop F. X. Krautbauer, on June 26 of the same year. His first mission after ordination was at Mapleton, in Waukesha County, where he was pastor for eight years. In 1889, he was transferred to Oregon, Dane County, where he is at present located as pastor of the congregation of the Holy Mother of Consolation.

Our Lady of Angels' Church, Osceola, Wis.

THE parish at Armstrong P. O., Wisconsin, about nine miles east from Eden Station on the Northwestern railroad, was founded about forty years ago. The first church built at this place was erected under the supervision of Father Dale and dedicated in honor of St. Matthew. The entire list of pastors attending this congregation from the beginning, is not forthcoming at the present time, the names of quite a number failing to appear on any of the parish records now extant. However, we find that prior to the year 1870, the Catholics in this vicinity were attended by Fathers Dale, Davitt, Matthews, and Hannan of Darlington. Subsequent to that date, the following reverend gentlemen succeeded one another in charge of St. Matthew's congregation: The Rev. Father W. A. Croak, from January, 1870, to June, 1871; Francis Spath, from June, 1871, to February, 1872; T. J. Quin, from February, 1872, to October, 1872; J. H. Jacobs, from October, 1872, to June, 1876; Francis Baroffi, from June, 1876, to December, 1877; E. J. Goss, from December, 1877, to June, 1881, and C. H. Horan, from June, 1881, to May, 1883. During the pastorate of Father Horan, the present church, a neat brick structure, costing about seven thousand dollars, was built, its dimensions being ninety by forty feet, retaining for the time being the name of St. Matthew's. Later this was changed to the Church of Our Lady of Angels. Father Horan was succeeded by the Rev. Fathers James F. O'Neil, who remained at Armstrong from May, 1883, to August, 1885. Father O'Neil, while a resident there, underwent a serious sickness from which he finally died, and his remains lie buried in the little cemetery near to the church. Over his grave was erected a neat marble cross with the inscription: "Here lies till the resurrection morn, Thos. F. O'Neil, a Priest of the Most High God. May he rest in peace. Amen." The cross was erected at the expense of his brother priests, under direction of Rev. J. T. O'Leary, those priests previously having attended this parish and mission. To fill the vacancy caused by the death of Father O'Neil, the Rev. N. B. Norton was appointed, assuming the duties on the 23d of August, 1885, and remaining until August, 1889. While at Armstrong, Father Norton made several improvements to the church, among which are included a new high altar, which cost five hundred dollars; he also purchased new pews for the church. Father Norton was succeeded by the Rev. J. T. O'Leary, who assumed the charge on August 23, 1889. He left again in June, 1893, prior to which time he made many valuable improvements on church, parsonage and premises. During his administration also, the parish increased in numbers and prospered more than in any previous period of its existence. Father O'Leary's successor was the Rev. Charles Drees, who came to Armstrong in 1893 and left in the June following. He was followed by the Rev. D. O'Donovan, from July, 1894, to March, 1896, at the conclusion of whose pastorate Our Lady of Angels was attended as a mission until August of that year by the Rev. E. Meyer. On the 23d of that month the present rector came to Armstrong.

Our Lady of Angels' Church, Osceola, Wis.

Rev. M. E. Downs.

The Rev. M. E. Downs, present rector of Our Lady of Angels, was born in the city of Delavan, Wisconsin, in July, 1869, and attended the High School of that city. He then entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he spent nine years in preparation for the priesthood, to which he was ordained on the 17th of June, 1894, by the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer. Father Downs said his first holy Mass in the city of Delavan at St. Andrew's Church, soon after which he was appointed to act as assistant pastor of St Patrick's Church at Whitewater, Wisconsin. After remaining at that place for two years, he was transferred to his present pastorate. When Father Downs arrived at Osceola, he found that parish without a parsonage, the one there having been burned down during the previous March. The people, however, were willing and anxious to furnish their pastor with a suitable dwelling, and so in the course of the year following a handsome new residence was erected and furnished with all of the modern appliances, including a furnace. This, though a somewhat costly undertaking (eighteen hundred dollars), was promptly paid for, so that to-day the pastoral residence stands an ornament to the parish and without a cent of debt upon it. In the meantime, the church interior was neatly frescoed at an additional expense of two hundred and fifty dollars. The congregation of Our Lady of Angels at the present time numbers three hundred and fifty souls.

The Church of the Sacred Heart of Jesus at Dundee, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, is a mission, situated about five miles from Osceola, in the same township. It was organized and founded by the Rev. Francis Baroffi about the year 1877, and has been attended by the same pastors as those in charge of the mother parish. There are about one hundred members belonging to this congregation. Services are held at the Sacred Heart every other Sunday, or every two weeks.

St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

THIS parish was established in the year 1868, which time it was visited by the Rev. Nicolaus Stehle. From July of that year to September, 1869, the Rev. M. Marco attended to these people, and it was during his administration that the first church, an unpretentious frame building, was erected. His successor, the Rev. George Willard, remained with this congregation until September, 1870, which, though but a very short time, enabled him to build a very comfortable parsonage. The next pastor was the Rev. John Gmeiner, who was a resident of South Oshkosh, from October, 1870, until March, 1871. Then the Rev. John Reindl became incumbent, continuing as such until December 13, 1891, when he died very suddenly. Father Reindl was active in making improvements to the property, and, among other things, during his pastorate veneered the entire church structure, redeemed the church property from the hands of the sheriff, added a steeple to the church, built a school-house and bought several lots. His successor, the Rev. M. Joerger, D. D., remained from 1892 until 1893, at which time the Rev. A. Wibbert, present pastor of St. Vincent's, took charge. The congregation now consists of some five hundred families. Several School Sisters from Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee, are in charge of the parochial school at this place, which has a regular attendance of about five hundred scholars. Of Catholic societies connected with this congregation there are, the St. Vincent de Paul Men's Society; St. Joseph's Society; St. Boniface Society; a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin; Schutzgesellschaft Society; a court of the Catholic Order of Foresters; St. Mary's Married Ladies' Society; St. Mary's Young Ladies' Sodality; St. Aloysius Boys' Society, and St. Agnes Girls' Society.

The Rev. A. Wibbert was born in Stadtlohn, Westphalia, Germany, in 1844. Acquiring his ordinary education at the parochial and common schools of that country, he pursued his classical studies in the University at Muenster, Westphalia. He then came to the United States, completing a course in philosophy in Cincinnati, O., and also theology, in Montreal, Canada. He was ordained to the priesthood April 16, 1876, at Leavenworth, Kansas. Following ordination he was appointed to the charge of fourteen missions in that State, besides the pastorate at Selina, where he resided. This missionary field extended over an area of two hundred and fifty miles in length and sixty miles on either side of the Union Pacific Railway. In 1881 he left Kansas, owing to the ill effects of the malarial climate upon him, and took charge of the parish of St. Michael's at Dotyville, in the Archdiocese of Milwaukee. From there he was transferred to Platteville and thence to Oshkosh, where he assumed the pastorate in November, 1893.

St. John the Evangelist's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

THE new church of St. John the Evangelist, at Oshkosh, was duly dedicated on June 13, 1897, the services being conducted by the Rev. Father A. Schinner, of Milwaukee, private secretary to Archbishop Katzer. The sermon was delivered by the Very Rev. James J. Keogh, of St. John's Cathedral.

This valuable and welcome addition to ecclesiastical architecture at Oshkosh is located on Thirteenth street, between Iowa and Michigan streets. The front wall of the structure is built of stone, the sides of which, from a point slightly above the grade line, being of wood. The building occupies an area of 92x66½ feet, and furnishes an ample seating capacity for four hundred people. The entire height of the building from the grade line to the center of the building is eighty-eight feet. The interior construction consists of four arches, all of which converge towards a large central dome. The height of the auditorium is twenty-nine feet. The interior is also furnished with a gallery eighteen feet in width, which runs across the rear of the auditorium. The windows are of handsome designs in stained glass, and the pews and high altar of red oak, finished in the natural wood. The entire cost of the structure, exclusive of interior finishings, was in the neighborhood of eleven thousand dollars.

St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

Rev. A. Wibbert.

St. Vincent de Paul's School.

The congregatioin of St. John the Evangelist is the result of a division among the people belonging to St. Vincent's Church, which, until 1893, comprised a parish composed of both English and German-speaking people. In that year, however, the English members obtained permission to erect a church of their own, of which Father Morrissey became pastor, preaching his first sermon to the new organization on the first Sunday in August, 1893, on which occasion he occupied the pulpit of St. Vincent's, as he did, in fact, until some time later, when the new church was completed. In October, 1894, the parsonage was erected, although somewhat delayed by an incendiary fire on September 28, which almost totally destroyed the entire frame-work. The congregation of St. John's now consists of about one hundred families.

St. John the Evangelist's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

The Rev. J. Morrissey, pastor of St. John the Evangelist, Oshkosh, was born near Appleton, Outagamie County, in 1859. In 1873 he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, and was ordained to the priesthood from that institution after having completed the usual course in the classics, philosophy and theology. Father Morrissey said his first Mass in Appleton, in the church where he received his first communion. After ordination, he filled the chair of English literature and mathematics in the Seminary of St. Francis, which position he left after two years to accept that of assistant pastor at St. John the Evangelist's.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Paris, Wis.

THE present church of St. John the Baptist, at Paris, Wis., was built in the year 1859, the Rev. Father Beiter having charge of the congregation at that time. Nine years previous to the erection of this church the congregation of St. John's had been established by a small colony of Catholics who had settled in the town of Paris. These people held occasional meetings for divine service in an old log house some five miles from the site of the present church, continuing to do so until such a time as the increase in the Catholic population of that neighborhood warranted them in attempting to build a church of their own. The congregation, when first organized, numbered about fifty families, and was attended by priests from Brighton, among them being the Rev. Fathers Beiter, J. M. Albers, J. M. Heiss, and afterwards, alternately, by the Revs. Reinhardt and Gernbauer. The church built in 1859 was a plain and substantial building, which, complete, cost in the neighborhood of $2,500. Thus matters ran along until the year 1870, when the congregation had assumed such proportions that it was deemed advisable to obtain a resident pastor. They therefore set to work and built a comfortable parsonage, of which the Rev. J. Reindl was the first occupant. He was succeeded in turn by the Revs. N. M. Zimmer, Joseph Voissem and J. Welter, all of whom were zealous in promoting the spiritual as well as material interests of the parish. The next step in the scale of progression taken by this enterprising congregation was to erect a suitable building for school purposes. So, in the year 1877, under the supervision of the pastor, Father Welter, a building was erected and a parochial school established and placed in charge of Franciscan Sisters from Manitowoc. Since that time the school has been persistently maintained, although there were occasions when, financially speaking, it became a burden upon the limited number of families to whose liberality its continuance was due. After the Rev. J. Welter, Father Theodore Jacobs became pastor of St. John's, and he was followed in succession by the Revs. B. Smedding, B. Wenning, August Gardthaus, Philip Vogg, Bernard Weyer, Ignatius Klein, W. Lette, Charles Drees, A. Mueller and J. M. Bach. After eight months of hard labor in this parish, Father Smedding was called to rest and his remains now lie in the Paris Catholic Cemetery. Father Welter, also, beloved for his many endearing qualities, died after a three years' pastorate of zealous and fruitful labor in this congregation. Under the administration of the Rev. Fathers Weyer and Mueller many needed and desirable improvements were made to the church property. The congregation at present consists of about forty-eight families, part German and part English. There is also a mission at Dover, which is attended from Paris, and consists of some forty families. St. John's parochial school has an enrollment of about thirty-five scholars. Of Catholic organizations connected with this congregation there are, the Blessed Virgin Sodality, and Young Ladies' Sodality.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Paris, Wis.

Rev. N. L. Freiman.

The Rev. N. L. Freiman, present rector of St. John's, was born at Holy Cross, Ozaukee County, Wis., on November 18, 1868. When nineteen years of age he entered college at Mt. Calvary, Fond du Lac County, with the intention of preparing himself for the priesthood. He remained there for a year and a half and then went to St. Francis Seminary, Milwaukee, where he completed his classical, philosophical and theological courses, graduating in June, 1895. He said his first Mass on the 23d of the same month, and when, shortly after, the pastorate at Belgium, Wis., became temporarily vacant, was appointed to fill the place. After four months there he was appointed to his present charge as pastor of St. John the Baptist's congregation, at Paris, Wis.

St. Mary's congregation at Kansasville, Racine County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission by the resident pastor from Paris. This mission was organized about twenty-eight years ago, by the Rev. Dr. Joerger, who at that time attended the Catholics at Kansasville from Waterford. The congregation here is largely Irish, and consists altogether of some thirty-four families. Services are held at St. Mary's on every Sunday. There is connected with this congregation, St. Mary's Altar Society, having forty members, and a Catholic Temperance Union, with one hundred members. For twenty-four years following its organization, this mission had a regular resident pastor of its own, but, for some reason or another, the membership has so fallen off that, for some time past, it has been impossible for those remaining to support a resident priest.

St. Mary's Church, Pewaukee, Wis.

THE first Catholic settlers to locate at Pewaukee, Waukesha County, Wisconsin, were the families of William and Alexander Caldwell, who came there in 1843. At that time the nearest church was located at Monches, to which place these people went to attend divine services. Monches was at that time attended as a mission by Rev. Father Morrissey, who resided at Fond du Lac, Wis. In 1845 the old church was built at Brookfield, to which the Pewaukee people attached themselves, and it was in the cemetery connected with that mission that the deceased members of the Pewaukee settlement were buried until 1875. As previously stated, the first priest under whose administration the Caldwells and other settlers came, was the Rev. Father Morrissey. His successor was the Rev. Father Colton, who was resident pastor at Menominee, now called Templeton, and he was followed successively, until 1858, by the Rev. Fathers Colton, Dumphy, H. Roche, and Hagerty, all of whom served the mission from Menominee. From 1858 until 1865 the spiritual wants of the Catholics at Pewaukee were administered by Fathers O'Niel, Pettit and Vahy, all of whom visited the mission from Waukesha. From 1865 to 1874 the pastorate was administered to by the Rev. Fathers Kerwin, Fitzgibbon and Tiernan, who were located at Menominee. Then the Rev. D. F. Thill, resident pastor at Waukesha, attended the Pewaukee Congregation until 1879, when he was succeeded by the Rev. N. D. Becker, who is still rector of the parish.

St. Mary's Church, Pewaukee, Wis.
(In 1860, 1880 and 1896.)

Some fifteen years subsequent to the arrival of the Caldwells at Pewaukee, the Catholic settlers in that locality purchased the public school building there, using it from that time until 1867 for church purposes. In the latter year, however, a small stone structure was completed, the location selected for it being on the northwest side of the village. The corner-stone for this church was laid on the 14th day of July, 1868, by the Very Rev. Martin Kundig, Vicar-General of the diocese of Milwaukee. On that occasion a number of ecclesiastical celebrities were present, among them the Rev. H. Quigly, D. D., and the Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, late Bishop of Green Bay, the former preaching the English and the latter the German sermon. There were also present the Rev. Pastor, Thadeus Kerwin, the Rev.

Rev. N. D. Becker.

Fathers S. P. Lalumiere, E. O'Connor, T. Fitzhenry, T. Quinn, H. Roche, and Kilian Flasch, late bishop of La Crosse.

In 1869 Father Fitzgibbon succeeded the Rev. Thadeus Kerwin as pastor of St. James Church at Sussex, or Templeton, Wisconsin, from which place Pewaukee was attended. He made several improvements to the mission property, soon after which the building was dedicated. Father Fitzgibbon was succeeded as pastor by the Rev. Father Tierney, after which the congregation at Pewaukee was attended from Waukesha. After the death of the Rev. E. O'Connor, in the spring of 1874, the Rev. D. F. Thill was appointed pastor of the Pewaukee Congregation, holding services there twice a month. This he continued to do until the latter part of 1879. Under his prudent and zealous administration, the property now used for the cemetery was bought, and the pastoral residence erected. In the spring of 1879, deeming it to be for the best interest of the congregation, Father Thill encouraged the people to build a parsonage and secure a resident pastor of their own. Acting upon this suggestion, work was immediately begun on a suitable building, which was quickly completed, and on the 31st of August, 1879, the Rev. N. D. Becker officiated in St. Mary's as first resident pastor. At this time the congregation numbered about thirty-five families.

With this impetus the parish kept up its healthy growth, so that by the fall of 1887 the church had become too small for the members of the congregation. The question agitated for the erection of a larger structure resulted in the unanimous decision to tear down the old structure, with the exception of the longitudinal side walls, and the new and present one was erected. The entire building is of Waukesha stone, justly famed a handsome material, which of late years has been much in vogue with those erecting large and attractive buildings. The property, as it now stands, is valued at $25,000. The church was dedicated by the Most Rev. Michael Heiss, on the 29th of November, 1888, at which time, also, his Grace consecrated the bell. The congregation of St. Mary's now numbers in the neighborhood of one hundred and thirty families. At the present time the pastor is contemplating the erection of a large hall and school-house. Of Catholic organizations connected with St. Mary's there is a Society of the Sacred Heart, Children of Mary's Society, and Young Ladies' Sodality, and Young Men's Society.

The first settlers in the vicinity of Duplainville, Waukesha County, Wisconsin, were the families of Messrs. Farber, Genz, Jannes, Dick, Nettesheim, Huertgen and Linder, who arrived there in 1848. Eleven years later the first church was built at this place, under the supervision of Father Weiss, who had for some considerable period attended Duplainville as a mission from Fussville. This building when completed was dedicated by the Right Rev. Martin Henni, the Rev. Joseph Salzmann preaching the sermon on that occasion. After Father Weiss, the Rev. Father Mueller, his successor at Fussville, attended the mission. His successor was the Rev. Father Deberge, who was located at Waukesha. From 1870 to 1879, the parish was attended from Milwaukee by the Capuchin Fathers, Father Daniel being the first of these to assume the charge. In 1876 Father Dominic, who was then the visiting pastor, built a new church. From 1879 until the present time, this congregation, which now consists of some fifty families, has been attended by the Rev. Father Becker from Pewaukee. There are three organizations connected with this congregation, the Catholic Muetter Verein, St. Mary's Young Ladies' Sodality, and St. Aloysius Young Men's Sodality.

The Rev. N. D. Becker, present pastor of St. Mary's at Pewaukee, was born at Neosho, Dodge County, Wisconsin, on the 30th of September, 1856. He received his primary education under his father's instruction, in the parochial schools of Neosho. At the age of thirteen he entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, graduating with the class of 1879. On March 13, 1878, he received tonsure and the minor orders, from Archbishop Henni. On March 29, 1879, he was ordained sub-deacon, and on the following day deacon, by Bishop Heiss. On August 3d of the same year, having arrived at the age of 22 years and 10 months, he was ordained to the priesthood in the Convent Chapel at La Crosse by Bishop Heiss. After ordination Father Becker took charge of his present pastorate August 31, 1879, and has labored earnestly and persistently in behalf of his parishioners from that time until the present.

The parish of St. Mary's was incorporated on August 3, 1883, the present lay officers being Mr. Alex. Caldwell, secretary, and Mr. Jacob Brandt, treasurer.

St. Mary's Church, Pine Bluff, Wis.

FROM 1852 until 1854, the congregation of St. Mary's at Pine Bluff, which was organized in the former year, was attended by the Rev. Adalbert Inama, who was the resident pastor at Roxbury. From 1854 until 1855 the Rev. Max Gaertner of Sauk City had charge of the congregation, and from 1855 until 1861 the Rev. Lawrence Conrad attended that place from Cross Plains. Others ministered to the spiritual wants of these people from that period until in 1867, when the Rev. Joseph Hamm was appointed as first resident pastor of the church, at Pine Bluff, which had been dedicated in honor of St. Mary. In 1868 Father Hamm erected a parsonage and established a school. His successor, the Rev. Schwaiger, had charge of the congregation from 1871 to 1874. He also made some improvements to the church property at Pine Bluff, among other things erecting a Sisters' dwelling house at that place. In 1874 the Rev. Father Uhlmeier was appointed to the pastorate, remaining until 1876, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Andreas Ambauen, who remained until 1881. Then followed the Rev. L. Barth from 1881 to 1882; the Rev. J. E. Halbenkann from 1882 until 1887; the Rev. Ign. Klein from 1887 to 1895; the Rev. Michael Wenker from 1895 to 1896, and the present rector, the Rev. B. Weyer, who assumed the pastorate on the 27th of September, 1896. During the pastorate of Father Halbenkann, a new parochial school was built, and while Father Klein resided at Pine Bluff the school was enlarged and a new church erected. The congregation of St. Mary's now comprises seventy-two families. The parochial school, in charge of three Sisters of St. Francis from the Convent at Silver Lake, has an attendance of forty scholars. Of Catholic organizations connected with this congregation there are a St. Mary's Total Abstinence Society, St. Mary's Society for Women, St. Rose's Young Ladies' Sodality, St. Ignatius Young Men's Society, and St. Joseph's Society for Men.

St. Mary's Church, Pine Bluff, Wis.

Rev. B. Weyer.

The Rev. Bernard Weyer was born on May 24, 1861, and ordained to the priesthood June 29, 1885. He was appointed rector of the Catholic congregation at Paris, Kenosha County, in 1885; rector of the congregation at Richfield in 1887; pastor of the congregation at Le Roy in 1891, and was appointed to his present pastorate at Pine Bluff in 1896.

St. Mary's Church, Platteville, Wis.

LIKE many other earlier Catholic settlers in the Northwest, the people living at or about the point where Platteville is now located received occasional visits from traveling priests who held Divine Services in one or another of their homes. In 1845, however, the first church, a small frame structure, was erected at that place, from which time the spiritual wants of the settlers were more regularly attended to. The corner-stone of the present brick structure was laid by Bishop Henni, about the year 1870, the estimated cost of the building complete being placed at $15,000. The original church is still in existence, and at present is used as a dwelling. The first pastor who had charge of this congregation was the Rev. Father Gibson, he being succeeded at different intervals by the Rev. Fathers De Vivalde, O'Connor, Vossen, Exsel, Joerger, Albrecht, Cleary, Gmeiner, Miller, Gerhardt, Wibbert, Vogt, and the present rector, the Rev. E. Allen.

The congregation at the present time numbers about three hundred souls. Of Catholic societies in the parish there are two, a Ladies' Rosary Society, and a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

The birthplace of Father Allen is Ireland, where he spent his early childhood. He then removed with his parents to England, where they lived for about nine years in Liverpool. He then came to the United States, and a few years after his arrival he entered the ministry of the Episcopal church. His religious views were what is strictly known as High Church, and soon after coming in contact with the practical side of life the untenable ground and utter inconsistency of the religious position he had assumed became most forcibly apparent to him. Accordingly, he made profession of the Catholic faith, and applied for admission to the priesthood, to which, after a few years of probation and study, he was ordained by Bishop Henni, in January, 1868. After remaining with the Bishop at St. John's Cathedral in Milwaukee for a few months, he was appointed to the pastorate at Beaver Dam. Previous to his present charge he was pastor of St. Joseph's Church at Waupun, where he at the same time acted as Chaplain of the Catholic inmates of the State Prison. After seven and a half years of very successful administration among these people, and especially with the convicts, he was transferred to his present position as rector of St. Mary's at Platteville, the duties of which he assumed in July, 1895. In speaking of his earlier work as a Catholic, Father Allen feelingly refers to the kindness, co-öperation and encouragement extended to him by the members of his first congregation at Beaver Dam, as well as by many at other places of which he had charge.

St. Mary's Church, Platteville, Wis.

Rev. E. Allen.

St. John's Church, Plymouth, Wis.

THE congregation of St. John the Baptist's at Plymouth, Wisconsin, was established in 1861, by the Rev. Father Schmitting. Prior to this, and even back as far as the year 1848, the people in this vicinity received occasional visits from the Rev. Fathers F. Schraudenbach and Rehrl, who were among the pioneer missionaries of the Northwest, and who said Mass in the houses of different settlers.

St. John's Church, Plymouth, Wis.

Of these priests, the Rev. Father Schraudenbach is credited with having been the first to say Mass at Plymouth. The congregation at that place was attended as a mission by the Fathers Stehle and Haider, between the years 1863 and 1868, services being held, during that period, once every month. After them came the Capuchin Fathers, from Mt. Calvary, who ministered to the spiritual wants of these people until 1888, when the Rev. J. P. Van Treeck, located at Sheboygan, visited Plymouth every three weeks. This he continued to do until 1890, when his brother, J. A. Van Treeck, taking charge of his congregation during his sickness and absence, administered to the wants of these congregations. Upon his return in August, 1891, the Rev. J. P. Van Treeck again took charge of his congregation, his first services as resident pastor being held on August 9, 1891, at which time the congregation only numbered twenty-two families. This number has since been increased to forty-five. There is a school connected with St. John's, which is conducted by Sisters of St. Francis, from Silver Lake Convent. This school is somewhat of a new departure, having been opened for the first time in September, 1896, at which time forty-three pupils were in attendance. The societies connected with this congregation, are: Branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: Father Van Treeck, president; H. McNicholas, recording secretary; Jos. F. Ziegler, treasurer. Christian Mothers' Society: Mrs. Andree, secretary, and Mrs. P. McNicholas, treasurer. Young Ladies' Society: Helen Ziegler, secretary.

Rev. J. A. Van Treeck.

St. Fridolin's congregation at Glenbeulah, Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, was first established about the year 1865, by the Rev. Father Haider, who was then resident pastor at Sheboygan. There are twenty-five families in this congregation. Services are held on every Sunday and holy day throughout the year. At one time St. Fridolin had a resident pastor, but only for a short period, the limited number of communicants making it impossible for them to maintain the expenses. There are a Christian Mothers' and Young Ladies' Society connected with the congregation.

Father J. A. Van Treeck was born in the town of Lima, Sheboygan County, Wis. He pursued and finished his classical course at St. Vincent's, Iowa, and studied theology and philosophy at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee. He was ordained priest by the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss, D. D., on August 11, 1889.

St. Mary's Church, Port Washington, Wis.

SOME twenty families, comprising the entire Catholic community in and about Port Washington half a century ago, established the congregation of St. Mary's, and built a small frame church—the first in that vicinity—in 1849. Of this congregation the Rev. Father Bradley was the first resident pastor, although he remained at Port Washington for but a short time. There also existed at about this time an Irish congregation, St. Stephen's, which, however, was only actively maintained for a period of eight years, that is, from 1852 to 1860. This congregation, be it understood, was attended occasionally by Father Prendergast, Father Colton and others, who paid occasional visits from their resident pastorates to this mission. The first resident pastor given to St. Stephen's was the Rev. Bradley, who ministered to the spiritual requirements of St. Mary's as well as St. Stephen's until 1853, when Father Sailer took charge of the German parish. In or about 1860, when Father Fusseder succeeded to the pastorate at Port Washington, the Irish discontinued as a separate congregation and joined forces with the Germans at St. Mary's. Father F. X. Sailer was pastor at Port Washington from 1853 to 1857, during which period he built a parsonage and in the year preceding his departure established a parochial school, which was placed in charge of Sisters of Notre Dame. Father Sailer was transferred in 1857 to St. Mary's, at Racine, but returned to Port Washington on September 6, 1862, when he built a new school house. He remained in charge of this parish until October 30, 1867, when he was transferred to Sauk City, Wisconsin. Father Sailer died at Lake Church (Belgium), Wisconsin, October 13, 1877, but was buried in the cemetery of St. Mary's, at Port Washington, where he rests in the vault of the cemetery chapel, beside his reverend friend, Father Fabian Bermadinger, who died at Port Washington on July 22, 1863. From 1857 until 1859, the Rev. Father Weikmann was pastor of St. Mary's, he being succeeded by the Rev. Father Fusseder, who built a new brick church in 1860. He left this charge in 1862, to enter the army as chaplain. After the departure of Father Sailer from Port Washington, in 1867, the Rev. August Durst became pastor of St. Mary's, continuing as such until 1870. Father Etschmann, his successor, remained but two months, giving place to Father Willmes, now pastor of St. Mary's at Milwaukee, and who built the present Gothic stone church. He left in November, 1891, the present rector, the Rev. B. Elskamp, succeeding him. There are about two hundred and forty families in this congregation, nearly all of whom are German.

St. Mary's Church, Port Washington, Wis.

The parochial school, having five grades, has an average attendance of about three hundred scholars. The St. Francis Xavier's Benevolent and Aid Society, of which Nicholas Blong is president; John F. Thill, secretary; J. P. Weyker, treasurer; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, John Bartol, president; N. Bode, vice-president; J. Bichler, secretary; Jacob Schumacher, treasurer; Catholic Order of Foresters, James Cooney, chief ranger; John Huebchen, vice chief ranger; N. Krick, recording secretary; F. Weller, secretary; M. C. Grasser, treasurer; St. Aloysius Young Men's Society, John Bichler, president; H. Hemes, vice-president; John Blong, secretary; T. Bode, treasurer; Family Protection

Rev. B. Elskamp.

Society, J. P. Carels, president; F. Poch, secretary; H. Birer, treasurer; Married Ladies' Altar Society, and Young Ladies' Sodality, of which Miss M. Pelt is president; Miss A. Even, secretary, and Miss A. Van Ells, treasurer, are among the different Catholic societies to which the members of this congregation belong.

The Rev. Bernard Elskamp, rector and dean of St. Mary's, was educated and ordained in Westphalia, Germany. He came to America in 1875, and was a professor in the Teachers' Seminary for three years and in the Salesianum at St. Francis for thirteen years. He was also for a short time pastor at Newburg, Wisconsin, and has been at St. Mary's since 1891.

St. Andrew's Church, Potosi, Wis.

THIS congregation was organized in 1846, the Rev. Andrew Tush celebrating Mass on the First Sunday in Advent that year. Here the twenty families, which at that time comprised the entire congregation, erected a plain but serviceable church building, 50x30 feet, which was kept in continual use for a period of many years. There was also a parochial school connected with this church from its very beginning, which was at first taught by a lay teacher, but has been for a number of years in charge of Sisters of one or another of the various orders now represented in Wisconsin. After Father Tush, who remained until 1851, the following pastors came: the Revs. C. Schraudenbach, 1851 to 1855; Michael Beiter, 1855 to 1856; Joseph Polking, 1856 to 1858; T. M. Obermueller, 1858 to 1859; Ferd. Zuber, 1859 to 1862; L. Lux, 1863 to 1864; H. J. Muckerheide, 1864 to 1865;

St. Andrew's Church, Potosi, Wis.

T. M. Albers, 1866 to 1868; M. De Becke, 1868 to 1871; Jos. Kleiber, 1871 to 1872; J. A. Mueller, 1872 to 1874; N. A. Thill, 1874 to 1877; A. Bruhin, 1877 to 1880; Jos. Dreis, 1880 to 1886; P. M. Grobschmidt, 1886 to 1890, and August B. Salick, 1890 to 1895. The Rev. Peter Pape assumed the pastorate in 1895. The present church, a handsome brick structure, was erected by Father N. A. Thill, in 1875, and since that time the old building has served for school purposes. The interior decorations and furnishings of St. Andrew's are remarkably handsome, the high altar, which was put in by Father Salick, costing $1,200. Father Grobschmidt also bought an organ for which $700 was paid. The church covers an area of 95x50 feet, aside from the tower, which extends from 12 to 14 feet beyond the main building. The new school building which has but just been completed is also of brick, two stories high, and occupies a space 80x32 feet. The ground floor is divided into three rooms, while the entire upper story is used as a hall. The cost of the building complete was in the neighborhood of $4,000.00. The present congregation of St. Andrew's numbers one hundred and sixty families—about four hundred and eighty souls—and the school, now in charge of the Sisters of the Order of St. Agnes from Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, has an average attendance of one hundred and fifty scholars. The Catholic societies represented in this congregation are the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: J. P. Stelpfberg, president; J. J. Tobin, secretary, and August Franke, treasurer. Mutual Benevolent Society: George Schumacher, president; a Ladies' and Young Ladies' Society.

Father Peter Pape, present rector of St. Andrew's congregation, was born at Springfield Corners, Wisconsin, February 14, 1866. After acquiring an ordinary education, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis at Milwaukee, where he was ordained to the priesthood on June 22, 1890. He was first stationed at Kenosha, where he remained for two years, after which he was pastor at Richfield for two years and eight months. On April 24, 1895, he removed to Potosi.

The congregation of the church of St. Thomas at Potosi, Grant County, Wisconsin, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary on June 17, 1886, and has consequently been in existence for considerably over sixty years. The original organization first met and celebrated Mass in the Village of Van Buren, the Town of Potosi being at that time an unknown quantity in the State's geographical history. At the present time, not one of the pioneer Catholics of the vicinity remains, although the venerable Celestine Kaltenbach lived for some time after the celebration, while memories of a number of others are still fresh in the minds of the present generation. From the year 1836 to 1840, the church had no resident pastor, being entirely dependent upon the services of missionary priests who came or were sent there from time to time to minister to the spiritual wants of the people. During this period marriages and baptisms were performed by Father Mathias Loras, Bishop of Dubuque, Iowa, and Father Mazzuchelli, the resident priest at Galena, Illinois, at which place a record was kept of the church proceedings until the regular organization of the parish. A copy of this record was transmitted to Potosi on June 2, 1841, and entered upon the archives of St. Thomas' Church. This building was erected in 1838 and stood where the present village of Potosi now stands. A pastoral residence, also, built as was the church, of logs, stood on the opposite street and was both comfortable and commodious. This building was for a long time the residence of "Squire" Ragan, a faithful attendant of Father James Causse, the first priest placed in charge of the Catholics at Potosi. During the pastorate of Father Causse, which continued from 1840 to 1854, the christenings officiated at by him numbered 475. The number of members in the congregation during the latter year was also quite large, there being fully six hundred. After Father Causse came the Rev. J. N. Brogard, who remained until 1857. Prior to his coming, however, the Rev. Fathers Perrecton and Martin Hobbs both temporarily administered to the pastorate in 1851 and 1852. Father M. W. Gibson assumed the pastorate in 1857, remaining until 1861. During this period Father Peter J. Voissem officiated for him a little while in 1860. Father G. H. Brennan came to Potosi in 1861, but after a very brief stay was succeeded by the Rev. W. H. Verhoef, who remained until 1865. The Rev. J. M. Albers was the next pastor, from 1865 to 1867. During 1867 and a part of 1868, Fathers Nuits and Vivaldi officiated, their successor being the Rev. Thomas P. Hodnett. Then followed the Rev. Joseph Kleiber, 1871 to 1873; Rev. J. A. Mueller, temporarily during 1872; Father James Tiernan, 1873 to 1876; Rev. J. C. Devine, 1876 to 1880. Father Devine died on June 1, 1880, and was buried in the Catholic cemetery at Potosi. For a very short period during 1880 the Rev. Wm. Bernard conducted the services and was succeeded by the Rev. Joseph A. Dreis, who was rector from that year until 1886. Since that time Fathers Grobschmidt, Salick and P. Pape, the present pastor, have officiated at Potosi. The present church of St. Thomas was built in 1847 by Father Causse, at a cost of $11,000. It is of brick and occupies an area 36x56 feet, is two stories high, and is surmounted by a handsome steeple, which rises to an altitude of fully sixty feet. The interior decorations and furnishings are also quite elaborate. A building adjoining the church, and built some time prior to the year 1845, was used as a Female Seminary by Sisters of Charity from Dubuque. They, however, left in 1852. From the ending of Father Alber's administration in 1867, St. Thomas was attended as a mission by pastors residing at Dutch Hollow. This condition of affairs still exists, the church at the present time being a mission of St. Andrew's at Potosi.

Rev. P. Pape.

Holy Name Church, Racine, Wis.

HOLY Name congregation at Racine was organized in 1884 by those members of St. Mary's congregation who lived south of the church. In the spring of 1884 a large two-story brick building was erected, the first story of which was used for school purposes. In the fall of the same year the church was dedicated by Vicar-General Monsgr. L. Batz, and Monsgr. John Muenich was appointed first rector of the congregation. In 1885 a brick parsonage was built. The congregation, which is now in quite a flourishing condition, contemplates the immediate erection of a new church, after the completion of which the old building will be used solely for school purposes. When first established the school was conducted, as at present, by Dominican Sisters of Racine. The congregation comprises about one hundred and seventy-five families and the school is regularly attended by about two hundred scholars. The members of the Holy Name congregation are at present actively interested in the following Catholic societies: St. Michael's Benevolent Society: President, Philip Pfister; Vice-President, James Goebel; Secretary, William Noe; Recording Secretary, Peter Zinnen; Treasurer, William Jenniches. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch No. 71, thirty-six members: President and Spiritual Director, Monsgr. John St. Muenich; Secretary, Joseph Held; Treasurer, Gerhard Miller. Building Society, one hundred members; officers: Peter Miller, Nicholas Scholzen and Henry Karls. Holy Name Society (Polish), twenty-five members. Married Ladies' Society, one hundred and twenty-five members. Young Ladies' Society, seventy-five members. The Catholic Order of Foresters, Salzmann Court; officers: Peter Mueller, Nic. Scholzen, James Schultz, Mathias Kornwolf, Henry Hilgers, James Dreher, Peter Stapper and Joseph Brodel. St. Joseph's and Young Men's Society, consisting of members from all the German congregations at Racine.

Monsgr. John Stephen Muenich, pastor of Holy Name congregation, was born at Hatlingen, Grand Duchy of Baden, December 27, 1833, his parents being John Valentine and Mary Catherine (Knuhl) Muenich.

Holy Name Church, Racine, Wis.

When fourteen years of age (1847), he emigrated to America with his parents, who became residents of St. Clair County, Ill., where they bought a farm. Here young Muenich worked until his twentieth year, in the meantime receiving instructions from the late Bishop Peter Jos. Baltes of Alton. Afterwards he studied in the Seminaries of St. Mary at Perry County, Mo., and Cape Girardeau, Missouri. Finally, he completed his theological course at St. Francis Seminary near Milwaukee, where he was ordained to the priesthood on August 28, 1864, at St. John's Cathedral, Milwaukee, by Bishop Henni. His first appointment was as pastor of the congregation at Caledonia, Racine County, where he remained for two and one-half years. His next charge was in Hartford, Washington County, where he stayed for five years. He then became pastor of the congregation at Brighton, Kenosha County, remaining also five years, after which he came to Janesville, Rock County, staying there for six years. On leaving Janesville he was for a year and a half located at Ripon, Fond du Lac County, and thence came to Racine, November 1, 1884, to become the first rector of Holy Name congregation. Father Muenich has made two visits to Europe, since coming to this country, once in 1880 and once in 1883. On his second visit, in company with Archbishop Heiss and Bishop Flasch, he visited Rome and Pope Leo XIII., who conferred the title Monsignor upon him.

Rev. J. St. Muenich.

St. John Nepomuc's Church, Racine, Wis.

THE congregation of St. John Nepomuc at Racine, Racine County, Wisconsin, was organized as a mission by the Rev. Othmar Miller in 1896, subsequently being attended by the resident pastor from Caledonia, also in Racine County. More recently this congregation has been established as an independent parish, and, as such, has now its own resident priest. St. John's congregation at present consists of forty-five families, all of whom are of Bohemian birth or extraction, and previously formed a portion of the congregation of St. Joseph's German Church at Racine.

Of Catholic organizations connected with this parish there are the St. John Nepomuc's Society and Ladies'

St. John Nepomuc's Church, Racine, Wis.

Altar Society. At the present time there is no parochial school in connection with this congregation.

St. Joseph's Church, Racine, Wis.

IN the year 1862 those Catholic families (about forty-two) living on the north side of Racine, and up to that time belonging to St. Mary's, resolved to organize a new congregation. They bought Lots 12, 13 and 14 in Block 41, in what is now the City of Racine, and deeded them to Archbishop M. Henni, November 15, 1867. On this property they first of all erected a school-house, hiring a lay teacher to conduct the same. After a few years the school burned down, but under the direction of Rev. I. A. Birkhaeuser a larger school building was soon erected. In December, 1870, this structure, a two-story brick, was ready for use. This building was also for a considerable time used for a church. Until 1873 the Rev. Birkhaeuser said Mass in this building twice during each week, but on Sundays the members of the congregation attended St. Mary's Church. Shortly afterwards the erection of the church was begun, and May 12, 1875, Archbishop Henni laid the corner-stone of the new building. The Rev. George Strickner, rector of St. Mary's Church, superintended the erection of the church, and the Rev. Michael Beiter became its first resident pastor, November 17, 1875, the first holy Mass being celebrated in the new church on Christmas Day, 1876. Father Beiter administered to this pastorate for one year and five months, and was then succeeded by the Rev. S. Victor. Under his administration a nice organ was bought, costing $3,600. He stayed only four months, being followed by the Rev. A. Foeckler in August, 1877. This pastor put the Dominican Sisters of Racine in charge of the parochial school. Under his administration also the sacristy and steeple were built and three bells bought. He also erected a parsonage in 1886. His death occurred November 9, 1889. The Rev. Charles Fessler became Father Foeckler's successor, and during his administration both church and school were provided with steam heating apparatus, costing $1,500. He also organized the Sacred Heart of Jesus Society in the congregation. In addition to other undertakings, Father Fessler added a lot and building to the church property; the latter, however, which was used for meetings, was destroyed by fire in 1894. After three years' service, owing to continued ill health, Father Fessler resigned his pastorate, his successor being the Rev. John Friedl, who remained one year and six months. On August 1, 1894, the present pastor, the Rev. William Joseph Frantz, was appointed. Since his incumbency Father Frantz has bought three fine altars for the church, and a confessional from the celebrated Art Institute at St. Francis. Besides this, he erected a large new brick school-house during the past year. The congregation now comprises about one hundred and seventy-five families, and the school is attended by about three hundred children. Among the societies represented here is the Sacred Heart of Jesus Society, St. Joseph Society, and Christian Mothers' Society.

St. Joseph's Church, Racine, Wis.

Rev. Wm. Frantz.

The Rev. William Joseph Frantz was born March 2, 1849, at Roodt, Luxemburg. With his mother and two brothers he removed to America in 1867, coming almost directly to a farm in Belgium Township, Ozaukee County. In October, 1869, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis and was ordained priest June 24, 1878, by Archbishop Henni. After his ordination he became assistant of the Rev. Father Mueller at Holy Cross, Ozaukee County, officiating during the latter's trip to Europe. After the Rev. Father Mueller's return on November 1, he was appointed pastor at Waubeka, with the Mission Mater Dolorosa at Kohler. He stayed here one year and five months and on April 1, 1880, was appointed rector of Holy Cross congregation, where he stayed nine years and eleven months. On December 2, 1889, he came to New Coeln and stayed until August 1, 1894. He then was appointed pastor of St. Joseph's congregation at Racine.

St. Mary's Church, Racine, Wis.

THE first Catholic settlers of Racine were attended by the few missionary priests who comprised the advance guard of the Church throughout the Northwest. The first of these to visit Racine was the Rev. Thomas Morrissey, who said Mass in a private house. Then, from the year 1841, the Rev. Martin Kundig made frequent visits to Racine and Kenosha Counties. As the Catholic population increased quite rapidly, a piece of property was purchased on Fifth street, where the telegraph office is now located, upon which an unpretentious frame building was erected. This was the first Catholic church in Racine and it was dedicated to St. Luke. In less than two years this church was found to be too small and steps were taken towards the erection of a new edifice. For this purpose Mr. Riordan, a member of the congregation, donated two lots on the southwest corner of Eighth street and Lake avenue, upon which, in 1845, a church was built, large enough to accommodate the entire Catholic population. The old church of St. Luke was then sold, and in September, 1846, Bishop Henni appointed the Rev. Francis Prendergast as first resident pastor of the congregation. He remained for about one year and was succeeded by P. F. Fander, who remained two years. In August, 1849, the Rev. Charles Schraudenbach took pastoral charge, remaining three years. In November, 1851, the Rev. John W. Norris, D. D., was appointed pastor, which position he held one year, being succeeded by the Rev. Martin Kundig, V. G., in August, 1852. During his pastorate, which lasted about two years, the German Catholics felt that they were numerically strong enough to build a church for themselves and support a priest of their own nationality. So the English speaking Catholics secured property on St. Clair street on the north side, and in 1856 erected the present St. Patrick's Church, of which the Rev. T. A. Smith was the first pastor. The new German church was dedicated in honor of St. Mary, August 15, 1853, and Rev. M. Kundig became its first pastor. Among the earliest members of this congregation were Messrs. Britz, Barth, Fleischer, Schroeder, Neumann, Karlshausen, and Hommelson, and Messrs. Britz, Keidel and Jenner were the first trustees of the parish. After Father Kundig the following pastors came in succession: Revs. I. N. Pfeiffer, from November, 1853, to February, 1854; J. Fusseder, February, 1854, to June, 1855; Fabian Bermadinger, from June, 1855, to September, 1856; F. X. Sailer, from September, 1856, to October, 1861; F. Uhlemayer, from October, 1861, to

St. Mary's Church, Racine, Wis.

October, 1867; F. X. Etschmann, from October, 1867, to April, 1870; I. A. Birkhaeuser, from April, 1870, to September, 1873; George Strickner from September, 1873, to September, 1877; P. DeBerge, from September, 1877, to December, 1880; J. M. Albers, from December, 1880, to September, 1896, and the present pastor, the Rev. Theodore Meyer. The Rev. F. X. Sailer established the first German newspaper in Racine, but it only existed for a short time. In the way of improvements Father Uhlemayer built the present school-house, a two-story brick building the Rev. Father Birkhaeuser added two lots to the church property, the Rev. Father P. DeBerge erected the present parsonage and Father Albers the new church, which was dedicated August 15, 1886, by Archbishop Heiss in presence of Bishop Flasch and fifty priests. Father Albers did much good for St. Mary's during the sixteen years of his pastorate. He is now chaplain of St. Mary's Hospital, at Racine. The congregation comprises about one hundred and fifty families, and the school, under the direction of the Dominican Sisters of Racine, is attended by one hundred and forty-six scholars.

The Catholic societies in this congregation are: St. Joseph's Society, one hundred and thirty members;

Rev. Theo. B. Meyer.

Young Men's Society, one hundred and seventy members; St. Anthony's Benevolent Society, sixty members; Catholic Knights, fifty members; Catholic Foresters, St. Mary's Court, one hundred and ten members; Confraternity of Christian Mothers, organized January 6, 1897, with one hundred and seventy-five members; Young Ladies' Sodality, one hundred members; Holy Rosary Society, three hundred members; Sacred Heart of Jesus Society, with four hundred members. The present officers of the congregation are: H. J. Hegeman, secretary; Max Osius, treasurer; consultors, George Zirbes, Ad. Weber, Math. Beffel, Henry Broecker.

The Rev. Theo. B. Meyer was born February 13, 1853, at Caledonia, Racine County, Wis., his parents being among the first settlers of that section. His father came from Kalenborn, near Trier, Germany, in 1845, living for a time at Kenosha, Racine, Milwaukee, and for nearly two years at Milton Junction. In the fall of 1847, he returned to Europe, but came back in the spring of the following year, when he taught school for two terms at Madison. In February, 1851, he married Miss Angela Eppers, of Paris, Kenosha County, and thereafter settled in Caledonia, Racine County. The Rev. Theodore B. Meyer was the oldest son of twelve children. He first attended the parochial school and received his first Holy Communion in 1865, from Rev. John St. Muenich, at present pastor of Holy Name, Racine, Wis. At the earnest request of Dr. Salzmann, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, in 1868, and for nine years pursued his studies at the Salesianum. On March 17, 1877, he was ordained sub-deacon, March 18, 1877, deacon and June 24, 1877, priest by Archbishop Henni. He said his first Mass July 1, 1877, at Caledonia, Racine County, on which occasion the Rev. Father Birkhaeuser preached the festival sermon in German and the Rev. P. DeBerge in English. For five months thereafter he was assistant priest at Vincent de Paul's Church, Oshkosh, Wis., leaving there on December 23, 1877, to assume the pastorate at Granville, Milwaukee County, where he stayed until December 6, 1880. From this place he also attended the two missions of St. Michael and St. Catherine. His next place was with the congregation of St. George, at St. George, Sheboygan County, where he stayed until September 16, 1887. From there he also attended St. Rose Church, in the same county. While at St. George, he in 1883 made additions and improvements to the school houses both there and at the missions, adding new desks to the furnishings. He also built a new parsonage at St. George in 1886. From 1887 to October, 1896, he was pastor of the Immaculate Conception Church, at Saukville. During 1888 the debts of the parish, amounting to $3,000, were nearly all paid and in the fall of 1889 new pews were purchased for the church. Then after a while the interior of the church was beautifully decorated, and during the year 1896 the school was enlarged. The entire amount expended during the nine years of his pastorate in Saukville amounted to over $8,000.

It was during the month of October, 1896, that the Rev. Father Theodore B. Meyer was appointed to the pastoral charge of St. Mary's Catholic congregation at Racine, Wisconsin, by the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer, Archbishop of Milwaukee. It may perhaps be regarded as a somewhat remarkable coincidence that a sister of Father Meyer has also devoted her life to the cause of religion, having entered the Dominican convent fifteen years ago. She is now teaching in Holy Cross, Ozaukee county, Wisconsin, while his youngest brother, Mr. John Meyer, is at the present time teacher and organist at St. Francis church, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

St. Patrick's Church, Racine, Wis.

THE pioneer settlers of the Catholic faith in Racine County were at first rather irregularly visited by missionary priests. Among them was the Rev. Thomas Morrissey, who came to the territory about 1838. There was no Catholic church in the county at that time. Upon the arrival of Father Morrissey, the few families living in the vicinity were notified to meet at a certain house where Mass was held and the Sacraments dispensed. Afterwards the Rev. Father Kundig made frequent visits to Racine. As the number of Catholics increased, land was purchased on Fifth street where "The Times" building now stands, and a small frame building erected upon it. This building was the first Catholic church in Racine and was dedicated in honor of St. Luke. After two years the church became too small, and Mr. Riordan, a member of the congregation donated two lots on the southwest corner of Eighth Street and Lake Avenue as a site for a larger and more appropriate structure. The new building was erected in 1845, and as soon as completed services were discontinued at St. Luke's and the property sold. In September, 1846, the Rev. Francis Prendergast was appointed the first resident pastor of the new church, which had been dedicated in honor of St. Ignatius. The Rev. Father Prendergast remained one year and was then succeeded by the Rev. P. J. Fander, who remained for two years. In 1849 the Rev. Charles Schraudenbach took charge and remained three years. In November, 1851, the Rev. John W. Norris, D. D., was appointed pastor, which position he held for one year. The Rev. M. Kundig came in August, 1852. During his administration the German Catholics built a church of their own. The Rev. T. A.

St. Patrick's Church, Racine, Wis.

Rev. Stephen Trant.

Smith succeeded him as pastor of St. Ignatius Church in June, 1855. Though additions had twice been made to St. Ignatius, the building again soon became too small and as a far greater number of the members of the congregation resided on the north side of the town it was resolved to build another church for their convenience. Under the direction of the Rev. Father Smith, property was secured on St. Clair street and the present St. Patrick's Church completed in 1856. The pastors of St. Patrick's Church also officiated at St. Ignatius Church on the south side every Sunday up to May 12, 1862, when these services were discontinued. From that time until 1885 the English speaking Catholics of Racine belonged to St. Patrick's Church. At this time St. Rose's Church was built on the corner of Eleventh street and Grand avenue for the English speaking Catholics living on the south side. In September, 1859, the Rev. Father Smith was succeeded by the Rev. G. H. Brennan, who remained in charge until January 14, 1861, when he was followed by the Rev. N. W. Gibson, who in turn was succeeded by the Rev. George W. Mathews. Under the administration of Father Mathews, which continued for twenty-three years, more church property was secured, a brick parsonage built, a commodious school-house and church hall were erected, all church indebtedness was paid and many improvements made. The Rev. Father Mathews died January 27, 1886, highly esteemed by all classes. The present pastor, the Rev. Stephen Trant, was appointed his successor.

The Rev. Stephen Trant was born in Southport, now Kenosha, Wis., on the 26th of December, 1844, and is of Irish descent. His parents, William and Anastasia (Scannell) Trant, were both born in the southern part of Ireland, and in early life crossed the Atlantic, locating in Canada. They were married in Prescott of that country, November 28, 1838, and came to Wisconsin Territory in 1842, settling in Southport, where they made their home until death. They were zealous Catholics, donating a site for the Catholic church in Kenosha. The father died May 26, 1854, his wife having preceded him nearly four years. The Rev. Stephan Trant spent his childhood in his native town, and in 1856, when twelve years of age, came to Milwaukee, where he pursued a preparatory course of study at the Christian Brothers' School of St. Peter's Church and afterwards entered the Jesuit Academy attached to St. Gall's Church. On February 14, 1861, he entered the Priests' Seminary at St. Francis, where he was ordained December 19, 1868, by Archbishop Henni. Father Trant's first field of labor was at Highland, Iowa County, Wis., where he was pastor for twelve years. Next he came to St. Joseph's Church at Fond du Lac, where he remained until 1886. Since February 10, 1886, he has been pastor of St. Patrick's congregation at Racine.

St. Rose's Church, Racine, Wis.

ST. ROSE'S Catholic congregation at Racine was established in 1885, in which year a suitable edifice was erected and dedicated in honor of St. Rose of Lima. From the time of its organization, this parish was under the successive administration of the Rev. Fathers P. Durnin, Murphy, McFarland, and the present rector, the Rev. Thomas P. Johnson, who was transferred to the charge of St. Rose's parish from his former pastorate at Byron, Wisconsin, in March, 1895. Father Johnson was educated in the schools at Niagara, New York, and was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary near Milwaukee in 1885.

The congregation of St. Rose, composed at the present time of about one hundred families, is in a thoroughly satisfactory and prosperous condition. There is a parochial school connected with this parish, in charge of two Dominican Sisters, which has a regular attendance of one hundred and sixty pupils.

St. Rose's Church, Racine, Wis.

St. Mary's Church, Random Lake, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary's at Random Lake, Wisconsin, was organized about the year 1854, at which time quite a number of Catholic families had settled in and around that place. The site selected by these people at that time for a church, and which was located about one and one-half miles from the village, was donated to the congregation by David Leahy and wife, who were among the earliest settlers. The first church built was a small and unpretentious frame structure, but which admirably filled the demands of the rather limited number belonging to the congregation at that time. After the parish had been organized and the church erected, Random Lake received occasional visits from the pastor residing at Cascade. These visits, however, were necessarily few and far between, as, owing to the almost impassable condition of the roads during a considerable portion of the year, and the many arduous duties devolving upon the pastor, it was impossible for him to devote any considerable time to the welfare and advancement of any particular flock. After the parish had been attended for some time in this manner, it was made a mission to St, Nicholas at Dacada, and as such transferred to that parish. Thus matters continued for a series of years, the congregation of St. Mary's growing and prospering under the able direction of its pastors, until in 1873 the number had increased to such an extent that it became necessary to erect a larger church for their accommodation. With the unanimous consent of the entire parish, then, immediate steps were taken towards the erection of a solid stone structure, the dimensions of which were 34x60 feet. By the middle of November, 1873, this building was completed, and Father Hamm, attending the mission at that time, celebrated the first Mass in the new building. Soon after this another satisfactory and very important change was made, when the Rt. Rev. Bishop of the diocese appointed the Rev. Father Charles Fessler as first resident pastor of St. Mary's, with St. Patrick's congregation at Adell for its mission. In the meantime, the congregation had built a suitable parsonage for the accommodation of their pastor, so that, on his advent among them, he found, not only a new and well-furnished church, but also a comfortable home prepared for him. Preceding the coming of Father Fessler as resident pastor of this congregation, the mission had been attended by a number of priests located at Holy Cross, Cascade and Dacada. The first of these of whom any record is made, was the Rev. Father La Foeber, who was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers Gernbauer, De Becke, Stoeki, Bradley, Tierney, Bradley, Fusseder, McGowan, Pettit, Seif, McMahon, Schwaiger, and Hamm.

St. Mary's Church, Random Lake, Wis.

After the careful and judicious administration of Father Fessler, affairs of St. Mary's progressed in a most satisfactory manner. He was, however, at length transferred to another pastorate, and was succeeded at Random Lake by the Rev. Father Haberstock, who was also followed in succession by the Rev. Fathers Welbes, Lochemes, Muenzer, Froehlich, and the present pastor, the Rev. A. V. Mueller. The satisfactory condition of affairs in this congregation were, however, sadly marred, when, on March 24, 1895, the entire church structure was burned to the ground. While there was not for one moment a doubt in the minds of any of the congregation as to the immediate erection of another structure, there was considerable agitation in regard to the matter of locality. This was caused from the fact that Random Lake village had largely increased in size during the past few years, so that many of the parishioners believed that the present and future interests of the congregation would be best promoted by building the new church in the village. The discussion was finally settled by the decision of the Administrator of the diocese, who favored a village site. For this purpose, a piece of land was secured from the Butler estate. Mrs. Butler donating her interests in the same. This site was most desirable, not only from the beauty of its locality, but, also, for its convenience. In the interim, so that during the completion of the structure the people might have a place to hold divine service, arrangements were made for the erction of the schoolhouse and Sisters' house. This building was 24x56 feet, 20 feet high, and had a wing 12x18 feet, and of the same height. This building, the work on which was begun July 1, 1895, was completed and ready for occupancy by September 1. In the meantime, plans had been drawn, presented and accepted for the new church, the design being a tasteful combination of Roman Gothic styles. The main portion of this building is 88 feet in length, 38 feet in width, and the walls are 22 feet high. This church, which is handsomely furnished throughout, is considered one of the most tasty and substantial structures in the diocese.

Rev. A. V. Mueller.

The congregation at the present time consists of about forty-five families, and the parochial school, which has a regular attendance of thirty-three scholars, is conducted by one lay teacher. There is a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin connected with this congregation, of which James Leahy is president, Nic Ludewisse, vice-president; Peter Hammes, secretary, and Gerhard Franzen, treasurer.

The congregation of St. Patrick's at Adell, in the township of Sherman, Sheboygan County, was established in the year 1854, and is attended as a mission by pastors from Random Lake. Services are held at this place on every Sunday and holyday. The congregation at present numbers sixty families, all of whom are Irish.

St. Hubertus' Church, Richfield, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Hubert at Richfield, Washington County, Wis., was first organized and a log church built in 1846. Prior to that time the Catholics in this vicinity were attended as a mission of the St. Boniface congregation at Germantown, and for some considerable period subsequent to the building of the church their spiritual wants were ministered to from the same place. In 1854 the congregation of St. Hubertus obtained its first resident pastor in the person of the Rev. M. Pfeiffer, who also attended St. Augustine's as a mission. Father Pfeiffer resigned, after a two years' pastorate, in 1856, and was followed successively by the Revs. J. B. Haslbauer, B. Weikmann, M. Heiss, Father Strickner, A. Foeckler, J. Gambo, A. Michels, J. H. Korfhage, J. Welter, F. Raess, S. Beck, A. Ambauen, P. Frieden, A. Albers, A. F. Schinner, B. Weyer, A. Nickel, P. Pape, and the present incumbent, Father William B. Bruecker. Of these pastors the Rev. Father Strickner built the old chapel on Holy Hill, which was solemnly dedicated on May 24, 1863, and Father Raess, whose pastorate extended from June 6, 1875, to October 17, 1880, built the present one. During his incumbency, which lasted from August 15, 1887, to June, 1890, the Rev. B. Weyer built St. Hubertus parochial school, and the Rev. P. Pape, who assumed the pastorate in 1892, built a steeple on the church, had the interior of the building frescoed throughout and made a number of other much needed improvements. There are now seventy families in the congregation, and fifty children are in regular attendance at the school, which is conducted by a lay teacher. The following societies are represented in this parish: Young Men's Society: Joseph Stevens, president; Geo. Kuepper, secretary; Geo. Stuettgen, treasurer. Ladies' Sodality: Catherine Schmitt, president; Eva Regner, secretary; Julia Dopperstein, treasurer. Young Ladies' Sodality: Mary Stevens, president; Cecilia Heunes, secretary, and Maggie Friess, treasurer.

St. Hubertus' Church, Richfield, Wis.

The Rev. Father Bruecker, present pastor of St. Hubertus congregation. was born at Sheboygan, Wis., September 4, 1868. He received his earlier education in the parochial school at that place, and when thirteen years of age entered St. Lawrence College at Mt. Calvary, in Fond du Lac County. After completing a five years' classical course, he entered St. Francis Seminary at Milwaukee, where he completed his philosophical and theological studies. He was ordained to the priesthood on January 29, 1893, the ceremony having been deferred for six months on account of ill health, and received his first appointment as assistant pastor of St. Michael's congregation, Milwaukee, where he remained for five months. From July, 1890, until April, 1895, he was assistant pastor at St. Vincent's Church, Oshkosh, which place he left to assume his present duties at St. Hubertus and the mission of St. Augustine.

Rev. Wm. Bruecker.

The congregation of St. Augustine was organized in 1846, at about which time a small log church was built. Some years later this building was destroyed by fire, but although the members of the congregation were in rather straitened circumstances they managed to raise sufficient funds to erect and complete the present stone structure. There are about fifty-five members in the congregation. The churches of St. Hubertus and St. Augustine were the first built in the town of Richfield.

St. Bridget's Church, Ridgeway, Wis.

As early as the year 1840, the Rev. Joseph Causse of Potosi visited Ridgeway and made it a station that was visited by himself and other missionaries from time to time. A few years later a small church was built at Ridgeway, in which the Rev. Fathers Jean Bonduel, O'Connor, Smith and McDonald, ministered to the spiritual wants of the faithful. In 1863, Ridgeway became a mission of Mineral Point, Father McGann, who at that time had charge of the latter parish, enlarging the church and materially strengthening the congregation. From 1868 to 1870, Ridgeway was attended from Highland by Father Trant, now of Racine. In 1870, the mission was again attached to Mineral Point, the Rev. James O'Keefe, who was rector at that time, building a pastoral residence at Ridgeway. Three years later, that is, in 1873, Ridgeway became a separate congregation, having for its first resident pastor the Rev. H. McMahon. He was succeeded in 1876 by Father Exsel, who during the two years of his administration built the present church. Father Exsel died in November, 1878, the vacancy thus caused being supplied until 1893 by the Rev. Fathers Luby, Vahey and Doyle. During the latter year the Rev. Father O'Reilly, present rector of St. Bridget's, took charge of the congregation.

Under the administration of Father O'Reilly, the church property at Ridgeway has been much improved. New seats have been placed in the church and the walls beautifully frescoed. The congregation at the present time numbers about ninety families.

St. Bridget's Church, Ridgeway, Wis.

In connection with Ridgeway is a mission at Barnveld, with about fifteen families. The congregation was organized in 1888, when the Rev. J. Vahey built a small church, which has been much improved since that time. Services are held at this mission on every second week. Barnveld is located seven miles east of Ridgeway.

The Rev. L. P. O'Reilly was born and raised in the town of Mitchell, Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, about thirty years ago. In 1884 he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, where he was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1892. His first appointment was to Oconomowoc, at which place he remained for one and a half years. Since that time he has been laboring in his present charge.

Rev. L. P. O'Reilly.

St. Patrick's Church, Ripon, Wis.

THE first Catholic services were held at Ripon on September 26, 1858, at which time the Rev. E. Gray organized the parish. Of laymen present on that occasion, there were: Messrs. N. Roach, T. Leo, M. Lyman, M. Spellman, J. Flattery and M. Bannon. Before that time occasional services were held by the Rev. Father Godfrey, a missionary priest who paid visits to that section of the country at uncertain intervals for a number of years. Father Gray remained as pastor of the congregation from 1858 to 1870, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Father Tucker, who, in turn, was followed by Father Dale. The next pastor, the Rev. James Stehle, was at Ripon during the year 1875, and his successor, the Rev. E. A. Graves, from 1876 to 1882. Then the Rev. J. S. Muenich maintained the pastorate for one year, when he was succeeded by the present rector, the Rev. W. A. Goebel, who took charge in the beginning of 1883. The congregation of St. Patrick's now consists of one hundred and sixty families. There is in connection with this parish an Altar Society and Branch No. 58 of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, in which there are twenty-six members.

St. Mary's congregation at Springvale, Fond du Lac County, was organized in 1858. Eleven years prior to that time, the first services were held in the settlement at the home of James O'Riley, by the Rev. Father Haley. These visits inaugurated by him were continued by priests residing in other localities. Then the congregation was organized and a frame church erected, the site selected being Section 17. The building, when completed, cost in the neighborhood of $1,500. Later, as the congregation increased in numbers, this church was increased in size. The pastors who have attended St. Mary's since its establishment came from Fond du Lac, Waupun and later from Ripon. There is a very handsome and tastefully arranged cemetery in connection with this church, in which lie the remains of the Rev. Fathers Pettit, Kennedy, De Prater and those of a Polish priest. The congregation of St. Mary's now is composed of some fifty English speaking families, who have received spiritual attendance twice each month for the past fourteen years from Father Goebel, of Ripon.

St. Patrick's Church and Parsonage, Ripon, Wis.

Rev. W. A. Goebel.

St. Mary's Church, in the town of Eldorado, Fond du Lac County, was built in 1871, by the Rev. Thomas Keenan, who was at that time stationed as resident pastor at Oshkosh. It receives monthly attendance from the resident pastor at Ripon and has an English speaking membership of fifteen families.

The Rev. W. A. Goebel was born at Marietta, Ohio, November 26, 1857. He acquired his education at Marietta College, St. Michael's, Toronto, Canada, and St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, being ordained to the priesthood at the latter place on June 24, 1881. His first appointment was as pastor of the congregation at Kingston, Wisconsin, from whence, after remaining two years, he was transferred to his present charge at Ripon.

St. Wenceslaus' Church, Ripon, Wis.

THE Congregation of St. Wenceslaus, at Ripon, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, was organized and incorporated under the laws of the State in March, 1896, the membership consisting of about sixty families, forty-five of whom are Polish, while the rest are German and Irish. Sunday sermons are delivered here in the respective three languages. A church was erected by the congregation during the same year according to plans drawn by B. Kolpacki of Milwaukee and devised by the Rev. W. Kruszka, the originator of the parish. The corner-stone was laid on July 2 by the Very Rev. Hyacinth Gulski of Milwaukee and the dedication of the church was performed by Archbishop Katzer on December 15, 1896. From an architectural standpoint, the structure is considered the prettiest among the ten other churches which adorn that city. It is of Gothic style and built in the form of a cross; it is 100 feet long, 54 wide at the widest point and 40 feet in front, the tower being 130 feet high. The stone basement of this church is arranged for two school rooms and a chapel. A neat and comfortable parsonage was built during 1897. The school has not yet come into active operation, no regular teacher having thus far been employed. There is, however, a sufficient number of children of school age—nearly one hundred.

In the meantime, the Rev. pastor is doing a little himself in this direction, examining and posting the children in religious matters and their native language whenever the time and opportunity is offered. The present financial condition of this congregation is quite satisfactory, as will be seen from the following statement: land, one and one-third acres, $1,150; church building, $6,000; church fixtures and decorations, $1,500; parsonage and furniture, $1,500, making a total of $10,150. Of this amount, $4,000 was subscribed by the congregation, while an additional sum of about $2,000 was collected by Father Kruszka among the Polish people in Milwaukee, Chicago, Detroit and Buffalo. Thus it will be seen that the property is more than half paid for, and with the earnest and enthusiastic interest manifested by the members of the congregation in their parish and its belongings the property will undoubtedly soon be entirely free from debt.

St. Wenceslaus' Church and Parsonage. Ripon, and St. Josaphat's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

The following societies are formed in the St. Wenceslaus congregation at Ripon: 1. Holy Rosary Society for Women; 2. St. Stanislaus Kostka Society for Boys; 3. St. Agnes Society for Girls; 4. St. Cecilia Society for Ladies, with the purpose to sustain the choir (Saenger-Verein).

The congregation of St. Josaphat, at Oshkosh, Winnebago County, was organized by Father Kruszka in June, 1897, and incorporated under the laws of the State. The church of this parish was also designed by the reverend pastor. The corner-stone was laid on September 6, 1897, by Very Rev. J. J. Fox, Vicar-General of the Green Bay Diocese. The structure was dedicated on Sunday, January 30, 1898, the Right Rev. Bishop Messmer, conducting the services. The structure is 80 feet in length, has a 54 foot frontage and a tower 130 feet high. The basement, which is of stone, is finished off into school rooms. The drawing of the plan was made by B. Kolpacki, architect of Milwaukee. The entire cost of the building was about $5,000, while an additional $1,000 was paid for interior furnishings and decorations. The property upon which this building stands is valued at $1,000, while the excess of debt over and above funds in hand will not exceed $2,300. The pastor of these two congregations resides in Ripon, and it is a frequent occurrence for him, after celebrating Mass at 7 o'clock in the morning, to drive to Oshkosh, some twenty-five miles away, where he performs a like service at 11:30. In Oshkosh are formed two societies, St. John the Baptist Society for men with about fifty members and Holy Rosary Society for women.

Rev. W. Kruszka.

The Rev. Wenceslaus Kruszka was born in Slabomierz, province of Posen, Poland, on March 2, 1868. From 1874 to 1877 he attended the primary school in Gorzyce; from 1877 to 1881 he studied in Schwarzbach

Paedagogium, at Filehne, Germany; from 1881 to 1883 in the gymnasium at Wongrowiec, Poland; from 1883 to 1893 he studied in the Jesuit colleges, both in Austria and Rome, Italy, completing his course in the humaniora, in Galicia. He finished his philosophical course in the Gregorian University at Rome, Italy, and the first year of theology at Cracow, Poland. Towards the end of 1893 he came to America and completed his theological studies at the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he was ordained to the priesthood for the archdiocese of Milwaukee on June 16, 1895. He was assistant priest of St. Josaphat's Congregation and professor at the Polish High School, in Milwaukee, until March, 1896, when he was sent to Ripon by Archbishop Katzer to organize a new congregation. In June, 1897, he was sent to Oshkosh by Bishop Messmer to organize a new congregation there. He now provides both of these congregations, residing in Ripon, and being under the jurisdiction of two bishops. Though but two years in the priesthood, during which time he has organized two congregations and personally superintended the erection of two churches and a parsonage, he has also been able to give some attention to literature, having published two prose works in narrative form, "Rome and Naples," and "Pompeii and Vesuvius," and one of "Lenten Hymns," the nature of which is indicated in the title. One brother of the reverend father is a priest in his native country, while another, ex-Senator Michael Kruszka, is a resident of Milwaukee and editor and publisher of the Polish daily, "Kuryer Polski."

St. Norbert's Church, Roxbury, Wis.

AFTER the Rev. A. Inama's arrival at Sauk Prairie, now Sauk City, December 1, 1845, the Catholics united, and decided, on January 12, 1846, to build a small church, which was finished in August. During this time the Rev. A. Inama, O. Praem., from Wilton, Tyrol, Austria, had a dwelling and chapel erected for himself on the land in Section 18, of the town of Roxbury, which he had secured for the purpose of founding a branch house of the Order of St. Norbert. On October 8, 1846, the Rev. Maximilian Gaertner, also from Wilton, Tyrol, was sent to assist the Rev. A. Inama. A week after his arrival the church in Sauk City was destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt the following year. In the meantime the Catholics were compelled to attend Mass in the little chapel at Roxbury. This building was not adequate to the demands of the largely increased congregation, so Father Inama built an addition to it the following spring. At this time and for some time after Father Inama had charge of the parishioners in Roxbury, Sauk City, and vicinity, the Rev. M. Gaertner being absent a greater part of the time. In 1850 Father Inama donated to St. Norbert's congregation three acres of land about a mile east of his

St. Norbert's Church, Roxbury, Wis.

chapel as a building place for a new church and parochial school. There a sanctuary of brick was erected and solemnly dedicated August 15, 1853, in presence of Rev. Franz Xavier Sailer, O. Praem., who also took charge of part of the missions. On September 7, 1857, the corner-stone of St. Norbert's Church, which now forms the main part of the present building, was laid by the Right Rev. Bishop John Martin Henni, but, owing to a lack of funds, the building was not completed until 1860. The school-house was built in 1864, towards which the Rev. Inama donated most of the necessary funds. It was opened in the same year and taken charge of by the Dominican Sisters of Racine, Wis., who have since conducted it with most satisfactory results. The principal object of the convent of which Rev. Inama, Rev. M. Gaertner and F. X. Sailer were members, was to found a branch-house here in America, but as they were unsuccessful their Superiors recalled Father Gaertner and sent in his place the Rev. Mathaeus Heigl, who lived, as assistant of Father Inama, in the new school-house for two years. At the end of that time he took charge of

View of Old Dwelling—Chapel of Rev. A. Inama, O. P., Roxbury, 1845.

Rev. A. Th. Reininger.

St. Norbert's congregation. Rev. A. Inama lived at the little hermitage on Section 18, town of Roxbury, which he never left. In 1878 he donated a part of his land to the Dominican Sisters at Racine, Wis., at the same time requesting them to build a branch-house, in order to secure the Catholic school of St. Norbert's congregation for the future. In 1879 his wishes were gratified, and when the first story of the building was finished he came to see it for the last time. "Now I can die and rest in peace," he said, "for I see the building will be completed." He died October 16, 1879, and was buried here in the cemetery. In 1876-'78 the cross part and sanctuary of the church, as it is now, was built by the Rev. M. Heigl, who, in 1881, was removed to Franklin, near Milwaukee, He died at Ashford, May 20, 1890. His successor was the Rev. G. Wuelffing, D. D., who had been professor in the seminary at St. Francis for two years. He did a great deal toward decorating the interior of the church and had the altars built or repaired. In 1888 he changed his position as pastor for the professorship at St. Mary's Seminary in Cincinnati, and is at present pastor of St. Mary's congregation in Fond du Lac. His successor here is the Rev. A. Theodore Reininger, who since his coming has completed the church by building a beautiful tower, purchasing three new bells and a pipe organ. The Golden Jubilee of St. Norbert's congregation was celebrated June 23, 1896. The congregation now consists of about one hundred and twenty families, of whom, with one exception, all are German. The school is attended by about one hundred and fifty pupils. Five societies exist in the congregation, viz: St. John's Young Men's Society, founded in 1862, with a present membership of fifty-six; St. Norbert's Aid Society, founded in 1872, thirty-two members; St. Joseph's Men's Society (altar society), founded in 1860, twenty-seven members; St. Monica's Ladies' Society, founded in 1860, about one hundred members, and the Immaculate Conception Young Ladies' Society, consisting of sixty members.

The Rev. A. Theodore Reininger was born December 21, 1850, in Ulm, Amt Oberkirch, Baden, Archdiocese of Freiburg, I. B. He reached New York September 20, 1869, and worked there in a bakery until November, 1872, when he began his studies at St. Lorenz College, Mount Calvary, Wis., where he remained until August, 1874. He then worked on a farm in Calumet County, Wis., until October, 1875, when he continued his studies at St. Francis, where he was ordained priest June 26, 1881. He was afterwards pastor of the Mater Dolorosa Church in Fredonia, Wis., and was removed from there to Charlesburg, Wis., November, 1883, which congregation he exchanged for Roxbury, September 1, 1888.

St. Anna's Church, St. Anna, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Anna was established in 1847. The first pastor to take charge of the parish was the Rev. Caspar Rehrl, he being followed successively by the Rev. Father Fusseder, J. Moeller, Seb. Sut, Deisenrieder, P. Bonaventura, P. Leo, F. Daniel, H. Korfhage, D. Mietinger, Stehle, Zinzheimer, P. Schleier, J. S. Schiefen, who during his pastorate built a large new parsonage, and J. B. Froehlich, the present incumbent. During his pastorate at this place, Father Froehlich has erected a handsome new church, which is furnished throughout with all of the modern appliances and conveniences. It is heated by steam and has a chime of four bells. The cost of the entire structure, complete as it now stands, was $25,000, all of which amount has been paid. This speaks well for the energy and zeal exhibited by the members of this congregation. When the work was begun by Father Froehlich, there was nothing in the treasury; after its completion a surplus of $1,300 remained, which will be applied towards the erection of a new school house. There is a parochial school at St. Anna, which is conducted by three Franciscan Sisters of Charity and has a regular attendance of seventy scholars. The congregation numbers 110 families.

St. Anna's Church, St. Anna, Wis.

The Rev. Jos. B. Froehlich was born at Fulda, Germany, February 14, 1860. His classical studies were made at the gymnasium at that place. He then came to the United States, taking a full course in theology at St. Vincent's Seminary, Pa., and St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, being ordained to the priesthood at the latter place, on June 29, 1885. His first appointment was as assistant pastor at the Green Bay Cathedral, after which he became successive pastor at Greenville and Random Lake, remaining at the latter place until August 1, 1894, when he assumed his present duties at St. Anna.

Rev. Jos. B. Froehlich.

Sacred Heart Church, St. Francis, Wis.

THE congregation of the Sacred Heart was first established at St. Francis, Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, in 1886, the first pastor being the Rev. Kilian Flasch, who died as Bishop of La Crosse on August 3, 1891. He was succeeded in the pastoral duties at St. Francis by the Rev. J. A. Birk-hauser, who is widely known and remembered as the author of a valuable text book of church history. Next came the Rev. J. N. Gardtner, afterwards missionary of the Bohemian Catholics in the United States. He was succeeded by the Rev. J. Rainer, at the present time rector of St. Francis Seminary. Father Rainer was succeeded in the duties as pastor of the Sacred Heart by the Rev. A. Zeininger, now Vicar-General of the Archdiocese of Milwaukee, and he by the Rev. A. Sigg, who afterwards became a priest of the Society of Jesus.

Sacred Heart Church, St. Francis, Wis.

Rev. H. T. Stemper.

He was followed in the administration of these duties by the Rev. Fathers M. Gernbauer, A. Zitterl, P. Freiden and H. Stemper, the present rector. The congregation, at the present time, consists of about one hundred and twenty-five families. There is a parochial school in connection with the Sacred Heart congregation which is in charge of Sisters of the Order of St. Francis, and has a regular average attendance of seventy-five scholars.

The Rev. H. T. Stemper was born in Port Washington December 6, 1861, was educated at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, and ordained to the priesthood at that institution. He said his first Mass in Port Washington, on October 19, 1884, and for seven months following was assistant at St. Mary's Church in Milwaukee. He was then pastor of St. Mary's Church at Belgium for four years and seven months, during which period he built a church costing $1,500 and a school at an additional cost of $5,000. He was then assistant at St. Mary's Church, Milwaukee, for one year and six months, when he was appointed rector of the Sacred Heart, at St. Francis, of which he has had charge for six years and eight months.

Church of St. George, St. George, Wis.

THE Rev. C. T. F. Schraudenbach attended to the spiritual wants of the Catholics of St. George, Sheboygan County, Wis., from 1860 until August, 1861, and was succeeded by the Rev. Patrick Seibold, who remained until July, 1869. His successor, Father T. A. Mueller, who was pastor until October, 1870, built a new brick church in place of the one occupied up to that time. From October, 1870, to May, 1871, Father M. Muehlberger was pastor, he being followed by the Rev. Nicholas Moes, who remained until April, 1873. Father W. Engeln, the next incumbent, died on October 21, 1875, the vacancy being supplied by the Rev. G. Fessler. He made a number of improvements and also built a new brick school house. In October, 1880, the Rev. T. B. Meyer succeeded to the pastorate. During his pastorate, which extended over a period of seven years, many additions were made to the interior furnishings of the church. Father N. Dieringer, who followed him, also did much in the way of improvements, among other things purchasing a number of stained windows as well as three large bells for the church. He removed from St. George in December, 1892, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, the Rev. John W. Blum, who built a substantial brick steeple on the church. There are now seventy families in the congregation of St. George's parish. The school here has an attendance of seventy scholars and is conducted by Sisters of St. Francis. The mission of St. Rosa, at Lima, is also attended from this place. Of Catholic societies to which numbers of St. George's congregation belong, there are the Christian Mothers' Society, Young Men's Society and Young Ladies' Sodality.

St. George's Church, St. George, Wis.

The Rev. John W. Blum was born on February 19, 1848, in Suerth, Rhenish Prussia. He studied at the Universities of Bonn and Innsbruck, came to America in February, 1875, and was ordained to the priesthood at Milwaukee, on March 24, 1878.

At about the time that the parish of St. George was given a resident pastor, the congregation of St. Rosa at Lima, Sheboygan County, was placed in charge of this pastor. At present the congregation of St. Rosa consists of about twenty-seven families, seventeen of whom are Irish and ten German. Services are held at St. Rosa's on every Sunday and holyday during the year, and also at least once each week besides. For a number of years there was a prosperous parochial school conducted in connection with this parish, but owing to the limited number of people in the congregation, this was discontinued some ten years ago.

Rev. J. W. Blum.

St. Kilian's Church, St. Kilian, Wis.

THE first settlers who are known to have located at the point where the village of St. Kilian now stands, and in that vicinity, were Andrew Flasch, Balthasar Flasch and Andrew Schrauth, who came there on July 7, 1847. It was during that same year that the first Mass was celebrated by the Rev. Charles Schraudenbach, in the log house occupied by Andrew Flasch. Somewhat later, the exact date is not known, Balthasar Flasch donated twenty acres of land, upon which a small log church was built and dedicated in honor of St. Kilian. As missionary pastor, Father Schraudenbach attended these people until the latter part of 1849, after which they were visited in the same way by the Rev. Fathers M. Beiter from 1850 to 1856 and C. Rehrl from 1856 to 1862. During the pastorate of the latter, a second and more commodious church was erected. In 1862 St. Kilian became a mission to Ashford, from which place it was attended by the Rev. F. Spath. Father Spath continued to visit St. Kilian until 1865, and it was during his pastorate that the first school building was erected. In 1865 he was succeeded by the Rev. H. J. Muckerhaide as pastor of Ashford, who remained as such until the end of 1866, during which time he also attended the mission of St. Kilian. In 1867 the mission was transferred to the pastor residing at Theresa, which position the Rev. Hubert Jansen held at that time and until 1869. It was during the administration of Father Jansen that Sisters of the Convent of Notre Dame were placed in charge of the parochial school at St. Kilian. From 1869 until 1871 the mission was attended by the Rev. George Strickner, who succeeded Father Jansen as pastor at Theresa. During this pastorate a new parsonage was built.

St. Kilian's Church, St. Kilian, Wis.

In March, 1871, the congregation at St. Kilian was given a resident pastor in the person of the Rev. P. A. Schumacher, who remained there until April, 1876. For a few months after him the Rev. Henry Jacobs maintained the pastorate. He was succeeded in the same year, however, by the Rev. J. Gratza, who remained until August, 1878. Then followed successively the Rev. Fathers Pius and Boniface, O. M. C., from August, 1878, until January, 1879; Philip Vogg, from January to November, 1880; Leonard Blum, from January, 1881, to December, 1893; J. N. Schmidt, from January, 1894, until July, 1895, and P. J. Burelbach, the present pastor, who took charge of the congregation on the latter date. A stone school building and Sisters' dwelling, which are still in use, were built in 1866 and the school opened for regular attendance on November 14, 1867. It was during the administration of Father Schmidt that preparations were made for a new church, the erection of which was begun and completed during the pastorate of the present rector, in 1895. This building was dedicated by the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer on October 28, 1896. The congregation of St. Kilian at the present time consists of about ninety-three families or three hundred and forty communicants. The parochial school has an attendance of about one hundred and sixteen scholars and is in charge of three Sisters of Notre Dame. Among Catholic organizations represented in St. Kilian's Congregation are the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch No. 113, of which Conrad Mack is president, Peter Flasch, recording secretary; Joseph Straub, financial secretary and George German, treasurer; St. Mary's Altar Society for Married Ladies, Mrs. Caspar Straub, president; Mrs. Kilian Strobel, secretary; St. Aloysius Young Men's Society, Rev. P. Burelbach, president; Peter Strobel, secretary and George Schedlo, treasurer; St. Rose Young Ladies' Sodality, Miss Christina Richard, president; Miss Bridget Kenney, secretary, and Miss Ursula Straub, treasurer.

Rev. P. Burelbach.

The Rev. Peter Burelbach was born at Knowles, Wisconsin, on September 8, 1870. After attending the parochial school at Le Roy, Wisconsin, for some time, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis near Milwaukee in September, 1885. After completing a thorough course of the necessary studies he was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer on June 17, 1894. For a few months he was temporarily stationed at Mapleton, Wisconsin. His first regular appointment was as assistant pastor of St. Gregory's Church at St. Nazianz, Wisconsin, where he remained until July 1895, on the second of which month he was placed in charge of St. Kilian's Congregation at St. Kilian.

St. Lawrence's Church, St. Lawrence, Wis.

IT was in the year 1846 that the congregation of St. Lawrence was organized, and as far as the records go to show, the Catholics at this place were first visited in the preceding year by the Most Rev. M. Heiss. Then the Rev. Michael Obermueller came to these people and a concerted effort was made to build the church, which was finally done, the structure, when dedicated, being named by him in honor of St. Lawrence. The Rev. F. X. Schraudenbach was the first resident pastor at St. Lawrence, and it was under his administration that the erection of a schoolhouse was begun. He was succeeded in 1851 by the Rev. Father Beiter, who remained until 1855, when the pastorate was assumed by Father Casper Rehrl. He was followed in 1856 by the Rev. Father Weikmann, who remained until September, 1857. From that date until April, 1861, the Rev. Joseph Reindl was pastor of the congregation, and from the latter date until September, 1865, the Rev. Michael Deisenrieder. During his administration an addition was built to the church and an organ and two bells were bought. The next pastor was the Rev. Martin Weiss, who remained from September, 1865, until September, 1881. He died away from his parish, being at the time in Europe, where he had gone in an effort to regain his failing health. During his pastorate a new priest-house and church were built. As successor to Father Weiss came the Rev. N. Thill, who maintained the pastorate until December, 1889. During his administration the new church was finished inside, a school-house was erected and three bells placed in the church tower. The present pastor, the Rev. Peter Schwaiger, became a resident of St. Lawrence in December, 1889. The congregation now consists of one hundred and fifty-two families, or from eight hundred to nine hundred souls. There are three departments in the parochial school connected with this congregation, the united attendance averaging about one hundred and fifty-five scholars. The school is conducted by three Sisters of St. Agnes, of Fond du Lac, Wis. Of Catholic societies connected with the congregation there are the St. Lawrence Aid Society: M. Sehl, president; M. Thorn, vice-president; Mathias Esser, secretary. St. Mary's Ladies' Society, of which Mmes. Eli Miller and Catherine Schaefer are the officers, and St. Rose's Young Ladies' Sodality, with the Misses Frances Schorrenberg and A. Seift as officers.

St. Lawrence's Church, St. Lawrence, Wis.

The congregation of St. Mathias, at West Bend, is attended as a mission from St. Lawrence. It was first established in 1848 by Father Schraudenbach. The congregation consists of thirty-seven families, the most of whom are Germans. Services are held at St. Mathias Church every Sunday. There is an attendance of fifty-two scholars at the parochial school connected with this congregation, who are in charge of School Sisters of St. Agnes, from Fond du Lac.

The Rev. Peter Schwaiger was born in Bavaria, on April 28, 1838. He commenced his studies in Ratisbon, Rev. P. Schwaiger.

Bavaria, in 1853. He came to the United States in 1858, arriving at New York on September 15 of that year. He then entered St. Vincent's Seminary, at Pennsylvania, where he remained until the spring of 1859, when he came to Milwaukee and entered the seminary of St. Francis. There he completed a full course in philosophy and theology and was ordained to the priesthood on December 27, 1863. Since that date he has filled successively the pastorates of several congregations in the Archdiocese of Milwaukee, the last one prior to his appointment to St. Lawrence being that of Holy Name Church, Sheboygan.

St. Michael's Church, St. Michael's, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Michael's at St. Michael's, Washington County, Wisconsin, was organized in October, 1846, and the first church was built at that place in the following year under the direction of the Rev. Father Schraudenbach. Prior to the time of organization, and until the year 1855, the Catholics living in this vicinity were attended as a mission by the Rev. M. Beiter, under whose administration and direction the congregation was established and a church built. A second church was built under the direction of Father Beiter in 1853. When he left for another field of labor in 1855, he was succeeded by the Rev. L. Bartosz, who remained until 1858. Then came in succession the Rev. Fathers C. Rehrl, 1858 to 1862; I. Reindl, 1862 to 1868; A. Mueller, 1868 to 1869; Ruckengruber, 1869 to 1871; C. Rehrl

St. Michael's Church, St. Michael's, Wis.

again, 1871; J. B. Edelmann, 1871 to 1876; J. Gratza, 1876 to 1877; C. Grobschmit, 1877 to 1882; P. H. Welbes, 1882 to 1888; M. J. Lochemes, 1888 to 1889; L. N. Thelen, 1889 to 1892, and George J. Muenzer, the present rector, who has had charge of the congregation since December of the latter year. Under his direction, a new and commodious parsonage was built at St. Michael's in 1894, and the interior of the church frescoed throughout in 1896. The congregation of St. Michael's, which now numbers seventy families and about three hundred and twenty communicants, celebrated its Golden Jubilee on the 17th of August, 1896. A parochial school was established in connection with St. Michael's about forty years ago, when a temporary building was erected. The present school house, which is substantial, commodious and fully adequate to the demands put upon it, was built by the Rev. C. Grobschmit during his pastorate of five years, from 1877 to 1882. At the present time, the school is divided into two departments, which are in charge of the Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis. The regular average attendance is seventy-five. The third and present church at St. Michael's was built by Rev. P. H. Welbes during the years 1884 and 1885, at a cost of $12,000. It is a solid brick building, 45x100 feet, having a steeple 130 feet high. Of Catholic organizations in this parish, there are, the St. Michael's Benevolent Society, of which Matthew Thull, Jr., is president; Joseph Fellenz, vice-president; John Rodenkirch, secretary; Matthew Herreges, treasurer, and J. Wiskirchen, marshal. There is also a Ladies' Altar Society, and a Sodality of St. Rose of Lima for Young Ladies.

Rev. G. J. Muenzer.

The Rev. George J. Muenzer, present rector of St. Michael's, was born on the 29th of January, 1865, at Lingenfeld, Rheinpfalz, Germany. He attended the parochial schools in his native country from April, 1870, to October, 1877, entering the Gymnasium at Speier Rheinpfalz, in the latter year. Completing a course there, he emigrated to America in 1882, resumed his studies at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, during September of that year, and was ordained to the priesthood at that institution on December 17, 1887. After ordination, his first appointment was as rector of St. Mary's congregation at Random Lake, Wisconsin, from which place he was transferred in December, 1892, to the rectorate of St. Michael's.

To St. Michael's congregation is attached a mission, called St. John of God, situated in the town of Farmington. Prior to the year 1877, this mission had been attended by the reverend pastors from Barton and St. Peter's. Since 1877, however, the rector of St. Michael's has held regular weekly services there. The congregation at one time numbered upwards of fifty families, but in later years, from one cause or another, has been reduced to about thirty families, or one hundred and twenty communicants.

St. Gregory's Church, St. Nazianz, Wis.

ON the 26th of August, 1854, the Rev. Ambrose Oswald arrived at St. Nazianz Manitowoc County, Wis., from Baden, Germany, accompanied by about thirty people. They at once started to establish a settlement, purchased three thousand acres of bush land, cleared it and began the erection of crude but comfortable dwellings. They also at the same time built a church, in which divine services were held for the first time on October 21, 1854. Father Oswald worked faithfully and well in the interests, both spritual and temporal, of his little flock until the time of his death, which occurred on February 27, 1873. He was succeeded by the present pastor, the Rev. P. A. Mutz, who came to Nazianz on March 13 of the same year. The congregation now consists of one hundred and seventy-three families. There are two schools in the parish in charge of Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis. The enrollment is about one hundred and forty. In 1858 a Sisters' Convent for the Third Order of St. Francis was completed, and in 1864 one for Brothers of the same Order was finished. There is a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin represented in this congregation, of which John Koeck and Adam Kremer are the principal officers.

Rev. Peter Mutz.

St. Gregory's Church, St. Nazianz, Wis.

The Rev. P. Mutz, present rector of St. Gregory's, was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, Milwaukee, on December 18, 1869. On January 9, 1870, he was appointed assistant at St. Joseph's Church, Milwaukee, and on June 29 of the same year as pastor at Schleisingerville. On March 13, 1873, he became rector at St. Nazianz, Wis., where he still remains.

The congregation of St. George at Elkhart Lake is attended as a mission by the resident pastor at St. Nazianz. This congregation, which consists of about fifteen families, all German, was organized by the Rev. G. Weiss, in August, 1896. There is a Ladies' Altar Society in the parish, to which a number of the congregation belong.

St. Wendel's Church, St. Wendel, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Wendel's at St. Wendel, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, was established in the year 1861, by the Rev. Father Schraudenbach, who was then resident pastor at Sheboygan. He was succeeded, during the same year, by Father Kleiber, who had come to the Milwaukee Diocese from Bavaria. In 1862 the charge was assumed by the Rev. P. Stucki, who was a native of Helvetia. He died while at St. Wendel, and is buried in the cemetery at that place. Father J. Welter, a Luxemburger, followed Father Stucki, and was in turn succeeded, in 1864, by the Rev. Bernhard, who was a native of Wittenberg. On the 6th of August, in the same year, the Rev. Michael Weiss assumed the pastorate, maintaining such until September 17, 1865. The next pastor was the Rev. A. F. Zuber, who, like his predecessor, Father Stucki, came from Helvetia. He remained at St. Wendel from September 17, 1865, until October 30, 1871, when his successor, the Rev. H. J. Korfhage, an Oldenburger, took charge of St. Wendel's church, which at that time was a small log structure. On July 30, 1875, he was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Breiken, who remained until October 3, 1877. The next pastor was the Rev. C. Schilling, who remained from October, 1877, to September, 1880. Then came the Rev. J. P. Van Treeck, from November 6, 1880, to November, 1882; the Rev. H. Hellstern, from 1882 to July, 1893; the Rev. Rudolph Ollig, from July, 1893, to December, 1893, and the present incumbent, the Rev. William Dejalle, from 1893 to the present time. The first church built at St. Wendel was a rough log structure, which was replaced by a more pretentious frame building, which was dedicated October, 1864. This building was totally destroyed by fire on Christmas day, 1894. The third, and present structure, which is of solid brick and Gothic style, was dedicated on the feast of St. Wendel, in 1895, by Archbishop Katzer. The congregation of St. Wendel's, which is comprised entirely of people of German nationality, consists of fifty families. The parochial school connected with this parish is in charge of two Franciscan Sisters from the convent of Alverno, who have charge of sixty-three scholars. There is a Christian Mothers' Society and a Young Ladies' Sodality connected with this parish.

The mission of St. George's, at Centreville, also in Manitowoc County, was established by the Rev. Father Schraudenbach in 1861, the church at this place being built in 1864 and dedicated on October 23d of the same year. Services are held there on every second Sunday and one week day. The congregation is at present composed of eighteen families.

St. Fidelis' is another mission located at Meeme, which is also attended from St. Wendel. This mission was established in 1872, and services are held there, also, on every second Sunday and one day in each week. The mission comprises twenty-five families, all of whom are German, and the parochial school connected with it has an average attendance of twenty scholars, who are in charge of a Franciscan Sister from the convent at Alverno. There is also a Society of the Christian Mothers connected with St. Fidelis'.

The Rev. William Dejalle was born in 1863, and came to America in June, 1893.

Immaculate Conception Church, Saukville, Wis.

THE year 1847 brought the first Catholic settlers to the vicinity of what is now Saukville, Ozaukee County, Wisconsin. Though but few in numbers these people were conscientious and devout Christians, and it was not long before they were afforded spiritual consolation by the occasional visits of Father Francis Prendergast, who celebrated Mass in one or another of the private dwellings in the settlement. After his departure Father Bradly visited the Catholics in this neighborhood also, saying Mass in private dwellings.

Nine years from the advent of these people into Ozaukee County, a meeting was held by the Catholics for the purpose of forming a congregation. At its assemblage, which occurred February 24, 1856, Father Seif being present, a resolution was prepared requesting the consent of the Bishop, the Rt. Rev. John Martin Henni, for the erection of a church at that place. In spite of their many efforts, however, it was a number of years before the Catholics at Saukville were enabled to worship God in their own church. The first effective move in this direction was in 1865, when the Rev. Father Rasch was sent as pastor. He was succeeded by the Rev. Father Strickner in 1866, who remained about one year, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Joseph Voissem. This pastor built the first Catholic school at Saukville, and remained, administering to the spiritual wants of the people and improving the property of the parish, whenever such opportunity occurred, until May, 1872, when Father Albers succeeded to the pastorate. He found the old church too small for the proper accommodation of the people, and so at once made arrangements for the erection of a larger and more desirable structure. This building, which is still in evidence, was dedicated in 1875.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Saukville, Wis.

After a successful pastorate, covering a period of nearly ten years, Father Albers was succeeded by the Rev. J. Friedl,[1] who came there in October, 1880, and remained for seven years. Then the Rev. Theodore Meyer became pastor of the congregation. During his pastorate, which lasted for nine years, he greatly improved the interior condition and appearance of the church, and also built an addition to the school house. Upon his transfer to the charge of St. Mary's Church at Racine, the Rev. P. Holfeltz, then pastor of St. Louis, at Caledonia, was appointed to succeed him, assuming the duties in November, 1896.

The Rev. P. Holfeltz was born at Reimerschen, in Luxemburg, receiving a portion of his earlier education in that country. He commenced at Mt. Calvary and completed his studies for the priesthood at St. Francis' Seminary, near Milwaukee, being ordained at the latter place by the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss, in the year 1887. His first charge was as assistant to Father Neu, at St. Michael's, Milwaukee, from where he was sent to Caledonia in February, 1887. Here he effected many improvements, among other things a $3,000 parsonage, while the school and church were greatly improved. From Caledonia he was transferred to his present pastorate at Saukville, where he has succeeded in bringing the congregation into a flourishing and altogether satisfactory condition. Societies organized in the congregation are: St. Bernard's Society, established in 1892; Christian Mothers' Society; Young Ladies' Sodality, and Young Men's Sodality.

Rev. P. Holfeltz.

The educational interests of the parish of the Immaculate Conception at Saukville, Ozaukee county, Wisconsin, have never been permitted to languish since the establishment of a parochial school a number of years ago.

The present school at Saukville is in charge of school Sisters of St. Dominic from Racine, and the attendance numbers something over one hundred children.

(1) Died recently.

St. Peter's Church, Schleisingerville, Wis.

PRIOR to the year 1856, at which time the congregation of St. Peter's at Schleisingerville, Washington County, Wisconsin, was established, the Catholics in that locality were visited by missionary priests who occasionally passed that way, celebrating Mass in the dwellings of different Catholic settlers. In 1856, however, a small log church was erected, the congregation being attended as a mission from St. Lawrence and Barton. This method of visitation was continued until 1870, services during the interval being conducted successively by the Rev. Fathers Deisenrieder and Martin Weiss, who came there from St. Lawrence. In 1870 Father Weiss was succeeded by the Rev. N. Hens, whose pastorate lasted only four months. Next in succession came the Rev. Peter Mutz, who remained from 1870 until March, 1873; the Rev. Meinrad Burgeler, from 1873 to 1875; Rev. P. Cajetan, O. M. Cap., from 1875 to 1878; Rev. Anton Leitner, from 1878 to 1881; the Rev. Paul Geyer, from 1881 to 1882—he erected the present two-story brick school house at Schleisingerville; the Rev. Frantz Spath, from 1882 to 1890—he died September 17th of the latter year, and was buried in the cemetery at Schleisingerville. Father Spath was born at Hitzendorf, Austria, March 30, 1836, and was ordained priest at St. Francis' Seminary, near Milwaukee, April 22, 1865. His successor was the present incumbent, the Rev. Charles Grobschmit. Of numerous improvements made to the church property from time to time, the original log church was enlarged by the Rev. Peter Mutz, who also built the first parsonage. Under the administration of the present rector, the new brick church, 113 x 49 feet, was erected in 1892, at an expense of $19,300. This building was dedicated May 1, 1893, by Archbishop F. X. Katzer, who conferred the Sacrament of Confirmation on the same day. The interior of the church is tastefully finished and furnished, there being in the latter respect three fine altars. The pews are handsome as well as comfortable, and the interior of the church is adorned throughout with good fresco work. In the basement of the church is a nice chapel, which is used occasionally for services. The steeple of the main structure is 138 feet in height, and contains three bells.

St. Peter's Church, Schleisingerville, Wis.

The congregation of St. Peter's is now composed of one hundred and fifty-four families, and the school connected with it has an attendance of one hundred and twenty scholars, and is conducted by Franciscan Sisters. St. Mary's Society, organized in 1894, the Married Ladies' Society, established by Father Spath in 1892, and St. Peter's Benevolent Society, are the only Catholic organizations connected with St. Peter's.

The Rev. Charles Grobschmit, rector of St. Peter's at Schleisingerville, was born at Luxemburg, Germany, on the 16th day of December, 1854. Father Grobschmit obtained his elementary education in the parochial school of his native place, and during a later period attended the high school there also. In the year 1868 he came to the United States and at once, in accordance with previous arrangements, entered the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where having completed the necessary courses he was ordained to the priesthood by the Most. Rev. John Martin Henni, on June 4, 1877. Since ordination Father Grobschmit has been rector of St. Michael's in Washington county, St. Boniface's congregation at Germantown, the congregation at Potosi, in Grant County, and since 1890 at Schleisingerville.

Our Lady of Hope Church, Seymour, Wis.

THE congregation of Our Lady of Hope at Seymour, Darlington Post Office, Lafayette County, Wisconsin, is at the present time in charge of the Rev. Leonard N. Thelen, who also attends to the spiritual requirements of the mission congregation of St. Peter's at Elk Grove, in the same county.

Rev. L. N. Thelen.

Holy Name Church, Sheboygan, Wis.

OVER fifty years ago a few Catholic families settled at Sheboygan and in the surrounding neighborhood. These were found by the Rev. Father Rehrl in his journeyings along the eastern shore of Lake Michigan during the summer of 1845. It was on August 24th of that year, the feast of the Apostle of St. Bartholomew, that Father Rehrl celebrated Mass for the first time at Sheboygan, in the house of Mr. Alban Kent. The table used as an altar by him at that time was at a later date presented by Mr. Kent to the Holy Name Congregation, and it is now kept in the sanctuary of that church as a lasting remembrance of the early pioneer and missionary days. Laboring among these people, Father Rehrl soon encouraged them to erect a church, a small frame building 30x20 feet, which was dedicated in honor of St. Magdalene. From that time—it was still the year 1845—until 1850, the good priest continued to visit this place once every three months, besides which the people were attended occasionally by the Rev. P. Fabian. According to the records still extant of this Catholic community, thirty-two children were baptized during the five years of Father Rehrl's administration. In 1850 the Rev. F. X. Etschmann took charge of this congregation, taking up his residence at Sheboygan and thus becoming the first permanent pastor there. Father Etschmann's stay was but a short one, as at the end of six months, that is, in October, 1850, he was entrusted with the rectorship of the Catholic congregation at Madison. His successor at Sheboygan was the Rev. Mathew Gernbauer. For some months prior to this change of pastors, a number of small congregations had been established in the neighborhood, among them being those at Wilson, Plymouth, Mitchell, Lyndon, Rhine, and Mosell, all of which were given in charge to the rector of St. Magdalene's congregation at Sheboygan. Under the judicious administration of its several priests, the mother parish rapidly increased in strength and numbers. During the pastorate of Father Gernbauer, which extended over a period of eighteen months, one hundred and twenty-four children were baptized. It became evident also about the same time that the original church had become altogether too small to accommodate the members with any comfort, so Father Gernbauer built an addition 46x30 feet to the main structure. In 1851 a mission was held at St. Magdalene's by the celebrated Jesuit Father F. X. Weninger, who also erected a mission cross in the new cemetery, land for which was purchased during his visits there. In May, 1852, Father Gernbauer was transferred to another parish, the Rev. Father Fusseder assuming his duties at Sheboygan, where he remained until September, 1853. Among numerous improvements accomplished by this pastor was the erection of a building and establishment of a parochial school which was placed in charge of Mr. Berger, a lay teacher. He also built a steeple on the church and purchased a bell for the same. Father Fusseder left Sheboygan in September, 1853, to assume the pastorate at Beaver Dam. Here some time later he met with a terrible affliction, becoming totally blind. He remained at Beaver Dam for a number of years after, and finally died there in 1885.

Holy Name Church, Sheboygan, Wis.

From 1853 to 1858 the Rev. Father De Berge was rector of St. Magdalene's. During this period several of the missions were erected into parishes, among them being those of Lyndon and Herman. It was during the pastorate of Father De Berge that the first parsonage was built at Sheboygan, which was done by separating the original church from the addition, and remodeling the latter into a dwelling house. It was at the same time also that eight hundred and forty-three children were baptized. In the fall of 1858 Father De Berge was appointed a professor in the Ecclesiastical Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee. He died at Elm Grove in the summer of 1882. The Rev. Benedict Smedding, who was the next pastor of the congregation at Sheboygan, remained there until 1860. He built a new school house and remodeled the old building into a residence for the Sisters. This school has been in charge of Sisters from the Convent of Notre Dame since 1859. Father Smedding died on September 4, 1881, at Paris, Kenosha County, where he was buried. The next rector of the parish was the Rev. F. X. Schraudenbach, who resided at Sheboygan for eighteen months. In the spring of 1862 the Rev. Michael Haider was appointed his successor. Under his energetic and prudent administration the parish came into a most satisfactory condition, all pending debts being liquidated and a magnificent stone church erected. The plans and specifications for this building were all drawn by Father Haider. The congregation having decided to erect this church, a block of land 360 by 318 feet was purchased for $2,200, in the center of which the structure was placed. This was built entirely of stone obtained from a quarry which had been bought for that purpose by the parish. It was during the same year that the Rev. Father Weninger held his second mission at Sheboygan. The foundation of the church was built in 1867, the corner-stone being laid on the 21st day of June of that year by the Right Rev. Bishop Henni. Thus the work gradually advanced towards completion, until on November 10, 1872, the church was dedicated by Bishop Henni, assisted by Dr. Joseph Salzmann, now deceased, the Rev. Joseph Rainer, the Rev. F. X. Etschmann and the Rev. Father Schleyer. The steeples were finished four years later. The dimensions of the church when completed were: length, 180 feet; width across aisles, 98 feet, and in the center 58 feet; height, 70 feet; steeples, each 170 feet. The building is lighted throughout with electricity and gas, the former being put in by the present rector at his own expense, while the gas chandeliers were presented to the congregation by Messrs A. Hamners, Nicolas Heil and Joseph Lutz. The Stations of the Cross, erected in 1874, were the gift of Mr. George Brickner of Sheboygan Falls. In 1879 a pipe organ was placed in the church, and in 1883 a bell was presented to the congregation by Mr. Thomas M. Blackstock, a non-Catholic. At about the same time three additional bells were ordered from a foundry in Baltimore, Maryland. During the following year a comfortable residence was built for the Sisters then in charge of the parochial school. Father Haider died in 1884, the vacancy thus created being filled by the Rev. Father Schwaiger, who soon after his arrival built a new brick parsonage at a cost of $3,000. It was at about the same time that a clock costing $700 was bought and placed in one of the steeples. Many improvements were also made to the interior furnishings of the structure, and a memorial chapel was erected over the grave of Father Haider. (Towards that structure Mr. Blackstock also donated $400.) The congregation of Holy Name had now assumed such proportions that it was deemed advisable to establish another parish. This change was effected on January 6, 1886, when a congregation was organized by those Catholics living south of the Sheboygan River. The corner-stone of the new church built by this congregation was laid by Mons. L. Batz, on the feast of St. John the Baptist, 1888. The structure was of brick, two stories high, the first floor being arranged for school purposes and the second as a church. This building was dedicated October 14, 1888, by Archbishop Michael Heiss, in honor of St. Peter Claver, and the Rev. J. B. Van Treeck was appointed first rector of the new parish. In December, 1889. Father Schwaiger exchanged pastorates with the Rev. Nicolas A. Thill, rector of St. Lawrence congregation in Washington County. Under the administration of Father Thill the church was furnished, new altars, new pews, a pulpit and floors being provided. The interior was also handsomely decorated with fresco paintings by Liebig, and cathedral glass put in all of the windows. In addition to this a sacristy was added to the sanctuary, and an elegant brick school-house erected which cost $15,500. In the fall of 1892 Father Thill exchanged pastorates with his brother, the Rev. Dominic Thill, rector at Jefferson, and formerly for eleven years pastor of St. Mary's congregation of Milwaukee. Under his administration the parish has made most satisfactory progress, and the debts, which amounted to over $19,000 at that time, being greatly reduced, and many improvements made. The parochial school connected with Holy Name congregation was made a graded school by Father Thill and is considered one of the very best in the diocese.

Rev. D. F. Thill.

The Revs. Gottlieb Beau and M. M. Gerend, the latter now rector of the Deaf and Dumb Institute at St. Francis, were offsprings of this congregation.

St. Nicholas Hospital, which is conducted by Sisters of St. Francis, was established in this parish in the spring of 1890. There is a number of Catholic organizations to which the members of Holy Name congregation belong, among them being: St. Boniface Aid Society: President, Frank Gottsacher; Vice-President, Jacob Maersch; Secretary, John Kellner; Financial Secretary, Martin Meyer; Treasurer, Joseph Schiller; St. George's Catholic Knights; St. John's Young Men's Society; Holy Name Boys' Society; St. Ann's Mothers' Society; St. Mary's Sodality of the Immaculate Conception; Children of Mary Society; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin; President, Joseph Heil; Vice-President, Thomas McNiel; Recording Secretary, H. W. Trustee; Financial Secretary, Louis Sontag; Treasurer, John G. Froidel; and Catholic Order of Forresters; Chief-Regent, H. W. Tustee; Vice-Chief-Regent, Thomas Gill; Recording Secretary, H. W. Hammes; Financial Secretary, John Sprengel; treasurer, Fred Raih.

Holy Name congregation is of a polyglot character, although those who are German either by birth or descent predominate. Those speaking English exclusively number some fifty families, or about one-tenth of the entire congregation, which is now estimated at fully five hundred families. At the Sunday services the sermons are preached in both English and German alternately at early and late Masses.

The Rev. D. F. Thill was born at Weyler la Tour, Luxemburg, on the 25th of August, 1844, and emigrated with his parents to this country in July, 1847. Upon arriving here, his family at once moved West, settling at Holy Cross, Ozaukee County, Wisconsin, where a great portion of his boyhood was spent. There he attended the public and parochial schools until about the age of fifteen years, when he was sent to St. Francis Seminary near Milwaukee to begin his studies for the priesthood. Here he numbered among his professors the late Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Flasch, Dr. Salzmann, and Father Wappelhorst. Father Thill was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni on the 29th of January, 1868. For about three months following ordination he was asssistant at Holy Redeemer's Church at Madison and was transferred from there on May 24 of the same year to St. Matthew's, Neosho, Dodge County, as its first resident pastor. Here he discovered an unusual lack of harmony existing among the congregation owing to a misunderstanding which had arisen concerning the location of a new church, for the erection of which preparations were then under way. The congregation had become divided against itself and in spite of the pastor's efforts to the contrary each faction completed a church, one St. Bartholomew's, a mile distant from Neosho on the same spot where the first log church had stood, and the other, St. Matthew's Church, which was erected in the village of Neosho and finally designated as the parish church. In spite of these untoward conditions, however, the new pastor fared reasonably well, and experienced his first great pleasure as an active worker in the cause in the establishment of a Catholic school and erection of a school house at a cost of a little over $900. This school was placed in charge of Mr. Anton Becker, father of the present Rev. Father Becker, of Pewaukee, the regular attendance being between thirty and forty pupils. At about the same time two missions at Woodland and Rubicon were attached to Neosho and placed in charge of the pastor there. During Father Thill's administration at this place the new church of St. Mary's was built at the former of these missions, on the site occupied by its predecessor, which was west of the village, or between Iron Ridge and Woodland, in a northerly direction. Up to this time Rubicon had no church, although there was one, St. John's, in the town of Herman, some two miles from Rubicon. The location of this structure, of course, was undoubtedly satisfactory and proper at the time of its erection, it having been built when the settlement was young and the Catholic families living at considerable distances from one another; but at this time such a location was not to be considered. So the pastor having obtained the consent of his Ordinary, caused a new St. John's Church to be erected at Rubicon, which arrangement placed the three churches now in his charge at distances of about five miles apart. This undertaking, however, was not accomplished without some difficulty, although done with the best and most unselfish intentions, in spite of which it caused a few of the older settlers to become aggrieved at what they considered for the moment a want of regard for their wishes. Father Thill remained at Neosho until August 18, 1871, at which time he was transferred to the pastorate of St. Bruno's at Ottawa, Waukesha County, Wisconsin. From there he also attended St. Mary's at Golden Lake, Jefferson County. These churches were at this time in an exceedingly dilapidated condition and it at once became the pastor's ardent desire to remove as much as possible these very noticeable defects. His efforts then were first directed to the mission, which was, if anything, in a more needy condition than the mother parish. For this purpose he took up a collection, going from house to house, and the people responded so readily and liberally to his requests that it was but a short time before a new building was under way. This work was completed by Father Thill's brother and successor, the church being finished and all indebtedness on it paid before he resigned the charge at a later date. Somewhat later a very neat little church was built at Ottawa by the Rev. Father Schleyer. On the 14th of February, 1873, Father Thill was appointed successor to the Rev. Father O'Connor of St. John's Church at Waukesha, from which parish he also attended St. Mary's congregation at Pewaukee. Here a small debt which rested on the church property was soon liquidated, and later new property was acquired on which the present priest house was built, and for the erection of which Father Thill took up a house collection among the parishoners of St. Joseph's Church at Waukesha. And so he labored most successfully for seven years and a half, becoming during that time very much attached to his parishioners (a good and intelligent class of people, who seemed to appreciate his endeavors in their behalf). It was during his pastorate there that St. Joseph's Men's Society was organized and a most flourishing Sodality for Young Ladies established. But one thing, in fact, was wanting to make the pastorate a lasting pleasure to people and priest alike, and that was the establishment of a Catholic school. This was the next thing undertaken by him, and with the ready consent of his parishioners, the Sisters of St. Agnes, of Barton, Washington County, were requested to open a school in a dwelling house back of the parsonage. The undertaking was a success from the beginning, the school soon becoming so crowded that Father Thill decided it would be necessary to erect a large and permanent building to be used for that purpose. Accordingly, in 1875 he took up a collection among his parishioners, whose spontaneous liberality enabled him to carry out his designs so that the new school was completed by December following, its entire cost amounting to $2,200. This school was opened under the direction of Franciscan Sisters from Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee. Soon after the completion of this school, Father Thill resigned his pastorate at Waukesha to take charge of St. Mary's Church at Milwaukee, where he was appointed successor to the Rt. Rev. L. Batz, at that time Vicar General of the Archdiocese and rector of St. Mary's Church. He assumed the duties of this parish on the 9th of August, 1880. Here, too, many improvements were made and the property bought on which the present pastoral residence is located, the entire cost of that property and building complete being about $30,000. His principal aim and care here was to raise the standard of St. Mary's parochial school, which he changed into a graded school of eight grades. In this manner he labored satisfactorily and successfully for over eleven years, when he resigned to assume the pastorate of St. John the Baptist Church at Jefferson, Wisconsin. Here he remained for a little over nine months, when he exchanged places with his brother, whose somewhat feeble health made it necessary for him to secure an easier charge. He therefore went to Sheboygan on September 1st, 1892, where he has since resided.

St. Peter Claver's Church, Sheboygan, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Peter Claver at Sheboygan, Wis., was organized January 30, 1888, by the Rev. J. P. Van Treeck, who is still its pastor. The church built at that time, and which is still in use, was constructed for the twofold purpose of public worship and parochial school. This was owing to the limited means available, a majority of the congregation belonging to the laboring classes. It is understood that before very long a suitable church structure will be erected, when the present building will be devoted entirely to school purposes. The congregation of St. Peter's now consists of about one hundred and ninety families, and the school, which is in charge of six Sisters of St. Agnes, has an attendance of two hundred and seventy-six. The St. Rose Sodality, Christian Mothers' Society, St. Aloysius Boys' Society, St. Leo Young Men's Aid Society, St. Peter Claver's Aid Society, St. Joseph's Entertainment Society, St. Elizabeth's Aid Society and Leo Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters are represented in this congregation.

The Rev. J. P. Van Treeck, present rector of St. Peter Claver's congregation at Sheboygan, was born in the town of St. George, Sheboygan County, on the 9th day of March, 1855. After having acquired an elementary education at the parochial school of his native place, he entered the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he was ordained to the priesthood on June 27, 1880. Some time after ordination Father Van Treeck received his first appointment, being placed in charge of the Catholic congregation at St. Wendel, Wisconsin. Somewhat later he was transferred to the pastorate at Theresa and afterwards to that of Alverno. From the latter place he went to Sheboygan, Wisconsin, to assume the charge of St. Peter's congregation.

St. Peter Claver's Church, Sheboygan, Wis.

Rev. J. P. Van Treeck.

St. Mary's Church, Sheboygan Falls, Wis.

SHEBOYGAN FALLS was a village half a century ago. At that time the Catholics who had settled in this vicinity were few; too few, indeed, to think of anything in the way of a church of their own. Necessarily, also, the Catholic churches through that section of the country were far apart and hard to reach by people dwelling in the outlying settlements, especially during the bad weather of spring, autumn and winter, which made the crude and poorly developed roads or trails almost impassable. The nearest churches to this settlement were at Sheboygan and the town of Wilson, from which parishes the resident priests would occasionally venture forth, visiting the neighboring settlements and holding services there. Among the places thus attended, was Sheboygan Falls, where a pastor from Sheboygan made the first visit, said Mass in the home of one of the residents and attended generally to their spiritual wants. These visits were kept up at regular intervals until at length the practice was abolished and thereafter the Catholics at Sheboygan Falls were obliged to go to Sheboygan to attend to their religious duties. This entailed a difficult and tedious journey, especially as the majority of the Catholics in the settlement at that time were without other means of transportation than such as nature had given to them. The result of this was that many Catholics became indifferent to their holy religion and gradually fell away altogether, some going so far as to become members of sectarian churches. Naturally enough, this proved a source of serious grief to those more determined spirits who, in spite of the many difficulties pertaining to such an undertaking, kept up their religious practices. Nor were they willling to become reconciled to this condition, and it was often uppermost in their minds that it would be a benefit and blessing could the Catholic community there obtain or provide means for the erection of a little church in which they could hold divine services with some regularity. Their number, however, remained too few, and to add to the difficulty some of the faithful had already left the village on account of there being no church there or within a suitable distance. The most earnest and active among those Catholics, however, saw farther than the present difficulties that surrounded them, and believed that the condition which caused the removal of families from the settlement, if changed, would be the means of securing their return; that with their presence and assistance a church could undoubtedly be built, and that with a church and pastor in their midst they could bring back to the faith a number of those who had strayed away. Among those exhibiting much zeal and earnestness in this work was the Hon. G. H. Brickner, to whose efforts it is undoubtedly largely due that the congregation at Sheboygan Falls was organized, the parish property bought and the church built. There were others, of course, equally devoted in their efforts to bring about this result, who lent their hearty coöperation as far as possible in carrying on the work. Many non-Catholics also actively participated in the undertaking, for which they should be ever gratefully remembered by the Catholics of Sheboygan Falls. In addition to this, the women of the settlement set to work and by various ways and means raised a considerable sum with which were purchased three handsome altars, two statues, vestments and other articles of church furniture, which cost in all some eight hundred dollars. Having completed this desirable undertaking, and when the congregation had been duly organized, these ladies formed an Altar Society, of which Mrs. G. H. Brickner was elected president, and Mrs. Geo. Ogle vice-president, thus continuing the good work for the parish as an organization.

St. Mary's Church, Sheboygan Falls, Wis.

Rev. C. F. Keyser.

The new church of St. Mary's at Sheboygan Falls is a wooden structure 68x34 feet. In the basement of this building there is a hall splendidly adapted and fitted out for social gatherings. The building was finished in December, 1896, and on January 1st of the following year services were held in it for the first time, the Rev. D. Thill, of Sheboygan, officiating. On May 24, 1897, the Most Rev. Archbishop Katzer dedicated the church, and on July 2 His Grace appointed the Rev. C. F. Keyser assistant pastor at Holy Name, Sheboygan, as permanent resident pastor. St. Mary's is well and comfortably furnished, is heated throughout by furnace, and possesses an excellent pipe organ, which was donated to the congregation by Mr. Brickner. The congregation of St. Mary's is necessarily still small, although since it has assumed a definite form the number of families has increased so that at the present time there are twenty-five families on the list of pewholders.

The Rev. C. F. Keyser, present rector at St. Mary's, Sheboygan Falls, was born in Milwaukee, January 24, 1872. He acquired part of his classical studies at Marquette College and his theological course at St. Francis Seminary. He was ordained to the priesthood at Innsbruck, Tyrol, July 26, 1895. After ordination he was assistant pastor at Holy Name Church, Sheboygan, Wisconsin, where he remained for two years. He was then transferred to Sheboygan Falls, where he became the first resident pastor of the new congregation of St. Mary's Help of Christians, in July, 1897.

St. Matthew's Church, Shullsburg, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Matthew at Shullsburg, Lafayette County, Wisconsin, was established on August 27, 1835. Six years later (in 1841), the first Catholic church was built at Shullsburg, and the first Mass said in it on August 1st of the same year. The priest who originally attended this congregation was the Rev. Samuel Mazzuchelli, who had charge of the mission from 1835 to 1841. His successors were the Rev. Fathers Bernigius Peliot, from 1841, to April, 1843; G. H. Ostlangerburg, from April, 1843, to March, 1844; R. B. Farinaccie, from March,

St. Matthew's Church, Shullsburg, Wis.

1844, to April, 1849; J. V. Bullock, from April, 1849, to June, 1849; Michael McFaul, from June, 1849, to January, 1850; James Daly, from January, 1850, to August, 1850; A. R. Langhoff, from August, Rev. J. F. Kinsella.

1850, to April, 1851; F. P. Walker, from April, 1851, to May, 1852; M. Hobbs, from May, 1852, to November, 1854; J. Conroy, from November, 1854, to August, 1857; R. Nagle, from August, 1857, to October, 1857; J. Colton, from October, 1857, to September, 1862; J. J. Kinsella, from September, 1862, to November, 1870, and the present incumbent, the Rev. J. F. Kinsella, since November, 1870. The congregation of St. Matthew now numbers about six hundred souls. There are two Catholic organizations connected with this parish, a Temperance Society, established in 1875, which has a membership of one hundred, and the Ancient Order of Hibernians, which is represented by a membership of eighty.

Rev. F. Pettit, Assistant.

For twenty years or more, there was a school established in connection with St. Matthew's congregation, but in 1895, the lead mines all being closed and the congregation reduced from three hundred families down to sixty-five, the school had to be discontinued.

The Rev. J. F. Kinsella, rector of this parish, was born October 15, 1843, in County Kilkenny, Ireland; came to Wisconsin in 1852; was educated at St. Francis Seminary, and was ordained to the priesthood December 21, 1866. He then became assistant to Dr. Norris, at Watertown, with whom he remained for six months, at the expiration of which time he was appointed to the pastorate at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. From here, he was transferred to the rectorate of Brodhead, and from thence to his present incumbency at Shullsburg.

The Rev. F. Pettit, assistant pastor at Shullsburg, was born on January 15, 1868, and ordained to the priesthood on June 16, 1895. His first appointment was to the position still maintained by him.

St. Joseph's Church, Sinsinawa, Wis.

THE Catholics living in and around Galena, Illinois, were first visited by the Rev. Samuel Mazzuchelli in 1837, at which time he said Mass in the houses of a number of Catholic settlers. Here he labored among them at different intervals, succeeding at last (in 1842) in building a log church on the property of Kieran Murray, half a mile south of Sinsinawa Mound. In 1845 this building was moved to the Mound and dedicated on the Feast of St. Dominic by the Right Rev. Martin Henni, and hence called St. Dominic. On this occasion there were present eight priests, the greatest number up to that time there had ever been in the Territory of Wisconsin at one time. In 1882 the present St. Joseph's Church was erected three-quarters of a mile east of the Mound by Father Jacobs. The pastors who have had charge of this congregation from the time of its organization up to the present have been the Rev. Fathers Samuel, 1842 to 1849; Dominican Fathers, 1849 to 1866; Rev. Charles Exel, 1866 to 1867; Bernard Fortune, O. P., 1867 to 1869; Thomas Power, O. P., 1869 to 1870; A. J. Mueller, 1870 to 1872; M. J. Meurer, 1872 to 1878; J. M. Cleary, 1878 to 1880; Theodore Jacobs, 1880 to 1890; Bernard Nuttman, for five months during 1890, and the Rev. Philip Schweitzer, the present incumbent, from 1890 till the present time.

St. Francis de Sales' Church, Hazel Green, and St. Joseph's Church, Sinsinawa, Wis.

The college for boys was erected at Sinsinawa by Father Samuel on the south side of the Mound, and near to the church, in 1846. Since its erection the presidents of this institution have been the Rev. Fathers Samuel, F. J. Jarboe, A. O. Walker, Thos. Power, and J. A. Rooney.

In 1867 St. Mary's Academy and Mother-house of the Dominican Sisters was established at the Mound, Rev. Ph. Schweitzer.

the Mother-General being Sister M. Emily. About eighteen years prior to this time (1849-50) a parochial school was established at the Mound, Sisters Josephine and Clara, of the Order of St. Dominic, being in charge. The school connected with the present parish property was built in 1877 by the Rev. M. J. Meurer. There are three Sisters in charge, the regular average attendance being sixty-five scholars. The present congregation of St. Joseph's consists of about eighty families. Of Catholic organizations in the parish there are St. Joseph's Society for Married and Young Men, Henry Birnissy, president; an Altar Society for Married Ladies, Mary Anne Runde, president; Theresa Hoffman, secretary; St. Cecilia's Young Ladies' Society, Mary Puls, president; Theresa Wiegman, secretary. The present officers of St. Joseph's congregation are Henry Budden, secretary; Bernard Runde, treasurer, and Herman Rohling, Gerhard Wilke, John Heller, and Benedict Hoppman, consultors.

Sinsinawa Mound was owned by the late J. W. Jones, from 1827 to 1845, and was purchased during the latter year of him by Father Samuel. Father Samuel also said Mass at the Mission of Hazel Green many years ago, and built the first church in that place, the same being completed and dedicated in honor of St. Francis in 1847. A school was also established in connection with this mission and placed in charge of the Dominican Sisters Clara and Josephine. At the end of six months, however, this enterprise was abandoned. A new church of St. Francis de Sales was built at Hazel Green in 1895, the corner-stone being laid on July 11th of that year by the Rev. F. Raess, and the building, when completed, was dedicated by the Rev. A. Walker on November 13th following. From the time of its organization in 1847 until 1866, the congregation at Hazel Green was attended by the Dominican Fathers, but since the latter year the pastoral duties have been attended to by the following reverend gentlemen, who took up their residence there: the Revs. George Prendergast, from 1866 to 1867; J. A. Birkhaeuser, from 1867 to 1868; James Stehle, from 1868 to 1870, and Joseph Kleiber, from 1870 to 1871. During a portion of the year 1873 Hazel Green was again attended as a mission from Sinsinawa by the Rev. J. Cleary, but towards the latter part of the year it was once more given in charge of a resident pastor in the person of Father Andrew Ambauen, who remained until 1875. His successor was the Rev. M. Zara, who remained from 1875 to 1877, when St. Francis again became a mission to Sinsinawa, and was attended from there by the Rev. M. J. Meurer, who made regular visits to Hazel Green until the latter part of 1878. From January until December, 1879, St. Francis had its resident pastor in the person of the Rev. James O'Neil, after which for ten years—from 1880 to 1890—it was served as a mission by the Rev. T. Jacobs from Sinsinawa. Father Jacobs was followed by the Rev. B. Nuttman, whose successor, the Rev. Philip Schweitzer, attends it as a mission as resident pastor from Sinsinawa. There are two organizations to which the members of this congregation belong, an Altar Society for Married Ladies, and St. Agnes' Sodality for Young Ladies, of which Mrs. C. Genz and Miss Julia Runde are the presiding officers respectively. The present officers of the congregation are Thomas Breen, secretary, and Joseph Runde, treasurer.

The Rev. Philip Schweitzer was born October 31, 1867, in the town of Franklin, Milwaukee County, Wisconsin. After acquiring a rudimentary education, he spent a year in Pio Nono College, after which he entered the Salesianum in 1882 and remained there until 1890. He was ordained to the priesthood in Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, September 7, 1890, by the Right Rev. K. Flasch, and on the 18th of the following month was appointed pastor of the congregation at Sinsinawa.

St. Mary's Church, South Milwaukee, Wis.

THIS congregation was first organized in the month of November, 1893, at which time the erection of a church was also begun. Before the completion of this building, services were held in a hall owned by J. E. Bollmer, this arrangement covering a period of six months. The first pastor appointed to the charge of St. Mary's was the Rev.

St. Mary's Church and St. John's Church, South Milwaukee, Wis.

H. J. Kessler, who, prior to that time, had resided for some considerable period at St. Francis. In the spring of 1894, additional improvements were made to the parish property by the erection of a two-story brick building, the first floor of which was arranged for school purposes, although, owing to the smallness of the congregation, it has not yet been placed in active service. In the meantime, a portion of this floor has been arranged and furnished as a residence for the pastor. This building is 45x85 feet, and cost, complete, twelve thousand dollars. The second floor of the building, which was finished off as a church, was dedicated in honor of St. Mary, on April 11, 1894. At the present time the congregation consists of sixty families of mixed nationality.

St. John's congregation at South Milwaukee is a mission of St. Mary's. This parish was organized in 1894, when a frame church was built, the same being dedicated on October 7th of that year. The first pastor in attendance upon this congregation was the Rev. John Casey, who was succeeded in 1896 by the Rev. George Durnin. St. John's is composed of thirty English-speaking families. Services are held in this church every Sunday by the pastor. In connection with St. John's congregation, there is St. John's Altar Society, of which Mrs. Loftus is president; Mrs. Costigan, secretary, and Miss May Whalen, treasurer.

Rev. H. J. Kessler.

The present rector of St. Mary's, the Rev. H. J. Kessler, was born at Port Washington in 1857, and, after receiving the ordinary parochial school education, completed his studies for the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he was ordained in June, 1886. Father Kessler celebrated his first Mass at St. Mary's Church, Port Washington, on the fourth of the following month, and was immediately afterwards placed in charge of St. Joseph's Church at Waterloo, where he remained for seven months. He was then transferred to the rectorate of St. Peter's at East Troy, where he remained for six years and a half. Finally he was appointed rector of St. Mary's congregation at South Milwaukee.

St. Matthew's Church, South Milwaukee, Wis.

THE early history of this congregation is absorbed in the history of Catholicity in Milwaukee County, though organized before the establishment of a diocese in this portion of what was then known as the Northwest Territory, and subject to the Catholic Diocese at Detroit, Michigan. It was early attended, but only occasionally, by transient priests, following whom in 1842 came the well-known Rev. Martin Kundig, who, in transit, also occasionally attended this congregation for a few years, when they worshiped in a little log building. He was in a like manner succeeded by other transient priests, as follows: Rev. Fathers Goodwin, Bradley, Morrison, and O'Brien,

St. Matthew's Church, South Milwaukee, Wis.

under whose and Father Tierney's pastorate between the years 1850 and 1860 the present substantial brick structure was erected, and subsequently in 1860 completed by the Rev. John J. Kinsella, who was then professor in St. Francis Seminary. He was succeeded for brief periods by the Revs. Edw. O'Connor, G. W. Matthews of Racine, J. S. Muenich of Caledonia, Reinhart of St. Francis Seminary, Woelfl, Ryan, Cody, Thomas Fagan of Bay View, James Hagerty, M. J. Taugher, H. S. O'Brien, T. W. Fitzhenry, P. J. Lavin, and J. Casey, the present pastor, in charge since November 1, 1891. He was born in the year 1837 in Castle Blake, County of Tipperary, Ireland, came with his parents in 1847 to the State of New York, thence in 1855 to the State of Wisconsin. In 1865 he was ordained priest by Bishop Henni, in the Seminary Chapel of St. Francis of Sales. His first missions were in the western part of the State, now the diocese of La Crosse, where he erected several churches and organized congregations. Later he was appointed pastor of the congregations of Monroe and Adams in Green County, this diocese, where, in the year 1870, he established "The Catholic Vindicator" newspaper at his own cost, then the first and only Catholic weekly newspaper in the State of Wisconsin. Thence, at the request of Bishop Henni, he removed the "Vindicator" office to the City of Milwaukee, where for several years he conducted its publication, built up its circulation, and placed it on a solid and paying basis. Since it left his hands it has been named "The Catholic Citizen." Whilst conducting his newspaper in Milwaukee, he resided with Archbishop Henni and discharged his share of the onerous duties of the large Cathedral parish, and established therein the first parochial school for boys. Having donated his interest in the "Catholic Vindicator," he resigned his position at the Cathedral, and since that time has devoted his entire time to parochial duty.

St. Martin's Church, Springfield Corners, Wis.

THE parish of St. Martin at Springfield Corners, Dane County, Wisconsin, was established on January 20, 1850. Prior to this, that is, as early as 1846, the people residing at Springfield Corners and in that vicinity were attended as a mission from "St. Norbert's House," Roxbury, by the Rev. Fathers Max Gaertner, Adalbert Inama and Francis Sailer of the Order of Premonstratensians, who held services in the private houses of the settlers. In 1850, however, the first church was built and four years later the attending pastors came from Cross Plains, instead of as formerly from Roxbury. The first of these was the Rev. Lawrence Conrad, whose successor was the Rev. Father Gernbauer, who assumed the duties in 1861. Then the Rev. Father Eusebius Hensler was appointed first resident pastor of the congregation. It was during his administration that the corner-stone of the present church was laid. From 1864 to 1868, the pastorate was maintained successively by the Revs. Alphons M. Schedle, Anthony Foeckler, Joseph Maly, Peter J. Voissen and Francis Zastera. In 1868 the Rev. A. Zitterl became pastor of St. Martin's and during his administration the church was completed, being blessed on June 20, 1869. A school-house, Sisters' dwelling and a new parsonage were built in the year 1873. Following Father Zitterl came the Rev. Joseph A. Dreis, who was succeeded by the Rev. Fathers J. H. Korfhage, G. Trimberger, A. Gardthaus, H. B. Ries, Nicholas Limacher, Joseph Maly and Michael Weyer, who is still the incumbent. In 1895 a new school building was erected. As incident to the history of this congregation, it may be well to note that both the Revs. Zastera and Michael Limacher died during their administrations as pastors of St. Martin's, and are buried in the cemetery at Springfield Corners. It is also interesting to note that the Rev. Peter Pape, at present pastor at Potosi, and the Rev. John H. Theisen, now assistant pastor of St. Michael's at Milwaukee, were at one time members of St. Martin's congregation. The parish is at present comprised of about eighty to eighty-five families, and the parochial school, which is in charge of a lay teacher, has an attendance of seventy-five scholars. There are connected with St. Martin's congregation a St. Joseph's Men's Society, St. Aloysius Young Men's Society, St. Mary's Married Ladies' Society, and St. Rose's Young Ladies' Sodality.

St. Martin's Church, Springfield Corners, Wis.

The Rev. Michael Weyer was born May 19, 1870, at Lomira, Dodge County, Wisconsin, his parents being Bernard and Mary Weyer. He attended the parochial school of his native town for seven years, after which period he took private lessons in Latin and Greek. In the fall of 1889 he entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he completed a full course in classics, philosophy and theology, being ordained to the priesthood June 21, 1896. He was appointed to his present charge on August 1st of that same year.

Rev. Michael Weyer.

St. Mary's Church, Sullivan, Wis.

AS long ago as the year 1851, the Catholics residing in the neighborhood of the present town of Sullivan, Jefferson County, Wisconsin, were visited occasionally by the Rev. Father Haider, who celebrated the sacrifice of the Holy Mass at the house of Mr. M. F. Franke—who also donated two and one-half acres of land to the congregation—and three years later, that is, in 1854, Father Haider succeeded in building a small frame church there. He also, at about that time, built a school house, which he placed in charge of the venerable Franciscan Sisters of Jefferson, Wisconsin, from which place he also attended Sullivan as a mission. Father Haider was succeeded in this work by the Rev. Father Minderer, resident pastor at Watertown, who continued to come there for a number of years, during which time many necessary and valuable improvements were made to the church property at Sullivan. At the termination of Father Minderer's pastorate, St. Mary's was attended successively by the Rev. Fathers Hugenroth, Wilkins, De Beyne, Schreiner, Spath, D. Thill—under whose administration and personal supervision a new brick church was begun; N. Thill, during whose pastorate this work was completed; Father Victor, who became first resident priest at Sullivan, and his successors as such, the Rev. Fathers Huber, William Letty, Pere Nicolaus, O. M. Cap., who built the present parsonage; the Rev. P. A. Schleier, and the Rev. Father Weinhoff, under whose administration the church property was also greatly improved, new altars and other interior furnishings being procured by him. Father Weinhoff was succeeded by the present incumbent, the Rev. Charles Schmid, who assumed charge on August 16, 1896. The congregation of St. Mary's now numbers about thirty-five or forty families. There are three Catholic organizations represented in this parish; a Young Ladies' Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, St. Mary's Church, Sullivan, and St. Bruno's Mission, Weimer, Wis.

Society of the Divine Infant and the Catholic Order of Foresters, with a membership of twenty-eight.

The congregation of St. Bruno at Weimer, Waukesha County, is attended as a mission on every second Sunday and twice a week by the resident pastor from Sullivan. This congregation consists of twenty-five families, most of whom are of German birth or descent. The church at this place was erected under the administration of Father Schleier in 1887, and is a handsome and comfortable structure. Many improvements have been made to this building since its erection, new pews, altars and a furnace having but recently been added to the interior arrangements. At the present time there is in contemplation the erection of a new school house. The congregation of St. Bruno was formerly attended by the

Rev. Chas. P. Schmid.

Rev. M. Heiss, who at a later day became Archbishop of Milwaukee, and after him by the Very Rev. Martin Kundig. From 1850 to 1875 Ottawa was a parish, but became a mission in the latter year, when the pastoral residence was removed from that place to Sullivan. During the entire period prior to the change, this congregation supported a resident pastor. There was also for some time a parochial school connected with St. Bruno's, which was in charge of the Sisters of St. Agnes from the convent at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. There is but one Catholic organization, an Altar Society, connected with St. Bruno's congregation at the present time.

The Rev. Charles Schmid, present rector of St. Mary's, was born in Milwaukee in 1873. When he arrived at the proper age he attended the parochial school connected with St. Mathias' Church, Greenfield, Wisconsin, after which he entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where, after completing a course in the classics, philosophy and theology, he was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer, on December 1, 1895. His first appointment was as rector of St. Peter's congregation at East Troy, Wisconsin.

Sacred Heart Church, Sun Prairie, Wis.

THE Catholic parish at Sun Prairie, in Dane County, was established in the year 1866, from which time it was visited occasionally by pastors located at other places, until 1869. In January of that year the Rev. H. Willmes was appointed as resident pastor, and remained as such until May, 1870. He was then followed in succession by the Revs. Nicholas Stehle, June, 1870, to November, 1870; W. A. Croak, January, 1871, to November, 1872; W. G. Miller, March, 1872, to July, 1874; Patrick Walsh, August, 1874, to July, 1875; Max De Becke, September, 1875, to May, 1876; P. J. Huber, June, 1876, to June, 1877; Thomas J. Maher, June, 1877, to March, 1878; George Weidlich, April, 1878, to September, 1878; B. Smedding, October, 1878, to April, 1880, and A. J. Kuehne, the present pastor, since September 17, 1880.

Sacred Heart Church and Parsonage, Sun Prairie.

The congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary now consists of about one hundred and thirty families. The present school at Sun Prairie is in charge of Sisters of Notre Dame of Milwaukee, and has a regular attendance of about one hundred and twenty scholars. Of Catholic organizations connected with this congregation, there are a St. Ann's Married Ladies' Society, and St. Mary's Young Ladies' Society, Miss Maggie Moore being vice-president; Miss Mary Dumphy, secretary, and Miss Eda Kraus, treasurer of the latter organization. There is also a Court of the Order of Catholic Foresters. The offices of secretary and treasurer of the parish incorporative are at the present time filled respectively by F. Bradley and Al. Gmeinder.

The St. Patrick's congregation at Cottage Grove, Dane County, Wisconsin, which is attended as a mission by the pastor from Sun Prairie, was established during the early missionary days of 1850. It was at that time and until 1869 visited occasionally from Madison and Westport, becoming at the latter date a permanent mission to Sun Prairie which it remains to the present day. In 1883, under the direction of Father Kuehne, the congregation built a new church on land purchased from ex-Governor W. R. Taylor, which lies about half a mile from the Northwestern depot. There are at the present time about twenty-five families belonging to St. Patrick's.

Rev. A. J. Kuehne.

There is also a small station or out-mission at De Forest, which is occasionally attended from Sun Prairie, but there are very few Catholic families residing in that vicinity.

The Rev. A. J. Kuehne was born July 19, 1857, in Milwaukee, where for several years he attended St. Joseph's parochial school. He entered the Seminary of St. Francis in 1873, and was ordained to the priesthood on June 27, 1880. His first charge was of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary congregation at Franklin, where he remained until September, 1880, when he was transferred to his present charge at Sun Prairie. On assuming the duties at this place, he found a heavy debt incumbent on the property. This cleared, he immediately proceeded to bring the matters of the church to a satisfactory condition, his labors resulting in the erection of an $18,000 church, $3,000 Sisters' building, and $4,000 parsonage.

St. James' Church, Templeton, Wis.

THE first pastor to say Mass in the vicinity of Templeton was the Rev. Father Morrissey. This was prior to the year 1842, at which time the Rev. Father Kundig, vicar-general of the archdiocese under the Most Rev. John Martin Henni, celebrated Mass at the house of Mr. Brogen, which was at that time situated at a point some eighty rods from the site of the present church. Five years later, that is in 1847, the Rev. James Colton was appointed first resident pastor of this congregation, which Father Kundig had organized under the protection of St. James. A year later Father Colton built the first church at Templeton. The pastors succeeding him were the Rev. Fathers, W. B. Dougherty, from 1852 to 1854; J. A. Smith from 1854 to 1855; Richard Dumphy, 1855 to 1857; J. McGowan, 1857 to 1859; J. Hagerty, 1859 to 1861; R. F. Roche, 1861 to 1863; A. O'Connor, 1863 to 1865; J. J. Kirwan, 1865 to 1869; J. Fitzgibbon, 1869 to 1871; J. Tiernan, 1871 to 1872; J. Stehle, 1872 to 1874; Thomas Corry, 1874 to 1879; J. A. Butler, 1879 to 1881; F. X. Heller, 1881 to 1884; Rev. Nuttmann, 1884 to 1890; T. E. Taugher, 1890 to 1892; A. Henderson, 1892 to 1894; J. A. Condon, 1894 to 1895; W. F. Dwyer, 1895; W. J. Heder, 1895 to 1896, and the present rector, J. A. Ritger.

St. James' Church and Parsonage, Templeton, Wis.

During the pastorate of Father Heller, the church was partially rebuilt, work on the same being completed during the administration of his successor, the Rev. Father Nuttmann, who also rebuilt the parsonage. The congregation of St. James at the present time consists of from two hundred and fifty to three hundred souls. There is an Altar Society connected with this parish, of which Miss M. Campbell is president; Miss M. Salmon, secretary, and Mrs. M. Pendergast, treasurer.

Concerning the mission of St. Dominic at Brookfield, there are no existing records prior to 1858. It is, therefore, impossible to state accurately the year in which the congregation was first organized and the church built. It is certain, however, that there was an old log church at Brookfield before one had been built at Templeton. This is verified by a number of the older residents in Templeton, who attended divine services at the Brookfield church prior to the organization of the other parish. In all probability, therefore, the church at Brookfield was erected sometime between the years 1842 and 1844. A stone church supplanted the log one in 1865. Services are held at this place on every Sunday and Holy-day, the congregation consisting of some thirty families, about one-half of whom are German and one-half Irish. There is an Altar Society connected with St. Dominic's.

St. Theresa's Church, Theresa, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Theresa, at Theresa, Dodge County, Wisconsin, was founded in the year 1849, by the Rev. Father Schraudenbach, who held services at that place in the residences of the different members of the congregation. His successor, the Rev. Father Beiter, built the first church at Theresa. He was followed, successively, as pastor of these people, by the Rev. Fathers Charles Rehl, Meauclere, Nicholas Pickel, who established a parochial school, August Durst, Nicholas Pickel again, Most Rev. F. X. Katzer, Hubert Jansen, Strickner, P. Uhlmacher, V. Rademacher, L. G. Woelfel, H. Hellstern, who built the new church, J. P. Van Treeck, Phil. J. Vogt, Jos. Huber, Rud. Ollig and the present pastor, the Rev. M. J. Groff. The congregation at present consists of about seventy families. There is one parochial school in this parish, which is conducted by two Sisters of St. Joseph's Convent, of Greenfield Park. The average attendance is estimated at forty-five. Of societies in the congregation, there are the following: St. Ann's Christian Mother's Society: Mrs. Maria Lehner, president; Mrs. Margaretha Anninger, secretary. Young

St. Theresa's Church, Theresa, Wis.

Rev. M. J. Groff.

Ladies' Immaculate Conception Sodality: Miss Barbara Dieringer, president, and Miss Gertrude Bodden, secretary.

The Rev. Michael Groff was born in Belgium, Ozaukee County, Wisconsin, on October 28, 1873. Most of his education was acquired at the Seminary of St. Francis, and he was ordained to the priesthood in the private chapel of the Archbishop's residence by the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer, on September 13, 1896. He was appointed to his present pastorate at Theresa in October of the same year.

St. Thomas Aquinas' Church, Waterford, Wis.

WATERFORD, a little village of about seven hundred inhabitants, is situated in the northwestern part of Racine County, Wisconsin, on both sides of the Fox River. The first settlers who came in the year 1837 were Englishmen. About the year 1842 or 1843 a few Irish and German Catholic families made their appearance, settling down in the vicinity of this place. The spiritual wants of these were attended to by an Irish priest whose name cannot now be remembered. In the spring of 1845 the numerical strength of this community was greatly increased by the advent of a number of German Catholic families. The people in those days were accustomed to go to Burlington, where there was a Catholic congregation under the charge of Father Kendeler. It was during the month of June, 1846, that divine services were held for the first time in Waterford, Father Kendeler conducting them in a newly erected cooper-shop. From that time on the holy sacrifice of the Mass was offered up on week days every two or three months, generally in some dwelling or other building in the village. At about this time, also, Father Kundig, then of Franklin, made quarterly visits to Waterford, but on Sundays and festival days of obligation the people attended services at Burlington. In the spring of 1847 Father Charles Schraudenbach came several times to Waterford, and in the fall of that year Father Wisbauer, resident pastor at Burlington, also made occasional visits to the place.

St. Thomas Aquinas' Church, Waterford, Wis.

About the year 1848 the number of Catholics in and around Waterford had increased considerably, so that Father Kundig visited them regularly once every month. It was during these visits that Father Kundig encouraged the people to build a church for themselves. An American by the name of Rush donated half a block for that purpose, the congregation purchasing the other half, for which they paid $175. Subscriptions were also started, and during the following year building operations were begun, but, owing to financial stringency, the church was not completed until the spring of 1851, when divine services were held for the first time in the new building. For some time prior to the completion of the church, Father Kundig discontinued his visits to Waterford. From that time Father Fusseder, who was living at Burlington with the Rev. Father Wisbauer, and whose duty it was to visit the neighboring missions, attending to the spiritual wants of the people every two weeks, visited Waterford, and it was through his influence that the new church was dedicated to the memory of St. Thomas Aquinas. In 1850 Father Kundig again assumed charge of Waterford and finished the church. In the winter of 1851-'52 Father Kundig opened the Catholic school with an attendance of twelve children, a good-hearted farmer Mr. Lensing, acting as teacher for eight dollars per month. About this time Father Kundig organized two Altar societies in the congregation, one for the German and one for the Irish members, through whose influence and exertions much was done towards decorating and beautifying the interior of the church. These societies were under the patronage of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

In September, 1852, the St. Thomas Aquinas congregation obtained its first resident pastor in the person of the Rev. M. Gernbauer. He established a parochial school and also built a frame addition to the church, half of which was used for school purposes and the other half as a sacristy. On September 8, 1853, Bishop Henni paid his first visit to Waterford, on which occasion he blessed the church and administered the Sacrament of Confirmation. On the same day a bell and the cemetery were also blessed. In 1854 the frame addition to the church was moved to another place and used altogether for school purposes, and at the same time a sacristy was added to the church. Father Gernbauer, whose labors were very successful, left Waterford in 1855, his successor being the Rev. Father Seif, who, however, stayed but a short time. He was followed by Father Stehle, who remained from June, 1855, to January, 1856. Father Stehle started the first record of baptisms and burials kept in the parish. From the time of Father Stehle's departure to October 26, the congregation was occasionally attended by Father Schraudenbach, after which the Rev. S. Sanner became resident pastor. During Father Sanner's incumbency a two-story parsonage, 32x24 feet, was erected, at a cost of $1,000. This was in 1858.

Rev. Sebastian Schwinn.

Father Sanner remained at Waterford until October, 1860, when he was succeeded by Father Minderer, who left again in the month of April, 1861. In October of the same year Father G. M. Heiss assumed the pastorate, remaining until May, 1864. The next resident priest was Father Conrad, now pastor of Trinity Church at Milwaukee, Wis. He assumed charge of the congregation May 20, 1864. Under his administration a new and commodious school-building, 46x30 feet and 30 feet high, was erected at a total cost of about $3,500. Besides two large school-rooms, this building contained a chapel and three rooms for the personal use of the Sisters of Notre Dame having the school in charge. Later on a frame addition was built to the school house to serve as kitchen for the Sisters. After two years of active and useful service in the parish, Father Conrad was called to take charge of his present congregation in Milwaukee, his successor at Waterford being Father Deberge, who, however, remained but a little while. At about the same time, that is, in May, 1867, the School Sisters resigned, returning to Milwaukee. Father Charles Exel was the next resident pastor. It was during this period that difficulties arose among the members of the congregation, a number of the Irish families belonging to it withdrawing to build a church of their own in the town of Dover. This weakened the congregation at Waterford considerably. When the next pastor, Father J. M. Joerger, came to Waterford, he found the affairs of the parish in a rather disordered condition, but with the help of God soon succeeded in restoring peace and harmony. His first care was to again place the school upon an active basis, and to that end secured the services of other Sisters from Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee, who opened the school on September 7, 1868. Father Joerger took great interest in this school and had the chapel fitted up for the celebration of Mass during the winter months, thus affording an opportunity for the children to attend divine services with regularity and comfort. The same year Bishop Henni of Milwaukee came again to administer the Sacrament of Confirmation. In the year 1870 Dr. Joerger bought a small organ for the church, paying $425 for the same, and at the same time he also arranged for a mission, which was given by the Redemptorist Fathers.

The Rev. Father Joerger remained pastor of St. Thomas Aquinas Church till the 4th day of November, 1872, his labors in the congregation being signally blessed. After Father Joerger came the Rev. Fathers Strickner and Uhlemaier, the former remaining for but a short period, while the latter, who was much beloved and especially appreciated for his abilities as a physician, occupied the pastorate for a year. During his administration the congregation built an addition to the school-house. His successor was the Rev. P. Schwaiger, who assumed the charge on December 2, 1874. He worked faithfully for the success of the parochial school, had the organ remodeled and enlarged, bought a statue of the Blessed Virgin Mary, had a fence built around the cemetery and made many other valuable improvements. He left Waterford on April 10, 1877, and was succeeded on the 19th of the following month by the Rev. P. A. Schumacher. This Father remained in charge at Waterford for over eleven years, during which time he not only caused many necessary repairs on the church and parsonage to be made, but agitated the question of erecting a church more in keeping with the size and necessities of the congregation. In this he was successful so that during the spring of 1878 initial steps were taken to that end. On November 19, 1879, an event of unusual interest transpired in the confirmation of a class of ninety-nine persons by the coadjutor of the Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni, Msgr. Heiss, who made a special visit to Waterford for that purpose. In the following spring contracts for the new church were let, foundations excavated, and on May 9 the cornerstone of the church was blessed by Father Wisbauer of Burlington in the presence of the pastor, several visiting priests and over two thousand people. Under the supervision of Father Schumacher the work progressed rapidly, so that by October 1 the church was completed and free of all incumbrances. The church and bell were blessed on October 4, 1881, by the Most Rev. M. Heiss, who also administered the Sacrament of Confirmation. On the 21st of June, 1882, the feast of St. Aloysius, the church was consecrated by the Most Rev. M. Heiss, twenty-one priests assisting. At later periods numerous costly as well as advantageous additions were made to the interior furnishings and decorations of the church. Thus it was reseated throughout at a cost of $500, and a new high altar costing $630 was erected, upon which statues of St. Aloysius, St. Theresa and St. Thomas Aquinas, the patron of the congregation, were placed. These statues were blessed on the 10th of May, 1883. On November 4, a second bell was bought and blessed by the Vicar-General L. Batz. New vestments were also purchased and other improvements made to the church and parsonage. The church, including furniture and bells, though costing but $10,000, in cash, represents an actual value of about twice that amount, much work and many valuable presents having been donated to the cause. Father Schumacher left Waterford on August 16, 1888, his successor being the present pastor, Father S. Schwinn, who took charge of the parish on August 17. The congregation at this time numbers about one hundred families, mostly German, and the school has an attendance of one hundred children. There are two Catholic societies in connection with this congregation; the St. Mary's Altar Society and St. Theresa's Ladies Society.

Father Schwinn was born of German parents on the 26th of August, 1853, in the village of Newburg, Washington County, Wis. At the age of thirteen he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, to prepare himself for the priesthood. In due time he finished his course of studies, and was ordained priest July 9, 1876, saying his first Mass a few days later. Having been assistant to the Rev. Father Michaels, New Cassel, Wis., for eight months he was given charge of St. Marys congregation at Lomira, Dodge County, October 1, 1877, where he remained over two and a half years. In March, 1880, he was transferred to the city of Fond du Lac, and was pastor there of St. Mary's Church for two years and eight months. He then returned to Lomira for a short time, remaining there about ten months, when the Most Rev. M. Heiss sent him to Marytown, Fond du Lac County, to take charge of St. Mary's congregation. Here he remained for about four years, resigning on account of failing health. After a short period spent at St. Mary's Academy, Winona, Minn., in the capacity of chaplain and instructor, he was appointed by the Most Rev. M. Heiss to his present charge at Waterford, Racine County, on August 17, 1888.

St. Joseph's Church, Waterloo, Wis.

ST. JOSEPH'S congregation, Waterloo, Wis., was established by Archbishop Henni with a membership of thirty-five families in 1868, and was assigned as a regular mission to St. John the Baptist of Jefferson, Wis. Divine services were held at first on week days once a month in the house of Mr. Joseph Raedle. During the year 1869, a brick church

St. Joseph's Church, Waterloo, Wis.

50x35 feet was erected and dedicated by the Rev. John Friedl of Jefferson, Wis. Among those most interested in the success of the struggling mission at that time were John Sheridan, Peter Janisch, Jos. Raedle and Bernard Leschinger, Jr.

The Rev. Joseph Huber took charge of the congregation in 1874 as its resident pastor, remaining until September, 1878, when, on account of failing health, he was compelled to resign. Father Huber was followed in rapid succession by the Revs. H. Victor, August Durst, J. Stehle, Charles Raphael, L. Barth, J. H. Koetting, J. H. Kessler, and a second time by the Rev. H. Victor. The latter finding the church too small to accommodate the growing congregation, started a subscription for a building fund and had the foundation for an addition to the church laid in 1887. The completion of this work, however, was left to his successor, the Rev. Henry Dreis. Father Dreis took up the work among his flock with untiring zeal, much love and patience, winning the confidence and affection of his own people and the respect of all, regardless of religion or creed. Under his care the church property was improved to the amount of nearly $4,000. When he was called away, September 1, 1891, to a larger field, he left the congregation in a flourishing condition, numbering about one hundred families. In the spring of 1892 a commodious residence was built for the priest at a cost of $2,000. A cemetery of five and one-third acres was purchased in the summer of 1893, at $100 per acre, located about one mile west of the church. Through the efforts of the Young Ladies' Sodality, an organ costing $500 was placed in the church in the fall of 1895. Preparations for establishing a parochial school in this parish during the past summer were unfortunately delayed on account of the general financial depression, it being deemed prudent to postpone this much-needed improvement for at least one year.

Rev. F. X. Hess.

The present pastor of St. Joseph's congregation, Father F. X. Hess, is of German descent, and was born in the town of Brighton, Kenosha County, Wis., on February 22, 1866. His earlier education was obtained at the parochial school in Brighton, after which he entered the Seminary at St. Francis, Milwaukee, as a member of the first Latin class, in September, 1880. Here he completed his classical and theological education and was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss in June, 1889. His first appointment was as assistant pastor of the church of the Holy Trinity at Milwaukee, where he remained until appointed to the pastorate of St. Joseph's on September 1, 1891.

St. Joseph's Church, Richwood, Wis.

(Attended from Watertown.)

THE congregation of St. John's at Lowell, Dodge County, which is attended as a mission from Sacred Heart College, at Watertown, was first established as such in 1870 by the Rev. Henry O'Brien, who continued to administer to its spiritual requirements until 1878. He was succeeded as pastor by the Rev. Thomas Dempsey, who remained, however, but a little over a year, leaving again in November, 1879. The next to assume the pastoral duties of St. John's was the Rev. J. B. McFarland, whose residence extended from 1881 to July, 1893. From December following until the present time the congregation has been visited regularly by the Rev. John P. Thillmann, C. S. C.

St. Joseph's Church, Richwood, Wis.

The congregation of St. Joseph's at Richwood, Dodge county, Wis. was organized by the Rev. H. Roche in 1864. In 1872 he was succeeded as pastor of this charge by the Rev. McGuirke who remained as pastor of the same until 1877 when he was transferred to another field, his place being taken by the Rev. Father Thomas J. Maher who continued to perform the duties during the years 1877, 1878 and 1879. Father Maher was succeeded in the pastorate by the Rev. D. Tierney who remained from 1880 to 1887. His successor was the Rev. D. J. Spillard, C. S. C., who maintained the rectorate from May, 1887, to 1889. Then followed successively the Rev. Fathers James Gleeson, C. S. C., September, 1889, to 1890; Richard Maher, C. S. C., April, 1890, to August, 1892; and the present incumbent, the Rev. John P. Thillmann, C. S. C.

Rev. John P. Thillmann, C. S. C.

The Rev. John P. Thillmann, C. S. C., present pastor of the missions at Lowell and Richwood, was born in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg in 1862. Twenty years later he became a member of the Holy Cross Order, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1887.

St. Bernard's Church, Watertown, Wis.

THE first settler known to have taken up his residence where the city of Watertown now stands was Mr. Timothy Johnson, who located there either in 1835 or 1836. Early in the spring of 1837 James Rogan and family, consisting of wife, two daughters, and his brothers Patrick and Peter, came to the same place, which was known at that time as Johnson's Rapids. These people were the only Catholics in the vicinity until 1840, when Bernard Crangle settled with his family in the same neighborhood. Then in quick succession came the families of Daniel Crowley and William Barret, and in 1843 those of John McGraw, John Masterson, Michael Murphy, Lacky Garrity, George and Daniel Meagher, to swell the little settlement. It was in the houses of these settlers that Mass was celebrated at different times by the missionary priests who visited that section of the country. During the year 1844 the inland tide of immigration flowed swiftly westward, and continued to do so at such a rapid rate that by the year 1848 the country within a radius of from six to eight miles from Watertown was pretty well taken up, the majority of the settlers being Irish Catholics.

Toward the latter part of the year 1840 or in the beginning of the year 1841 the Rev. Father Morrissey of the diocese of Detroit obtained permission from his Bishop to make a missionary tour to Wisconsin. He established headquarters at Milwaukee, from which center he traversed the country round about, searching out the scattered Catholics and ministering to their wants and necessities. While thus employed he visited the settlement at Watertown twice, being the first to say Mass in that neighborhood. Later, the Rev. M. Kundig, also from Detroit, made his permanent residence at Milwaukee, and among other duties took charge of this mission. From that time forth until the advent of Bishop Henni in Milwaukee, Father Kundig, assisted by Father Morrissey, attended to the spiritual wants of the people at Watertown. Towards the close of the year 1841 Father Kundig called a meeting of the settlers, at which he suggested the establishment of a permanent organization with a view to obtaining sufficient funds with which to erect a church. A subscription was at once started and a site selected, the very one, in fact, on which St. Bernard's Church now stands. In the fall of 1843 active measures were taken to erect a suitable building, and the work, though necessarily slow, went steadily on. Money very naturally was a scarce commodity in those days, but the people were sincere in their desire to accomplish the work undertaken, and to that end made liberal donations of both time and material, while sufficient funds were raised with which to pay for what could not be otherwise procured. Actual work on the building was begun during the summer of 1844, and on a temporary altar and floor the first Mass was celebrated by Father Healy during the fall of the same year. The building, when completed, was 30x40 feet, and 16 feet high. In 1846 a parochial residence was erected on the church grounds, which with occasional improvements served its purpose until 1883, when it was sold and removed. On the departure of Father Healy, the Rev. right direction when a parish school building was added to the church property. All these improvements, including new churches at Crawfish, Clyman, and Richwood, were made during the administration of Father Smith, who also engaged Sisters of Charity to conduct the school. Father Smith was succeeded by the Rev. Dr. Norris, who died while in charge. His successor was the Rev. Father Pettit.

In March, 1871, St. Bernard's church and parish were placed in charge of the Fathers of the Holy Cross. The Old and New St. Bernard's Church, School and Parsonage, Watertown, Wis.

Fathers Tierney and Mullen followed, but were soon transferred to other fields. Then came the Rev. Joseph Smith, under whose administration matters went along quite smoothly with the people at Watertown until 1857, when it became necessary, owing to the rapidly increasing Catholic population, to enlarge the church. An addition was therefore built equal in dimensions to the original structure, having galleries on both sides and at the end. The old ceiling was also removed and an arched one substituted, new pews replaced the rough benches formerly used, and the entire building was painted within and without. A bell-tower was also erected, in which was placed the same bell which to-day summons the people to worship. Still another step was taken in the month preceding this act, a mission, opened by the Very Rev. W. Corby, Provincial of the Congregation of the Holy Cross, was conducted very successfully by the Rev. P. P. Cooney, C. S. C., with Fathers Peter and John Lauth, C. S. C., as assistants. At the close of the mission Father Cooney continued as pastor until 1872, when he was succeeded by Father Corby. This energetic and devoted priest did much to further the interests of the church, a notable undertaking of his being the establishment of the University of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart. Under his direction, also, the erection of a new church was begun in the spring of 1873. This building has an exterior measurement of 152 by 76 feet, the height of the steeple being 213 feet and length of the cross by which it is surmounted 14 feet. The interior dimensions are: nave, 96 by 69 feet; chancel, 58 by 38 feet; gallery, 69 by 47 feet; height of ceiling from floor, 60 feet. The seating capacity is twelve hundred, and estimated cost, complete, $75,000. The corner-stone of St. Bernard's was hewn from the celebrated rock of Cashel, and was sent as a present to the people of Watertown by the Town Council of Cashel, Ireland. This was laid and blessed by the Right Rev. Bishop Henni on October 13, 1873. The church was solemnly dedicated on November 12, 1876. The main altar was erected on April 16, 1877, and soon after the pulpit, a beautiful piece of work, was built and an organ put up in the gallery. In July, 1877, Father Corby was appointed president of the University of Notre Dame, which office he had already held before coming to Watertown. Father Colovin was then named pastor of St. Bernard's and remained in charge until February 1, 1880, when he was transferred to Lead City, in the Black Hills, Dakota. On his departure Father Cooney was reappointed to the pastorate and held that position until the summer of 1881, when Father Corby returned to Watertown and resumed charge. Soon after his return the old pastoral residence was sold and removed, the erection of the present house being begun in October, 1883. In August, 1886, the Rev. Patrick William Condon, for some time previous assistant to Father Corby, assumed the pastorate, continuing to administer the same until the summer of 1895, when the present incumbent, the Rev. J. M. Toohey, was placed in charge. Father Condon is at present assistant to the Superior-General of the Order of the Holy Cross, and as such resides in Paris, France. Father Corby[1] is Provincial of the same Congregation in the United States.

Rev. J. M. Toohey.

It may be well to mention here that in 1891 Father Condon sold the old frame school building which had been in use for many years, erecting in its place the present substantial brick structure. The school is just west of the church and located in the same block. Father

(1) Father Corby died recently.

(1) From information furnished us by the venerable Dr. Edward Johnson it would seem probable that Mass was celebrated on the site now occupied by Watertown, long before Milwaukee was founded, and whilst Wisconsin still formed part of the northwestern possessions of France. He relates that one Timothy Johnson, who came there in 1835 or 1836, found very near if not on the exact spot on which Bernard Crangle afterwards located, a wooden cross lying on the ground and in an excellent state of preservation. This cross had been painted black. It was a source of considerable regret to those who at a later day sought to obtain possession of it as a relic of the first missionaries who passed over that locality, to find that it had been destroyed. Here, however, was a substantial hint that missions to the Indians had been held at this particular place, and this belief is naturally strengthened by the absolute knowledge that the Aborigines were quite numerous in the locality during that period. The country around about at that time offered an ideal hunting ground to roving bands, to whom the surrounding wilderness and waters of Rock River yielded an abundance of game and fish. This condition of affairs lasted until 1850, at which time the encroachments of civilization drove the game further north and west. The cross referred to was undoubtedly raised by one of the earlier French missionaries, the spot selected being in the center of the future village of Watertown, where it must have stood for many years. There it fell, a silent witness of their zeal. As regards the first Mass, however, it is the opinion of quite a number, in spite of many evidences to the contrary, that none was celebrated until after the ending of the Black Hawk war, in 1832. These wars were disastrous to the Indians, dispersing them into detached groups, and intensifying, if possible, the untoward influences of their surroundings. Moreover, there were few if any left who understood the language of these people, or were able to instruct them in the truths of the Christian faith. In spite of these drawbacks, the French missionaries seemed not to have entirely forgotten them, but on the contrary did their utmost to keep up the friendly relations which had been established at such illimitable cost. As a further evidence of the relations existing between the missionaries and these people, and of the labors accomplished by the former, Dr. Johnson relates that he saw a camp of Indians on the land owned at a later day by Patrick Rogan, and heard them sing hymns which had a decided Catholic tone, and which they must have learned from the French Fathers.

After the defeat of the Indians in 1832, a few adventurous Irish Catholics entered the territory, settling in and about Milwaukee, Kenosha, Mineral Point, and other localities on or contiguous to Lake Michigan. It was not, however, until several years later that they came in any considerable numbers, when Milwaukee had been elevated to the dignity of a mission station. At about this time, that is, in the early forties, the future metropolis of Wisconsin was a rendezvous for immigrants, a land office being established there. From this point the settlers in and around Watertown first came, and from there they also received their spiritual attendance.

2. According to Mr. Patrick Rogan, one of the early settlers at Watertown, Mass was always said, prior to the erection of the church, at the home of Mr. Crangle. In this, however, he must be mistaken, as Dr. Johnson mentions several other places within the limits of Watertown where Mass was offered up during that period.

3. The last time that Father Morrissey said Mass in the village, he conducted the services in a small building located on what is now known as Main Street, a little west of the bridge. The quarters occupied on this occasion, though only ten by twelve feet in dimensions, afforded ample standing room for the Catholics in attendance.

Father Morrissey was a man of medium height, stout built and florid complexion, and spoke Irish as well as he did the English language. He had no regard for personal comfort, traveling incessantly, and taking but little rest. He was regarded as a man of great endurance, capable of withstanding as many hardships and as much cold as the Indians. There is but little additional to say regarding the missionary labors of Fathers Morrissey and Kundig, more than to record their heroic courage, zeal, and piety. The field of their labors reached over a vast extent of woodland, and their unguarded and almost helpless condition while journeying from one settlement to another, was always one of danger. Their every act and effort, in fact, carries us back to the apostolic age, their one great object seeming to be a desire to keep alive the faith in all those who had left the great centers of population to make a home for themselves in this trackless wilderness. The missions of these two Fathers ended in 1846, when they were succeeded at short intervals by Fathers McKernan and John Healey.

4. The Rev. Patrick Norris, who succeeded Father Joseph Smith, was a scholarly and polished gentleman, whose delicate sensibilities were unfortunately always at war with the rough and uncouth manners of the settlers. This condition of affairs necessarily made impossible those closer relations between pastor and people which always result in a most satisfactory and beneficial condition to a parish. In justice to him, however, it must be said, that he never in any way neglected his priestly duties. Added to these untoward conditions was the fact that he had an extremely delicate constitution, his health never being good. This, perhaps, tended to make him irritable and unapproachable, so that he led a solitary life, meeting his parishioners only when duty called him to visit them. For the same reason he was also unable to celebrate Mass regularly, and he preached but seldom.

Condon also made some additions to the parochial residence about that time. It was he, likewise, who had the pulpit and the organ set up.

Of the former pastors at Watertown who were members of the congregation of the Holy Cross, Father Patrick J. Colovin is the only one who has been called to his eternal repose. Like Father Condon, he was a native of Canada, and his memory is still lovingly cherished by the people of Watertown.

The Rev. J. M. Toohey, present pastor of St. Bernard's congregation, was born in Ireland on the last day of October, 1840. He came to the United States when nine years of age, landing in New Orleans, where he resided until 1872. He entered the congregation of the Holy Cross at the age of fifteen and was ordained priest by the Most Rev. J. M. Odin on the 8th day of September, 1864. In 1872 he was summoned North by his superior, and with the exception of a couple of years spent in Texas he has since then worked in various places and capacities in the North.

St. Henry's Church, Watertown, Wis.

ST. HENRY'S congregation at Watertown, Wisconsin, was organized in 1853. The first pastor of whom mention is made as attending this church, was the Rev. Conrad Beck. He was succeeded in turn by the Rev. Fathers Francis Uhlemaier, George Strickner, Michael Beitter, Max de Becke, Fabianus Bermadinger, W. Bernard, Minderer, F. X. Etschmann, George Strickner, J. Moder, Francis Spath, and since 1882 by the present incumbent, the Rev. Henry Kampschroer. The congregation now comprises about two hundred families, and the parochial school, which is in charge of the School Sisters of Notre Dame from Milwaukee, has a regular attendance of about the same number of children.

Rev. H. Kampschroer.

St. Henry's Church and School, Watertown, Wis.

There are several Catholic organizations connected with this congregation, among them being St. Henry's Mutual Benefit Society: M. Mueller, president; J. Butscher, vice-president; J. Brusenbach, secretary; Bernard Michell, financial secretary, and P. J. Herzog, treasurer. St. Wenceslaus M. B. Society: Wenceslaus Hrobsky, president; Frank Hrobsky, secretary, and M. Kalina, treasurer. St. John's M. B. Society: F. Klecker, president; F. Hady, vice-president; Gabr. Keimig, treasurer. Altar Society for Married Women. St. Mary's Sodality for Young Ladies: Miss Lizzie Ruesch, prefect; Teckla Salick, secretary; Rose Uhlmayr, treasurer; E. Gahlmann, librarian.

The Rev. H. Kampschroer, present incumbent of St. Henry's, was born in Heiden, Westphalia, Germany, in 1843. For a number of years he pursued his classical, philosophical and theological studies at Muenster, Westphalia, and was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, on January 29, 1868. His first appointment was as assistant to St. Joseph's of Milwaukee, after which he became rector of St. Patrick's at Eau Claire. He was next pastor of St. Joseph's Cathedral at La Crosse, and secretary to Bishop Heiss of that place. Later he became a professor in the Salesianum, and afterwards administrator of the diocese of La Crosse. Following this, he in 1882 became rector of St. Henry's at Watertown.

St. Joseph's Church, Waukesha, Wis.

A FEW Catholic families settled on the spot at present occupied by the city of Waukesha as early as 1840. At that time the country for many miles around was but sparsely settled, and the opportunities to attend divine services were therefore limited to a marked degree. In fact, about the only opportunity for attending such services were when some traveling missionary happened along in his pursuit of new fields, or while endeavoring to reach some other and distant point which he had previously visited. The Catholics who located at Waukesha in 1840 had the benefit of such irregular calls, holding divine services on those occasions in one or another of the houses occupied by them.

The first pastor to thus visit and administer spiritual consolation to them was the Rev. Martin Kundig, who in 1842 celebrated Mass in the house of one John Gasper, which was located at a point now known as Main street. At some time during the same year Catholic interests were promoted at this place by a donation from Solomon Juneau, of Milwaukee, of a number of lots, upon which a log house had some time previously been erected. This house was somewhat improved and arranged as a church, in which capacity it served for a considerable time. The next to attend Waukesha was the Rev. Father Onin, who also made several visits to the Catholics there. In 1844 Father Kundig made his home at Waukesha as first resident pastor. Here, besides laboring among the Catholics who were scattered for quite a distance around, he also established a parochial school, which was taken in charge by his two sisters. In the same year, also, the people began the erection of a new stone church, which was finally completed in 1848. Father Kundig remained for six years, long enough to exemplify, as he did in many other localities, the earnestness of his efforts and desire to promote and further the interests and upbuilding of the church. He was succeeded as pastor of this congregation by the Rev. F.

St. Joseph's Church, Waukesha, Wis.

Tierney, who after a two years' pastorate was succeeded by the Rev. James M. Doyle. Four years later Father James Morris took charge, but in a short time was succeeded by the Rev. John Tiernan, who erected the present parsonage. His immediate successors were the Rev. Fathers O'Niel and David, the latter being succeeded in May, 1862, by the Rev. P. F. Pettit, who continued at Waukesha until 1865, and during that time added a belfry to the church which cost in the neighborhood of $1,500. His successor, the Rev. John Vahey, built a dwelling house costing $2,200, which is at the present time used by the Sisters as a residence. Father Vahey stayed until September, 1866, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Daniel McGinnity. The next pastor was the Rev. Joseph Moder, who remained until May 20, 1867. During the pastorate of his successor, the Rev. Peter De Berge, the parsonage, which had been sold under a foreclosure, was bought back by the parish. Father Edward O'Connor, who succeeded Father De Berge in October, 1870, remained in charge of St. Joseph's until the time of his death, which occurred January 7, 1873; he was buried at Franklin. The vacancy caused by the death of Father O'Connor was filled by the Interior of St. Joseph's Church.

Rev. D. Thill, who came to Waukesha February 4, 1873. The school was also opened at this time under the direction of Sisters of St. Agnes. In 1876 Father Thill took up a collection for this school, transferring its management to Sisters of Notre Dame. He left in 1880 and was succeeded by the Rev. John Gmeiner, who in turn was followed in 1883 by the present incumbent, the Rev. W. G. Miller. Under the administration of the present pastor a number of valuable improvements have been made, most noticeable among which is an elegant stone church, which was erected at an expense of $60,000.

The congregation of St. Joseph's is at present composed of about two hundred and thirty families, and the school has a regular attendance of two hundred and forty children. Of Catholic organizations in this parish there are: Branch No. 40, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: John J. Clark, president; M. L. Snyder, vice-president; M. F. Riley, secretary; Perry Grace, treasurer. Branch No. 20, Catholic Order of Foresters: E. D. Welsh, chief-ranger; G. Stoeckel, vice-chief ranger; H. Stoeckel, recording secretary; E. J. Mellon, financial secretary; John Brehm, treasurer. Altar Society: St. Joseph's School Society and Children of Mary Society.

Rev. W. G. Miller, pastor of St. Joseph's Church at Waukesha, was born at Racine, January 23, 1850. His parents were old and prominent residents of Racine. He attended St. Mary's parochial school until 10 years of age, and after his First Holy Communion attended the Fourth Ward school until he entered St. Francis Seminary, September 1, 1862. Here he remained until he was ordained, November 17, 1872. Said his first Mass at St. Mary's Church, Racine, on November 24, 1872, after which he was appointed to assist the Rev. L. Conrad at Holy Trinity Church, Milwaukee. He remained here for two months, when he was put in charge of the Sacred Heart congregation at Sun Prairie, with Deerfield, Cottage Grove and Waterloo as missions. (Deerfield and Cottage Grove have been abandoned on account of the people removing to the far West). From Sun Prairie he went to Westport, in Dane County, where he took charge of St. Mary's-of-the-Lake congregation on the 20th of July, 1874. He became endeared to these people and was their pastor for six years. While there he established St. John's mission at Waunakee, building the first church and school there, besides making many other improvements. This parish has, by the way, become one of the most prosperous missions in that part of the state. From Westport Father Miller also attended the parish at Vienna, which has since been abandoned on account of its members having removed to the far West. From Westport he went to Platteville, September, 1880, from which place he attended St. Rose's congregation, which church he visited every Sunday. These duties necessitated a drive of twenty miles each Sunday before High Mass. While at Platteville, he made several improvements on the church property as well as on that of St. Rose's. After leaving Platteville he came to Waukesha on September 28, 1883. Here he built the present church, which was dedicated September 27, 1890. People who have been abroad and visited many edifices there, give it as their unqualified opinion that for the amount expended, this is one of the finest that they have ever had the pleasure of seeing.

Rev. W. G. Miller.

St. Joseph's Church, Waupun, Wis.

AN old and reliable authority, who has resided in the city of Waupun for a great number of years, informs us, that the Catholics residing at that place were attended in the year 1858 by the Rev. Father Morris, at that time resident pastor of Fox Lake. Under his active administration the Catholics then residing in that vicinity became sufficiently interested in the matter to begin the erection of a small church. This building was well under way during the administration of Father Morris, who also in addition to planning the form of the structure, and making necessary arrangements for the erection of the same, purchased the lot upon which it was built. As successor to Father Morris, came the Rev. Joseph Smith, who was followed by Father Dougherty. Each of these pastors maintained the services at the mission, from Fox Lake, and it was during the pastorate of the latter that a site was purchased for the parsonage. He did not, however, remain to complete the work, the building being erected under the adminstration of his successor, the Rev. George L. Willard, who also made quite an addition to the church. These changes and improvements were effected during the year 1866, at which time it is offically stated the parish was formally organized. In carrying out this undertaking the congregation naturally incurred a considerable indebtedness, a fact not to be wondered at when it is remembered that Catholics at that time were few in numbers, and means available but limited. The entire amount, however, was liquidated by the next pastor, the Rev. M. Hannon, who resided at Waupun during the year 1870. After him the Rev. Joseph Smith again took charge of the parish, at this time still further advancing the general interest by the erection of a spire, and building a gallery in the church. He also purchased an organ and presented a bell to the congregation, the latter purchased out of his own means. Father Smith was succeeded by the Rev. E. Allen in 1888, and he by the Rev. Joseph C. Hartmann, who assumed the pastorate in 1895. The congregation of St. Joseph's now consists in the neighborhood of three hundred and sixty members.

Of Catholic organizations to which the members belong there is an Altar Society, of which Miss Nellie Brown is secretary and Kittie Donovan, treasurer; Ladies' Aid Society, Mrs. Julia Brown, president; Mamie Donovan, secretary, and Mrs. Hanger, treasurer, and a number of the congregation have recently organized a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

It is generally understood that there is a Catholic chapel at the State penitentiary which is attended by the pastor of St. Joseph's Parish at Waupun. This, unfortunately, is only partially true, the real condition of affairs being about as follows: Services are conducted in a hall where general meetings are held, and which is utterly void of any of the necessary furnishings, vestments or sacred vessels, with the exception of a chalice, which was donated by a priest and personal friend of the present pastor.

St. Joseph's Church, Waupun, Wis.

It would certainly be a gracious act for some of the wealthier Catholics of the state to donate a sum sufficient for the purchase of an altar, vestments and the other articles necessary for the proper celebration of the Holy Mass, thus maintaining that solemnity and impressiveness with which the Catholic service properly rendered always inspires us.

The Rev. Joseph C. Hartmann, present rector of St. Joseph's, was born on the 2d of February, 1860, at Madison, Wisconsin, where he received his elementary education in the parish of the Holy Redeemer. In 1873 he began preparing for the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, but, unfortunately, his studies were on many occasions interrupted by sickness. He was, however, finally enabled to complete a full course, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1884. His first appointment was as assistant pastor at Trinity Church at Milwaukee, where he remained for six months, when he was transferred to the charge of the congregation at Cross Plains, in Dane County, serving there until the summer of 1895, when he entered upon his present duties at Waupun.

Rev. J. C. Hartmann.

Holy Cross Church, Wauwatosa, Wis.

THIS congregation was founded by the Very Rev. Anthony Rottensteiner, O. M. Cap., at the most earnest request of the Most Rev. Archbishop Henni. The corner-stone of the church was laid on the 26th of October, 1879, by Msgr. D. Leonard Batz, at the time Vicar-General. The English sermon was delivered by the Very Rev. Bonaventura Frey, O. M. Cap., and the German by the Very Rev. Francis Haas, O. M. Cap. The erection of the building was in charge of the Very Rev. Anthony Rottensteiner, O. M. Cap. The building itself is in the Basilica style according to the plans of William Schickel of New York City; the different contractors were John Dunn, P. Schmidt and John Fellenz. The church was dedicated on February 20, 1880, by Msgr. Leonard Batz, V. G., the first pastor being the Rev. Kilian Haas, who remained from February 23 to October 1, 1880. On May 20 of the same year the Stations of the Cross, a donation by Mrs. Diel and others, were erected by the Very Rev. Anthony Rottensteiner, O. M. Cap., and June 27th following the school-house was blessed by the Very Rev. Bonaventura Frey, O. M. Cap., and opened with thirteen pupils. The pastor of Holy Cross congregation was the Rev. Boniface Goebbels, O. M. Cap., who remained until February, 1884. During his administration the Side-Altar, "The Sorrowful Mother," a donation by the Romadka Brothers, was blessed by the Very Rev. Rottensteiner, and on August 21, 1881, the church bell, donated by J. Juneau, was blessed by the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss. On this latter occasion the Rev. Father Maloney of St. John's Cathedral preached in English and Msgr. L. Batz in German. On September 14, 1881, the High Altar, donated by Miss Elizabeth Baasen, the Statue of the Sorrowful Mother, a donation of Mr. Traudt, and the St. Joseph's Altar, given by a number of Catholics, were blessed by the Very Rev. Anthony Rottensteiner. The Rev. Augustin Limperich, O. M. Cap., succeeded to the pastorate in February, 1884, and was followed by the Very Rev. Bonaventura Frey on October 29, 1885. Father Frey erected a statuary group of the Crucifixion in front of the Hospice in May 1886. Father Limperich again assumed the duties in June, 1886, remaining this time until March 19, 1888. On August 22, 1886, the Crucifixion group in front of the Hospice was blessed by the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss. The English sermon on this occasion was delivered by the Very Rev. S. P. Lalumiere, S. J., and the one in German by the Rev. A. Halsband, O. M. Cap. After the removal of Father Augustin, the Rev. Timothy Grossmann was pastor until August 30, 1891. He founded the St. Francis Men's Benevolent Society on May 5, 1889. He and Father Augustin were both successful in reducing the indebtedness of the church and school. After Father Grossmann came the Rev. Hyacinth Schomer, O. M. Cap., who was replaced July 7, 1893, by Father Bernardin Schmitz, O. M. Cap., the present pastor. Father Schmitz among other things built an addition to the Hospice in 1893, built the basement hall in 1894 and had the interior of the church frescoed and re-windowed in 1895. The congregation now consists of from eighty to eighty-five families or about five hundred souls. On June 26, 1894, the Sacrament of Confirmation was administered for the first time in this church to a class of forty-six by the Most Rev. Archbishop Frederick Xavier Katzer. There is one school connected with the church, that being in charge of two Sisters of Notre Dame Convent. The average attendance now is about one hundred. There are four Catholic societies to which the members of the congregation belong. They are: St. Francis' Men's Benevolent Society; Fred Yehle, president; H. Reinders, vice-president; Mathias Goebel, secretary; Frank Mayer, treasurer; Young Ladies' Society of Perpetual Succor; Johanna Menten, president; Josephine Daas, secretary; Sophia Volz, treasurer; The Holy Childhood Society and Society of Christian Mothers.

Holy Cross Church, Wauwatosa, Wis.

Rev. Bernardin Schmitz.

The Rev. Bernardin Schmitz was born July 14, 1852, in Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany. He came to the United States in 1865, and entered the Capuchin Order at Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin, May 20, 1869. He was ordained to the priesthood November 7, 1875. From February, 1876, to October, 1882, he was in New York City as assistant, first at St. John the Baptist's, and then for four years at the church of Our Lady of Sorrows. From 1882 to 1885 he was professor at St. Lawrence College, Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin, having at the same time charge of the mission of St. Cloud. From October, 1885, to March, 1888, he was Guardian in Appleton and then Vicar in Detroit, Michigan, until October, 1889, when he again assumed the duties of professor at St. Lawrence College, Mt. Calvary, having at the same time charge of the Mission of St. Peter, remaining until 1893, when he became pastor of the congregation of Holy Cross.

Church of the Holy Angels, West Bend, Wis.

MASS was celebrated in the homes of the Catholics residing in and around West Bend as long ago as 1849, the Rev. Father Beitter, at that time a resident of St. Lawrence, being the visiting priest. He was succeeded by the Rev. Simon Bartosz, whose pastorate extended from October, 1855, to November, 1857. Some time prior, however, to the coming of Father Bartosz, that is, in 1852, the Catholics built their first church. From 1857 to 1858 the Rev. Casper Rehrl was pastor at West Bend, he being followed by the Rev. Dr. Arnold, from 1858 to 1860, the Rev. P. Wieggert from 1860 to 1862, and Father John B. Reindl, who remained from June, 1862, until March, 1869. On July 10, 1866, the corner-stone of the present church was laid, the building being completed during the following year. The Rev. Charles Schilling assumed the pastorate in 1870, remaining, however, but a short time, and being succeeded by the Rev. M. Ruckengruber, whose term of service extended from April, 1870, until October, 1888. In 1880 Father Ruckengruber erected a large parochial school building and dwelling, and two years later made many necessary repairs to the church and built the steeple. In October, 1888, the Rev. P. J. Stupfel, the present pastor, assumed the charge. Until July, 1893, West Bend was attended as a mission from Barton, but at that date Father Stupfel became the first resident pastor, erecting a priest-house during the following year. The congregation of the Church of the Holy Angels now consists of one hundred and fifty families, and the parochial school, which is in charge of School Sisters of Notre Dame, has an attendance of one hundred and forty scholars. Of Catholic societies connected with this parish there are the St. Peter's Aid Society: Charles Bech, president; Stephen Lang, vice-president; M. Immel, secretary; P. Boden, treasurer. Catholic Order of Foresters, Holy Angels' Court: M. A. Fohn, chief ranger; Ch. Moser, vice-chief ranger; M. Kempfer, recording secretary; H. Bohn, financial secretary; C. Knippel, treasurer; Dr. Herriges, medical examiner. St. Ann's Society: E. Boden, president; L. O. Meara, secretary and treasurer. Ladies' Sodality: L. Kempfer, president; Th. Pick, secretary; E. Engman, treasurer.

Rev. P. J. Stupfel.

Church of the Holy Angels, West Bend, Wis.

Father P. J. Stupfel was born on the 22d of August, 1857, in the town of Springfield, Dane County, Wis. After receiving the ordinary common school education, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis in September, 1869. There he completed his classical and theological education June, 1878, and was ordained to the priesthood on June 27, 1880. In October of the same year he took charge of Holy Trinity congregation at Newburg, Wis., where he remained for eight years. He was then appointed to the pastorate of Barton and West Bend, and in July, 1893, became resident pastor of Holy Angels at the latter place.

St. Mary's Church, Westport, Wis.

ST. MARY'S congregation was established at Westport in the spring of 1865, during which year the pastor in charge, the Rev. Peter Lavin, began the erection of a church. This was still in a state of incompleteness when he was transferred to another charge, his successor, the Rev. Thomas G. Corry, completing the undertaking. Father Corry was succeeded in the charge of this congregation by the Rev. Fathers M. Hobbs, James Stehle, J. Tiernan, Patrick Walsh, W. G. Miller, F. X. Etschmann, M. M. Gerend and the present pastor, the Rev. B. A. Siepker. During the pastorate of Father Miller an addition and other improvements were made to the parsonage, while Father Gerend added three beautiful altars to the interior furnishings of the church. The congregation at the present time numbers about fifty-five families. Of Catholic organizations connected with St. Mary's there is an Altar Society, of which Mrs. Martin Kennedy is president; League of the Sacred Heart, promoters, James and Michael Hogan, M. H. O'Keefe, Michael Kennedy, M. O'Keefe, Bridget O'Malley and Lizzie O'Keefe, and a Temperance Society, of which J. R. O'Malley is president.

The congregation of St. John's at Waunakee, Dane County, Wisconsin, was established in the year 1874, with permission of the Most Rev. Archbishop John Martin Henni, D. D., under the supervision and direction of the Rev. W. G. Miller, pastor of St. Mary's of the

St. Mary's Church, Westport, Wis.

Lake, at Westport. The congregation at the time of its organization consisted of nineteen German families, who formerly worshiped at St. Mary's and St. Peter's at Springfield. Being aware of the many dangers that they were exposed to in such a mixed community, and fearing that the final result would be the loss of their holy faith, the members concluded to establish a Catholic school at about the same time, and thus enable their offspring to obtain a good Catholic education. To further this object, a meeting was called, as a result of which, although money was at that time very scarce, a sufficient fund was created to purchase a site and erect a building, which for the time being served both as church and school. A year later, the building proving too small for both purposes, a separate school-house was erected, which was placed in charge of secular teachers.

Of the congregation of St. John's, the Rev. Father Miller, now pastor of St. Joseph's Church at Waukesha, had charge until September 1, 1880, when he was succeeded by the Rev. F. X. Etschmann. Father Etschmann, who had just returned from a visit to Europe, and whose health was feeble and failing, found the task of attending to the congregations at Westport and the Mission of St. John's too much for him, and as a result, after an eight months' pastorate, resigned. Then the Rev. M. M. Gerend, a newly ordained priest, was appointed pastor of Westport and Waunakee, by Archbishop Heiss, assuming the duties of the same on July 28, 1881. Previous to this time, services had been held at the Mission of St. John's twice each month, and upon the accession of Father Gerend to the pastorate, regular weekly visits were made to Waunakee, and the school at that place was also placed by him in charge of school Sisters of St. Agnes. Of these there were three, for whom the then existing accommodations were altogether inadequate, so a new and comfortable Sisters' dwelling was built, under the direction of Father Gerend, in the spring of 1882, the same costing seven hundred and twenty-five dollars. As time rolled on, the congregation of St. John's increased to such an extent that it became evident that a substantial addition would have to be made to the church then in use, or an entirely new building erected. To decide this question, a meeting was called on the 6th day of January, 1885, when preliminary steps were taken towards incorporating the congregation. Of this meeting Messrs. Michael Koltes and Peter Esser were elected treasurer and secretary respectively. It was finally decided, by a small majority, to erect a new building, and in the summer of 1886 the foundation for such structure was laid. The new church, which is a stately edifice, built entirely of quarry stone, has an area of forty-two by one hundred feet, and seating capacity for four hundred. It is thoroughly well furnished throughout, having hardwood pews, cathedral-glass windows, furnace and many other modern improvements. The building, when completed, cost the congregation in the neighborhood of fifteen thousand dollars, the greater portion of which was paid before the work was completed.

Rev. B. A. Siepker.

The congregation, which has been in charge of the Rev. Bernard Siepker since 1889, now numbers eighty-five families, and the parochial school has a regular attendance of about one hundred scholars.

In 1896 a new school-house was built at Waunakee, which was completed at an expense of three thousand dollars.

The Rev. B. A. Siepker, present rector of St. Mary's, was born in Potosi, Wisconsin, December 11, 1862. At an early age, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis near Milwaukee, from which institution, having completed the necessary studies, he was ordained to the priesthood on January 24, 1888. His first appointment was as assistant pastor at Oshkosh, where he remained for one year, when he was transferred to his present charge, of which he assumed the duties on September 30, 1889.

St. Patrick's Church, Whitewater, Wis.

THE Catholic parish at Whitewater, which has for its present spiritual adviser the Rev. Francis P. Reilly, is known as St. Patrick's congregation, as the first church built here was dedicated to the honor of Ireland's great Apostle. But very few of the early pioneers remain who assisted in forming and establishing a parish at this place, which undertaking—an arduous one in those days—was accomplished as long ago as the early forties. Among those of the first comers who took part in this interesting work, and still reside in this vicinity, is Mrs. Martin Langdon, whose husband moved into the town of Whitewater in 1844. During the year following, Mr. Patrick Larkin came to Whitewater, while Mr. P. O'Brien settled there in 1852. The first records we find of priests visiting among the settlers at Whitewater was in 1845, when Father Morrissey came there from Milwaukee and said Mass at the home of Martin Langdon. From that time, Father Morrissey made monthly visits to the settlement, saying Mass at different houses, where the early pioneers of the Catholic faith met to attend divine services. After Father Morrissey discontinued his visits, a similar duty was performed by Father Kernan, while after him came Father Smith, the latter pastor being succeeded in these duties by the Rev. Father Kundig, who came to visit among the scattered settlements for miles around. It was he who proposed the erection of a church at Whitewater, and donated the first amount of money for that purpose. This church still stands as a monument to the memory of those who, in spite of limited means and other untoward conditions, built and supported it through the uncertain years of its early existence. At the present time this church is used by the Sisters of Mercy as a Catholic school house. Father Kundig was succeeded by the Rev. James Doyle, who came to Whitewater in the latter part of 1853. It was during his administration that the first baptism was held, December 28, 1853, in the church, an infant named Nora Moore being christened at that time. Father Doyle remained with the Catholics at Whitewater until 1857, when he was succeeded by the Rev. John Tiernan, who was there, however, but a short time, and only, in fact, until the arrival of the Rev. Richard Dumphy, who had been assigned as pastor of the congregation of St. Patrick's. On October 23, 1865, Father Dumphy called a meeting of his parishioners for the purpose of considering the feasibility of building a new church. His proposition was well received, and before the meeting adjourned, a committee of six members of the congregation was appointed to secure the necessary funds to carry on the work to its completion. In the following year, the present church was commenced, and another year's time had not elapsed before it was finished. Father Doyle remained in active charge in this congregation until 1869, when he was succeeded by the Rev. T. T. Kirwin, who remained but a few months. His successor was the Rev. F. X. Etschmann, who had charge of the congregation for one month, and until the Rev. H. F. Fairbanks arrived in June, 1870. Father Fairbanks continued in this charge for eleven years, until 1881, when he was succeeded by the Rev. James Fitzgibbons, who assumed the pastorate in September of that year. For the next sixteen years Father Fitzgibbons remained as pastor of the congregation, having at various times, as assistants, the Revs. E. P. Lorigan, P. Klein, M. E. Downs, and S. J. Dowling, who is at the present time, located in Milwaukee. Owing to rapidly failing health, Father Fitzgibbons, in January, 1896, made a visit to New Orleans in search of rest as well as change of climate. Unfortunately, however, while visiting in the South, he contracted a severe cold, which, owing to his feeble condition, he was unable to overcome. To this cold succeeded an accute attack of pneumonia, to which he succumbed on February 5, 1897.

St. Patrick's Church and Parsonage, Whitewater, Wis.

Rev. F. P. Reilly.

Father Fitzgibbons was one of the oldest and best known priests in the Northwest. He was born in 1827 in Ireland, and acquired his classical education at Killaloe, at which institution he was ordained, in 1854, by the Most Rev. Archbishop Kenrick, of St. Louis, Missouri. Coming to this country, his first appointment was as pastor of St. Mary's Church, in Chicago, whence, soon after, he went to Springfield, Illinois, where he remained for eight years, and, in fact, until the Civil War broke out. He was a warm personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, and from him, at the beginning of the war, received his appointment of post chaplain at Harper's Ferry. He remained in active service until the end of the war, when he came to Wisconsin and was appointed pastor of the Catholic congregation at Darlington. From there he was transferred to Menomonee Falls, thence to East Troy, and, finally, to Whitewater. One who knew him well says: "During his sojourn among us, lasting over sixteen years, his genial character, in which his faithfulness as a priest, mingled with the gallantry of a soldier, endeared him to one and all. He was a man liberal, generous and true, a man whom even children loved. His life proved to all that in him was the truest test of Christianity, true love; and the fruit of his love was cordial fellowship, in which, with noble humility, he esteemed others better than himself. The evening of his earthly career was like the morning and noon of that great life—calm and peaceful. The sunset found the soldier priest willing to answer to the call of the General he had served so well during life, his God." The remains of Father Fitzgibbons are buried in the cemetery at Whitewater. Father Fitzgibbons was succeeded as pastor by his assistant, the Rev. S. J. Dowling, who went to Whitewater in August, 1896. On the death of Father Fitzgibbons, in February, 1897, Father Dowling was appointed to the pastorate, remaining in charge of the same until August of that year, when he was removed to Milwaukee, and the Rev. Father F. P. Reilly, who for twelve years preceding was a professor at the Ecclesiastical Seminary at St. Francis, took charge of the congregation. The church property at Whitewater now comprises an entire block, on which are located the church, school, Sisters' house and parsonage. The congregation numbers somewhere in the neighborhood of two hundred families, while the school has a regular average attendance of about ninety pupils. Of Catholic organizations in this congregation, there is an Altar Society, Young Ladies' Sodality, Children of Mary Society, St. Aloysius Society, and Catholic Knights of Wisconsin. The trustees of the parish at the present time are Messrs. Malone, Conaty, Ligemann, Roach and Larkin.

The Rev. F. P. Reilly, present pastor of St. Patrick's congregation, was born March 26, 1859, in the State of Wisconsin. On September 18, 1876, he entered the Ecclesiastical Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, and after having completed his studies there, was ordained to the priesthood on June 29, 1885, by Archbishop M. Heiss. He said his first Mass at Geneva, Walworth County, Wisconsin, on July 5th following, where his brother, the Rev. Eugene Reilly, was rector of St. Francis' congregation. His first appointment after ordination, was as professor in the Salesianum, where he remained until being transferred to his present charge. For the first two years of his professorship at the Seminary, he taught English and Elocution, and the ten following years were devoted to the teaching of Canon Law, Homiletics, English and Elocution. In 1892 Father Reilly established, in Milwaukee, "Our Young People," a magazine which at present enjoys a national reputation.

History of the Catholic Church in Wisconsin.

PART VI.

The Diocese of Green Bay and City of Green Bay.

CHAPTER I.

Papal Brief for the Erection of the See of Green Bay.

Pope Pius XIV.

BE it Known to Future Times: §1. The office of the Supreme Apostolate bestowed by God on Our humble person demands that We zealously work for whatever will serve the Catholic cause and the eternal salvation of souls. As soon, therefore, as we understand that the erection of new dioceses all over the Catholic world will benefit the spiritual government and security of the faithful, Our full attention is given to what we deem the most opportune and wholesome means towards establishing new Episcopal Sees. Now, the Holy Fathers assembled at the second Plenary Council of the United States of North America held in Baltimore during the month of October, 1866, have informed Us that the interests of the Catholic Religion would be greatly furthered by the erection of a new Episcopal See in the city of Green Bay. Having laid the matter before Our venerable brothers, the Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church belonging to the Congregation for the Propagation of Faith, and having seriously considered it with them, We have decided to found, without further delay, the proposed new See.

§2. Now, therefore, by the advice of the aforesaid Cardinals and in the fullness of Our Apostolic authority, do We erect and establish, by these letters, a new Episcopal See in the city of Green Bay, to be governed by its own Bishop. The diocese of this Church, henceforth to be called Green Bay, shall be limited in the West by the Wisconsin River, in the East by Lake Michigan, in the North by the part of the State of Michigan lying between the sources of the Wisconsin River and the Lakes Kahakihaken[1] and Michigan, and finally in the South by the Fox and Manitowoc Rivers. Further, We grant and bestow upon to said Church of Green Bay all the honors, rights and privileges which other Episcopal Sees have and enjoy.

§3. Such is Our will and command. We also decree that these, Our present letters, shall forever be in force, valid and effective, and obtain their full and entire effects, etc.[2]

Given at St. Peter's in Rome, under the Fisherman's ring,[3] the 3d day of March, 1868, in the 22d year of Our Pontificate.

Discovery of Green Bay.

At so late a period as the first half of the present century, the greater portion of Wisconsin was still in a condition of primeval chaos.

But it was also a land of promise, for Nature, considerate mother, had lavished with unsparing hand her choicest gifts upon it. And those who first ventured into this heretofore unexplored wilderness were overwhelmed by the enriching possibilities of its fecund soil and of its giant forests which needed but the skill of man to develop one of the greatest industries of modern times. Countless streams of living water wended their tortuous paths in every direction, lending life and color to the verdure round about, while within the earth's dark breast lay hid in mineral form the ransom of a thousand kings. Such was what is now known as Wisconsin, when the first sturdy pioneers set foot upon her soil.

Many years prior to the period in question this almost measureless solitude had been made known to the world through the efforts of a few daring spirits, who, in the interests of religion or for other causes, had penetrated its most gloomy recesses. But the result of these zealous and herculean efforts were necessarily of a most limited character, marked here and there by a few sparsely cultivated acres, or church or school of the most primitive construction. The latter-day investment of this promising territory was made largely by Germans, whose energy and thrift have proved no slight incentive to the country's growth and present prosperity.

(1) This lake is at present called Lac Vieux Desert, and is located in the northeast corner of Vilas County, Wisconsin, near State Line village.

(2) Here follows a long string of legal clauses usual at all such pontifical documents.

(3) Referring to the seal attached, which represents St. Peter fishing on a lake.

The first white man to explore this territory was the French voyageur, Jean Nicollet, he landing at what is now known as Green Bay in 1634. The year following he returned to Montreal, the place from whence he started, there making a report to the French government in which the point invested was referred to as "La Baye." Six years later, Pere Paul le Jeune also made a report of the same section, although it is not authoritatively stated that he visited it personally. Following came still another report from the missionary Rene Menard, who subsequently, with those accompanying him, perished in the wilderness, after having endured the most terrible hardships. To the missionary Pere Claude Allouez is accredited the honor of being the first one to successfully undertake a residence of any length in this territory. He came during the year 1665. It was while dwelling here that the good father became aware of the rich copper deposits to be found in the region of Lake Superior, that fact being made known to him by the natives; and though never seeing the copper, it was evidently through him that the world first learned of its existence.

The most valuable reports of that section were, however, made in 1673, by Pere Marquette, who in addition forwarded to the proper authorities carefully executed maps which furnished with commendable exactness the various localities in which the minerals discovered were located. In addition to this he traced to some considerable extent the course of the Mississippi River, that majestic stream whose magnitude has rightfully entitled it to the name of Father of Waters.

This last great discovery led to the sending, by the French government, of Joliet to Green Bay for the purpose of still further investigating the possibilities and resources of the great river in company with several chosen companions, and from the very spot where the third German Catholic convention of Wisconsin was held in 1892 the great missionary Marquette and noted explorer Joliet continued their researches, passing up the Fox and down the Wisconsin River to a point where a fine view of the Upper Mississippi was obtained by them and a faint conjecture formed as to the magnitude of the land which lay beyond. Twelve years later the first white settlers, some fifty-six in all, established themselves at Green Bay, forming the nucleus of a settlement, which within a few decades was destined to become one of the most prosperous in the great Northwest. But the encroachment of the white race upon this borderland of civilization necessarily created a demand for excessive care and vigilance in protecting the person and property of the settlers, so in 1816 Fort Howard was built and garrisoned with two hundred men. In 1822 Father Richard went to Green Bay, where he celebrated Mass and administered the Sacrament of Holy Communion to one Mme. Vieau, a resident of the place at that time.

The experiences of the first French Catholic pioneers, so full of hardship and privation, give to posterity an historical record pregnant with unselfish motives and heroic deeds. And to them, the thrifty, tireless workers, the men and women who with dauntless bravery and consummate skill wrought out a matchless destiny for future generations, belongs the guerdon of undying fame, the lasting solace of a nation's gratitude.

Administration of Justice in those Earlier Days.

We have related how pleasing it was in those earlier days to live in the country around Green Bay, and, we think, the reader will be amused to hear some instances of the administration of justice in those times.

The French Government appointed for a short term a certain Monsieur Réaume as Judge. The judicial office enchanted the gentleman so greatly, and took such firm hold on him, that he, though never reappointed, still remained Judge for life. He was such a lover of peace and justice that he, it is said in a certain case, condemned both plaintiff and defendant in order to deter people from going to law. The plaintiff was sentenced to bring the Judge a ton of hay, the defendant was to deliver four cords of wood or twenty bushels of potatoes at the same door, whereupon he dismissed them with the admonition, "Well, now, go and keep the peace," which they, after such sentences, never failed to do.

Jean Batic was a poor man, and, to keep his family from starving, he stole a hog from one Charboneau. The owner of the porker was able to prove the theft. Poor Batic hastens to the Judge and confesses his distress. "Well," quoth the Judge, "you are a poor devil; you eat the hog and bring me one cord of wood, and we will call it square." Batic had hardly vanished when Charboneau arrives. Judge Réaume, who had waited for him, received him with a short "Quel Diable que l'amain?"—"What the devil brings you here?" "Excuse me, your honor," replies Charboneau, "but one of my hogs has been stolen." "Nothing new to me," retorts his honor, "Batic has stolen it. I know it already; he was here and confessed his guilt. But his family ate the hog, and for his crime he brings me one cord of wood; and you, if you do not get out of here in a minute, will draw me four cords." It will be readily understood that Monsieur Charboneau went home joyful.

The most effective sentence, however, was pronounced by a Judge in Oconto. It was the sentence given by his foot. It happened, not in the prehistoric period, but at the time when the Germans were fighting for the fishing grounds around Oconto, and, after every suit, paid the Judge off in salt herring. This custom had lasted for years, until the Judge had tired of herring. At one term of the court, his honor and the contending parties having made their appearance, the latter accompanied by the unavoidable barrel of herring, the Judge looked a moment at the well-known price of his labor, then gave it a hearty kick with his heel and sent it flying into a corner and thundered forth: "There will be no more justice for herring. Henceforth, it must be whitefish, or justice will be dumb. Court's adjourned for one week." This had its proper effect. People regarded affairs in a new light. They became peaceable, having arrived at the conclusion that if they wanted to get rid of their whitefish they could find a better market for it than in court.

Early German Catholic Settlers.

The advance guard of German immigration arrived at the settlement of Green Bay in the autumn of 1842. There were some eighteen families in all, mostly Catholics, among them being not a few whose names are to the present day identified with the moral as well as the natural growth of the State. But although it was not ordained that they were to be the chosen ones to transplant the Catholic faith to this destined scene of their future operations, it was at least their privilege to aid to no measurable extent in the advancing and ultimate prosperity of a work so admirably conceived and wrought out through the heroic efforts of the missionaries Allouez, Marquette and Joliet, whose life work, as that of others who followed, was one endless sacrifice to the good of the cause.

Of those early pioneers the majority settled in Little Chute, the families of Maus, Wald and Larscheid in the Bay Settlement, that of Salzcheider in Town Howard, and the Platten family in Town De Pere on the Manitowoc road. But one of the whole number, Paul Fox, lived from the day of his arrival until that of his death, which occurred in 1893, on the spot where the city of Green Bay now stands.

During the next few years such men as Messrs. July, Fuhrman, Leisch, Klaus and Reis, adding to the strength of the already thriving colony, and settling in the forest as those preceding them had done, literally hewed out their homes in its very midst.

By this time the Church had become thoroughly established, the settlers maintaining as a place of worship a building of considerable size to which a mission house was added. The latter, however, was not in active use owing to the scarcity of means and consequent inability of the clergy to extend the work. The church was erected about half way between Green Bay and De Pere, thus becoming available to the people of both places. It was in this structure that in 1842 Pere Bonduel, who, in spite of his advanced age had acquired a considerable knowledge of the German language, read to the pioneers in their mother tongue from a book—Goffine—which is still preserved as a cherished relic by the family of John Patten.

On Christmas morning, 1847, the church was totally destroyed by fire, but was soon replaced by another building which stood on the site at present occupied by the French church in Green Bay. The congregation at this time was composed largely of French, Germans, Hollander and Irish settlers, but of its numerical strength no authentic statement is given.

Importance as a Commercial Center.

But aside from her acknowledged preëminence as a religious center, there was another scarcely less important feature which made Green Bay a prominent factor in the development and growth of Wisconsin as well as of that vast region which lies directly west and southwest of it. For years it was the recognized commercial center and headquarters of all the country round about, even for a season purveying to the wants and necessities of the present metropolis of the State.

Capital of Brown County, from which seven generously sized counties have since been formed, she dominated the commercial as well as the spiritual interests of a vast constituency, comprising the present cities of Sheboygan, Mineral Point, Potosi and Prairie du Chien, while even far-off St. Louis called on her unceasingly for many of the necessaries of life. For years, in fact until 1850, the farmers for many miles around would team their grain to the flouring mills of De Pere, which were consequently kept in a state of almost unceasing activity. The transportation of large quantities of heavy merchandise between the several points already mentioned was the cause of a commercial understanding between Solomon Juneau and Andrew Vieau, which lasted for a considerable period.

The persistence with which the exploration and development of the country was carried on must in all fairness be attributed to those early French voyageurs whose unflagging energy in forwarding the undertaking will ever prove a star of undying lustre in the annals of that nation. To them no trials were too severe, no obstacles too insurmountable, as with unwavering faith in their ability to succeed they pushed on with insatiable though pardonable greed through that treacherous and altogether unknown wilderness. It was indeed a test most trying and severe, causing the stoutest hearts to tremble, and leaving behind an historic record in bleaching bones and nameless graves which altogether too frequently marked the progress of their efforts.

Several attempts of an exceedingly hazardous nature were made by these people in an endeavor to penetrate the territory lying between Green Bay and St. Louis, with a view to establishing a French settlement at the latter place. But they proved unavailing, most if not all of those sturdy adventurers perishing on the way from hunger or other unknown causes.

A somewhat amusing incident, in which a Frenchman's overpowering zest for such enterprises is aptly illustrated, is given in the case of M. Vieau. This gentleman let a contract for the erection of a house, secured all necessary materials and left sufficient money to defray whatever expenses might be incurred. He then started on a protracted trip to Mineral Point and Prairie du Chien. On his way back he met the contractor and men, who, having completed the job, were also returning to their homes. "Ah," said he, "and is the house finished? Do the doors fit, and are the windows clean? to all of which receiving an affirmative reply, he passed along, saying, "Fort bien, fort bien, bon voyage, au revoir." A moment later it dawned upon him that there were others demanding his attention as well as the new house, for he suddenly exclaimed: "et Madame Vieau, et ses enfants, comment se portent-ils?" He had almost forgotten them.

Development of Catholicism in Green Bay.

Early in the year 1850, the first German congregation, consisting of about forty families, was established, and a modest church erected for its use. In after years when Green Bay had been elevated to an Episcopal See, this building was used as pro-cathedral. On July 12, 1868, the Very Rev. Joseph Melcher, Vicar-General of the Archdiocese of St. Louis, was appointed first Bishop of Green Bay, continuing in that function until his death, which occurred December 20, 1873. Succeeding Bishop Melcher came the Right Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, who was consecrated July 29, 1875. He died on December 17, 1885. The Rt. Rev. Fred. X. Katzer became third Bishop of Green Bay September 21, 1886, and continued in that function until December, 1890, when he was elevated to the Archiepiscopal See of Milwaukee. The present and fourth Bishop of the diocese is the Rt. Rev. Seb. G. Messmer, whose consecration was celebrated March 27, 1892.

The cathedral, the corner-stone of which was laid in 1876, was consecrated with most impressive ceremonies November 21, 1880, by Bishop Krautbauer, from whose plans and under whose personal supervision it was built. It is a remarkably handsome and imposing edifice, an attractive ornament to the city, and a lasting monument to the artistic skill and excellent judgment of the Right Rev. builder.

Thus, "by your faith shall ye be known," should ever prove a fitting inscription to the memory of this pioneer of religious fervor, for even as Bethlehem was not least important among the cities of Judea, so too Green Bay must take rank among the foremost of the State as the center of religious zeal.

From her confines in the wooded depths of a great wilderness, the light of eternal truth was diffused, until, to the north, the west or southwest, no spot or place was to be found where its softening and refining influences had not taken up a lasting abode. From Green Bay the now opulent metropolis of Missouri received her first initiation in the mysteries of the true faith, and experienced the first thrill of advancing civilization, returning at a later date that meritorious deed in the gift to Green Bay of its first Bishop, Melcher. Milwaukee, too, another offspring of the parent stem, paid it a lasting tribute in the person of Bishop Krautbauer. But the obligation still remains unsettled, for it was Green Bay that in turn gave to Milwaukee the Rt. Rev. Fred. X. Katzer, the reigning Archbishop.

Thus, verily, hath the bread cast upon the waters returned, bearing with it the fruits of an abundant harvest. The value of that work done by the sacred and lamented dead, who without one thought of personal emolument, or desire for satisfied ambition, went forth to preach the word, is beyond finite computation. Boldly they undertook to do the Master's bidding, and unflinchingly yielded themselves up to endless privations, nameless tortures and awful deaths. Is it any wonder, then, that the memory of such inspired lives, so pregnant with all that is most holy and unselfish, should prove an inextinguishable beacon to direct wavering and misguided souls into the paths of virtue and of truth?

Nor were their lives given in vain, that is, if the remarkable growth of the Church in Wisconsin is in any manner to be attributed to their earnest and indefatigable labors. In 1842, the parish of Green Bay, being bounded on the north by Lake Superior, on the south by Milwaukee, on the west by the Mississippi, and on the east by Lake Michigan, had but one church. But half a century later there were in the city of Green Bay, alone, three large and beautiful churches, in addition to which were two of lesser note situated respectively at Fort Howard and east of East River. At this time, also, Brown County comprising an area of five hundred and thirty square miles and with a population of over forty thousand, contained no less than twenty-six Catholic churches, in conjunction with most of which was also a parish school.

Though long ago outstripped in population and commercial prestige by other Western cities, Green Bay still stands proudly in the van of all religious centers. But a little over a year ago (May 8, 1896), a celebration of unwonted interest was held at De Pere, when the statue of St. Joseph with the Child Jesus was crowned with much ceremony by Bishop Messmer in the presence of an unusually large audience.

A cursory view of the ecclesiastical standing of the Diocese at the present day, even when compared with that of a year or so ago, cannot fail to induce heartfelt expressions of admiration for the strength, persistence and noticeable interest with which laity as well as clergy have done their duty to the Church and to their fellowmen.

Thus there are to be found to-day within the Diocese a variety of institutions erected and maintained for the good of the cause, among them being St. Vincent's Hospital, St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum, the Convent of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, also a new hospital and a new orphan asylum built respectively in 1895 and 1896.

Besides these the Diocese of Green Bay has now a following of one hundred and twenty-six secular and fourteen religious priests. Of churches with resident priests there are one hundred and twenty-one; missions with churches, sixty-six; stations, eleven; chapels, eight; brothers (including novices and postulants), sixteen; theological students, ten; academies for young ladies, two; pupils, thirty-seven; schools, seventy-two; pupils, ten thousand nine hundred and six; orphan asylums, three; orphans, two hundred and twenty; industrial and reform school, one; inmates, seventy-seven; total of young people under Catholic care, twelve thousand and seventy seven; hospitals, six; Catholic population, 125,000.

Diocese of Green Bay.

The credit of having begun the first Catholic mission in Green Bay and vicinity belongs to these zealous missionary priests and explorers, who occupy one of the first and most conspicuous places among the spiritual pioneers of the country, the Jesuit Fathers. To them no labor appeared too hard, no obstacle seemed insurmountable, and neither troubles nor dangers of whatever kind could terrify them, or quench their ardor, when the cause of Christianity and spread of the Gospel was at stake.

Starting from Canada, these dauntless Fathers explored the Great Lakes, followed the course of rivers, and penetrated courageously the primeval forest that they might bring the glad tidings of salvation to the poor red man, and minister spiritual consolation to the scattered white whose vocations, as trappers, hunters or fur-traders, placed them far in advance of anything pertaining to the amenities of civilization or even religion.

The first missionary to come to the country around Green Bay was the Jesuit Father Claude Allouez. He, after having preached the Gospel to the Indians along the Menominee River and in the neighborhood of Sturgeon Bay, from December 2, 1669, till April 16, 1670, embarked on the latter date to carry the Gospel to the Outagamie tribe, at that time located where stands the present County of Outagamie. On the second day of his journey, he entered the Fox River, which he named St. Francis, in honor of the great missionary of the Indies. During the summer of the same year, urgent business called him back to Sault Ste. Marie, but he returned to the field of his labors in the following autumn, accompanied by his Superior, Pere Claude Dablon, and visited the Mascoutins on the Upper Fox. In 1671, a chapel was built in the present city of De Pere, probably by Pere Louis André, S. J., who was a co-laborer with Father Allouez. The exact site of this building is not absolutely known, although it is generally believed to be on the spot where the first government lock now stands. In the year 1673, Pere Marquette, the famous discoverer of the Mississippi, while extending his tour of observation, passed through this Mission.

At about this time, also, Pere André was succeeded by Father Albanel, S. J., who during his residence there built a fine new church on the hill directly opposite the falls, which was used in place of the little chapel, which in the meantime had been destroyed by the Indians. Father Albanel's successor was the Rev. P. J. Enjalran, S. J. Some years later, in 1724, when Charlevoix visited those regions, he found the Rev. P. J. B. Chardon, S. J., living in the fort on the bay, afterwards known as Fort Howard. It was at about this time that troubles broke out among the Indians, which, together with the Revolutionary War and temporary dissolution of the Jesuit Order, compelled the Jesuit Fathers to abandon their missionary work for a while at least. From this period and for some years to come this really fruitful and promising field of labor was only occasionally visited by traveling priests who happened to pass that way.

In 1823 the Rev. Gabriel Richard, of the French St. Ann's Church, in Detroit, paid a visit to Green Bay, where, in the meantime, a number of white Catholic families, particularly Canadians, had taken up their abode. To the spiritual wants of their people he ministered, saying Mass in the house of Peter Grignon, there being no church at the Bay. So, too, in 1825, 1826 and 1828, the Rev. J. V. Badin of the St. Joseph's Mission in Michigan made visits to the Fort, remaining on each occasion for a month. In the fall of 1828 the Rev. P. S. Dejean visited the Mission. Some time during the year 1830, Bishop Fenwick of Cincinnati came to Green Bay, remaining, however, but a few days. In the following year he repeated the visit, staying for three weeks. On this occasion he, assisted by the Rev. Samuel Mazzuchelli, who had accompanied him, held a kind of mission, preached several times a day, heard confessions and conferred the Holy Sacrament of Confirmation on about one hundred people. During this visit, also, the Bishop selected as the site for a new church, at Menomineeville, afterwards known as Shantytown, a tract of land lying between the Catholic cemetery and the lower De Pere road, and which still belongs to the Diocese of Green Bay. Contributions for the purpose of carrying out this plan, amounting to three hundred dollars, were immediately forthcoming, and the work was at once begun.

In 1832 the two Redemptorist Fathers, Hatcher and Sanderl, took charge of St. John's congregation and remained, with the exception of a few short interruptions, until 1837; at least, that is supposed to be the time, as their last entry of baptisms appear to have been made in March of that year. These priests accomplished a great deal of good during their residence at the Bay, baptizing a large number of Menominees there as well as at Kakalo, which is near Little Chute. According to the chronicles of Father Verwyst, the Rev. Father Mazzuchelli came again in 1833, bringing with him two Sisters of the Order of St. Clara, Sisters Clara and Theresa Bourdaloue, who bought land near to the church, where they established and opened a school. Their services were also of the greatest value during the terrible cholera epidemic in 1834. In the same year came also the Dominican Father Theodore J. Van den Broek, who labored zealously in the mission until 1838. His field of labor was indeed an extended one, comprising, besides the settlement of Green Bay and Little Chute, several important Missions among the Indians. Some month during the fall of 1838—October is thought to be the correct time—the Rev. Father Florimond Bonduel, a Belgian by birth and education, came to Green Bay and assumed the charge of St. John's congregation. He bought from B. F. Salomon and Paul and Joseph Ducharme most of the land in Shantytown, all of which, by the way, is still in possession of the church. He also seems to have taken unusually good care of the cemetery, which under his watchful supervision was greatly beautified and improved. He died after a short illness on December 13, 1861, his remains finding a last resting place in the spot which in life he had nurtured so carefully and well.

In September, 1843, the Rev. P. Carabin, a German, of Loraine, was appointed to succeed Father Bonduel, and maintained that pastorate until August, 1847. During this pastorate, the Rev. P. Chazetti, S. J., arrived at Green Bay, where after a few days he succumbed to a virulent attack of typhoid fever. The exact date of this sad occurrence is given as April 1, 1845. In 1846 the church at Shantytown was burnt through the carelessness of a Mass-server. In its place a Methodist church was bought, which stood on the site of the present parsonage. Father Carabin was succeeded in October, 1847, by the Rev. A. S. Godfert, who stayed until September, 1849. During this period the Rev. Casper Rehrl, a missionary, well known throughout the greater part of Wisconsin, paid regular quarterly visits to this Mission, aiding the pastor in various different ways. In October, 1849, the Jesuit Fathers Anton Anderledy, a Swiss, and afterwards General of the Order (he died on January 18, 1892), and Joseph Brunner took charge of St. John's. Father Anderledy remained until the end of April, 1850, but Father Brunner stayed till July, 1851. Subsequently, he went to India, where he died in 1891. After the departure of Father Anderledy, the Rev. G. J. B. Van den Heuvel was for a period assistant at the Mission. Finally, however, he succumbed to typhoid, dying on April 1, 1851, at the age of thirty-five. His remains were also deposited in the cemetery at Shantytown. From March to October, 1851, the Dutch Fathers of the Holy Cross, P. P. De Jonghe and H. J. Smyts, were located in Green Bay, and with them the Rev. Father Daems, who later became Vicar-General of the Diocese. It was also somewhere about this time that the widely known Pere Weninger, S. J., made a visit to the Bay and held a Mission, without doubt the first held there since the time of Bishop Fenwick and the Rev. Father Mazzuchelli in 1831. Prior to the departure of Father Daems, the Rev. Jean C. Perrodin entered upon his duties as pastor of St. John's, in which position he remained until September, 1857. During the time of Father Perrodin's residence, the German settlers separated from this congregation and together with several Dutch families founded St. Mary's congregation. These families, and there were but a few all told, erected a frame building, on what is now Madison street, which was duly blessed by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni, of Milwaukee, on June 18, 1864. Two years later still another division was made, the Dutch on this occasion separating from the German portion of St. Mary's.

St. Mary's Church, Green Bay, Wis.

As already stated, the Rev. P. F. X. Weninger, S. J., held a mission in St. John's Church in July, 1851. It was during the time of this mission that the separation of the German Catholics from St. John's was seriously considered and recommended by the reverend missionary. As a result of these deliberations, in October of the same year, Bishop Henni sent the Rev. S. Seif to act as assistant to Father Perrodin, and take charge of the German element. The first records made of receipts and disbursements and other business matter pertaining to St. Mary's congregation were recorded on September 20, 1851, at which time Mathias Humelson and George Kraft were the trusees. This date, therefore, is accepted as the one upon which the new congregation was organized. In connection with these important changes, a momentary dispute arose as to the amount of money to be paid by those remaining to the retiring portion of St. John's congregation. To settle this quickly, as well as amicably, Bishop Henni paid another visit to Green Bay, and after having been made thoroughly acquainted with both sides of the question decided $300 as the proper amount. The Germans furthermore retained the privilege of holding divine services in St. John's until such a time as their new church would be ready for them. This arrangement enabled them to act as an entirely independent organization, collecting their own pew rents and paying the pastor and incidental expenses from the funds thus received. Of such details as well as those heretofore referred to, the records of St. Mary's show a due accounting. Father Seif left Green Bay late in the summer of 1852—July or August is given as the probable date. In 1853 Mr. Paul Fox, father of the present Very Rev. J. J. Fox, Vicar-General of the Diocese, took up a collection in the saw mills at Pensaukee, Oconto and Peshtigo for the new church, securing altogether $347.37. In addition to this the Bay Settlement donated a little over twenty dollars in shingles, the English speaking people of Green Bay gave $510.43, while the Germans collected among themselves $539.91. The site, valued at $1,000, was the gift of W. B. Astor. Everything being now in readiness, the work of building the church was pushed forward as rapidly as circumstances would permit, so that it was completed in the early summer of 1854, and blessed and dedicated by Bishop Henni July 18 of that year. This building, when finished, represented an outlay of $2,358.72, an additional $196 being expended in the purchase of furniture, pews and confessional. The first resident pastor of St. Mary's was the Rev. J. A. Stein, who continued as such from June 17, 1854, to July 13, 1855. He was then succeeded by the Rev. Father Minderer, who left in April, 1856. The next pastor was the Rev. B. Smedding, whose administration lasted until November, 1858. During the first year of his pastorate, Father Smedding added a sacristy to the church, which cost $170.00. This was also used, temporarily for a school, the same being conducted for a time by a lay teacher, a Miss Stemper, and after her by one Theodore Jansen. On May 2, 1857, an inventory was taken of all property belonging to the congregation of St. Mary's, which was found to amount to the comfortable sum of $9,000.

First German Catholic Church in Green Bay.

This is a picture of the Church of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary (later pro-Cathedral of Bishop Melcher), in Green Bay, and was built by the German Catholics of that settlement in 1853. It was blessed July 18, 1854. St. Mary's was taken down in 1889, when the new Cathedral was built, and was re-erected in 1890, being dedicated for school purposes and placed in charge of Notre Dame Sisters of Milwaukee on November 21st of the same year.

In November, 1858, the Rev. F. X. Etschmann assumed the pastorate, remaining until July, 1859, when, on account of the great scarcity of priests, the congregation was left for a while without a resident pastor. In January, 1860, however, they were given another in the person of the Rev. Jos. Albers, it being his first charge after having taken holy orders. He conducted the pastorate until the end of February, 1862, during which time two Dominican Sisters, Benedicta and Thomasina, and two candidates, who the Sisters of Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee, had given to them, came to Green Bay and took charge of St. Mary's parochial school. Not very long after their arrival, a new school and Sisters' house were built, when they were joined by Sister Raymunda. When Father Albers left Green Bay, two of the Sisters also took their departure, Sister Ramunda alone remaining. In the early part of May, 1862, the Rev. F. X. Pfaller became rector of St. Mary's, and on December 3 of the same year Sisters of Notre Dame arrived at Green Bay and took charge of the parochial school. Of these, Sister Bruno was First Superior, her associates being another Sister and one candidate. From January to July, 1866, Father Pfaller was absent from his charge on a pilgrimage to Rome and Jerusalem, and during that period the Rev. J. Gauché, Pater Leo, O. M. Cap., (who died March 24, 1897,) performed the duties as pastor of St. Mary's. The congregation had now increased to such proportions that it became necessary to enlarge the church, for which purpose over $2,300 was collected. Thus, the affairs of the church gradually improved, and were in a most excellent and prosperous condition when the Rev. P. Weninger, S. J., opened a Mission at St. Mary's in April, 1868.

Becomes an Episcopal See.

Through a Breve of the Holy Father, Pius IX., executed by him on March 3, 1868, Green Bay was elevated to an Episcopal See, of which the Rev. Jos. Melcher, of St. Louis, Mo., was appointed the first Bishop. He was consecrated at St. Louis July 12 of the same year, and soon after took possession of the Diocese of Green Bay. Shortly after arriving at Green Bay, the Bishop selected St. Mary's Church for his pro-cathedral, and moved into the small parsonage, which was already occupied by Father Pfaller. Somewhat later this was sold to private parties and moved away, and in 1870 the congregation built a new residence for the Bishop and pastor. This work was partly accomplished during the absence of the Bishop, and was not quite completed when he returned from attending the Vatican Council. Toward the middle of February, 1870, Father Pfaller left St. Mary's, as rector of which he was succeeded by the Rev. James Nussbaum, who performed the duties of that office from March, 1870, to October, 1871. The Rev. August Lezuo, formerly assistant pastor, then assumed the duties. He was succeeded June 5, 1872, by his chaplain, the Rev. Ferdinand von Rüpplin, and he by the Rev. A. Leitner, who left in March, 1874. During his pastorate, the school and Sister-house were removed to the other side of Monroe avenue, to make room for the new cathedral. Before the latter was begun Bishop

Joseph Melcher, First Bishop of Green Bay.

Melcher died, the date of his decease being December 20, 1873. He rests in the chapel built by the late Bishop Krautbauer to his memory, in the cemetery of Allouez.

Joseph Melcher was born March 18, 1807, at Vienna, Austria, and spent the first few years of an eventful life in his native city. When but a little lad of seven, he was taken by his parents to Italy, his father entering the service of the Archduke of Modena. It was in that country, also, that he acquired his earlier education and completed a course of studies in the classics, philosophy and theology which fitted him for the arduous and responsible duties of after life. From the first he was regarded as a more than ordinarily studious boy, and to such an extent did he excel in everything undertaken that the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him in 1830 as a just and well-earned tribute to his erudite and scholarly accomplishments. In the same year he was ordained to the holy priesthood and appointed chaplain of the Austrian Court. Twelve years later he became acquainted with Bishop Rosati, of St. Louis, Missouri, who was then on a visit to Rome, and it was during their brief acquaintance that he concluded to devote the remaining years of his life to the cause of Catholicity in America. On the 17th of March, then, 1843, having completed all necessary arrangements, he accompanied Bishop Rosati on his return to this country. At Paris the Bishop was taken suddenly ill, his condition becoming such as to necessitate an immediate return to Rome, where he died shortly after. In the meanwhile, Father Melcher continued on his way to the United States, arriving in due time and without further incident at his destination, St. Louis. From there he was soon sent by Coadjutor Richard Kenrick to Post, a small parish in Arkansas, where he remained until Little Rock became a bishopric, when he was transferred to Merrimac, where he had charge of two congregations. After some time at the latter place, owing to continued ill-health, he was compelled to retire from the active duties of his pastorate, and in 1846 accompanied his archbishop to the Provincial Council held during that year at Baltimore, Maryland. Upon his return he was created Vicar-General of the archdiocese, shortly after which he paid a visit to Europe, his commission being to obtain a number of priests and theologians with whom to swell the Catholic forces of the archdiocese. In this undertaking he was eminently successful, obtaining the coöperation of a number who afterwards did valiant service in behalf of the Catholic cause in America. He also, while in Germany, effected the necessary steps for the erection of an Ursuline convent in America, securing for that purpose three nuns of the Order who came from Oldenburg, Germany, to St. Louis, where they subsequently established a nunnery. Upon returning from Germany, Father Melcher became rector of St. Mary's Church at Green Bay, and worked indefatigably in the cause of religion in that locality. At the same time he performed the duties of director and confessor of the Ursuline convent. In 1854 he was elected Bishop of Quincy (now Alton), Illinois, and Administrator of the diocese of Chicago, but declined. In the year following he made a second visit to Europe to see once more his aged father, and to secure the services and coöperation of more of the clergy. A third visit was made by him to Europe in 1864, he being accompanied upon his return by a number of young and enthusiastic missionaries. Two years later, that is in 1866, he was notified by the Prefect of the Propaganda that he had been appointed Bishop for the newly erected See at Green Bay, and on the 12th of July in that year he was consecrated at St. Mary's Church, over which he had now presided for a period of twenty years, by the Archbishop of St. Louis who was assisted on that occasion by the Bishop of Milwaukee and Alton. The working force comprised by the new diocese at this time numbered but twenty-two priests, but in the six years following, owing to the energetic and solicitous efforts of the Bishop, this number was increased to seventy. In October, 1868, at his request, nine Ursuline Sisters from the convent at St. Louis came to Green Bay and established an Academy there. Towards the latter part of 1869, Bishop Melcher went to the Vatican Council at Rome, returning to America and his See on March 7 of the following year. At the time of his death, the diocese was in a very satisfactory and flourishing condition, and, indeed, the Catholic Church may truly be said to have lost in this learned and zealous prelate one whose exemplary life was a model for clergy and laity alike.

After the departure of Father Leitner in March, 1874, the following priests served in St. Mary's Church, some of them being there at the same time, while others assumed the duties successively—the Revs. A. Maschelein, Michael Zara, A. N. Buschle, J. A. Abb, J. Wernert, A. B. Rinkes and J. Jaster.

On June 29, 1875, the newly appointed Bishop, the Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, was consecrated at Milwaukee and held his solemn entry into the Diocese of Green Bay on July 2 following. With him came, as his private secretary, the Rev. Frederick Katzer, who had for years been a professor at St. Francis Seminary. At the request of the Bishop, the Rev. Father Katzer assumed, in August, 1875, the administration of the congregation with the Rev. R. Scholter as assistant. Father Scholter remained until March, 1876, when he resigned to take charge of the congregation at Seymour, which had originated from Green Bay.

As soon as practicable, after his arrival, Bishop Krautbauer began work in earnest on the new cathedral. Already, in July, 1876, excavations for the foundations were begun, and by October 6 following everything was in readiness for the laying of the corner-stone. In December, 1878, the souterrain and basement were dedicated in honor of St. Franciscus Xaverius, the patron of the first Mission established by the Jesuit missionaries. The dedicatory services were performed by the Rt. Rev.

Bishop Krautbauer, assisted by the Revs. F. X. Katzer, E. Walsh and N. Kersten. On November 20, 1881, the solemn consecration of the new cathedral was celebrated by Bishop Krautbauer, in the presence of the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss, Bishops K. Flasch, R. Seidenbusch, Ireland and Abbot Edelbrock, and a large number of priests of the Diocese. At these services the Archbishop celebrated Pontifical High Mass and Bishop Ireland preached the sermon.

In 1884 a new brick school was built by the Very Rev. Vicar-General Katzer. The old school-house, built in 1860, was then sold to the city, where, at its present location, opposite the courthouse, it still serves as a public school. On September 14, 1884, the new parochial school was blessed. During the previous year the School Sisters had built their new convent, so that now there presents itself to the eye a block of solid brick buildings which have taken the place of the wooden structures previously used—a remarkable illustration of what faith and perseverance had been enabled to accomplish.

Bishop F. X. Krautbauer

But with all of the blessings, comforts and successes which had thus rapidly accrued to the people and Diocese of Green Bay, there was still that modicum of the untoward which ever finds a way of creeping in and attempting to nullify the growth and retard the onward progress of whatever it is brought into contact with. On December 17, 1885, with a broad vista of glorious possibilities opening up before him, with work past and present to laud the efforts he had already made, and with the determination and vigor of a conscientious, godly and upright life as an inspiration to still greater deeds on behalf of the church he so dearly loved, Bishop Krautbauer was stricken with death.

Fr. X. Krautbauer, second Bishop of Green Bay, was born January 12, 1825, near Bruck, a city in the Diocese of Regensberg, Bavaria. He acquired his classical and theological studies at Regensburg and Munich, and at the last mentioned place prepared himself at the Georgianum for the Mission-field of America. He was ordained priest July 16, 1850, and in October of the same year he started for America, coming direct to Buffalo, where he was appointed assistant pastor at the Cathedral. Later on he became rector of the Catholic Parish of Collins. In 1851 he was transferred to the Parish of St. Peter's in Rochester; this congregation was in an unsettled condition on account of dissensions which had arisen between certain factions in the parish. Through the efforts of Father Krautbauer, peace was restored and the congregation was brought to a flourishing condition. At this time he received a call from the Sisters of Notre Dame, Milwaukee, to become their spiritual adviser, which he at once accepted. Under his excellent administration the convent was erected, and he is assuredly entitled to lasting credit for the healthy and flourishing condition in which he left that institution. In 1873 he suffered shipwreck on Lake Michigan, but his life was fortunately spared. When the See at Green Bay became vacant by the death of Bishop Melcher in 1875, the Rev. Father Krautbauer was elevated to the episcopate by Pope Pius IX. For two years he worked incessantly in behalf of his Diocese, organizing many new congregations and erecting numerous churches and school houses. He died December 13, 1885, well prepared for the passage into eternal life.

St. Francis Xavier Cathedral Church, Green Bay, Wis.

After the death of Bishop Krautbauer, the Rev. Father Katzer became administrator of the Diocese, remaining as such until the Holy Father appointed him as the lamented prelate's successor. This appointment was made on June 13, 1886, the announcement being received with the greatest satisfaction by all of the priests of the Diocese. The consecration services were held at St. Francis Xavier cathedral on September 21, 1886, and were celebrated by Archbishop Heiss. In the autumn of 1887 the old St. Mary's Church was taken down and the site upon which it stood transformed into a garden.

Main Altar of the Cathedral at Green Bay.

St. Francis Xavier's Cathedral, School and Residence, Green Bay, Wis.

When in the spring of 1888 the Rt. Rev. Bishop Katzer made his visit ad limina Apostolorum, he called the Rev. Clement Lau, then rector of St. Mary's congregation at Greenville, Outagamie County, as rector of the Cathedral, who entered upon his new duties on April 21, 1888, and took up his abode in the Episcopal residence. After the return of the Bishop from Rome, circumstances made it necessary to separate the diocesan and congregation administration, and, therefore, the latter was incorporated according to the laws of Wisconsin, under the name, St. Francis Xavier Cathedral Congregation. Thus, the Rev. Father Lau became the first rector of the new Cathedral under the new arrangement. As first lay directors of the new incorporation there were Messrs. Joseph Kaster and Herman J. Krischer, the former being secretary and the latter treasurer. On August 12, 1890, the rector celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood, at which time the congregation took occasion to express their respect and affection by presenting him with a golden chalice. In the summer of 1891, under the directions of their pastor, the congregation built a new parsonage on Monroe Avenue, north of the Cathedral, which cost in the neighborhood of $6,000, and in October his reverence moved into his new quarters.

The month of December, 1890, was made memorable in the history of the Catholic Church in Wisconsin by the elevation of the Rt. Rev. Bishop Katzer to the Archiepiscopate of Milwaukee, by Pope Leo XIII. The new Archbishop was introduced into his new field of labor in June, 1891, amidst the joyful demonstrations of the clergy and laity of Milwaukee, and, it must be said, to the no small sorrow of his faithful diocesans at Green Bay.

The Rev. N. Kersten now acted as Administrator of the Diocese until such time as the newly appointed Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Sebastian Gebhard Messmer, should arrive. He was consecrated on March 27, 1892, at Newark, N. J., and held his solemn entry into the Diocese of Green Bay on April 7 of the same year, on which occasion all the clergy of the Diocese paid their homage to him at the Cathedral.

Bishop Sebastian Gebhard Messmer was born August 29, 1847, at Goldach, Canton of St. Gall, Switzerland. His ancestors were Swiss Catholics, and resided in Thal, also of the same Canton. At the time of the Reformation, one branch of this family became adherents of the Protestant Church, but the other portion remained steadfast in the faith.

Sebastian G. Messmer, Sr., moved from Thal to Goldach, residing there until the time of his death in 1873. A farmer by occupation, he managed to save a little fortune, besides finding time to acquire an education that was far above the average. Thus equipped, through his own unaided exertions, it is little to be wondered at that he became the subject of numerous political, social and parochial honors in the gift of the people of the canton in which he resided. Thus, he served as a representative of his district in the General Assembly, as well as in the Catholic Administrative Council, proving himself in both instances to be a faithful and conscientious legislator. A good citizen and staunch Catholic, he proved an active worker in the interests of both Church and town, as his position of President of the Council and Board of Church Trustees, which he held for many years, enabled him to do. A man of strong and decided character, ruggedly independent, yet honorable and kind, it was a keenly appreciated loss to the people of the district when in the prime of mental vigor he was called away.

Sebastian Gebhard Messmer, Bishop of Green Bay.

The mother of Bishop Messmer, whose maiden name was Rosa Baumgartner, was a native of Moerschwyl, also of the Canton of St. Gall. She died in the prime of life, mourned and esteemed for her many Christian virtues.

Bishop Messmer is the eldest of a family of five. His first education was obtained in the primary schools of his native town, after which he was for three years a pupil in the High, or "Real" school, in Rorschach, which is situated on Lake Constance. At this latter place he first met Otto Zardetti, who was destined to become his life-long friend. Zardetti afterwards became Bishop of St. Cloud, Minn., and later an Archbishop of Bucharest in Roumania.

Following the clerical vocation in 1861, young Messmer entered the Diocesan College of St. George, near St. Gall, where he soon became recognized for his devotion, close application to his studies and strict obedience to his superiors. He remained at this college until 1866, when he entered the University of Innsbruck, in Tyrol, Austria, where he pursued the study of philosophy and theology for the next five years. On July 23, 1871, he was ordained to the priesthood for the American Mission, after which he remained at home but a short time. He then came to America, landing in New York October 4 of the same year.

Bishop Messmer's Residence, Green Bay, Wis.

Prior to leaving for America, he had applied for and received the appointment from Bishop Bailey of Newark, N. J., as professor of theology at Seton Hall College, South Orange, which is also a diocesan seminary. In this position he remained until August, 1889, making himself beloved by the ever-thoughtful and kindly interest he manifested in those with whom he was brought in contact. A teacher, chaplain and friend, his life was conscientiously devoted to the interests of those dependent on his care, and in the service of the Church.

During the eighteen years of his administration in New Jersey, a considerable portion of his time was given to pastoral work in St. Peter's Church at Newark. This church, whose congregation is German, has attached to it the largest parochial school in the Diocese, the total attendance numbering some fifteen hundred children. It was in this church, where much of his most earnest work was done, that he was, at his own request, consecrated by Bishop Zardetti on March 27, 1892.

While still holding his professorship at Seton Hall, Bishop Messmer was for eight years in active charge of St. Mary's Orphan Asylum, as chaplain. He was also pastor of St. Leo's congregation at Irvington, N. J., for two years.

Being called in 1889 to the chair of canon law, in the University of Washington, D. C., he at once went to Rome, the better to prepare himself for the new responsibilities devolving upon him. Canon law having been one of his classes while professor at Seton Hall, he devoted himself entirely to the study of Roman civil law, and finally graduated from the Collegio Appolinare with the degree of D. C. L. In September, 1890, he entered upon his duties at the Washington University, remaining there until called upon to fill a more exalted position at Green Bay, Wis.

Some time prior to the convening of the Baltimore Plenary Council in 1884, he was elected as one of the eight theologians whose duty it was to prepare the draft of decrees for the consideration of that body. He was also one of the secretaries of the council at its sessions, and afterwards, in collaboration with Dr. O'Connell now rector of the American College at Rome, prepared for publication the deliberations of that famous body. The work was published in 1886, and is regarded as a model of scholarly effort. For the arduous labor implied in bringing this work to a successful termination, the Pope conferred upon him the title of D. D.

This, however, is by no means the limit of his literary undertakings, as not a few other scholarly and practical works which bear his name attest. Among those may be mentioned a work in Latin, entitled Praxis Synodalis, written for the Provincial Council of New York in 1883, of which he was assistant secretary. The manual was also used at the Council of Baltimore. In 1886 he edited for the American clergy an English translation of a German work entitled "Canonical Procedure in Criminal Cases of Clerics," which is still accepted as an authority in clerical law. He has also written numerous articles for a German monthly clerical paper published at St. Louis, Missouri, called "Pastoral Blatt," and for the "Ecclesiastical Review" of Philadelphia, Pa.

Bishop Messmer was appointed to the See of Green Bay December 14, 1891, but did not take active charge of the Diocese until April 7, 1892.

Here a field of almost limitless possibilities awaited him; a field full of hard, unyielding labor to him who would master the situation and thereby be enabled to cull from the willing and fertile soil its richest gifts. To this work he brought the ripe experience garnered from long years of service, the learning of a scholar, the business tact of a man and love of a Christian. With such attributes at his command, failure was indeed an impossibility, and so most surely it has proved. As a result of this success, Bishop Messmer to-day administers the comforts of religion to nearly thirteen hundred families which constitute his charge. Additional evidence of his remarkable popularity is shown in the esteem and unbounded confidence with which he is regarded by all, no matter to what class or denomination they belong.

Rev. J. Looze, Bishop's Secretary.

Bishop Messmer was the first president of the Catholic Columbian Summer School at Madison and is now for the third time reëlected president of that institution.

On July 23, 1896, Bishop Messmer celebrated his silver jubilee as priest, when nearly the whole population of Green Bay made general cause in offering him their heartiest congratulations.

The present Vicar-General of the diocese of Green Bay, the Very Rev. Joseph J. Fox, is a tower of strength in the community and the Bishop's much valued assistant. Father Fox, in fact, has business ability and sagacity of a high order, and to his services as much as anything is due the present flourishing condition of the diocese. Father Fox was born in Green Bay and is a son of Paul Fox, who settled on the site of the present city in the early '40's, being one among the first German settlers. His name will ever be remembered as that of the most energetic and persistent among the early Catholics of Northern Wisconsin in effecting the formation of the congregation of St. Mary's, from which the present Cathedral congregation is an outgrowth.

Father Fox acquired his earlier education at the Catholic school at Green Bay, afterwards pursuing his classical studies at St. Francis Seminary, St. Francis, Wisconsin. Theology he studied at Louvaine, Belgium, in which country he was also ordained to the priesthood in 1870. He then returned to his native country and the diocese of Green Bay, his first appointment being that of rector at New Franken, Brown County. Subsequently he maintained the pastorate of St. John's

Rev. Joseph J. Fox, V. G.

Church in the city of Green Bay for three years, and during that time gave evidences of his remarkable executive ability by reducing a very troublesome debt which hung over the property in that parish, in addition to which he opened a school in the old Cathedral school building on Madison street, in the meanwhile serving efficiently as secretary to Bishop Krautbauer. Father Fox was transferred to the pastorate of Our Lady of Lourdes at Marinette, Wisconsin, in 1883, where again by zealous effort and uncompromising industry he made out of a somewhat negligent and indifferent congregation one of the most steadfast and progressive in the diocese. Among the many improvements made to this parish during his pastorate of eleven years was the erection of an expensive new school house, notable and Ostensorium.

Ostensorium given by Nicholas Perrot to the Jesuit Mission of St. Francis Xavier at De Pere, in 1686, now deposited with the State Historical Society in Madison.

advantageous additions to the church structure and purchase of a large and first-class pipe organ. Father Fox was appointed to the Vicar-Generalship of the diocese of Green Bay by the present Bishop, the Right. Rev. Sebastian G. Messmer, in 1894, and all interested in the growth and progress of Catholic matters in the diocese are unanimous in their approval of the selection made. The one particular incident, however, peculiarly near and dear to him is the magnificent orphan asylum of St. Joseph, which owes much of its present popularity and prosperity to his wonderful business ability and the almost ceaseless efforts which he has devoted to its most thorough establishment and upbuilding.

A radical and highly acceptable change was made in the parochial school system during the year 1891, that institution which up to that date had been under the direction of four teachers being converted into a free school. To meet the extra expenses thus incurred, the annual pew rents of the Cathedral were raised from $2,000 to $4,000, a demand willingly acceded to by the people of the congregation, who readily recognized the value and importance of such a change. In consequence of this new arrangement the number of scholars rapidly increased, so that before the close of the year it became necessary to employ six instead of four teachers. In addition to this, in September, 1891, a seventh class was opened in the school, which is known as the high school of the Cathedral congregation. This, as well as all of the other grades connected with the school, is in charge of Sisters from Notre Dame Convent at Milwaukee. The school, which had now grown to such proportions as to have a regular attendance of some four hundred scholars, was, with the congregation, considerably weakened in the reopening in November, 1892, by the Bishop, of the old SS. Peter and Paul's Church, on the east side of East River, which had been closed for over seventeen years. In spite of this, however, the school continued to maintain a most enviable record, quite a number of graduates, of both sexes, from the high-school department, passing their examinations before the County Superintendent with the greatest credit.

Bottom of Ostensorium Bearing Contemporary Inscription.

At about this time Father Lau also did a great deal towards revivifying the Catholic societies in the Cathedral congregation, by infusing new life into the old St. Boniface Benevolent Society. Under his direction the new Franciscus Xavier Benevolent Society was organized, and the Poles belonging to the congregation formed the St. Stanislaus Benevolent Society, also.

In the spring of 1892 the annual convention of the Catholic Benevolent Societies of Wisconsin was held in Green Bay, Father Lau attending as president and delegate of the Catholic societies of Green Bay. Archbishop Katzer also came to Green Bay at that time as a guest of Bishop Messmer, and while there celebrated Pontifical Mass in the Cathedral, besides being an interested witness of the deliberations of the Convention.

During the winter of 1893, just a quarter of a century since the time when Pere Weninger, S. J., opened the first Mission at Green Bay, another of fourteen days' duration was held by the missionaries of the Jesuit Society, P. Port and Simeon, which proved most acceptable and successful. September 7, 8 and 9 of the same year the Papal delegate, now Cardinal Satolli, visited Green Bay, for the purpose of celebrating the Holy Office in the Church of St. Joseph at De Pere. The reception of His Eminence, in which the Catholic societies of the Cathedral took part, was a grand ovation, and is still remembered as a most notable event. On the evening of the 8th, His Eminence and two members of the Faculty of the University at Washington, D. C., Prof. Henry Hyvernat, D. D., and Prof. Dougherty, as well as the Rt. Rev. Bishop and clergy of the city, were entertained at his residence by the Rev. Father Lau. There was also a serenade and torchlight procession during the evening, given in honor of the august visitor. The day following, the Papal delegate celebrated Mass in the Cathedral, assisted by Father Lau.

Among some of the more noticeable improvements and additions made to the church property at about this period were the purchase by the congregation, in 1893, of two beautiful statues, that of St. Franciscus Xavier, patron of the Cathedral, and that of St. Sebastian, patron of the Bishop—which were placed in the sanctuary. In 1894 the two side altars were finished, and a statue of the Sacred Heart of Jesus was placed upon one, and a picture of Mary, the Mother of Perpetual Help, on the other. This picture was sent from Rome after it had been blessed by the Holy Father.

At the celebration of the silver jubilee of the St. Boniface Society, held in June, 1894, the Most Rev. Archbishop of Milwaukee was again invited to attend and celebrate Pontifical Mass. This he did, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer preaching the sermon on that occasion. In 1895 the painter T. Schmit, who had previously decorated the high altar with a picture of the Crucifixion, received a commission to execute two others, one of "Jesus in His Agony" and the other "Jesus Taken From the Cross." These pictures were presented to the Cathedral by a member of the congregation. The members of St. Francis Xavier also contributed over $1,000 towards the new orphan asylum, besides a considerable sum to the new hospital, which was opened in Green Bay under the direction of Sisters of St. Francis, of Springfield, Illinois, in 1895. The congregation has in contemplation other improvements, among them being pictures representing scenes from the life of St. Francis Xavier. The members of all nationalities are, in fact, doing their utmost to advance the interests and intensify the prestige of the congregation. There is a probability, however, that the Polish members will at some time in the near future withdraw for the purpose of arranging an organization of their own, as they have already purchased a site. Of the numerous valuable though minor improvements made in the Cathedral during the past seven years, are a hot water heating apparatus costing $2,500; electric light, $500: five bells, the largest, St. Paulus, weighing 2,000 lbs., $3,000, and a handsome pipe organ which cost over $2,000.

Rev. Clement Lau.

Of Catholic societies in the Cathedral congregation other than those already mentioned there are: Young Ladies' Sodality, one hundred members; St. Stanislaus Boys' Society, sixty members; St. Rosa's Girls' Society, eighty members; Society of Christian Mothers, about one hundred and fifty. There are altogether about two hundred and sixty families in the congregation of St. Francis Xavier, five being Bohemian, fifty Polish, and the rest German. The Cathedral property is at present estimated at a valuation of $70,000.

The present rector of the Cathedral of St. Francis Xavier at Green Bay, Wisconsin, the Rev. Clement Lau, was appointed to that position by the Right. Rev. Bishop F. X. Katzer, on April 6, 1888. He is a native of Germany, and was born in Rheine, in the Province of Westphalia, on November 18, 1840. In the city of his birth he attended, first, the common schools, and, afterwards, the gymnasium, entering the latter institution at the age of eleven. There he studied diligently until 1859, in which year he began a course at the Gymnasium of Muenster, also in Westphalia, where he passed his final examinations. Having now decided to prepare himself for the priesthood he entered the University in the same city, where he read philosophy for the term of one year. He next proceeded to Austria, where he entered upon the usual four years' course in theology, in the Priest Seminary at Linz. Here he was ordained sub-deacon on June 12, 1863, and to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Francis Joseph Rudigier, on June 31, 1865. He celebrated his first Mass on August 12 of the same year, in the private chapel of the Castle Neuhaus, belonging to the Count of Thurn and Taxis. During the succeeding fourteen years he was assistant rector in four different Austrian cities, where he is accredited with having rendered the most efficient service. Then, as now, he was always a friend and well-wisher of the little ones, looking zealously after their every interest. In spite of a multiplicity of other duties thrust upon him, he still found time to urge ever prominently forward the interest of education. As a direct result of his labors, two schools were built and used as a kindergarten and industrial school for girls. These schools were conducted by Sisters of the Holy Cross. Besides these schools, he provided a house for the sick, which was also placed in the hands of the Sisters of the same Order.

In 1877 the Rev. Clement Lau visited Rome, where he was honored with an audience by Pope Pius IX. He then came to the United States, arriving on May 5. 1888, when he at once began the study of the English language. On August 12 he went to Green Bay, where he met Bishop Krautbauer, who soon after appointed him to the pastorate of St. Mary's Church at Clark's Mills, Manitowoc County, where he labored diligently for only fourteen months. His next pastorate was that of St. Mary's at Greenville, Outagamie County, where, during his residence he built a school and a Sisters' house. From here he also attended St. Patrick's congregation at Stephensville, as a mission. He left Greenville on April 21, 1888, being called by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Katzer to assume the rectorate of St. Francis Xavier Cathedral in Green Bay, over which congregation he still presides. During his residence in Green Bay, Father Lau has by his indefatigable energy done a great deal towards bringing the affairs of the parish to their present most satisfactory condition. At his instigation the congregation was incorporated in 1889, and it may be said to have been entirely owing to his zealousness and great personal interest in the matter that the parochial school was turned into a free school, the high school established, and a new residence built for $6,000. All of the improvements of the past few years have been made willingly by the congregation, who, knowing the man, recognized in the demands put upon them the ever kindly intent of the rector for their own good and advancement. A faithful priest, a courteous Christian gentleman , he is not only beloved by his own congregation, but enjoys the respect and confidence of the entire community. He has ably filled his responsible position, and will long be remembered for his counsel and advice.

St. John the Evangelist's Church, Green Bay, Wis.

THE congregation of St. John the Evangelist is the oldest Catholic organization in Green Bay, and, it can be safely added, of Northern Wisconsin, as we find it attended by regular pastors as early as 1831. St. John's can also claim, to a certain extent, to be the first organized attempt to perpetuate the labors of the early missionaries, Fathers

Rev. L. A. Ricklin.

Allouez and Marquette. It is, in fact, the mother church of the City of Green Bay, as from it have branched out the German church, in 1853; the Hollandish, about 1860; the St. Patrick's congregation across the Fox river, in 1862; and the SS. Peter and Paul's church, in 1893. The first church building was located in the place called Shantytown, which is south of the actual city limits. The little church burned down in 1847, and in 1848 the pastor, the Rev. A. Godfert, bought the old M. E. church, located on the present site of St. John's church. That building remained the place of worship of the congregation until 1872, when it was also destroyed by fire. The present church was built in 1873, Father Anderledy, late general of the Order, as assistant (1849 to 1851); the Rev. Perrodin followed (1851 to 1854); again the Capuchin Order stepped in (1854 to 1861); and after a couple of secular pastors we find another Capuchin, the Rev. Father Hoffen (1865 to 1870). From 1870 to 1888 the diocesan priests had charge of the congregation, the pastors being, successively: The Rev. Fathers Crud, Takken, De Kelver, Ritter, Fox, Geissler, and Selbach. In 1888 the Fathers of Mercy were put in charge and built a school house. In 1891 a new change was made, and the Fathers of the Holy Ghost came. Finally, the Right Rev. Bishop Messmer once more took charge of the congregation for the the Rev. A. Crud being pastor at that time. It is a brick veneer structure of about 100x45 feet, presenting an elegant appearance with its portico, two steeples, and graceful windows. The interior was thoroughly renovated in 1894 by the present pastor, Father L. A. Ricklin, and is to-day by far the finest auditorium in the city. The church has recently received its final artistic touch, in the shape of about two hundred electric lights, which bring out in a most satisfactory manner the architectural lines of the building. St. John's church has had a great variety of pastors: The Revs. Mazzuchelli and Van den Broek (1831 to 1838) were Dominicans; the Rev. Father Bonduel (1838 to 1843) was a Capuchin; the Rev. Fathers Carabin and Godfert (1843 to 1849) were secular priests. Then came the Jesuits, with the Rev. diocese, appointing as pastor his secretary, the Rev. L. A. Ricklin, in July, 1894. The present pastor is an Alsatian by birth, educated in France. He came to this country in 1888, after having had, in Strassburg, Alsace, the most unique experience of the troubles of a Catholic newspaper man under the Prussian regime in the years 1878 to 1886. On coming to the United States he was for a while pastor of the pro-cathedral of Sioux Falls and secretary to the Right Rev. Bishop Marty. In 1891 he took a course at the Catholic University at Washington, in 1892 he came to Green Bay as chancellor to the Right Rev. Bishop Messmer, and in 1894 he was sent to St. John's.

St. John's congregation has a good parochial school, with the Sisters of St. Joseph (St. Louis) as teachers.

The school was sheltered at first in the old pro-cathedral and opened by the Rev. J. J. Fox, then pastor in 1880, and later in the little frame building which had been the priest's house. In 1890 to 1891 the present school house was built, causing an expense of $9,000. When, in 1896, the convent of the Good Shepherd, located next to St. John's Church, was vacated, after the erection of the new monastery, the buildings were purchased by the Sisters of St. Joseph, and to-day St. Joseph's Convent is a magnificent institution, where a Catholic academy will soon be opened.

The societies connected with St. John's church are the Young Ladies' Sodality, the Archconfraternity of the Christian Mothers, the Catholic Order of Foresters, and the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

St. Patrick's Church, Green Bay, Wis.

IN the spring of 1865 all the Irish families on both sides of the Fox withdrew from the French church, and, under Father VerBoort as their first pastor, began the erection of a new church on the west side of the Fox River, then called Fort Howard. The land, consisting of two lots, was donated by A. E. Elmore, and the church was enclosed before winter. In the spring of 1866 Father McGinnity, now of Janesville, was sent from Maple Grove to take charge of the congregation, and to complete the church, which he did before the first of August of that year. In the meantime, that is, from the time the Irish left the French church till the time their new church was completed, they worshiped in the old Holland church. They had Mass at 9 o'clock and the Hollanders had Mass at 10:30 on Sundays and holydays. The building committee consisted of J. K. Delaney, H. P. Huffman, James Callaghan, and James McGuire. Mr. Delaney, the only one of the committee living, is still a prominent member of St. Patrick's, and we are indebted to him for much of the information concerning the early history of the parish. The new church was built by John McAfee, contractor, and cost about $2,600. It was dedicated on the 15th of August, 1866, by the Very Rev. Father Daems. The congregation then consisted of all the Irish Catholics on both sides of the Fox, now comprised in the City of Green Bay, and numbered about seventy-five families. On the Sunday after dedication day, Father McGinnity bade farewell to the congregation, to their great sorrow, for they had begun to love and esteem him, and justly so; for he had completed their first church and endeared himself to the people. He was followed by Father O'Neal, who remained but a month or two. His successor was Father McDonald, who had charge of the parish from the fall of 1866 till the spring of 1869, when Father Walsh was appointed pastor. During the following summer Father Walsh enlarged the church and erected a spire, at a cost of about $1,000, and in the year 1873 he built the present parochial residence, necessitating an additional outlay of $3,000. This building was, at the time, considered the finest parochial residence in the diocese. Father Walsh was succeeded in the spring of 1882 by Father Geo. Brady, who remained till the following fall, when Father Brown was appointed pastor. On the death of Father Brown, which occurred December, 1885, the Rev. Bongers took charge of the parish, remaining until October 1, 1886, when Father Larmer was appointed. This pastor resigned in May, 1893, when he was succeeded by Father M. J. O'Brien, the present pastor. In the September following, the new church was begun, and fifteen months from that time the dedicatory services were held by Bishop Messmer.

St. Patrick's Church, Green Bay, Wis.

The new church covers an area 60x120 feet, and has a tower on the corner a hundred and fifty feet high. The walls are brick with cut stone trimmings, and there is a basement eleven feet in the clear under the entire church. This basement is divided off into a chapel, assembly and boiler rooms. The cost of the entire building, including stained glass windows, steam heating apparatus, electric light, pews, altars and general furnishings, amounted to $27,000.

Originally, St. Patrick's church was attended by all the Irish Catholics on both sides of the Fox River, and by them only; but during the winter of 1881-2, when there was no priest in charge, and during the year that Father Bongers had charge, many Irish Catholic families on the east side of the river joined the French church. This was the beginning of the so-called exodus to the French church, which continued, more or less, until 1893. In the meantime, several German, French and Holland families on the west side of the river joined

Rev. M. J. O'Brien.

St. Patrick's Church. After Father O'Brien took charge of the parish and built the new church, many of the Irish families returned from the French church to St. Patrick's. In December, 1895, Bishop Messmer decided that St. Patrick's congregation should consist of all the English speaking families on the west side of the Fox River, and those English speaking families from the east side who then had pews rented in St. Patrick's Church. The parish comprises about three hundred and thirty families, and bids fair to soon become the largest in the city, St. Patrick's being the only Catholic church located on the west side of the river.

Father Michael J. O'Brien was born February 29, 1860, in Granville, Milwaukee County, a son of Patrick and Margaret (O'Leary) O'Brien, who were natives of Ireland. The parents, who had immigrated to Boston in 1846, came to Wisconsin in the early spring of 1855, locating in Granville. The family removed to Chilton in 1873, where young Michael attended the high school, from which he graduated June, 1878. For three years following he was a teacher in the schools of Calumet County, and in the fall of 1881 entered St. Francis Seminary at Milwaukee. From there he graduated in 1888, and was ordained priest in June of the same year by Archbishop Heiss. His first charge was as pastor of St. Andrew's Church at Kingston, Wisconsin, after which he was assistant for two years in St. Peter's Church at Oshkosh. His next appointment was to St. Stephen's Church, at Stevens Point, from whence he removed to Fort Howard in May, 1893, where the present handsome structure stands as a monument to his untiring zeal and devotion.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Green Bay, Wis.

IN the spring of 1875, permission was granted by the Very Rev. Edward Daems, then administrator of Green Bay Diocese, to a committee consisting of John Goebel, Jos. Schroeder and Valentine Klesges, to build a church in the eastern suburbs of Green Bay, for the accommodation of the many German and Belgian families living in that part of the city. Four lots were immediately secured of Mr. Lindsley, and ground was broken for the foundation of a 40x80 foot brick-veneered church. The corner-stone of this building was laid by the Very Rev. Edward Daems on Sunday afternoon, May 8, 1875, the Rev. Father Takken, at that time pastor of St. John's Church, in the city, preaching the sermon. The work of building and finishing the church was then continued with great energy by about one hundred and fifty families, all of them sacrificing both money and time that the work might be quickly and properly completed. The building, when finished, with the exception of the steeple, cost about $5,500. The new church was duly dedicated by the Rev. Father C. De Louw, then pastor of St. Willibrord's, on Sunday, April 9, 1876. Father Daems was the first one to offer up the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass in the new church, and after him it was read, at intervals, by the Reverend Fathers of the Bishop's house. Many times an effort was made to obtain a regular pastor, or at least to make the congregation a station or mission. But even this could not be effected, so that the church was more or less left to itself, and those who had built it had to get along the best way they could under existing circumstances. During the year 1876, Mass was said in the new church less than a dozen times, and so, towards the end of December, the building was closed for good. One thing in particular which brought about this latter condition of affairs was a misunderstanding between the authorities of the church and members of the congregation. This condition lasted for a period of sixteen years, during all of which time the church remained in disuse and the people were without a priest. In the meantime, a debt of $1,200, which had borne very heavily upon the shoulders of those members of the congregation who had become responsible for its payment, was liquidated by the Bishop, who at the same time became personally possessed of the church building. When Bishop Messmer was appointed to the See, a fresh effort was made with a view of reopening the church. He was waited upon by a committee, who thoroughly explained the situation, and, having personally become satisfied as to the necessity for such a change, he finally consented. All Saints' Day, November 1, 1892, the church was reopened to a congregation of fully one hundred and fifty families. Then the new parish was formed, its limits drawn, and the spiritual needs of the people attended to by the Rev. L. A. Ricklin until July 15, 1893, when the present pastor, the Rev. M. T. Anderegg, was appointed a resident pastor.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church and Parsonage, Green Bay.

Rev. M. T. Anderegg.

The Rev Martin T. Anderegg, rector of SS. Peter and Paul's Church in Green Bay, Wisconsin, was born in Louvain, Belgium, on the 19th day of February, 1862. In 1873 he came to America with his parents, settling in De Pere, Wisconsin, where he received his elementary education in the parochial school of St. Mary's congregation. When on the point of making arrangements to enter St. Lawrence College, at Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin, his father took sick and died, thus depriving him of the necessary means with which to enter college. He, therefore, obtained employment in one of the leading mercantile establishments at De Pere, doing duty as clerk for several years, but at the same time continuing his studies with his parish priest. Finally he entered St. Viateur's College, Illinois, where he completed his classical course, after which he studied theology in St. Francis Seminary at Milwaukee, where he was ordained priest June 24, 1893. Shortly after ordination, his Bishop appointed him as pastor of SS. Peter and Paul's Church, and he assumed the duties thereof July 15 of the same year. Soon after his arrival at Green Bay it was decided to build a parish house, which was completed before the end of the year. The congregation also becoming larger, the church was soon too small for the proper accommodation of all, so in the following year, an addition of 38x56 feet was built on, affording ample facilities for the comfort of the congregation, which now numbers fully two hundred and sixty families.

St. Willibrord's Church, Green Bay, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Willibrord's in the City of Green Bay consists mainly of those residents who speak the Holland and Flemish languages. The parish was organized in 1864, their first place of worship being St. John's. St. John's is the oldest Catholic church in Green Bay and in former days its parishioners were mostly French. Hence, its name of "French Church." For years it was the only place of worship for Catholics residing in Green Bay and vicinity.

In the beginning of the sixties, the Hollanders, Flemish and Germans together left St. John's and formed the congregation known as St. Mary's, now St. Francis Xavier Cathedral. Here they worshiped together until the church was too small to afford sufficient seating capacity. Then the Hollanders and Flemish, being in the minority, were obliged to leave St. Mary's and again worship for a time at St. John's. At this time Green Bay belonged to the diocese of Milwaukee, the Right Rev. Bishop Henni being in charge. At his suggestion the Rev. William Verboort, of De Pere, Wisconsin, came on Sundays and said Mass for these people, the pastor of St. John's, the Rev. H. Hoffen, holding services for the regular congregation at a later hour. Matters were continued in this manner for some months, until, in fact, February 21, 1864, on which date the Hollanders and Flemish held a meeting at which a new congregation of forty-seven families was organized. Of this new organization Messrs. William Van den Mosselor, H. J. Busch, P. Quatsoe, H. Heyerman and B. M. Berendsen were elected trustees, and Mr. Wm. Van den Mosselor, president, B. M. Beerndsen, secretary, and H. J. Busch, treasurer. By the permission of the Archbishop these gentlemen as trustees purchased the old court house building and lot, 60x165 feet, on the corner of Adams and Doty streets, paying for the same $1,200. Much of the earlier history of Green Bay was associated with this building, which was a recognized landmark over half a century. It was used as a town hall and schoolhouse, respectively, until about 1844, when it was removed from the commons, a point somewhere in the vicinity of St. John's Square, to the corner of Adams and Doty streets, where it served as a court house until bought, as stated, by the Catholics. Then the old court house was repaired and used for divine service. A house was also rented as a residence for Father Verboort, who then came to Green Bay and became the pastor of the new congregation. Father Verboort was pastor of these people from March 4, 1864, to October 28, 1865. With his little congregation of forty-seven families the good Father labored energetically, and though having but the poorest accomodations he was more than repaid by the earnestness and zeal exhibited by the people. Father Verboort was succeeded by the Rev. H. Hoffen. He took charge of the congregation shortly after Father Verboort left. The exact date of his coming is not known, although the church records show that the first baptism performed by him as pastor was on December 10, 1865. During the first few years little was done to improve the church as the congregation was small and people poor, most of them having to struggle hard in order to gain a home for themselves and support their families. Before long, however, a lot adjoining the church property was purchased and a new parsonage built. The church was dedicated on August 25, 1867, the eleventh Sunday after Pentecost, in honor of St. Willibrord, the first Bishop of Utrecht, Holland, and Apostle of the Netherlands. The Very Rev. E. Daems, a Father of the Holy Cross, officiated at the dedication, when High Mass was celebrated by Father Verboort, then pastor at De Pere, Wisconsin, who also preached a sermon in the English language. Father Smedding, former pastor of St. Mary's (German), and Father Pfaller, pastor of that church, assumed the duties, respectively, as deacon and sub-deacon, and Father Hoffen, the pastor, acted as master of ceremonies. In the afternoon solemn Vespers was held, followed by the benediction of the Way of the Cross. Under the zealous direction of Father Hoffen the congregation flourished both spiritually and temporally. It increased so rapidly in numbers that the old court house, still so-called, had to be enlarged. This occurred in 1869, an addition of 30 feet being added, which gave to the building an area of 95x30 feet. The congregation still continued to grow and in a very few years, through the energy of its pastor and good-will of the people, the at one time small congregation of St. Willibrord was one of the best organized parishes in the diocese.

St. Willibrord's Church, Green Bay, Wis.

On the 25th of October, 1875, owing to feeble health, Father Hoffen handed in his resignation as pastor to the Rt. Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, bishop of the diocese. It was accepted and he was succeeded by the Rev. C. De Louw, who took charge on the 28th of the same month. The new pastor was a man in the prime of life, and of more than ordinary ability, and had already gained considerable renown as a pulpit orator. He labored faithfully in this new field for a little more than four years, leaving in the latter part of February, 1879, to accept the pastorate of St. John's at Little Chute. The Rev. Norbert Kersten was then appointed pastor of St. Willibrord's, taking charge in the beginning of March of the same year. The congregation consisted at the time of nearly two hundred families. Father Kersten, who proved to be a most zealous worker, at once saw the necessity of a Catholic school, and without any unnecessary delay set about the establishment of one. In this undertaking he was eminently successful, a commodious school house being built within a short time. In the latter part of May, 1881, Father Kersten was appointed chaplain of St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum, and during the following month Father De Louw resumed charge of the congregation. With energy and zeal he again took up the charge, which was a pleasing duty, since he had gained during his former pastorate the affection of Catholics and non-Catholics alike. He labored faithfully for three years and three months, during which time the remaining debt on the school building was paid. In the latter part of August, 1884, he was appointed pastor to St. Francis, Hollandtown, Wisconsin. St. Willibrord's was not long without a pastor, for almost immediately after Father De Louw's departure Father Kersten was again placed in charge. He remained this time from the latter part of August, 1884, to the 17th of October, 1886, and was succeeded by the Rev. M. Bongers. For twenty-five years Father Bongers was in the West Indies, where he served as a missionary. Upon this experienced and dauntless worker devolved the great task of building a new church. The old court house had now served the purpose more than twenty-seven years, during which time the congregation had increased to two hundred and twenty families. Father Bongers at once started a subscription list for means with which to erect a new buliding, in which he was greatly aided by the trustees, Messrs. H. T. E. Beerendsen and Edward Engels. In the summer of 1889 the foundation of the new church was laid in the place where the old one had formerly stood. In the meantime the Rt. Rev. Bishop F. X. Katzer, then bishop of the diocese, transferred the Rev. Th. Knegtel from Preble to Little Chute, and appointed Father Bongers to fill the vacancy at Preble. The Rev. William Van Roosmalen then succeeded to the pastorate of St. Willibrord's, where he remained until the new church was ready for use. On June 14, 1891, the corner-stone was laid, a large number of people being there to witness the ceremony. There were present at the ceremony: Vicar-General Kersten and his assistants, the Revs. J. Verstegen, and A. Smitz of De Pere, Wis., the Rev. Wm. Van Roosmalen, pastor, Superior-General Amqueperes, S. P. M.; the Revs. C. Lau and F. Steinbrecher; J. Larmes, Ft. Howard, now West Green Bay; S. M. Wiest, S. P. M., and Ancona, S. P. M., and Arnold, S. P. M., and McAdams, all of St. John's Church, Green Bay, Wis. The present church is Gothic in style and will undoubtedly be one of the finest structures in the diocese when completed. The building as it now stands has cost about $30,000, and an expenditure of fully $10,000 will be necessary to complete it. Its present pastor is the Rev. P. A. Van Susteren, who was appointed June 9, 1895. The parochial school connected with St. Willibrord's has a regular attendance of about one hundred and eighty children, their education being directed by Sisters of Notre Dame Convent, from Milwaukee. Of Catholic societies connected with the congregation, there are the following: St. Joseph's Society, sixty-four members: August Deams, president; Herman Schmitz, vice-president; Frank Calewarts, secretary; Alphons Rondon, treasurer. Altar Society, one hundred and twenty-three members: Mrs. L. Beerendsen, president; Mrs. J. Van Beek, vice-president; Mrs. Fred Berns, secretary; Mrs. R. Scholten, treasurer. Young Ladies' Sodality, ninety-seven members: Mary Centen, president; Annie Swetters, vice-president; Ellen Reynen, secretary; Annie Vanderkin, treasurer. Children of Mary's Society, one hundred and eighty-nine members: Sister Vulvert, president; Sister Ann, secretary; Sister Lubina, treasurer. Aid Society, two hundred and twenty members: Mrs. J. Van Beek, president; Mrs. L. Beerndsen, secretary, and Mrs. J. Van Duren, treasurer. The congregation of St. Willibrord's at present numbers two hundred and twenty families.

Rev. P. A. Van Susteren.

The Rev. P. A. Van Susteren, present pastor of St. Willibrord's Congregation at Green Bay, was born in July, 1865, at Freedom, Wisconsin. His earlier education was received in District School No. 1, at that town, and he afterwards attended the parochial school at the same place for two terms. He then entered the employ of his father, in whose store he remained until 1882, when he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, and began his studies for the priesthood. At this institution minor orders were conferred on him March 22, 1890; sub-deaconship, March 14, 1891, and deaconship on the following day. He was ordained to the priesthood on Thursday, March 19, 1891, on St. Joseph's day, in St. Joseph's Church at West De Pere, Wisconsin. He was then assistant to the Rev. C. De Louw at West Holland, Wisconsin, for three months. From July 20, 1891, to January 9, 1895, he was pastor of St. John's Congregation at Morrison, Wisconsin, from which place he was transferred to his present rectorate at Green Bay.

The Diocese of Green Bay—State of Wisconsin.

CHAPTER II.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Algoma, Wis.

THE Catholics of Ahnapee (now Algoma) were first attended as a mission by the Revs. F. X. Haller of Green Bay and August Lang and Joseph Maly of Kewaunee, whose combined period of administration extended from 1860 to 1870.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Algoma, Wis.

During the latter year the Rev. Ferdinand Stern became first resident pastor of the congregation. He was succeeded during the following year by the Rev. Bernard Wening, who, during his administration, built the first church at Ahnapee. He, in turn, was succeeded by the Rev. Father Ruepplin, in 1872, and the Rev. Father Zawistowski in 1873, and it was during these two years that a new, larger and more suitable edifice was erected. Then Father Julius Rhode maintained the pastorate from 1874 to 1877, and was succeeded for a short period during the latter year, by the Rev. Julius Hellweger. In that same year, also, the Rev. Tobias Spunar took charge, but was replaced in 1878 by the Rev. Adalbert Cipin, who remained until 1894. During this pastor's residence at Algoma a parochial school was established in the old church and in 1892 the present two-story brick structure was erected. He

Rev. Wm. Kraemer.

in the meantime completed the work on the church, in which he also erected three beautiful altars. In addition to this he built a residence for the School Sisters in 1894. Father Cipin was succeeded in 1894 by the Rev. Joseph Hemmer, in 1894, and he by the Rev. Thomas Rabsteinek in 1895. In 1896 the Rev. Father Windish was for a short period pastor of St. Mary's, but was succeeded during the same year by the present rector, the Rev. William Krae-mer. The congregation at present consists of about one hundred and ninety-six families, or nearly twelve hundred souls in all. The parochial school, which is in charge of Sisters of St. Francis from Bay Settlement, has a regular attendance of sixty children. The Catholic societies represented in this congregation are as follows: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, organized January 22, 1888, thirty-one members; Catholic Order of Foresters, organized September 16, 1894, thirty-two members; St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, organized in 1865, forty members; St. Wenceslaus Society, organized 1880, twenty-five members; St. Francis Society, organized 1896, eight members; Ladies' Rosary Society, organized 1870, seventy members; Young Ladies' Rosary Society, organized 1885, thirty-two members, and St. Ann's Society, organized 1880, thirty members.

The Holy Name of Mary Mission at Forestville, Door County, Wis., is also attended from Algoma. This congregation was established by the Rev. Ferdinand Stern in 1871, the church being finished and blessed in 1880. Services are held at St. Mary's on every third Sunday. The congregation, which numbers about seventy-six families, is about half English and half German. A Ladies' Altar Society, organized by members of the congregation in 1880, has now a membership of thirty. The parochial school at Forestville is taught by a lay teacher.

The Rev. William Kraemer, present pastor of St. Mary's at Algoma, and of the mission at Forestville, was born at Milwaukee, Nov. 6, 1860. After completing the usual course, he entered the Seminary at St. Francis, in 1877, and was ordained priest at that institution on June 29, 1885. His first appointment was as pastor of St. Mary's at Reedsville, with attending missions, where he built three parochial schools, Sister house, parsonage and enlarged the mission church. On August 28, 1896, he was appointed to the pastorate of St. Mary's Congregation at Algoma and the mission at Forestville, and took charge of same September 9, following.

St. Mary's Church, Amherst Junction, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary of the Scapular de Monte Carmelo, was organized at Amherst Junction in the year 1884, at which time a small church occupying an area 20x30 feet, was erected. This building continued in use for several years, although the somewhat rapid and healthy growth of the congregation necessitated additions to the original building on two different occasions. In 1893, however, the people feeling amply able to do so, and with the permission of the Right Rev. Bishop S. G. Messmer, built a handsome new structure of 104x40 feet, the sanctuary occupying a space of 24 feet square in addition. The tower of this church is sixty-four feet in height and contains a heavy and pleasant-toned bell. The interior of the church is amply provided with all necessary furnishings for conducting the services, among such being three altars, which were blessed by the Rev. Father N. Kolazinski. The value of the church complete is estimated at $8,000, while the whole property owned by the congregation, including real estate, increases that amount to $12,000. The new church was dedicated on July 16, 1894.

The first pastor to attend the congregation at Amherst Junction was the Rev. T. Monczynski. This pastor was succeeded by the Rev. Father A. M. Sikorski, who upon being transferred to another parish was followed by the Rev. Fathers A. Lex and Roman Wawrzykowski. The congregation of St. Mary's is now composed of some eight hundred members.

St. Mary's Church, Amherst Junction, Wis.

The Rev. Roman Wawrzykowski was born on the 19th of February, 1865, in Rzeszow, Galicia, Austro-Hungary. After acquiring his elementary education at the Normal schools, he took a classical course at the gymnasium of his native town. He then took a year in theology at Lemberg, Galicia, and two years in St.

Thomas Aquinas, Merriam Park, St. Paul, and for four months at Collegeville, Minnesota. He took his minor orders on the 16th of December, 1891; sub-deaconship on the 13th of March, 1892; deaconship on the following day, and was ordained to the priesthood on the 21st of the same month, by the Most Rev. Otto Zardetti. He said his first Mass in Holy Cross Church at Minneapolis, Rev. Roman Wawrzykowski.

Minnesota, on March 27, 1892, the Rev. James Pacholski being pastor of the congregation at that time. His first appointment was as pastor of the Catholic congregation at Perham, Minnesota, where he remained from April 16, 1892, until May, 1893. He was then transferred to Pulaski, North Dakota, which place he left February 28, 1896, to assume his present duties as pastor of St. Mary's at Amherst Junction.

St. John's Church, Antigo, Wis.

THE history of this parish dates its beginning from the year 1880, when the Rev. Ph. St. Louis attended Antigo as a mission from Phlox. Here for the first time, on May 2, 1880, he said Mass in a log house, the property and home of Mr. Francis Deleglise, a pioneer and the founder of Antigo.

With a vigilant eye the pastor of Phlox watched over and nurtured this mission, until in 1882 the population had increased to such a number as to warrant the erection of a church. This desire on his part was ably and readily seconded by the Catholics residing at and contiguous to Antigo, so that he at once began work on the projected edifice, but before its completion was succeeded in the pastorate by the Rev. Peter Lochman, who remained in charge of the congregation from 1882 until the fall of 1883. At the latter time Father Lochman was succeeded by Father John Seubert, under whose administration the erection of the present church was begun in the spring of 1884, the old structure having been burnt to the ground on September 2d of the preceding year.

The first resident pastor given in charge of this congregation was the Rev. A. N. Buschle, who came to

St. John's Church, Antigo, Wis.

Antigo in 1885 and remained for one year. His successor was the Rev. William Takken, who came at a time when the settlement and its contingent industries were experiencing a pleasing increase. The growth of the city now became so rapid that it was necessary to urge along the completion of the new church at the utmost speed. There was a spirit of enterprise, too, pervading the people, which made it an easy as well as pleasant task, so that Father Takken, who was not slow to appreciate the condition of affairs, took every necessary advantage of them in order to bring about a prosperous and satisfactory condition of the Catholic parish. The church completed, he in 1886 built the present parsonage; nor did he stop here, for as yet his ideal plan had not been carried out. His great desire, in fact, had been to erect a parochial school in which religion, the fundamental principle of all education, could be taught. It was indeed a matter of unusual congratulation for him to see his hopes realized and wishes fulfilled, when in 1890 the present substantial and commodious school building was completed. This end, however, had not been gained without incessant toil and earnest endeavor on his part, for he unfortunately did not live long to enjoy the fruits of his labor. Worn out by many and incessant toils, his health began to fail, and seven years after his first arrival at Antigo, having carried on and virtually completed a great work, Father Takken laid down the burden of life on the 5th of May, 1893. The present resident pastor, the Rev.

St. John's School, Antigo, Wis.

Conrad Saile, succeeded Father Takken, taking charge of the congregation on August 17th of the same year.

Father Saile was born in Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, June 4, 1861, and after completing his course in philosophy and theology, was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, on June 4, 1884, by the Right Rev. Bishop Heiss. He said his first holy Mass on the Feast of SS. Peter and Paul, in St. Nicholas' Church, Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania. He then came West, and after spending one year as assistant pastor at the cathedral in Green Bay, he was given in charge of St. John's congregation at Harrison, Brown County, Wisconsin, where he remained for the space of nine months. From Harrison he was transferred to Maple Grove, Manitowoc County, where for seven years and a half he administered to the spiritual wants of St. Patrick's Congregation. On the 17th of August, 1893, he was commissioned to assume the responsibility of the Antigo charge, which was made vacant by the death of Father Takken. Father Saile has proved himself equal to the trust imposed upon him, and has shown himself a worthy successor of him who had done so much for the Catholics of Antigo—for the buildings erected by Father Takken are monuments that speak the lasting praise of that worthy priest. The present pastor, by his indefatigable zeal in his new field of labor, has won all hearts to himself, both within and without the church. Upon assuming charge of St. John's, he found the congregation heavily in debt, but with the hearty coöperation of a devoted and willing people he has succeeded in reducing the incumbrance to one-half the original amount. The congregation is, in fact, in excellent condition, and under the guidance of Father Saile may justly look forward to a bright and prosperous future.

Rev. Conrad Saile.

There are quite a number of active organizations in connection with St. John's congregation, among which may be mentioned the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, having forty-five members; Catholic Order of Foresters, ninety members; St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, sixty members, and a branch of the Familien Schutz-Gesellschaft of Wisconsin, with sixteen members. The congregation at the present time consists of three hundred families, and the parochial school connected with it, which is under the charge of Sisters of St. Francis, has an attendance of two hundred and fifty scholars.

Stations at Elton and Summit Lake, both in Langlade County, are regularly attended by the resident pastor from Antigo.

St. Hyacinth's Church, Antigo, Wis.

THE parish of St. Hyacinth's, at Antigo, Langlade County, Wisconsin, was established on May 1, 1895. The first pastor appointed to this charge was the Rev. L. Starostzick, who was succeeded by the present pastor, the Rev. Father

St. Hyacinth's Church and Parsonage, Antigo, Wis.

Bieniarz, who, as assistant to the Rev. C. Saile, organized St. Hyacinth's at the date before mentioned. The congregation at the present time consists of one hundred families.

Rev. J. C. Bieniarz.

Of Catholic organizations connected with this parish, there are: St. Stanislaus Kostke Society, St. Hyacinth's Society, and Holy Rosary Confraternity.

St. Joseph's Church, Appleton, Wis.

THE German congregation of St. Josephs at Appleton, was organized on December 13, 1868, by the Right Rev. Bishop Melcher of Green Bay. On the 26th of February following, the Rev. J. Nussbaum assumed the resident pastorate, which he maintained until the 23d of February, 1870. Father Nussbaum was born on September 30, 1832, at Rimbach, Sachsen, Diocese of Paderborn; he died on December 26, 1896, at La Porte, Indiana. The second pastor to assume the duties at Appleton was the

St. Joseph's Church, Appleton, Wis.

Rev. Ferdinand Stern, who remained there from February 23, 1870, to April 15, 1877. He was born on August 14, 1841. His successor was the Rev. Wallhoffen, who died at Center, Wisconsin, on August, 2, 1889. The Rev. Didacus Wendl assumed the pastorate of St. Joseph's on April 27, 1877, and maintained the same until July 17, 1879. He was the first pastor of the Order of Capuchin Fathers to have charge of the congregation. His successor was the Rev. Laurentius Henn, O. M. Cap., whose pastorate extended from July 17, 1879, to October 16 of the same year. Then came the Rev. Bonaventura Frey, O. M. Cap., from October 16, 1879, to October 19, 1882, and the Rev. Francis Haas from October 19, 1882, to October 16, 1885. This reverend father, who was first Guardian of the Order, died on June 21, 1895, at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, and was buried at Mt. Calvary. The next pastor was the Rev. Bernardin Schmitz, from October 16, 1885, to March 9, 1888, and he was succeeded by the Rev. Pacificus Berleman, from March 9, 1888, to October 11, 1889. Father Berleman died on the latter date, and was also buried at Mt. Calvary. On October 14, 1889, the Rev. Laurentius Henn, O. M. Cap., again became pastor, remaining until September 30, 1891. On that date the Rev. Honoratus Schmidt took charge, remaining until August 12, 1894, when the Rev. Timotheus Grossman, O. M. Cap., was appointed to the pastorate. In 1897 the Rev. Ignatius Ullrich, O. M. Cap., became pastor. The above completes a full list of pastors serving St. Joseph's since its organization in 1868. There are now twenty-seven hundred and fifty souls belonging to the congregation.

Rev. T. Grossman.

The parochial school connected with St. Joseph's is divided into nine classes, which are taught by eight Sisters from the Convent of Notre Dame at Milwaukee, and one lay teacher. The attendance at this school numbers in the neighborhood of five hundred and eighty.

Of Catholic organizations in St. Joseph's congregation, there are the following: St. Joseph's Men's Society, Henry Kamp, president; St. Aloysius Society, Edward Maurer, president; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, C. Romer, president; Catholic Order of Foresters, Gustav Keller, chief ranger; St. Stanislaus Boys' Society, Edward Schimberg, president; Young Ladies' Sodality, Anna Berg, president; Married Women's Society, Mrs. Kate Heid, president; Girls' Society, Anna Ebben, president.

The Rev. Timotheus Grossman was born on the 12th of August, 1843, in Weissenbach, Baden, near Rastatt, Germany, his baptismal name being Laurence. He was educated for the priesthood at the Benedictine College of St. Vincent, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin, joining the Capuchin Order at the latter place on September 17, 1872. He was ordained to the priesthood on June 27, 1880, by the Most Rev. Michael Heiss, Archbisnop of Milwaukee, in the Seminary of St. Francis, and said his first Mass on the 29th of that month at Notre Dame Convent Chapel. After attending to the spiritual wants of a few small missions for a short period, he was on the 23d of August, 1881, sent to assume charge of the Mater Dolorosa Church on Pitt Street, New York. From March 17, 1888, to September 2, 1891, he was Superior of Holy Cross Church at Wauwatosa and afterwards Chaplain of the County Hospital Poor-house and Insane Asylum. From September 2, 1891, to August 14, 1894, Father Grossmann was Guardian of St. Bonaventure Monastery, Detroit City, and pastor of St. Joseph's Church, Wyandotte, Michigan.

The property of St. Joseph's is now estimated to be worth not less than $100,000.

St. Mary's Church, Appleton, Wis.

NEARLY half a century ago, in the year 1849, the first Catholic families came to Appleton, and worked on the construction of the Green Bay and Mississippi Canal. The first Mass celebrated in Appleton was said that year in the house of Solomon Grignon. These few Catholic families were soon afterwards joined by about a dozen others, and their spiritual wants during the first decade were attended to by the missionary fathers, among whom were Dr. Salzmann, the Revs. Caspar Rehrl, Father Fusseder, and others.

In the year 1859, the Catholics established St. Mary's congregation, and built a small frame church, of which the Rev. Louis Dale became first resident pastor, remaining as such until the year 1867. In 1864 he opened a parochial school, under the direction of the Sisters of St. Agnes, but for want of funds the school was soon after discontinued. Father Dale was succeeded by the Rev. W. Wilkins, who was pastor for one year. Under his administration the German Catholics withdrew from St. Mary's and organized St. Joseph's parish. The Rev. Edward Walsh, his successor, remained but a few months, giving place to the Rev. Father Verberk, who maintained the charge from 1868 until 1872. The Servite Fathers had charge of the parish from 1872 until 1875, during which period the present brick church was erected. They were followed by the Rev. F. Tanguay, who was pastor of St. Mary's until his death, which occurred November 25, 1887. He was succeeded by the present rector, the Rev. W. J. Fitzmaurice. In the year 1888 St. Mary's School was erected and placed in charge of the Dominican Sisters of Sinsinawa Mound. Five years later (1893), Columbia Hall was built. The parish now numbers about three hundred and fifty families, and is in a flourishing condition.

St. Mary's Church, Appleton, Wis.

Of Catholic organizations connected with this parish, there are the following: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch 128: William Comerford, president; Patrick Patton, vice-president; Ernest Otto, recording secretary; D. Carroll, financial secretary and treasurer. Catholic Order of Foresters: Thomas T. Ryan, chief ranger; Edward W. Sackstider, vice-chief ranger; Henry Schimberg, recording secretary; Joseph E. Grassberger, financial secretary; Dennis Carroll, treasurer; Dr. J. V. Canavan, medical examiner. Ancient Order of Hibernians, Division No. 1: J. Driscoll, county president; John Merrity, president; Thomas Carrigan, vice-president; J. W. Cotter, recording secretary; James Morrow, financial secretary; Michael Shinners, treasurer. Young Men's League of the Sacred Heart: James Monahan, president; George Baldwin, vice-president; William Memachiek, secretary; Frank Fountain, treasurer. Young Ladies' Sodality: Miss Kitty Cuthbert, president; Miss Mae Gorman, vice-president; Miss Julia Green, secretary; Miss Mae Elliott, treasurer.

Father W. J. Fitzmaurice, pastor of St. Mary's congregation at Appleton, is a native of Cato, Wisconsin, where he was born about thirty-eight years ago. His earlier studies were acquired in the district schools of his native country, but later he went to Germany with a view to preparing himself for the priesthood.

Rev. W. Fitzmaurice.

This accomplished, he was ordained, and at once attached to the parish of Winneconne, where he remained in charge for eleven months. This parish he left to assume the pastorate of the congregation at Appleton, with which he is still connected. Of his standing in the community where he has lived for so long, we cannot, perhaps, do better than to refer to an article recently published concerning him, which is in part as follows:

"It now appears probable that Father W. J. Fitzmaurice, the priest of St. Mary's Catholic Church, of this city, will soon be able to take up his duties, sickness having compelled him to lay them down some time ago. His illness, however, has only served to show how thoroughly well seated he is in the hearts of his parishioners. One reason for this is the hail-fellow-well-met style of the priest, who is a man built on the hearty pattern of bluff 'Prince Hal.'

"The friend, confidant and adviser of every member of his flock, this energetic man has succeeded in lifting St. Mary's Church from poverty to prosperity. Father Fitzmaurice, though essentially a man of business, believes in lifting the members of his church up with it, not to himself, and to this end mingles with them in all their pleasures. By becoming their temporal friend, he believes he will be more able to help them spiritually.

"When he first came to St. Mary's parish, in October, 1887, the church was in a poor, struggling condition, and was burdened with a heavy debt. He at once set out to better the financial condition of his new charge. From the first his labors were successful, for in 1888 a school house costing $15,000 was built and partly paid for. In the interim the church debt was wiped out, and in 1894 the foundation for Columbia Hall, a Catholic Young Men's Christian Association building, was laid as a result of his work. The school is the best parochial school in the city, and is graded up to the city High Schools, into which its students go upon graduation.

"The idea of Columbia Hall is an example of the beliefs and energy of Father Fitzmaurice, who raised the larger part of the money required for its construction. In the building of this hall he was seeking for a way to take the young men of his congregation out of the saloons, and give them a home and club rooms which they could not fail to enjoy. It is practically a Young Men's Christian Association Building, and cost about $16,000. Among its features are a small theater for amateur attractions, bath rooms, reading rooms, gymnasium, and a bowling alley. Of all these departments Father Fitzmaurice is himself a patron."

When, at the age of twenty-seven years, Father Fitzmaurice took charge of this congregation, he found the church, though large in membership, financially embarrassed. It at once became his endeavor to better these untoward conditions, and he succeeded so well that to-day he has the spiritual direction of an extensive parish which is almost free of debt.

St. Patrick's Church, Askeaton, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Patrick's at Askeaton, Brown County, Wisconsin, formerly known, however, as East Holland, was organized in 1877. For a number of years prior to that time the Catholics at that place were attended as a mission from West Holland and Morristown successively. The first pastor placed in charge of St. Patrick's was the Rev. William Herbert, who died on December 4, 1878. His successor was the Rev. F. X. O'Reilly, who was followed by the Rev. J. Ryan. The latter remained until November 1884, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, the Rev. A. O'Connor, who remained at that time until 1888. Then the Rev. A. F. Masschelein assumed the pastorate, and was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers M. Kelleher and G. O'Connell. The latter came to Askeaton in 1893, and after two years' pastorate was succeeded by Father O'Connor, who has remained in charge of the parish until the present time.

St. Patrick's Church, Askeaton, Wis.

The congregation of St. Patrick's is now composed of about eighty families. There is no school in connection with the parish.

Holy Cross Church, Bay Settlement, Wis.

THE congregation of the Holy Cross Church, which is situated in that beautiful strip of country lying along the eastern shore of Green Bay, was one of the first Catholic congregations established in Brown County, Wisconsin, as well as the Northwest. It is more than half a century ago that a French Canadian colony came down and settled partly on the eastern shore of the Bay, in the locality now known as the Town of Scott, and partly on the western shore, in the place called Duck Creek, and extending south as far as West De Pere and Little Chute. Most of these people were fishermen and hunters. They seemed, however, to take up an abiding place at this point, and their grandchildren, among whom may be numbered the La Framboise, Shallifax, Vieaux, Rousseaux, Laplantes, Baumier, Champeaux, Verboncoeurs and numerous other families, are living there to-day. Most of these people, though now owning and operating farms, are still actively interested, as were their predecessors, in the fishery business. Some time after the first settlers arrived, and had cleared away the massive growth of timber, which to a considerable extent covered the shores of the bay, a number of Hollanders, Germans, Flemish, Walloon Belgians and a few Irish also took up their residence there, and thus the population became mixed, both as regards nationality and language.

The majority of Catholic residents in this section are now to be found living in the southern part of the Town of Scott, called Bay Settlement, the northern portion of the town being occupied almost entirely by Lutherans and a few Scotch Presbyterians. There are also some Catholics of the Holy Cross congregation living in the towns of Preble and Humboldt, a little less than two hundred families being the estimated number belonging to it at the present time. The first name given to this place was the "French Settlement," which was later changed to Bay Settlement. It was early in the '40's that a log church was built at this point by those early settlers from Canada, on a spot just about where the present edifice stands. For some time following the erection of this building, the congregation was attended by the priests of St. John's Church at Green Bay, among whom were, the Rev. Father Perrodin, the late Rev. Father General of the Jesuits, Anderledy, and the renowned Catholic priest and missionary Father Bonduel. The first resident priest to take charge of the congregation was the Rev. Father Daems, who came from Belgium in 1850. For two years he went up to Little Chute, assisting the Rev. Father Van den Broek until 1852, when he came back to Bay Settlement, and built a church for that congregation in 1853 and the parochial school in 1855. He was born at Shaffen, Belgium, and belonged to the Monastery of the Crusade Fathers in Uden, Holland. With four of his fellow monks he attended the small Belgian settlements in the peninsula and was for some time vicar-general to the Rt. Rev. Bishop Melcher of Green Bay, and at the time of the death of that prelate, administrator of that diocese. Father Daems died April 12, 1879. His successor was the Rev. Father Rinckes, who remained, however, but a short time, when he went to Peshtigo, where he died in 1884. He was followed by the Rev. Father Takken, who in turn was succeeded by the Rev. Father Reding. A few months later Father Beck took charge of the congregation, but was soon after replaced by the Reverend Fathers of Mercy, who established themselves with headquarters in Bay Settlement. From this point they attended all the Belgian missions in the peninsula. The present pastor, the Rev. P. Cautereels, was appointed in 1891, assuming the active charge on January 1, 1892. There is one parochial school in connection with the congregation of the Holy Cross, which has an attendance of one hundred and twenty-two pupils. There is also a convent school, having twenty pupils. The Community of Franciscan Sisters, which is also established at this place, was started by the Rev. Father Daems about 1876, the convent being built in 1879. The Sisters, of whom there are twenty-two at Bay Settlement, devote their entire time to teaching.

Holy Cross Church, Bay Settlement, Wis.

Rev. P. Cautereels.

In the congregation of the Holy Cross, the following Catholic societies are represented: League of the Sacred Heart, thirty members; Sodality of the Children of Mary, forty-eight members; Altar Society for Married Women, fifty--one members; Sodality of St. Aloysius for Young Men, forty-four members.

Father Cautereels is Belgian by birth and was born near Antwerp on January 3, 1833. After pursuing the ordinary course of studies at the schools and seminaries of that country, he was finally ordained to the priesthood by his Eminence, Cardinal Sterckx, on December 18, 1857. He came to America in 1882, when forty-eight years of age, and was at once appointed to the charge of the missions of Humboldt, which he attended until 1892. In 1897 he rebuilt the old church of Bay Settlement, which is rightly considered a landmark in the peninsula of Wisconsin.

A Short Sketch of Father Daems, Pioneer Priest in Bay Settlement.

Father Daems sailed from his native country on May 3, 1851, arriving in America some weeks later. Here he said his first Mass on the feast of SS. Peter and Paul, at Detroit, Mich., on June 29, on which occasion he also met his fellow countryman, Bishop Lefevre, who urged him strongly to remain at Detroit. This he found impossible for him to do, having already long determined to locate in Wisconsin, for which territory he shortly after set sail. On this voyage he was accompanied by Brother Peter of the Order, it being his intention to establish a house wherever he might finally decide to locate. At last, while sailing up Green Bay, his attention was directed toward Bay Settlement, L'Anse, upon which he said to Brother Peter, "This is the place where we shall live." This indeed proved true, for, having spent a short time at L'Anse, he, with Brother Peter, moved to Little Chute. At this time much of the settlement was inhabited by Indians, French Canadians and emigrants from Holland. The pastor of these people, the venerable Father Van den Broek, had for some time past been in exceedingly poor health, and therefore hailed with much satisfaction the coming of this unexpected assistance. When the venerable Missionary learned of the near approach of Father Daems, he hastened to unbolt the front door of his dwelling and ran as fast as he could to meet the new arrival. What particularly struck Father Daems at this meeting was the attire of the venerable priest who met him, even more so than did the primitive appearance of his dwelling. On this occasion he wore a large straw hat, such as were made by the Canadian women, a red flannel shirt, and pantaloons which were supported by a sash or belt, while one shoe and a moccasin formed the covering for his feet. Father Daems was often heard to speak of this occasion, expressing his unbounded admiration for the many saintly qualities of Father Van den Broek, knowing the oppulence of his family in the "Old Land," and realizing the sacrifices he made for religion and souls in this "New Land" of ours. Father Daems remained in Little Chute for considerably over a year, during which period the venerable Father Van den Broek bid adieu to this "vale of tears."

Some little while after the death of the Missionary, that dreadful scourge, the cholera, visited the country, slaying its hundreds. For seven weeks, while it raged its fiercest, Father Daems kept his horse constantly saddled, and for that whole terrible period he knew not what it was to have one night of undisturbed repose. Of the many incidents which occurred during that trying period there is none more touching or calculated to give stronger evidence of his kindness of heart than the following: One evening he was hurriedly called to visit a woman who was dying of the scourge, she being the last of the band of Hollanders who had arrived at the settlement a short time before the breaking out of the plague. When he had prepared her for the inevitable change, she spoke to him of her baby son, asking him what would become of the child. "Be consoled," was the reply, "I shall see to the boy." He kept his promise, and on leaving the dying woman, wrapped the infant in his mantle and took it with him. Upon arriving home he learned that there was urgent need of his presence in a distant part of the settlement, so placing the sleeping child in his bed and without waiting to notify Brother Peter of his return and sudden departure, he hurried away. Brother Peter, it would seem, had no acquaintance with any language save his own, so that when people came from a distance to request the attendance of Father Daems and he happened to be away from home, made known their wants in writing upon a large slate which was kept handy for that purpose, at the same time giving minute directions as to the course to be followed by him in getting there. Not having seen the Father upon his return, Brother Peter remained in blissful ignorance of the fact until on the following morning when he was aroused and considerably startled by hearing the cries of the infant. Though badly frightened he recovered his equilibrium sufficiently to call in the assistance of a neighbor woman, who at once took charge of the little one. Upon his return Father Daems sought out a worthy couple who adopted the boy, who from that time prospered wonderfully and is to-day a worthy member of society in that parish.

Rev. Fr. Daems.
(DECEASED.)

Soon after the cessation of the cholera, Brother Peter died and Father Daems returned to Europe, where he remained for one year, during which time he was appointed Prior of the Monastery of Diest, Belgium. When he again returned to America he was accompanied by four priests and four brothers. The fathers were canons regular of the Order of the Crusade Fathers, which order originated at the time of the Crusades, their insignia being a white habit, black scapular, with red and white maltese cross and a black cape and mantle. Their coming to Bay Settlement was the cause of great rejoicing to the poor people located there. For some time following their arrival the fathers attended to all of the surrounding missions, but after the panic of 1857 the times became so stringent and the people experienced such extreme poverty that the outlook for the missionaries and the establishment of their order in that section of the country was most discouraging. So convinced had they become of this that shortly before the breaking out of the civil war Father Arts and three brothers returned to their native Holland. Fathers Nuyts and Verhoef also left the settlement, going to Grant County, where for a considerable period they had charge of several missions. Not long after this exodus of the missionaries, Father Nuyts became so broken in health that he was compelled to return to Holland, where he died soon after. Father Verhoef remained, however, taking charge of a parish in Illinois not far from the present city of Galena, where he remained until the time of his death on June 11, 1878.

But in spite of the many drawbacks and seeming hopelessness of establishing the Order permanently there, Father Daems remained in Bay Settlement, having with him as his companion one brother, who, however, returned to Holland in the second year of the war of the rebellion.

When in March, 1868, Wisconsin was divided into three bishoprics, an opportunity was at last afforded to reward this zealous priest for the many privations he had undergone in carrying forward the work of the Church. It was soon after this new arrangement had been perfected that the Rt. Rev. Bishop Melcher arrived at Green Bay, the first appointment made by him after coming there being that of Father Daems as Vicar-General of the Diocese. When in 1869 Bishop Melcher went to Rome to attend the Ecumenical Council, Father Daems was appointed Administrator, and when on December 20, 1873, the good Bishop died he was again appointed to that position by Archbishop Fenwick, maintaining the same until the arrival in July, 1875, of the Rt. Rev. F. X. Krautbauer. The new Bishop also appointed him as his Vicar-General and as such he remained until the time of his death. During the latter years of his life Father Daems was a great sufferer, his physical ailments arising as a direct result of the hardships and privations he had undergone while laboring among the early missions of the North. For a number of years his sufferings from rheumatism were intense, and finally, in 1876, he contracted a cold which terminated fatally in February of the following year The obsequies were held on the 17th of the same month, his Requiem being sung by Bishop Krautbauer, while the funeral oration was delivered in three different languages, by three different priests. It is little enough to say that he died regretted and esteemed by Catholics and non-Catholics alike, and that he will long be remembered for his kindliness of heart and generous services in behalf of the poor and afflicted.

St. Mary's Church, Bailey's Harbor, Wis.

UNTIL of very recent date, the congregation of St. Mary's, at Bailey's Harbor, Door County, Wisconsin, which was first organized in 1862, has been attended as a mission from the various parishes contiguous to that place. The one first to administer to the spiritual wants of the Catholics there was the Rev. Father Pernin, who was established as pastor at Peshtigo. In 1870, however, by order of the Right Rev. Bishop Melcher, the mission was attended regularly once each month by the resident pastor from Sturgeon Bay. The first one of these to fulfill that office was the Rev. Father Adler, who continued to do so until the year 1874, when Father Rhode, resident pastor at Ahnapee, assumed the charge. At that time, the congregation consisted of some twenty families. It was during his administration that the church was built at Bailey's Harbor, the dimensions of which were 20x38 feet with 18 feet walls and a 60 feet steeple. This church is still in existence and in a fair state of preservation. In 1876, the pastor at Sturgeon Bay again took charge of the mission, the Rev. Father Blume attending there until 1884, when he was succeeded by the Rev. G. J. Pellegrin. In October, 1886, he was succeeded by the Rev. J. O'Loughlin, who took up his residence at Bailey's Harbor and remained there until June of the following year. The place was then vacant until October, when it was again visited as a mission by Father B. Hugenroth, first from Jacksonport and afterwards from Sevastopol. Father F. X. Steinbrecher succeeded him at Sevastopol from February 1893, during which time he had charge of St. Mary's. Then Father Hennes, who was pastor at Sevastopol from November 1893 to January 1894, visited the mission and from the latter date until October 1895 Father Francis Kroll assumed the pastorate of the congregation, taking up his residence at Bailey's Harbor, and building the residence there. His successor from February 1896 to January 1897 was the Rev. Adam Seeber. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, the Rev. Luke Van Ree. The congregation consists of five hundred members. There is one Catholic organization, a St. Joseph's Altar Society, connected with this parish.

The mission of St. John in the Desert, at Egg Harbor, is attended from St. Mary's by the Rev. Father Van Ree. This mission was established in 1876, by Father Engelbert Blume. Prior to that year, however, in 1868, the Catholics residing at this place were visited by Father Burnett, who was then a resident of Menominee. Six years later and two years before the establishment of the parish, Father Burnett was succeeded by the Rev. J. J. Rhode, who was resident pastor at Ahnapee. The name of his successor is not of record, but the fourth was Father Blume, who, as previously stated, established the congregation in 1876. He was located at Sturgeon Bay, from whence he visited the mission once each month. Two years later, in 1878, he built the first church at Egg Harbor, a structure 30 x 40 feet. Father Blume was succeeded in 1885 by the Rev. G. J. Pellegrin, and he in October of the following year and until June 1887 by the Rev. J. O'Loughlin. After he was transferred to another parish, Father Pellegrin again took charge of the mission, who visited there from Sturgeon Bay. Then the Rev. B. Hugenroth located at Jacksonport, where he built the present church in 1889 and also visited St. John's. Following Father Hugenroth came in succession the Rev. Fathers Steinbrecher, Hennes, Kroll, Seeber and the present incumbent, the Rev. Father Van Ree. The congregation of St. John's is composed of fifty-nine families, who are nearly all of French Canadian descent. An Altar Society dedicated to St. Joseph was organized in this congregation in 1897.

A little congregation was organized at Jacksonport in 1874 by Father Rhode. A church was also built at that place and dedicated to St. Michael. This place is also attended as a mission from Bailey's Harbor, services being held there three times a month. The first visits to this place by a Catholic priest were made by the Rev. Father Pernin, from Peshtigo, sometime during the sixties. Then followed Father Adler, for a time, from Sturgeon Bay, and after him, in 1874, the Rev. J. J. Rhode, from Ahnapee, and in 1876 Father Blume from Sturgeon Bay. It was under his direction that the erection of the church was begun. Then followed in succession the Rev. Fathers Pellegrin, O'Loughlin—who resided at Bailey's Harbor and who finally died at Milwaukee in the summer of 1887,—B. Hugenroth—whose residence was first at Jacksonport and afterwards at Sevastopol,—Steinbrecher, Hennes, Kroll, Adam Seeber and the present incumbent of the pastorate of Bailey's Harbor, Father Van Ree. There are fifty-two families in this congregation, which are about equally divided between people of Canadian, German and Irish nationality. A league of the Sacred Heart Society connected with St. Michael's has a membership of one hundred.

A little station at Sister Bay, Door County, is also attended from Bailey's Harbor. The congregation here is Bohemian and German.

The Rev. Luke Van Ree was born at Abonnickendam, in the Netherlands. He came to America in 1886 and became attached to the Green Bay Diocese in 1896.

St. Mary's Church, Bear Creek, Wis.

IN its earlier years, the congregation of St. Mary's, at Bear Creek, Outagamie County, Wisconsin, was attended from Clintonville. The parish was first organized about the year 1860, or perhaps a little later, at which time, we are told, a small church was erected. The first pastor of record as attending the Catholics at Bear Creek was the Rev. Father Verwyst, who was followed in succession by the Rev. Fathers Lamarsh, Dorrh, Hannon, O'Connor, Lochman and John Seubert. He came to St. Mary's in 1875, and in the fall of that year changed the location of the church to the present site, where he built a larger and more imposing structure 40x100 feet, and having a steeple 150 feet high. Father Seubert was succeeded as pastor of St. Mary's by the Rev. A. Belle, and he by the Rev. B. Hugenroth, who was followed by Father Leccia, the present incumbent, on February 20, 1895. Of these pastors, the Rev. Father Seubert was prominently active for the good and beneficial work he accomplished in this parish. No labor was too arduous to undertake in forwarding the interests of the congregation, the good Father rendering active assistance in felling the timber, drawing stone, and performing other menial duties in connection with the building of the church. In addition to this, he also contributed $1,000 in cash toward the enterprise. The present site of St. Mary's consists of some five acres of land, situated in the most advantageous location, and at such a height that the foundation of the church stands above all other buildings on the east side of the town. The cost of this church when completed was about $3,000. In 1887 the congregation of St. Mary's met with a severe loss, the church, which was blown down by a tornado on the 2d of May, being almost entirely destroyed. Fortunately for the people, however, they secured some $2,444.88 in insurance, so that the loss was not a total one. The church was rebuilt under the immediate supervision of P. D. Murphy, at that time secretary and treasurer of the parish board. The parochial school and sisters' dwelling connected with this parish are all contained in a two-story building, which was erected in 1889, the dimensions being 24x60 feet. The cost of this structure, including the interior furnishings, amounted to $2,500, a large portion of which was bequeathed for that purpose to the congregation by James Handy and John Coalman, now deceased. A comfortable and substantial parsonage has also been built by the present rector, the cost of the same being in the neighborhood of $2,000. When first established, the parochial school at Bear Creek was in charge of Sisters of St. Francis, of Silver Lake, who remained from September, 1889, until December, 1895. The congregation of St. Mary's at the present time numbers in all some two hundred members; the school, at the present time, has a regular attendance of one hundred and twenty-five scholars, in charge of the Sisters of St. Francis of Milwaukee.

St. Mary's Church, Bear Creek, Wis.

The Rev. E. E. Leccia was born at Jaccio, Corsica, December 16, 1848. He was ordained to the priesthood in Rome by Cardinal Patrigii, on July 10, 1870, and came to America in 1872, arriving in Green Bay on the 27th of May in that year. He was then appointed by Bishop Melcher as pastor of St. Joseph's, De Pere, and while there he built a $1,500 parsonage. From De Pere Father Leccia went to Robinsonville, in Brown County, taking charge of St. Joseph's congregation. At this place, he at once commenced the erection of a new church, the old one being far too small for the accommodation of the people. From this point, also, he made regular monthly visits to the missions at Grandlez, Delwich, Marchand and Thiry-Daems. At Delwich and Thiry-Daems he built new churches, and a parsonage at Grandlez. From Robinsonville he became the pastor at Humboldt, where he built a brick church.

Rev. E. E. Leccia.

He then went to Florence as rector of the Immaculate Conception, where he remained for six years. His next appointment was at Stiles, where he remained for a similar period, during which time he made many charge of his present pastorate.

St. Joseph's Church, Berlin, Wis.

WHATEVER of interest there is in the history of the early settlement and development of the Fox River Valley, a great deal is due to the untiring energy and indomitable spirit of the Catholic missionary, who braved the hardships of life in the undeveloped lands inhabited almost exclusively by the Indians. Long before the city of Berlin came into existence the Gospel of Jesus Christ was preached and the sacrifice of the Mass was celebrated in the wilderness lying along the banks of the Fox, and the first words of Christianity to fall upon the ears of the red men in the then unknown valley, were the words of that intrepid explorer and saintly servant of God, Pere Marquette. Whether or not he ever set foot on the present site of the city of Berlin is not known, but circumstances would indicate that he possibly did, for only a few miles up the river he spoke to the savages at the historic spot now known as Saint Marie. Whatever lasting impression his words made upon the minds of the denizens of the forest in this vicinity, history does not state. It remained for the later missionaries and the influence of their words and example to plant securely the standard of the Cross. The first of these early missionaries of whose good work there is any recollection in the minds of the oldest inhabitants, was an Irish priest, the Rev. Father Colton. His journey through the wilderness from Oshkosh was one of difficulty and hardship, but his arrival gave joy and peace and comfort to the Catholic inhabitants of this then small colony. Those who still recall the time at all, say it was in the year 1851 that Father Colten first came among them, and that he held Divine services in a hall called "Badger Hall." The following year he built a small frame church and located it near the river on a site near the present Market Square in the business portion of the city.

The little mission of fifteen families was next attended by Father Godfrey, from St. Marie. He held services in the little church until 1857, when Father Gray, an Irish-American priest, was appointed as Berlin's first resident pastor. He moved the little church built by Father Colten to the site where the present church of St. Joseph now stands, and shortly afterwards erected the present brick edifice dedicated to St. Joseph. The old church was joined to the rear of the newly erected structure, and for a time served as the priest's residence, but to-day is the sanctuary and sacristy.

Father Gray labored here for twelve years, and in 1869 was succeeded by Father Dael, a Belgian. During his pastorate of four years the interior of the church was completed. Father Dael was then known all over the central portion of the State, as was also his predecessor. His successor was Father Rademacher, who remained for about one year. During these years, since its establishment, the parish had grown gradually, especially on account of the great influx of Poles into this region, and as the church was almost too small, and the

St. Joseph's Church, Berlin, Wis.

Poles desired a pastor of their own nationality, they separated from St. Joseph's and established the congregation of St. Stanislaus.

Father de Precher was next pastor for six months, his successor being Father Scott, who remained four years. In July, 1878, Father Mazeaud became pastor, remaining for almost a year, when young Father Bergen was appointed to succeed him, and after laboring only six months gave up his pure soul into the hands of his Creator. His successors were the Rev. Father Allen, for six months, Father Graves for four years, and Father Joseph Smythe for about seven months. During the latter's pastorate a change was effected between the diocese of Milwaukee and Green Bay, so that the entire city of Berlin was made a part of the latter diocese. As a consequence Father Smythe was transferred to Delavan, and the Rev. Timothy Ryan was appointed to succeed him at Berlin in 1886. Under his management, the present parochial residence was erected. In 1893 he was transferred to Maple Grove, his successor being the Rev. Father O'Connor, who had charge of the parish for about one-half year. The Rev. Thomas Taugher succeeded him as pastor in December, 1894, laboring hard for the good of the parish, but not being blessed with a rugged constitution, after five months he was obliged to discontinue his parish work, his place being filled by the Rev. A. P. Desmond, who later was appointed the pastor, upon the resignation of Father Taugher in October, 1895. Father Desmond was transferred to Portage as assistant to Father Brady in July, 1896, and the Rev. M. H. Clifford of St. Mary's Church, Appleton, was appointed as his successor. Father Clifford assumed charge of St. Joseph's Church July 18, 1896. He was born in Stevens Point, Portage County, Wisconsin, June 29, 1871. He attended St. Stephen's parochial school in his native city until twelve years of age, when, together with an elder brother, John, he left for college, with the intention of studying for the priesthood. One year was spent at Pio Nono College, St. Francis, Wisconsin, where they pursued a commercial course, but in the fall of 1884 they entered the seminary at St. Francis to begin their classical course. In 1888 the younger brother, George, accompanied them to the seminary for the same purpose. In 1891 John died. The two remaining brothers continued their studies, the subject of this sketch completing his theological course at St. Francis in June, 1893. Being scarcely twenty-two years of age, and, therefore, too young for ordination, a papal dispensation was obtained by the Right Rev. Bishop of Green Bay, and, on November 5, he was ordained priest by Bishop Messmer, in St. Mary's Church, at South Kaukauna. His younger brother, the Rev. George Clifford, completed his theological studies at the University of Innsbruck, Austria, where he was ordained July 26, 1896. Since his appointment to Berlin, Father Clifford has labored hard for the welfare of St. Joseph's congregation, and has succeeded in canceling a debt on the church property, besides making several substantial improvements. The church has been beautifully frescoed, the altars decorated, stained glass windows put in, a fine-toned 1,500 pound bell adorns the new tower, hot air furnaces take the place of the stoves, and, besides other improvements, both church and house are lighted by electricity. The congregation at the present time numbers about one hundred and ten families, and is in a flourishing condition. After his ordination Father Clifford spent five months as assistant to the Very Rev. James O'Malley, of St. Peter's Church, Oshkosh, and almost two years as assistant to the Rev. W. J. Fitzmaurice, of St. Mary's Church at Appleton.

Rev. M. H. Clifford.

St. Michael's Church, Berlin, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Michael's was organized about September, 1895, and was first attended from St. Stanislaus of East Berlin. At this time the parish had been founded for ten years, but the first resident pastor, the Rev. J. Mozejewski, was not appointed until February, 1894. He was succeeded by the Rev. Father J. Gratza, September 30, of the same year. There are about one hundred and sixty families in the congregation. The parochial school connected with the church is conducted by Joseph Stanowski and Anna Hinz.

There are two Catholic societies in the parish, the Holy Rosary Society, of which J. Hallmann is the president, and Anna Kerska, secretary; and St. Michael's Society, which was founded in 1889, its present officers being John Kerski, president, and John Marchewska, secretary.

The present pastor, the Rev. J. Gratza, was born in Silesia, Austria, in 1859, and joined the diocese of Green Bay, July 30, 1891. His first appointment in the diocese was to the pastorate of Pine Grove, in Brown County.

St. Michael's Church, Berlin, Wis.

Rev. J. Gratza.

St. Stanislaus' Church, Berlin, Wis.

THE Polish Catholic church of St. Stanislaus at Berlin, Green Lake County, Wisconsin, was first established in the year 1873. The pastors attending it successively since that time were the Revs. Beuzyski, Rademacher, H. Gulski, Gieyk, S. Wieczorek and J. Czarnowski, who is the present incumbent. The congregation is composed of one hundred and fifty families. The parochial school connected with

St. Stanislaus' Church, Berlin, Wis.

St. Stanislaus is conducted by Sisters of Notre Dame, and has a regular attendance of two hundred scholars. There is connected with this congregation a St. Stanislaus' Society, fifty-four members: J. Maleyn, president; Thomas Giertowski, secretary; Joseph Poczejk, treasurer, and Julius Crinan and Paul Klas, consultors.

St. Mary's Help of Christians' Church, Briggsville, Wis.

THE Parish of St. Mary's Help of Christians at Briggsville, Marquette County, Wisconsin, was established in 1851. The first priest to visit this mission was Father Godhart, a Frenchman. He came to Briggsville twice during the fall of that year; then Father Roach, resident pastor at Portage, Wisconsin, attended to the spiritual wants of these people, visiting them at stated intervals until the year 1857, when the Rev. Father Doyle, who succeeded Father Roach, erected the first church at Briggsville, which he continued to attend for a period of five years. Then Father Monahan assumed the pastorate, he being succeeded by Father Thomas Keenan and Father De Kelver, the latter attending the mission for a year or so from Kilbourn City. The next pastor was Father Ryan, who built the parochial residence. In 1882 Father Walsh became pastor of the parish, remaining as such for a period of one year, when he died. Then Father Schwartzmeyer took charge of the parish, and during his residence there enlarged both the church and the parsonage. The next rector of St. Mary's was the Rev. Father Abb, who remained at Briggsville for a period of ten years. He was followed by Father Rabsteineck and the Rev. George Pesch, the latter being succeeded in the fall of 1896 by the present incumbent, the

St. Mary's Help of Christians Church, Briggsville, Wis.

Rev. James McGowan. The congregation at the present time consists of about three hundred members. Soon after taking possession of the pastorate, Father McGowan had the congregation incorporated under the State laws of Wisconsin, besides making a number of valuable as well as necessary improvements to the church property. Of Catholic societies in the parish, there are quite a number, among them being St. Joseph's Men and Young Men's Society, of which Henry Murphy is president; Jeremiah Tangeney, secretary, and J. Foley, treasurer, and St. Mary's Ladies and Young Ladies' Society, of which Mrs. John Murphy is president; Mrs. P. Nugent, secretary, and Mrs. Anna Murphy, treasurer. The League of the Sacred Heart, which was organized under the present rector's administration, is one of the most active and popular societies in the parish, nearly every member in the congregation belonging to it. There are no missions attached to this congregation.

Rev. James McGowan.

Holy Guardian Angels' Church, Buchanan, Wis.

THE congregation of the Holy Guardian Angel was organized July 24, 1850, on which occasion Mathias Orth donated five acres of land for church purposes. Eleven years prior to that time, however, the holy sacrifice of the Mass was celebrated at Buchanan by the Rev. Theodore Van den Broek, in the house of Mr. Joseph La Mure. From that time on the Catholics of the little settlement remained in active coöperation, so that at the time of its organization the congregation numbered thirty-five families. Father Fusseder, who succeeded Father Kundig, came to Buchanan September 8, 1854, where he said Mass in the house of Caspar Kruse. At that time the Rev. Father Fusseder was pastor of a congregation at Oshkosh. In 1855 a frame church was erected at Buchanan, and on and after August 25, 1855, the services were held in this church, Father Fusseder attending the mission once a month. In 1856 Buchanan was visited by the resident priests at Little Chute, Fathers Sanners, Mauelier and Nicolaus Peiffer. The church was finally dedicated in honor of the "Guardian Angels" by Bishop John Martin Henni, October 26, 1857, who was assisted by Father Smedding of Green Bay and Father Peiffer of Little Chute. On the same occasion the Sacrament of Confirmation was also conferred. From this time on the mission was alternately attended by priests from Little Chute, Menasha and Appleton. In the month of May, 1864, a parsonage was built, and in 1865 it was used as a residence by the mission priest, although the masonry and plastering were still unfinished. On June 11, 1869, Bishop Joseph Melcher appointed the Rev. Clemens Duerr resident pastor of the congregation. He stayed until February 1, 1871, being then succeeded by the Rev. Joseph Ernest Hackl, who erected the present brick church at an expense of $12,000. This church was consecrated by Bishop F. X. Krautbauer October 2, 1875. Shortly after the completion of this church Father Hackl paid a visit to his parents in Europe, the Rev. Father Scholz assuming charge, of which he was finally appointed rector by Bishop Krautbauer, April 29, 1876. On January 6, 1877, Father Scholz was succeeded by the Rev. Mathias Welbes, who stayed till January 16, 1882. His successor was the Rev. Henry Reuter, who remained to the end of November, 1882. From that time till December 15, 1883, the congregation was attended by the Capuchin Fathers of Appleton. During their administration a parochial school house was erected at a cost of $1,626. This school is in charge of Franciscan Sisters of Christian Charity, from the Convent at Silver Lake, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, instruction being given in both English and German. The average daily attendance now numbers eighty.

Holy Guardian Angels' Church, Buchanan, Wis.

Rev. Geo. Brunner.

On December 15, 1883, the Rev. Tobias Spunar became the resident pastor, but left in August, 1884, for a visit to Europe, where he died. His successor, the Rev. Michael Schoell, came to Buchanan September 17, 1884, and remained until August 13, 1896. During his administration many noticeable improvements were made to the church property, among them being the erection of the parsonage in 1886 at a cost of $1,438.86. Then the present incumbent, the Rev. George Brunner, assumed the duties of the pastorate August 13, 1896.

The congregation consists of one hundred and nine families, nearly all German. The parochial school is attended by eighty-five children, who are instructed by Franciscan Sisters of Charity from Alverno, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin. The Catholic societies represented in this congregation are: Holy Childhood of Jesus Society, Altar Society, St. Rosa's Society and St. Joseph's Society.

The Rev. George Brunner was born March 4, 1847, at Kaltenbrunn, Diocese Budweis, Bohemia. He acquired his classical studies at a college in Bohemia and in October, 1867, came to America. He prepared himself for the priesthood at the Salesianum, near Milwaukee, and was ordained priest December 17, 1870, by Bishop Joseph Melcher of Green Bay. Since his ordination he has been doing service continually in the diocese of Green Bay.

St. Joseph's Church, Carlton, Wis.

THE first resident pastor of St. Joseph's congregation at Carlton, Kewaunee County, was the Rev. Adalbert Cipin, who remained from October 19, 1873, till January 15, 1878. His successor was the Rev. Joseph Maly, who performed pastoral duties from 1880 till 1882. The Rev. Joseph Kirpal came next, remaining from 1884 to 1888, and his successors, the Rev. Alois Vychodil, from 1888 to 1891, and the Rev. Emanuel Kabat from 1891 to 1894. The present incumbent, the Rev. Xaver Till took charge of this parish on September 25, 1894. The congregation at present consists of eighty-one families, of which sixty-seven are Bohemian, twelve German, one Polish and one Irish. The following are among the principal societies represented in the congregation: St. Joseph's Society for married men, organized August 30, 1894, twenty-six members; Holy Rosary Society, organized December 8, 1894, forty members; St. Wenceslaus Society, organized in 1877, sixteen members, and St. Aloysius Boys and Girls' Society, organized in 1896, at which time there were forty-three members.

In connection with this congregation is the St. John of Nepomuc Mission at West Kewaunee. This mission has been in existence since 1864 and was attended by different priests from the neighborhood until 1875. Since that year, however, the mission has been attended from Carlton. This congregation consists of fifty-three families, of which forty-seven are Bohemians, four German and two Polish. The present pastor of Carlton visits this mission every Sunday besides each Thursday in Advent and Lent. There are two societies in the mission congregation. St. John the Baptist's Society, having sixteen members, and the Holy Rosary Society with thirty-two members.

St. Joseph's Church, Carlton, and St. John Nepomuc's Mission, West Kewaunee, Wis.

Rev. Xaver Till.

The present pastor of St. Joseph's congregation, the Rev. Xaver Till, was born at Chrudim, East Bohemia, He completed his studies in the same city and was ordained priest at Koeniggraetz in 1885. He came to America, October 21, 1894.

St. Edward's Church, Centre, Wis.

THE Catholic congregation of St. Edward's (German and English) at Centre, Mackville P. O., Outagamie County, Wisconsin, is under the spiritual direction of the Rev. A. Gessl. There is also a parochial school in connection with this parish which has a regular attendance of seventy-two scholars, and is in charge of Franciscan Sisters of Charity.

St. Edward's Church, Centre, Wis.

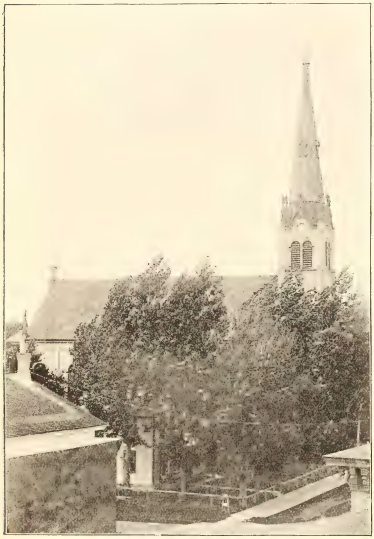
St. Augustine's Church, Chilton, Wis.

THE History of the parish of St. Augustine at Chilton, Calumet County, Wisconsin, began about the year 1850. One of the first pastors to attend this place as a mission was the Rev. Father Real, at that time resident pastor at St. John's, Calumet County, Wisconsin. During the year 1854, the Rev. Father De Becke succeeded to the charge of the mission. In the year 1855 a church was built, the resident pastor being assisted at that time by the



St. Augustine's Church, Chilton, Wis.

Rev. Father McMahon, who remained as rector for ten years following. He was succeeded by the Rev. Fathers Morris, Dolan, Schraudenbach (1868), and Anderscheck, the latter remaining for seven years. In 1879, a large new church was built to take the place of the old one, which had become too small to satisfactorily accommodate the congregation. This building, which cost $16,000, was erected under the supervision of the resident pastor, who at that time was the Rev. Father Verberk. When Father Verberk was transferred to another pastorate, he was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers Lorigan, Honeyman, McGowan, Cummane and O'Connell. During the administration of Father Lorigan a large brick school house was built, the same costing $1,500.

Rev. C. J. O'Connell.

This school has a present average attendance of one hundred and seventy-five scholars, who are in charge of Franciscan Sisters, from the convent at Silver Lake. The congregation of St. Augustine now numbers about one hundred and forty families.

St. Mary's Church, Chilton, Wis.

ABOUT the middle of January, 1877, twenty-five German families under the leadership of Theodor Kersten concluded to withdraw their membership from the church of St. Augustine, at Chilton, Wis. This small but decidedly energetic community at once set to work, securing the site for a church, residence and school. The church, a brick structure 80 x 40 feet, was completed, dedicated and placed under the protection of the Immaculate Conception of B. V. M., by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Krautbauer, February 20, 1878. The first pastor appointed to the congregation of St. Mary's was the Rev. Nicholas Gällweiller, who officiated in that capacity from 1878 to 1881—the time of his death. He was succeeded by Father Godfrey Noever, in 1885, who was in turn followed by the Rev. James Gauche, March 11, 1888. The present rector and dean, the Rev. N. Hens, commenced his labors on January 20, 1893. The congregation of St.

Mary's, as it now stands, consists of one hundred and ninety-three families. The parochial school building, which was commenced in the spring of 1878, was completed and ready for occupancy by September 19 of the same year. It was opened under the direction of the Sisters of Notre Dame, the number of children attending being about ninety. Since that time the school has prospered remarkably, and as a result the daily attendance is now fully two hundred and fifty.

St. Mary's Church, Chilton, Wis.

Interior of St. Mary's Church.

Of the various Catholic societies there are five established in the congregation of St. Mary's. These are the St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, with a membership of sixty; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, sixty; Rosary Society, one hundred and twenty; Sacred Heart League, four hundred, and Poor Souls Confraternity, three hundred.

The Rev. Nicholas Hens was born in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, December 28, 1843. He pursued his studies in Belgium and was ordained subdeacon in Malines, December 19, 1868, by the Rt. Rev. Auxiliary Bishop Charles Andrew Anthonis. He was ordained deacon March 29, 1869, in Liege, Belgium, by the Most Rev. Archbishop of Sidon and Tyr, Charles James Benedict Compte de Mercy Argenteaux, and was ordained priest in Malines, by the Rt. Rev. Charles Andrew Anthonis, May 22, 1869.

Rev. N. Hens.

Father Hens came to New York August 25 of the same year, and was appointed to the pastorate at Paterson, N. J., remaining there until August 4, 1884. He then went to Dover, N. J., staying one year. While at Paterson, he built a Brothers' and Sisters' house and the church of Our Lady of Lourdes. At last, in the month of August, 1885, after receiving repeated invitations from Bishop Krautbauer, owing to his distinguished linguistic ability, he came to Wisconsin, being appointed pastor of the congregation at Lincoln, Kewaunee County, staying there for fifteen months, during which time he completed St. Peter's Church. From Lincoln he went to Kaukauna, December 1, 1886, and there, among the many good things he did for the cause at that place, built a church, school, Sisters' house and parsonage, and bought a cemetery, all of these properties being entirely free of debt. He removed to Chilton on January 20, 1893, where he at once commenced the enlargement and remodeling of St. Mary's Church. The cost of these improvements, some $7,000, as well as $2,000 in other obligations, has all been paid, so that the church to-day, enlarged, beautified and free from debt, stands a veritable monument to the energy, business tact and tireless devotion of this conscientious priest.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Clark's Mills, Wis.

PRIOR to the year 1865 the Catholics of the township of Cato received their spiritual attendance from the priests residing at Maple Grove. At that time they had for a temporary church a building at Noonan's Corner, which, however, was used but a little while. Father McGinnity of Maple

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Clark's Mills, Wis.

Grove, who at that time had charge of these people, purchased a house at Clark's Mills, which was subsequently used for many years as a Catholic church by the congregation at that place and attended by him as a mission. In 1866 Father Fessler was appointed as the first resident pastor at Clark's Mills, remaining as such until 1871. Then the Rev. Father Metzger, of St. Nazianz, attended the congregation as a mission. From 1872 until 1874 Father Andrew Seubert, residing at Maple Grove, also attended these people. During his administration, in 1873, the congregation began the erection of a new church, the corner-stone of which was laid by Father Seubert during that year. It is a solid brick structure, 75x43 feet. This building, owing to the scarcity of funds, was not completed until 1875, the total cost, when done, being $4,000. From 1874 to 1875 Father Cornelis, also of Maple Grove, attended this congregation. Then, from 1875 to 1878, Father John Wernert became resident pastor at Clark's Mills. He completed the interior of the building and also collected sufficient funds for the erection of the parsonage, which was built at a further cost of $900. Father Wernert resigned in 1878, his successor, the Rev. Gerhard Hormisch, remaining until July of the same year. Then the Rev. Clement Lau was resident pastor until 1879, when he was succeeded by Father Joseph Rhode, who remained until 1885. During his pastorate the mission of Pine Grove (now Whitelaw) was also attended by him. Among other improvements made by this priest were the frescoing of the interior of the church and the addition of a steeple to the building. This was done in the year 1883. In addition to this two new bells were purchased and a new high altar erected in the building. Father

Rev. E. Kabat.

Rhode also had the old church built over for a school and Sisters' residence, this work being only partially completed when he left in the year 1885. The next pastor was the Rev. John Holzknecht, who completed the school and appointed the Sisters of St. Francis from Silver Lake as teachers. In the meantime the cemetery was also improved to a considerable extent, and on May 3, 1887, a statue of the Crucifixion was erected in the center of the grounds and blessed. Father Holzknecht resigned from his pastorate on May 30, 1887, and was succeeded on the first of the following month by the Rev. J. A. Deuermeyer, who remained until May 1, 1890. The next pastor was the Rev. George Brunner, who came to Clark's Mills in September, 1890. His successor was the present incumbent, the Rev. E. Kabat, who assumed his duties as such on November 7, 1895. During his administration several improvements have been made to the church, among others being new pews for the interior of the church and two side altars. The congregation at the present time consists of ninety-four families and the school has an attendance of sixty scholars. In connection with this congregation, there is a branch, No. 146, of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin and a Society of the Holy Rosary; both were established under the administration of Father Brunner, who also organized a Sodality for Young Ladies.

The Rev. E. Kabat, present pastor of the Immaculate Conception, was born in Wisconsin on May 4, 1864, at Cooperstown, Manitowoc County. After acquiring an ordinary education at the schools in that vicinity, he took a classical course at Mt. Calvary, Wis., where he remained for five years and then entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where, having completed his studies in philosophy and theology, he was ordained to the priesthood on July 3, 1892, by the Right Rev. Sebastian Messmer, D. D., Bishop of Green Bay.

St. Rose of Lima Church, Clintonville, Wis.

THE church of St. Rose of Lima, situated on a beautiful elevation in the city of Clintonville, Waupaca County, is one of the handsomest edifices to be seen along the line of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. In the year 1871, the Catholics of this city and country surrounding built a little frame church suited to their needs, the original organizers of the undertaking, who also did valiant service in carrying it to its completion, being Messrs. Jacob Bentz, George Phippi, William Tilkie, Joseph Hanish, Joseph Long, Joseph Unger, John Boehm, Louis Kleinkopf, Anton Fisher, Engelbert Brix, Anton Stransky, and Neil Gillis. The congregation, being small, was attended in the beginning monthly by a visiting pastor from the city of New London, the first to visit them as a mission being the Rev. Father Scholz. The first resident pastor of St. Rose's parish was the Rev. P. Lochman, at present located in Oconto. He established the parochial school at Clintonville, placing it in charge of Franciscan Sisters from the convent at Silver Lake. This zealous pastor, in addition to the home parish, also had charge of stations at Bear Creek, Antigo, Rhinelander, Mario and Tigerton. He was succeeded by the Rev. Father Seubert, at the present time resident pastor at New Cologne, Minnesota. He was instrumental in building the churches at Bear Creek and Antigo. Upon the appointment of Father Lochman to the congregation at Freedom, the charge of this parish was given to the Rev. Father Belle, who remained as its pastor from 1887 to 1892. He was succeeded by the Rev. P. Schmitz, pro tem., until the Rev. Father Hugenroth was appointed as permanent pastor. It was during his residence at Clintonville that the present church was erected in 1893. The present congregation of St. Rose's consists of sixty-five families, or two hundred and sixty members, and the parochial school, which is in charge of two Franciscan Sisters of the Order of Christian Charity, has a regular attendance of forty-two. Of Catholic organizations connected with this parish, there are: The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: Marcus Mandel, president; John Romer, vice-president; Adolph Schultz, recording secretary; John Kalmes, financial secretary; Joseph Bentz, treasurer; R. Kemmer, sentinel; Joseph Bentz, Joseph Feil and John Zehren, trustees. Ladies' Altar Society, organized December 16, 1887: Mrs. Prentzlow, president; Mrs. Jacob Bentz, vice-president; Mrs. A. Schultz, treasurer; the Rev. P. Schmitz, secretary pro tem. Young Ladies' Society, organized by Father Schmitz in 1897: Miss Annie Ruedinger, president; Miss Allie Plunkett, vice-president; Miss Tina Schultz, secretary; Miss Lina Bentz, treasurer.

St. Rose of Lima Church, Clintonville, Wis.
(Old and New.)

The Rev. Peter Schmitz, present pastor of the Catholic congregation at Clintonville, Waupaca County, Wisconsin, is a native of Prussia, having been born May 25, 1866, in Siegburg, archdiocese of Cologne. He received his classical education at the Gymnasium of that city, and later on continued his studies at Steyl, Holland, commonly called the Mission House, a society founded by the Rev. Arnold Gansen, a priest of the archdiocese of Cologne. At the age of twenty, he came to the United States, taking his philosophical and theological course at Cleveland, Ohio, and St. Francis, near Milwaukee. In 1891 he received minor orders at Green Bay, was ordained sub-deacon in Oconto, Wisconsin, October 16, 1892, deacon the 18th, at Shawano, Wisconsin, and was ordained priest at Chilton on the 30th of the same month. Following his ordination, he was appointed to the pastorate at Clintonville, where, however, he stayed but a month. He was then sent to Neshkoro, in Marquette County, remaining there for two months. On the 11th of March, 1893, he was appointed pastor of St. Ann's at Francis Creek, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, with the express command that he build a new church at Mishicott, which place he attended as a mission from Francis Creek. This he did during the following year, erecting and building at a total cost of $8,000. In the meantime, he rebuilt the church at Francis Creek, adding a tower to the same which cost nearly $2,000. He also renovated the school building and furnished the interior with new and improved desks. On the 28th of July, 1896, he was again transferred to Clintonville, which parish he has since that time satisfactorily administered, by greatly reducing the debt resting on the congregation.

Rev. Peter Schmitz.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Coleman, Wis.

THE French and English congregation of St. John the Baptist, at Coleman, Marinette County, was organized in 1881. That part of Marinette County which is now known as the township of Coleman, was first settled by Canadian French and a few Irish Catholics in 1876. At the time there was no church in that vicinity, and as they were also without the services of a priest, those of the Catholics desiring to attend divine service would go to Menominee, Marinette or Peshtigo. Coleman was first attended as a mission in 1881, by the Rev. Father Seubert, from Peshtigo. On these visits, he said Mass in the school house, which was located some two miles east of the railroad station of Coleman, ten or twelve families attending. In 1882 the Rev. E. F. Van Hootegem, resident priest at Duck Creek, assumed charge of the mission. A little later a sufficient number of Catholics had located in and about that neighborhood to erect a church, but the undertaking was delayed for a period, owing to the feeling aroused among the people in selection of a site, some of them being desirous of having it located near the school house, where a burial ground had been donated by Mr. Joseph Breault, while others insisted on having it on a point near to the present railway station. In their dilemma the Right Rev. Bishop was applied to, who relegated the matter of deciding this weighty question to the Very Rev. Kersten. Having thoroughly investigated the matter to his satisfaction, this reverend gentleman decided that the proper place for the erection of a church would be at a point just half way between the two in question, and about one mile east of the railway station. This decision was considered by many as somewhat impolitic, as, while it was intended to please both parties, it satisfied neither. A truce was effected, however, and a little church built on a spot selected under the supervision of the acting pastor, Father Van Hootegem, in 1884. The year following the completion of this church, the Rev. Charles Hoogstoel, then living at Stiles, took charge of the congregation at Coleman. From this time on, the Catholic settlement increased so rapidly in numbers that the church soon became too small for the accommodation of those attending, and it was, therefore, unanimously decided to erect a larger building. Here again the question of a site arose, and was the cause of much vehement discussion. Once more the Bishop was appealed to, his decision, after hearing both sides of the question, being that the new church should be erected in the neighborhood of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul railway station. The only point of dispute thus having been brought to an amicable termination, work was immediately begun on the new building. But here a sad misfortune followed, for, owing to the fact that the plans had not been carried out as devised by the architect, when the roof was about completed the entire building collapsed, killing one man and wounding several others, so that the work had to be done all over again, necessitating a considerable additional outlay in material as well as labor. Finally the church was completed, the entire expense incurred leaving the congregation some $1,500 in debt, in excess of what had already been paid. In 1889 the Rev. J. A. Selbach was given charge of Wausaukee and Coleman, taking up his residence at the former place, from whence he visited Coleman for the first time in September of that year. During the month of August, 1890, Father Selbach removed to Coleman, and on December 1st, following, the congregation was incorporated under the State laws of Wisconsin. During Father Selbach's administration, a number of valuable improvements were made to the parish property, among them being the finishing of the church interior and furnishing of that structure with pews. He remained in charge of this parish until May, 1891, at which time he was transferred to another field, the Rev. P. Pélé assuming charge on June 26th following. In the summer of 1892, Father Pélé began the erection of a pastoral residence, which is a very handsome and substantial building. This pastor was succeeded in December, 1895, by the Rev. A. Roger, who died while in charge, in October, 1896. He passed his last days in the hospital at Green Bay, and was buried at Coleman. For a short period following the death of Father Roger, this parish was without a pastor, but on Christmas, 1896, the church passed under the administration of Rev. Isidore Guilmin, who, previous to that time, was chaplain of the convent of the Good Shepherd at Green Bay. When Father Guilmin assumed the duties as administrator of Coleman and Lena, he found the congregation with a debt of $2,000 hanging over them. Towards the liquidation of this amount he accomplished much during his pastorate there, and would undoubtedly soon have disposed of the whole amount, had he not been transferred to another parish.

Father Guilmin was succeeded by the Rev. C. Vanier, the present incumbent.

The mission church of St. Charles of Borromeo, at Lena, Wisconsin, is attended by the resident priest from Coleman. This mission was established by the Rev. Father Vermare, of Oconto, in 1882, and at the present time has a membership of one hundred and seventy-six souls, most of whom are French Canadians. Services are held there twice a month, on Sundays. There is also a station at Beaver, Marinette County, which is attended from Coleman.

The Rev. Isidore Guilmin, present rector of the congregation at Coleman, Wisconsin, was born in Belgium on September 17, 1855. He acquired an education in his native country, and was ordained as a Redemptorist Father on September 1, 1882. He then traveled as a missionary throughout Belgium and Canada, and then, in 1891, after obtaining dispensation from his Ordinary, went to Texas and took charge of a parish until July, 1896. He then came to Green Bay, and assumed the duties as chaplain of the Good Shepherd Convent.

St. James' Church, Cooperstown, Wis.

A LITTLE over half a century ago the first white settlers located in Cooperstown, where four years later, or, to be more explicit, in 1850, a Catholic church was erected. This church was attended at intervals by the Rev. Father Brunner, S. J., who built a parish house in 1854. Father Brunner was succeeded by the Rev. Joseph Maly, who labored zealously in the work from 1858 to 1865, when he relinquished the charge to the Rev. Augustin Lang, who made regular visits to the church until October, 1867. He was succeeded by the Rev. William Mahoney, who rendered occasional attendance to the mission until 1868, after which the Rev. Eusebius Henzler of Francis Creek assumed and maintained the charge until the time of his death, which occurred on February 20, 1870. During the same year the Rev. James Gauche became resident pastor, remaining until August, 1873, when he resigned. He is now living at De Pere.

During Father Gauche's administration a more commodious church was erected, being finished and dedicated in 1871. The members forming the committee which brought about this much-desired and satisfactory event, were Messrs. Peter Yore, Henry Nachtwey, Dennis Scanlan, Michael Lawler, John Haeger and Charles Steinbrecher, and it is certainly a lasting credit to their intelligence and zeal.

In 1876 the Rev. Augustin Rossochowitz, an exile through Bismarck's "Kultur Kampf," became resident pastor, and it is to his perseverance and zealous endeavors that many handsome and lasting improvements, made about this time, were due. The substantial new priest's house, costing $800, a bell that cost $441, statues of the blessed Virgin Mary, stations of the Way of the Cross, a fine organ and new vestments are but some evidences of the measure of his pastoral success, for to these must be added the remodeling and enlargement of the old church in 1882, and furnishing of the same at a cost of $1,224. A portion of this building was set aside for school purposes, Franciscan Sisters from the convent at Alverno being in charge. Father Rossochowitz returned to his native country in March, 1884.

St. James' Church, Cooperstown, Wis.

The next pastor of St. James' was the Rev. F. Stern of Francis Creek. He was succeeded, July, 1884, by the Rev. F. A. Deuermeyer, who remained until June, 1887, when the Rev. John H. Holzknecht accepted the charge, continuing in the same until August, 1892. This Rev Father also worked zealously for the cause, establishing numerous confraternities in the parish. Besides the Societies of the Holy Rosary and the Apostleship of Prayer, at that time already in existence, he organized the Sacred Heart Altar Society, the Third Order of St. Francis, and the Young Ladies' Sodality. He also purchased several statues, vestments, oil paintings and a new silver chalice and ciborium. The congregation was duly incorporated on November 30, 1883.

One event of more than usual interest took place at St. James June 30, 1888, the occasion being the celebration of his first Mass by the Rev. F. X. Steinbrecher, a native of the place, and son of Charles and Matilda Steinbrecher, who are among its oldest and most respected residents.

On January 30, 1892, John Wegner and John Meehan were elected as trustees, the former serving as secretary, and the latter as treasurer of the board till 1897. The Rev. F. X. Steinbrecher had charge of the congregation in August and September of the year 1892, during which time the spire of the church was struck and badly shattered by lightning. For a little over a month following, the Rev. F. W. Geier was in charge, and on November 13, 1892, the Rev. John D. Schwartzmeyer became pastor, continuing as such until September 11, 1895. During his administration, and with a back debt of $1,000 to be paid, this energetic and faithful priest wrought many needed improvements in the parish. The parsonage was thoroughly renovated throughout, and the school house and Sisters' house refitted and furnished. On July 14, 1893, a cyclone unroofed the church, totally destroying the interior. This proved a severe blow, taking into consideration debts incurred and large sums of money but recently expended. But the people proved equal to the occasion, and the blow had hardly fallen before hammer and trowel were at work, and what might be called a new church under way. In this rebuilding the frescoing and ornamental woodwork was of a more elaborate character, a new and handsome high altar adorned the chancel, decorated windows replaced the plainer ones of former days; while material comforts were augmented in the placing of a hot air heating system throughout the building. With the completion of this work and liquidation of all outstanding debts, the Rev. Father took leave of his congregation on September 11, 1895, to become pastor of Sturgeon Bay. The present rector of the parish is the Rev. G. J. Pellegrin.

Rev. G. J. Pellegrin.

The congregation of St. James consists, at the present time, of one hundred and twenty-five families, fifty-six of which are Irish, fifty-six German, and the rest Polander and Bohemian. About seventy children are in attendance at the school.

Of Catholic societies there are quite a number, among them being the following: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch 101, forty-five members: President, John E. Cashman; Secretary, W. H. O'Brien; Treasurer, Peter E. Geimer. Sacred Heart and Apostleship of Prayer, eighty members: President, Mrs. John Dewane; Vice-President, Mrs. George Bradley; Treasurer, Mrs. Thomas Bradley; Secretary, Mrs. Charles Steinbrecher. Young Ladies' Sodality, twenty-five members: President, Josephine Steinbrecher. Third Order of St. Francis, twelve members. Giving additional beauty to the interior of St. James, is a handsome side altar, presented to the church December 18, 1895, by the late Michael Dorn, a member of the congregation.

The present rector of St. James, the Rev. Gregory Joseph Pellegrin, was born at Noduwez, Province of Brabant, Belgium, May 2, 1846. His parents were Gilles Joseph and Natalia Amalia (Matton) Pellegrin. The Rev. Father removed, with his parents, to America in May, 1856, and settled at Green Bay in July of the same year. He then entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, in September, 1867, and was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Krautbauer at Green Bay, June 6, 1876. Of the good work done by him for the church since taking holy orders, there are innumerable instances, every one of which tells a tale of self-sacrifice and devotion to the cause.

After being ordained Father Pellegrin spent a period of eight years among the missions at Luxemburg, Humboldt and Lincoln, where he built a church of solid brick, 105x45 feet, a brick house 38x32 feet, and planted an extensive orchard. He also built a priest house at Delwich. In 1884 he was appointed pastor of Sturgeon Bay and adjacent or rather dependent missions, which extended as far as Death's Door. On September 11, 1887, he left Sturgeon Bay for Glenmore and Stark, in Brown County, but in 1893 relinquished that charge, returning at their urgent request to his former parishioners at Lincoln. On August 24, 1895, the Rt. Rev. Sebastian Gebhard Messmer, D. D., bishop of the diocese of Green Bay, appointed Father Pellegrin rector of the Catholic congregation of St. James at Cooperstown, he assuming his duties on September 11 of the same year. The Rev. Father speaks fluently French, English, German, Walloon, and Flemish.

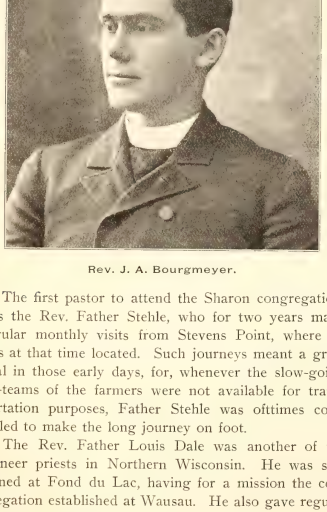
Church of the Immaculate Conception, Custer, Wis.

PRIOR to the year 1873, the history of the Custer congregation is the same as that of St. Matthew's, of Sharon, because both the Irish and German Catholics in that vicinity formed one parish at the latter place. In 1873, however, the Irish people separated from St. Matthew's, and formed a new mission at Custer, to be attended from St. Stephen's Church, Stevens Point, twice a month. From 1873 to 1874, Father Tanguay visited Custer, officiating in a school house, there being no church at that time. From 1874 to 1886, Father July attended Custer, building during the former year the present church, the land for which was donated to the congregation by Mr. Timothy Leary, one of Custer's oldest residents. In the fall of 1875, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Krautbauer, Bishop of Green Bay, blessed this church. The next priest to assume the pastorate was the Rev. Father Schwartzmeyer, who was succeeded by the Revs. John Hummel and J. A. Bourgmeyer, the latter being still in charge.

Church of the Immaculate Conception and Mission, Custer, Wis.

The church of the Immaculate Conception is a building 40x60 feet, with a sanctuary in addition. The interior walls are handsomely frescoed, and the structure contains all of the modern improvements, such as furnace, pipe organ, and some handsome altars. There is connected with this parish a branch of the Catholic Order of Foresters, which was organized in May, 1896.

The congregation of St. Martin's, at Sharon, Wisconsin, which is attended from Custer, was first established in 1857. The site of this church was selected by the late Bishop Henni, of Milwaukee, the land occupied being the gift of Mr. P. Eiden, Sr. A church was built during the same year, which frame structure, 20x30 feet, was used till 1865, when it was bought by the directors of school district No. 5, of Sharon Township, who used it for school purposes until 1886. Prior to the erection of the little church, Mass was read for some considerable period at the residence of Mr. Eiden. The present church was built by the Germans and Irish, who composed nearly the entire congregation at that time; in 1875 the latter separated from St. Martin's, and soon after built a church of their own at Custer.



Rev. J. A. Bourgmeyer.

The first pastor to attend the Sharon congregation, was the Rev. Father Stehle, who for two years made regular monthly visits from Stevens Point, where he was at that time located. Such journeys meant a great deal in those early days, for, whenever the slow-going ox-teams of the farmers were not available for transportation purposes, Father Stehle was ofttimes compelled to make the long journey on foot.

The Rev. Father Louis Dale was another of the pioneer priests in Northern Wisconsin. He was stationed at Fond du Lac, having for a mission the congregation established at Wausau. He also gave regular monthly attendance to St. Martin's for about a year, as did the Rev. Father Stehle, who was located for a similar period at Stevens Point. Then, for a space of three years, the Rev. John Polak was also stationed at Stevens Point, conducting the services at Sharon twice every month. For a like period Father Lukes also served the congregation. Following Father Lukes, the Rev. Father Mague was stationed at Stevens Point, and continued the same monthly services. He was succeeded by the Rev. M. Schwebach, who maintained the pastorate and visited the outmissions for a period of five years. He was the first of the pastors of this congregation fortunate enough to own a horse, his journeys from the parent parish to the missions being thus greatly facilitated. His successor as pastor of St. Martin's was the Rev. Father Cornelis, who administered the pastorate for twelve months. When he left, the church remained in disuse for nearly two years.

In the year 1874, Father July was stationed at Stevens Point, from which parish he visited the congregation of St. Martin. This he continued to do for a period of twelve years, during the first few of which he read Mass twice each month. At a later date, he increased his visit to three times a month, and towards the end of his administration, having at different periods for his assistants the Rev. Fathers Abb and Dambacher, he increased these visits to four times a month. From 1874 to 1886, however, the services at St. Martin's were conducted personally by Father July, although occasional visits were made to Sharon by Fathers Bojacki and Boujowski during the years 1876 and 1877, on account of the Polish members of St. Martin's.

Of the resident pastors located at Custer since the erection of that parish, the Rev. J. A. Geissler, first of that number, was stationed there from April 30, 1886, to September. 1890. Father Schwartzmeyer, who followed him, remained at Custer from September 29, 1890, until October, 1892. During a portion of this pastorate, that is, from August, 1891, to January, 1892, the mission of St. Martin was attended by the Rev. Father Stemper, resident pastor at Stevens Point. When Father Hummel took charge of the parish at Custer, in October, 1892, he also continued visiting the missions regularly, so doing until the time of his transfer, in January, 1894. As successor to him, came the Rev. J. A. Bourgmeyer, the present pastor, who still maintains charge of, and pays regular visits to St. Martin's.

The congregation of St. Mary now consists of about three hundred and fifteen members, and that of the mission at Sharon of thirty-five families, or about two hundred and fifty members. Connected with the latter, is a branch of the Schutzgesellschaft of Wisconsin, the officers of which are, August Dale, president; Charles Steffanus, vice-president; N. Eiden Mitchmer, secretary; Peter Eiden, treasurer, and Charles Dehlinger and Adam Eiden, trustees.

The Rev. J. A. Bourgmeyer, present rector of the Immaculate Conception congregation at Custer, was born November 9, 1867, at Nenno, Wisconsin. After acquiring the necessary education for that purpose, he received minor orders March 22, 1890, was made subdeacon October 18, 1890, deacon October 19, 1890, and ordained to the priesthood by Archbishop Katzer on October 26, 1890. He celebrated his first Mass at Le Mars, Iowa, November 5, 1890, and was then appointed to the mission at Kingston, Wisconsin, where he remained for two years. His next pastorate was that of Seymour, where he remained for a similar period, when he was transferred to his present charge.

St. Mary's Church, Delwich, Wis.

THE Church of St. Mary's at Delwich, Door County, Wisconsin, composed entirely of French Belgians, which was dedicated to "Our Lady of the Snow," in 1860, had for its first resident pastor the Rev. L. Stevenart, who remained until the latter part of the following year. His successor was the Rev. Charles Vanier, who assumed the pastorate in 1890. This reverend Father started the Catholic School at Delwich and also rebuilt the frame church which had been burned down in the spring of 1892. In 1893 the Rev. Bernard H. Pennings, a Praemonstratensian Father, was appointed to the charge, and is still pastor of the same. During his administration a number of improvements have been made, noticeable among them being a new school and Sisters' house, which were built in 1894. The congregation at Delwich now consists of some seventy families, there being about four hundred members. The school, a free one, is attended by thirty-five children, who are in charge of Sisters of St. Francis from Bay Settlement. There are three societies connected with this charge; the St. Ann's Society for married women, of which Mrs. Pauline Baudhuin is president; Mrs. Lucy Delfosse, secretary and Adelaide Fountain, treasurer; the Young Ladies' Sodality (Children of Mary), with Miss Mary Evrard as president; Nora Moore, secretary, and Mary Baudhuin, treasurer; and the St. Joseph's League for men, sixty-three members, Peter Baudhuin being prefect.

St. Mary's Church, Delwich, Wis.

Bro. Servatius.
Revs. B. Pennings, L. J. Broens.

Father Pennings was born in Gemert, Holland, June 9, 1861, joined the Order of St. Norbert in 1879, and was ordained in 1886. He with Father L. Broens and Brother Servatius were the first of the Order to come to America. They came to the Diocese of Green Bay in 1893, at the request of Bishop Messmer, who desired their services in some of the parishes on the peninsula between Green Bay and Lake Michigan. In 1894 they were followed by Father R. J. Van Rooy and Brother Michael of the same Order and now of Dykesville. In 1896 the Rev. S. C. Mickers joined the colony. The headquarters of the Order are in Holland, where in the Abbey Berne at Heeswyk the Rt. Rev. Abbot holds his residence.

The Walloon Mission of St. Francis de Paula at Marchand, Door County, was established in 1869, by the Rev. Father Daems. Services are held there regularly once a month on Sundays, and also occasionally at other times. The congregation of St. Francis at the present time is composed of about forty-five families. This mission is attended by the pastor of Our Lady of the Snow, from Delwich.

Another mission visited from Delwich is St. Francis Xavier, at Brussels, Door County, also Walloon. It was established in the year 1880, or about that time, and consists of forty-three families. Services are held there one Sunday in each month.

St. Joseph's is another Walloon church located in the town of Gardner, Door County, which is attended by the same pastor. The congregation, now numbering some nineteen families, was organized in 1876. Services are held at St. Joseph's on one Sunday in each month.

Still another (Walloon) church in the town of Gardner, St. John the Baptist, was totally destroyed by fire on April 25, 1897. This structure will not be rebuilt, and the congregation, in number about the same as St. Joseph's, have already associated themselves with those most convenient to their several places of residence.

St. Boniface's Church and School, De Pere, Wis.

St. Boniface's Church, De Pere, Wis.

THIS church may be regarded as an off-shoot of St. Mary's of De Pere. The building was erected during 1883, and occupied though not completed, January 1, 1884. Even to-day the church is not finished, there being a sanctuary yet to be added and steeple to be built; but the work is gradually advancing, although many other necessary improvements have naturally retarded work on the principal structure. In 1885 a priest's residence was built, and on February 12, 1888, a 1,400-pound bell was blessed by the Rt. Rev. F. X. Katzer. Again, in 1892, the congregation bought two lots opposite the rectory, on which a school house was erected in 1893, the corner-stone having been laid by Bishop Messmer on May 14 of the same year. On its completion September 8, 1893, the building was blessed by Bishop Messmer, in the presence of the Most Rev. F. Satolli, titular Archbishop of Lepanto, and Apostolic delegate of His Holiness the Pope, Leo XIII., to the United States. In 1894 this school was made free.

The first pastor of the church, and who is still in charge of the congregation, is the Rev. Adolph Smitz, a native of the Netherlands, he being born at Oirschot, a village in the Province of North Brabant. He is a son of Henry Bartholome and Antonia Maria (Fock) Smitz.

Rev. A. Smitz.

The father, now deceased, was a physician, the mother is still living in the Netherlands. Father Smitz was educated in the lower and higher Seminaries of 'S. Hertogenbosch, and ordained priest, May 25, 1872, in the Cathedral of St. John at that place. He was successively assistant priest at Moergestel, Diesen and Zeelst. On September 8, 1883, he sailed from Amsterdam for America, landing at Hoboken, N. J. Soon after arriving there he went West to Wisconsin, and for a short time officiated in the vicinity of Green Bay. On January 1, 1884, he was appointed rector of St. Boniface's Church.

The congregation now consists of one hundred and fifty-seven families, mostly natives of the Netherlands and lower Germany. The school, at first under the management of lay teachers, has, since 1886, been in charge of the Sisters of St. Francis, of Bay Settlement, and has an attendance of two hundred and sixty-seven scholars enrolled. The Altar Society connected with this congregation, of which Mrs. N. Van der Linden is president, Mrs. F. DeBoth secretary, and Mrs. J. Maes treasurer, was organized in 1884. It is still in a very flourishing condition, has eighty-three members, and did much in the past for the embellishment of both altar and church. The Sodality of the B. V. M. for Young Ladies was established in 1897, and has seventy members.

St. Francis Xavier's Church, De Pere, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Francis Xavier, Brown County, Wisconsin, was established some forty years ago. About that time it became evident to the Catholics living in the region south of Green Bay that they were numerous enough to organize a parish of their own, and after consulting the proper authorities and securing their approbation, the present parish of St. Francis Xavier became a fixture in the diocese. Heretofore, the Catholics of De Pere and the surrounding towns of De Pere, Rockland, Glenmore and the locality round about, had to go to Green Bay to attend Mass at the old French church, then the only Catholic church in the entire settlement. In the heat of summer and cold of winter, they accomplished their journeys, and it is most interesting, at this date, to hear the few remaining of the older settlers relate how they went on foot, often through the woods and the snow, on Christmas and Easter, on Sundays and great festivals, that they might fulfill their obligations to the church. Occasionally some zealous and energetic priest would make a tour among the scattered homesteads through that section, saying Mass and teaching catechism in the houses of the settlers, and attending to other spiritual wants of the Catholic population. Soon, however, the tide of immigration set in, a fair share of which found its way to the northern part of Wisconsin, and settled there. This proved a fruitful field in which to work, and it was not long before the people obtained a pastor of their own, and erected a rude but comfortable church, which was dedicated under the patronage of the great apostle and missionary to the Indies, St. Francis Xavier. From that time, the parish prospered and grew apace, so that the few families who formed the nucleus of this congregation to be, became so numerous that there are at the present time no less than four Catholic churches in De Pere: St. Francis Xavier (English), Immaculate Conception (Hollandish and German), St. Joseph (French), and St. Boniface (Hollandish and German). But much aversion was shown toward the spread of the Catholic faith in this vicinity in the earlier days, as a result of which the original church was destroyed by fire. In the place of this one, a larger and more adequate building was erected, which, however, owing to the rapidly increasing membership of the congregation, it was necessary to enlarge from time to time. The first Catholic congregation organized at De Pere is now represented by the only and entirely English speaking congregation in that city, many of the descendants of its founders still adhering to it on account of old associations. The feeling of attachment exhibited by these people is also increased by the fact that almost the entire present site of De Pere is undoubtedly located at a point whereon the earlier missionaries performed part of their labors. This belief is strengthened by the fact that numerous relics of value have been discovered there. Some of these were found while excavating business buildings in the very heart of the city, consisting of a cross, chalice and other articles, which were still in a remarkable state of preservation. These are now in the possession of the University of Wisconsin at Madison, where they are to be seen on exhibition in the museum connected with that institution. Owing to the establishment of other contiguous congregations, the general conditions have been such as to retard, to a certain extent, the growth of the mother parish. However, in spite of drawbacks, the good work goes steadily on, each succeeding priest taking up and carrying out the work designed by his predecessor, so that, while the buildings and equipments may not be quite up to date and in keeping with modern requirements as they might be, still they amply fulfill the purpose for which they were erected or intended, leaving nothing whatever in the way of regret for either pastor or people, each of whom, in his capacity, has worked faithfully and well in the interests of the congregation.

St. Francis Xavier's Church, De Pere, Wis.

The Rev. Father Charles J. Gallagher, of St. Francis Xavier Church, De Pere, Brown County, was born July 8, 1851, in Brooklyn, New York. His parents were Michael and Jane (Stephens) Gallagher, and were natives, respectively, of Sligo and Ballyshannon, Ireland.

Father Gallagher received his preparatory education at the Jesuit College of Fordham, New York, from which he graduated in 1870, taking a collegiate course at that institution, and afterward taking a theological course at Mount St. Mary's, Emmittsburg, Maryland. In 1875 he was ordained priest at St. James' Cathedral, Brooklyn, New York, by Bishop Laughlin, and for twelve years was assistant to the Vicar-General of the Diocese of Brooklyn. In 1888 he was given charge of St. Thomas Church at Poygan, Wisconsin, the church property at which place was much improved under his earnest efforts; at Omro, Wisconsin, he entirely rebuilt St. Mary's Church, and also rebuilt the church at Winneconne, Wisconsin. In June, 1893, Father Gallagher was given charge of St. Francis Xavier Church at De Pere—the first Catholic church erected at that place.

St. Joseph's Church, West De Pere, Wis.

IT was some time during the year 1870 that the Rev. Father Vermare built St. Joseph's Church at West De Pere. Following him came the Rev. E. E. Leccia, who remained three years, and during that time built a parsonage and also bought a bell for the church. Following Father Leccia came the Rev. Tanguay, who remained but five months, being succeeded after a little over a year by the Rev. Father Ritter. The Revs. Pellegrin and Brossart followed in quick succession, being succeeded by the Rev. Comtois, who remained for sixteen months. Then the Rev. James Gauche assumed the duties of pastor, arriving on the 8th day of September, 1878, and continuing until March, 1887. Many noticeable as well as valuable improvements to both church and parsonage were made during his administration. He was succeeded by the Rev. J. F. Durin, during whose pastorate the old church was destroyed by lightning. But before resigning, which he did in October, 1895, Father Durin built a new church (1889) and also established the Archconfraternity of St. Joseph. The congregation consists of about a hundred families. Rev. Father Durin died January 9, 1897, at the Mercy Hospital, Chicago.

St. Joseph's Church, West De Pere, Wis.

On the 15th of November, 1895, the Rev. Peter Pele took charge of the congregation. He came from Coleman, Wisconsin, where he had but shortly before erected a new parsonage.

During the pastorate of the Rev. J. Gauche, who donated two lots for church purposes, a school house was built at West De Pere, and this school was at first conducted by the Sisters of St. Francis. They were followed by the Sisters of the Incarnate Heart of Texas, and the Sisters of St. Joseph from St. Louis, Missouri. Their stay, however, was brief, the congregation being too small to sustain them. Of societies, there is that of the Children of Mary, the officers being the Misses Collette, St. George and Mary Sauvageau, and the Guard of Honor of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, of which Mrs. N. Beauregard, Mrs. F. Seymour and Miss M. Martell are the present acting officials. A few of the male members of the congregation also belong to the Catholic Order of Foresters.

Sanctuary of the Shrine of St. Joseph's Church, West De Pere, Wis.

Since entering the priesthood the Rev. Father Pele's field of labor has been almost entirely confined to the northern part of Wisconsin, particularly in churches and missions in and about Florence, Waupaca and Marinette counties. He was born in Brittany, France, his parents being August and Anne (Beaudry) Pele. His education was acquired at St. Stanislaus College, which is also in the same province. He came to America in 1883, attending the Seminary at Merriam Park, Minnesota, and completing his seminary studies at St. John's Seminary, Collegeville, Minnesota. Ordination was conferred upon him by Bishop Katzer in the Cathedral at Green Bay, Wisconsin, when he was at once stationed at Florence. From Florence he went to Lebanon, Waupaca County, where, in addition to his regular duties, he had charge of the missions at Manawa and Northport. He was next pastor at Coleman, Marinette County, Wisconsin, remaining there for four years and five months, when failing health brought about by overwork compelled him to secure a much-needed rest. Upon recovering he was appointed by his Bishop to the pastorate of St. Joseph's, where he at present officiates.

Rev. Peter Pele.

St. Mary's Church, De Pere, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary's Church was organized by the Rev. Father Verboort in 1869. His successor was the Rev. M. Takken, who was in turn succeeded by the Rev. A. Van Grotel. The present pastor, Rev. John Verstegen, was appointed to the rectorate in 1882. The congregation consists of two hundred and sixty-five families. Two hundred and fifty children attend the school, which is conducted by four Sisters of Notre Dame, the Venerable Sister M. Donata being principal. Of Catholic societies there are four in the parish: St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, incorporated 1873, with fifty members; President, John Smith; Secretary, J. B. Heyman; Treasurer, H. Vermuelen. Ladies' Altar Society, one hundred members. Young Ladies' Sodality, one hundred and ten members, and the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch 47, with fifty members.

St. Mary's Church, De Pere, Wis.

The Rev. Father John Verstegen was appointed to the pastorate of St. Mary's at De Pere, on January 7, 1882. Since that time, a matter of over fifteen years, he has labored faithfully and well in the interest of the church placed under his care. During his wise and careful administration the church building has been greatly enlarged as well as much improved, and he has also largely added to the church property. Besides doing this, he has erected a substantial brick school edifice with a capacity for two hundred and forty-six scholars, and in 1890 he built a fine and roomy building for the accommodation of the Reverend Fathers connected with the congregation.

Rev. J. Verstegen.

Father Verstegen was born at Zeeland in the Province of North Brabant, Holland, April 9, 1840. He was educated in the classics in Holland, and in philosophy and theology in the Augustinean College, Belgium, finishing his studies at the Seminary of St. Francis, Milwaukee, Wis. He was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Joseph Melcher, at Green Bay, Wis., August 14, 1870, and was at once placed in charge of the congregation at Freedom, where through his energy the new church of St. Nicholas was completed, and a new parochial school erected. Of this new church he remained the true and faithful pastor until called upon to receive his present charge.

St. John's Church, Duck Creek, Wis.

ST. JOHN'S congregation is one of the oldest in Northern Wisconsin. For many years the pastor at this church attended a number of missions north as far as the state line. It is to be regretted that no records are to be found of this parish, for the complete history would prove very interesting. In compiling these notes we have to depend mainly on what we are told by the older residents in the settlement. The oldest settlers around Duck Creek were French Canadians, and their descendants make up a good percentage of St. John's congregation to-day. Before these people had a church of their own at Duck Creek they used to attend divine services at Green Bay. The first missionary to visit them regularly was the Rev. Father Bonduel, an earnest and active worker, under whose direction a log church was built in the year 1849.

St. John's Church, School and Parsonage, Duck Creek.

This church was located near Duck Creek and three and one-half miles northwest of Fort Howard. After him, this mission was visited at intervals by the Rev. Father Perrodin, until Father Turcotte came and took up his residence there. Ever since that time, probably about the year 1853, Duck Creek has had a resident pastor. We do not know exactly how long Father Turcotte remained in charge of this parish, but are informed that he was succeeded by the Rev. P. C. Menard. After Father Menard's resignation, the parish was for some time in charge of the Capuchin Fathers from Velp Convent, Holland. The first of these was the Rev. Bonaventure De Goey, O. M. Cap., who is now stationed at Stanton, Wisconsin. This pastor had the distinction of being the first post-master in that settlement, and by him the postoffice was named Velp. He was succeeded by the Rev. Father Mauritius Hens, O. M. Cap., who is remembered as a brilliant orator. At the time of the civil war, the parish was in charge of the Rev. Father Mignot, who is said to have been an army chaplain. The parish seems at all times to have been a difficult one to manage, as may be concluded from the large number of priests who rapidly succeeded each other. After the short pastorates of the Revs. McDonald, and Vermare, we at last reach the name of the Rev. E. DeWilt, O. M. Cap., who is at present at Wrightstown, Wisconsin, but who up to this day is known and respected as one of the most zealous pastors in the rather turbulent history of the parish. His successor, the Rev. Charles Beyerle, now of Grand Rapids, Wisconsin, erected a large brick veneered church, but unfortunately was induced to change the location to a point one and one-half miles west of what had by this time become a bright little village. This church, which was at that time one of the largest and most beautiful in that section of the country, was erected in the year 1877; but the building of this church plunged the congregation heavily in debt, and was the beginning of years of much trouble and distress. Afterwards the Rev. Fathers Veith, Charles Steil and P. A. DeParadis, D. D., succeded each other at brief intervals. In the year 1881, the financial difficulties of the parish came to a climax, and were the direct means of closing the church. This condition of affairs lasted for several months, until in September, 1881, the Rev. E. F. Van Hootegem, a newly ordained priest, was selected for the rather discouraging task of straightening out the affairs of the church, and bringing them once more into a satisfactory condition. Father Van Hoote-gem proved eminently successful in this undertaking for not only did he succeed in paying off the accumulated debts, but he made Duck Creek parish what it is to-day, one of the most flourishing congregations. During the eleven years of his administration he made extensive repairs and improvements for the church, such as frescoing, new altar, a chime of bells, and added to the seating capacity. He also built and equipped an elegant school house. In addition, an artesian well was sunk, and the church and school property provided with a complete system of water-works. The grounds were also beautified, and in fact to him is due the credit of all the ultimate prosperity of the parish. On December 7, 1892, the pastorate came under the administration of the Rev. Arthur Belle, who continued in charge until September 1895, on the 12th of which month he was succeeded by the Rev. Alphonse M. Broens, the present rector of the parish. An unfortunate incident during the pastorate of Father Belle was the destruction of the pastor's house by fire, in August, 1894, which disaster, however, was immediately remedied, by the erection of a handsome and commodious new building at a cost of $3,000.

Rev. A. M. Broens.

The congregation of St. John numbers two hundred and forty-seven families; of these one hundred and twenty-nine are French (Canadian and Belgian), fifty-seven are Flemish; twenty German; twelve Irish, and the others of mixed nationality. The majority, however, use the English language exclusively in their homes. In spite of this fact, the pastors preach regularly in English, French, Flemish and German.

St. Leo's parochial school was established by the Rev. E. T. Van Hootegem in the year 1888, and by him placed in charge of the Sisters of St. Francis. During the year 1894, the school was temporarily closed, but was again reopened on October 2, 1895, and placed under the charge of Sisters of St. Dominic. The present enrollment of scholars numbers one hundred and sixty-five.

Of Catholic societies there is a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, with M. Peppelreiter as president, and Adolph La Belle as secretary; a Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters is also being organized. The Christian Mothers Society has a membership of seventy with Mrs. Agatha Perrault president, and Mrs. Margaret Gillen secretary. Of the Young Ladies' Sodality Miss Catherine Greenwood is prefect, and Miss Marie Rentier is secretary.

The Rev. Alphonse M. Broens was born in the city of Weert, Holland, in May, 1864. He attended the public schools of his native place up to the age of twelve, when he entered the college of Weert, from which institution he graduated in 1881, directly afterwards setting out for America. Coming westward from the port of debarkation to Indiana, he entered Notre Dame university in that State, where he studied philosophy until September, 1882, at which time he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and there for twelve months was professor of Latin and mathematics in St. Joseph's College. In September, 1883, he entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he completed his course for the priesthood, being ordained in 1886. He then removed to Green Bay, and after remaining there for a short time at the bishop's residence was appointed assistant to Father Fox in Our Lady of Lourdes' congregation at Marinette, arriving there October 21, 1886. He remained at Marinette until September 8th of the following year, when he was transferred to Sturgeon Bay as pastor of St. Joseph's Church in that city. Since assuming this charge, many improvements have been made in the condition of the buildings of the parish, among which might be mentioned the removal of the original frame church and the erection in its place of a substantial brick edifice; the erection of a handsome brick school house, which was completed and opened October 1, 1888, with three teachers and one hundred and eleven scholars, This school has since prospered exceedingly, so that at the present time there are four teachers, while the number of scholars regularly enrolled is two hundred and thirty-five. It was in 1888, also, that the corner stone of the new church was laid, the building being completed and dedicated October 1, 1889, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Katzer. In 1890 Father Broens built a residence for the Sisters and at the same time the parochial residence was enlarged and otherwise improved. The departure of Father Broens from the scene of his successes to another field of labor was deeply regretted by the people of Sturgeon Bay who had learned to love and respect him for his many genuine qualities. However, they seek some consolation in the fact that they will at least be permitted to enjoy the knowledge of the successes of all future undertakings which his zealous energy is bound to bring about.

St. Louis' Church, Dykesville, Wis.

PRIOR to the year 1863, when the first Catholic church, a small frame building, was erected at Dykesville, the people belonging to that section, known as Red River, Kewaunee County, part of whom came from the township of Green Bay, and part from that of Red River, attended services at that place. Prior to that year there was simply a station there, but in 1863, Mr. Louis Van Dycke, the resident store-keeper, who later moved to Green Bay, gave three acres of land for the erection of a church and also for cemetery purposes. Van Dycke was one of the first white men to settle in that section of the country, which had previous to the time mentioned been inhabited solely by Indians, who eked out a precarious livelihood by fishing and hunting in the surrounding territory. Many of these Indians had already been baptized in the Catholic faith, but having no church of their own attended Mass each Sunday in Bay Settlement, which was ten miles from Dykesville. A few years later, the country around Dykesville began to settle rapidly, quite a tide of immigration coming that way. Most of the new settlers were of sturdy Belgian stock, who, inured to labor and of thrifty habits, as quickly as possibly cleared the land round and about the settlement, so that in but a short time, but few ii any traces of former existing conditions or residents were to be met with. To-day, there is but one Indian, Mrs. Moses White, and a cousin of hers remaining in this section of the country. From the time when Mr. Van Dycke made his gift to the congregation the interest of the Catholic section grew rapidly; so much so, that in 1888 the congregation began the erection of a new church. The completion of this building was necessarily slow, owing to the limited means at the command of the people, but they were earnest in the matter and succeeded during the past year in finally completing and furnishing the building. There are at present seventy-five families in this colony, all Belgian, from Brabant and Liege. These people are working very earnestly in the interests of the church, and it is evident that they have accomplished much, especially if we take into consideration the fact that the country round about has been practically depopulated since the mills in this section ceased running some few years ago. From 1863 until 1872 Dykesville was visited as a mission, the first priest to come there with any regularity being Father Daems, O. S. C., and after him Father Verheeren, O. S. Cr. Others also visited the place from time to time, but their names are unknown, as no record of incident or history pretaining to those earlier times has been kept.

St. Louis' Church, Dykesville, Wis.

The first resident pastor to take charge of the St. Louis congregation was Father Martin Smitz, who built the present parsonage. He came to Dykesville in 1872, but after two years residence there removed to another place. During his pastorate the congregation consisted of more than one hundred families and was in a fairly prosperous condition. This is to be accounted for from the fact that two saw mills were in active operation at that time. After the departure of Father Smitz, Dykesville was a mission to Robinsonville and attended by Father Crud, Father Selbach, Father Leccia and Fathers of Mercy, De Bie and Hoevenoos, the latter having charge for four years. After them, Fathers Dyckman, Schir and Father L. Broers, O. Praem. attended to the spiritual needs of the congregation until August 1, 1894, when it was taken charge of by the Rev. J. Van Rooy. There are three public schools in the parish of St. Louis, which have a combined attendance of some three hundred pupils. Of Catholic societies connected with the congregation there are also a number, among them being: St. Ann's Altar Society: Mrs. Leroy, president; Mrs. Angelique Debaker, secretary; Miss Depres, treasurer. Young Ladies' Sodality of the Black Veil: Deserée Dugrangnage, president; Bertha Delwich, treasurer; Mary

Rev. R. Van Rooy.

Badert, secretary. St. Louis' Society for Men: Jos. Deboker, president; Jos. Vandermitten, treasurer, and T. Robson, secretary.

St. Mary's Church, (Walloon), Thiry-Daems, Kewaunee County, has been attended by the pastor from Dykesville since 1894. Prior to that time it was attended from Martinsville. The congregation was in the first instance established by father Daems, a Mr. Tyri donating the land. The parish is therefore known as Thiry-

Daems. It consists of forty Belgian families, and the church erected is known to have been the first in that section of the country, having been built about the year 1858, although the exact date is not given. Services are held at Thiry-Daems twice every month.

The Rev. J. Van Rooy, present pastor of this congregation, was born October 18, 1867, in Gemert, North Brabant, Holland. He obtained his rudimentary education with the Sisters of St. Francis and at the public school. In 1879 he commenced his collegiate course at the college at Gemert, and after six years of close application there, he entered the Praemonstratensian Abbey, Heeswijk, Holland, September 17, 1885. On November 9 of the same year he was sent to the Novitiate in Tongerloo Abbey, Belgium, where he remained for one year. In 1886 he began a course of philosophical and theological studies in Heeswijk. On December 19, 1891, he was ordained subdeacon by Mgr. Godschalk, Bishop of St. Bosch, Holland, deacon, on April 19, 1892, in Auerbode Abbey, Belgium, by Mgr. Andreas Anthonis, and priest on July 6, 1892, by Mgr. W. Van Ven of St. Bosch, Holland. In the following year he was appointed professor at the gymnasium of Heeswijk, Holland. On July 26, 1894, he was sent, by his Superior, to America to join the colony of priests belonging to the same Order, who had located on the peninsula in the diocese of Green Bay. Arriving there, he was appointed assistant pastor at Delwich, in Door County, his Prior being the Very Rev. B. Pennings. Here he had for missions those of Dykesville, Thiry-Daems and one at Robinsonville. On November 1, 1895, he was appointed resident pastor at Dykesville by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer. Since that time Father Van Rooy has added a brick steeple to the church and also a handsome Gothic altar.

St. Peter's Church, Eagle River, Wis.

EAGLE RIVER, with a population of fifteen hundred, stands on a lofty fertile plateau—one of the highest and healthiest in Wisconsin. It is charmingly located on both banks of the broad, limpid stream, from which it derives its poetical name. The stream itself is called Eagle River on account of the many imperial birds that here take refuge, raise and teach their young and make this region their home.

The "Eagle", before reaching the city, passes through twenty-five lakes, without counting the many inland tributaries that form the famous Eagle chain. The current of the Eagle, as yet not known as a river, after silently meandering through many romantic labyrinthian circles and windings, suddenly appears in great beauty half a mile northeast of the town, having accomplished a journey of fifty miles, though the two ends of the chain of lakes are but fifteen miles apart. It then passes down through the city and finally, about a mile and a half southwest from there, empties its wealth, loses its name and disappears into the Wisconsin River. At the present time the parish at Eagle River and dependent missions extend over a territory comprising four thousand square miles. The members of these congregations are much scattered in parts of Vilas, Forest, Oneida, Langlade and Lincoln Counties, the missions being located at North and South Crandon, Parrish, Jeffries, Monico, Gagen, Stella, Scott, Conover and State Line. North of Eagle River, there is not a priest located within a distance of one hundred miles, while to the south there are two at Antigo, fifty-nine miles away, one at Rhinelander, to the southwest twenty-seven miles, and one east at Florence, to reach whom a journey of over sixty miles through tangles and trackless woodlands must be made. The city of Eagle River was incorporated in 1883. Twenty years prior to that time James Hall settled with his family on the northern bank of Eagle Lake, three miles from the site of the present city. Ocular evidences of this old settlement are still at hand. The ruins of the shanties and quaint and shapeless buildings of the lumber camps of forty years ago, are likewise still to be found at a point not a mile distant from the primitive "bank," erected only in 1897. Two years after the coming of James Hall, Mr. C. L. Perry located on a farm near Yellow Birch, which is also not far from Eagle River. About the same time, Daniel Gagen began to clear a farm on the land, which is now known as Gagen Hill. In 1884 Judge Daniel Graham settled at this place permanently, although he had visited in this neighborhood when the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company's terminus was yet at Clintonville and Antigo. On the 12th day of April, 1883, Mr. John O'Connor came to Eagle River, at which time the railway that had already been extended northward through Monico and Rhinelander to Ashland, was built out from Monico to Three Lakes, reaching Eagle River during the June following. Mr. O'Connor was one of the first white settlers in this vicinity, who by hard and incessant toil accumulated about him a considerable landed property, part of which included the original plat of Eagle River. It was during his second visit to Eagle River that he was accompanied by his son George, who has since filled many offices of importance and trust, among them being that of sheriff of the county. Mr. John O'Connor died in 1889, while still in the prime of life. During the year 1883, there also came to this settlement Thomas B. and William J. Walsh, whose untiring energy, industry and enterprise in business, as well as in many civil and legal capacities, have been crowned with marked success. Their parents as well as many relatives and friends have since moved to Eagle River, and, with the O'Connor family, have become influential, and rank among the main supporters of Catholic interests in the parish. Messrs. Cook and Dickenson were two other enterprising spirits who located at Eagle River at an early day; they opened a store there, which was situated in a tent across the river, and at a point near where the residence of Mr. Cook now stands. From the tent, they removed to a log shanty on the southern side of the river, on a spot where the city waterworks were erected in 1889, and the city electric plant in 1897. Thus the settlement continued to grow, numerous enterprises of an extensive character, from time to time, locating there, among them being the Gerry Lumber Company, which was established at Eagle River in 1886. In 1887 Eagle River, which had heretofore belonged to Lincoln County, became part of Oneida County, of which Rhinelander is the county seat. During this year Peter St. Peter located at Eagle River. In 1889 Mr. and Mrs. Samuel W. Smith also came there, and opened a hotel. The year 1890 is made memorable by the erection of St. Peter's Church, which was built at a cost of $1,325. To secure the money necessary for this enterprise, Mr. S. W. Smith became exceedingly active, visiting the lumbering camps, and calling upon all of the settlers for aid. In this he was eminently successful, people of all denominations contributing liberally to the undertaking. Mr. John O'Connor donated all of the land upon which now stand the three churches of Eagle River. Samuel W. Smith, Thomas B. Walsh, William J. Walsh, M. Holland, Frank Stein, Joseph Deckert, John Brosnan, August Deschamps, William McGrath and many others also afforded much assistance in donations and time, while the work was going on. During the same year, the church was solemnly blessed by the Rt. Rev. F. X. Katzer, then Bishop of Green Bay. Seven years prior to this time, the first Mass was celebrated and religious services held at Eagle River in the home of Mr. John O'Connor, a log house across the river from the present city, by the Rev. John Seubert, who came all the way from Clintonville for that purpose. The Rev. John Seubert, now pastor of Cologne, Minn., is the brother of the distinguished Andrew Seubert, the Rev. Rector of St. Mary's, Menasha, Wisconsin. Father Seubert returned at long intervals to visit these people, some two or three times altogether, after which they received attendance from the first resident priest at Antigo, Rev. A. N. Buschle, in 1885 and 1886. Father Buschle left Antigo in April, 1886, where he was succeeded by the energetic enterprising Father Takken, who afterwards visited Eagle River repeatedly, from Antigo, but always on week days. It was Father Takken who built the church, school and presbytery at Antigo. It also happens that he was one of the predecessors of Father Goepfert in Dearborn, now one of the suburbs of Detroit, Michigan, where the name of Takken is still deservedly revered by all, as it is in Antigo. Mr. John O'Connor's log house is now the property of Mr. John Radcliffe, and is still in a good state of preservation. When Mr. O'Connor's building on the corner of Wall and Railroad streets was completed, services were held there. Mass was also said quite often during those times in the home of Mr. T. B. Walsh, now Dr. Neville's residence, at M. Holland's, and finally in the town hall. In 1891 a handsome and commodious public school building of solid brick was erected at a cost of $30,000, within five hundred yards from our beautiful Silver Lake. The attendance at this school numbers over two hundred scholars; three of the teachers in charge are Catholics, while the superintendent of Vilas County, Mr. Alexander Higgins, is also a Catholic. In 1892 Eagle River became the principal town of the newly established County of Vilas.

St. Peter's Church, Eagle River, Wis.

Rev. P. Goepfert.

Substantially the history of St. Peter's parish runs as follows: The congregation at Eagle River was regularly established as a parish, on September 10th, 1894, at the arrival of the Rev. Prosper Goepfert, C. S. Sp., previous to which time the Catholics residing there were attended by pastors at Clintonville, Antigo and Rhinelander. The first pastor, as previously stated, was the Rev. John Seubert, who came there from Clintonville, and he was succeeded by the Rev. Fathers Takken from Antigo and the amiable Nicholas July from Rhinelander. It was under the administration of the latter that the church was built at Eagle River in 1890. Father July was succeeded by the Rev. Prosper Goepfert, who purchased some lots and a parochial residence for the parish, furnished the house and also the church with altars, statues, stations and a bell, visited, like M. G. W. Smith, every camp, collected in every home, and paid every debt. From July 12, 1896, to January 28, 1897, Father Ruessmann conducted the pastorate, but on the latter date Father Goepfert returned from Arkansas, and again became rector of the parish.

The bell belonging to this church was obtained through popular subscription. Before being placed in position, it was blessed, most solemnly, at the time of Confirmation and Episcopal visitation, Oct. 20th, 1895, the occasion being made one of marked interest by the presence of Mgr. Messmer, bishop of the diocese, who delivered an eloquent lecture on that occasion on the "Sanctity of the Christian Family Circle." This bell also has the prestige of being the only one in the State of Wisconsin that bears the name of Mgr. Messmer, "Sebastianus." The inscription reads as follows: Sebastianus G. Messmer, D. D. Eps., Prosper A. Goepfert Pastor; Honor sit Sanguini Jesu. Sancti Petri Ecclesia Apud Aquilæ Flumen. 1895." The three altars are beautiful works, while the statues of the Sacred Heart, the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. Joseph, that adorn them, were purchased from Paris, through Benziger Brothers by Father Goepfert, and are considered among the most artistic ones in the State of Wisconsin. The church itself is also quite a handsome structure. The congregation of St. Peter now comprises about three hundred members.

Monico Junction is situated on the southern base of a triangle whence one line of the Chicago and Northwestern runs eastward through Rhinelander, the other northeast through Eagle River and Watersmeet, both lines meeting at Ashland.

Monico is a little mission in Oneida County, consisting of some sixty souls. Services are held there at intervals by the pastor from Eagle River. There is no church at this place. There is here a nucleus of a few excellent Catholic families, if only they remained in this as yet unsettled district.

Another mission visited from Eagle River is located at South Crandon, the chief town of Forest County, where there are but two Catholic families. There is a nice unfinished frame church at Crandon, built by the exertions of M. John Massbaum.

Next comes North Crandon, where services are held in private houses. The congregation here consists of seventy members, of English and Irish, Holland and German birth or descent. North Crandon promises to become before long a flourishing town, with a handsome Catholic church.

Still another mission is at Parrish, in Langlade County, where there is a handsome, well-furnished church dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The congation at Parrish consists of five French families, where there were forty three years ago. The mission will undoubtedly soon be discontinued, as the mill established at that place several years ago has recently been discontinued. The mill remains; some fifty dwellings, some of them comfortable, too. Xenophon would call Parrish a deserted city. It was a town of a company; the company left; all left; hence, the deserted village, midst surroundings delightful and woodland dells. The land around is good, and wood is plentiful. Some new industry, most likely, will purchase the plants. The widowed church, meanwhile silently waits, on its picturesque hill, till new worshipers once more replenish its hallowed naves.

At Jeffries, in Lincoln County, services are occasionally held in the school house. This is also a milling settlement, and the population is almost entirely of a floating character.

The Rev. Prosper A. Goepfert, resident pastor of St. Peter's at Eagle River, was born a little over fifty years ago in a suburban parish of Colmar, in the then French Province of Alsace. At an early age he began preparing for the priesthood, acquiring his classical studies in the college of his neighboring town, where for several years he distinguished himself for his thoroughness and ability. When seventeen years of age, he entered the Society of the Holy Ghost, whose members, though laboring all over the world, devote their lives principally to the conversion of the negroes in Africa, in which country they have established a number of Christian settlements. After taking another preparatory course of three years at the college of Langonnett, in Brittany, during which time he completed his literary studies, he took a five years' philosophical and theological course at the Seminary of the Society in Paris. He was finally ordained to the priesthood in 1866 by Prince Cardinal Chigy, then Papal Nuncio, at the Court of Napoleon the Third. During the following year, his Superior sent him to Rockwell College, Cashel, Ireland, where he remained for twenty-two years as Master of Novices and Scholastics and professor of almost every branch of education. During the last ten years of Father Goepfert's residence in Ireland, he held the position of President of Rockwell College, which institution is always ranked among the foremost in the country. Besides his numerous other accomplishments, Father Goepfert has obtained considerable distinction as an author, numbering among his numerous publications the "Life of the Venerable Libermann, Founder of the Society." He also, while in Ireland, founded and edited for a number of years, "The Messenger of St. Joseph," a monthly magazine. Father Goepfert began his pastorate at Eagle River, Three Lakes, and other missions, September 10, 1894. On July 8, 1896, he left Eagle River for Conway, Faulkner County, Arkansas, but, unable to endure the Southern climate, returned to Eagle River in the latter part of January, 1897. Father Ruessmann, who maintained the pastorate during Father Goepfert's absence, was upon his return transferred to the missions of Aniwa. On September 22d of the present year, Father Goepfert celebrated the thirty-first anniversary of his ordination, which was made the occasion for much rejoicing among the members of his congregation.

SS. Cyrillus and Methodius' Church, Eaton, Wis.

SEVENTY Polish families residing in the vicinity of Eaton, Brown County, Wisconsin, Poland postoffice, erected a Catholic church in 1881, the same being dedicated to SS. Cyrillus and Methodius. The first pastor to attend this congregation was the Rev. Father Moczygemba, who was followed in succession by the Rev. Fathers Rosochowicz, Peter Chowawiec, Victor Zarenczny, L. Garus, Bieniarz, the Rev. T. Malkowski, and the Rev. F. Budzikowski. The congregation now numbers one hundred and fifty families, but although there are so many and the necessity is so great, they have not as yet established a parochial school in the parish. There are two Catholic organizations in connection with this congregation: the Holy Rosary Society and Sacred Heart of Jesus Sodality.

The Rev. Theophil Malkowski, who is now pastor of the Catholic congregation at Pine Grove, is a native of Poland, where he acquired the greater part of his education. After coming to America, however, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he completed his course in philosophy and theology, after which he was ordained to the priesthood in Chicago by the Most Rev. Archbishop P. A. Phelan, on December 19, 1891. He was then assigned to the St. Adalbert's congregation in Chicago, but at the expiration of three years was transferred to Wausau, Wisconsin, where he built a church which, unfortunately, was burned to the ground on December 26, 1894.

SS. Cyrillus and Methodius' Church, Eaton, Wis.

SS. Edward and Isidore's Church, Flintville, Wis.

FLINTVILLE lies on the Big Suamico River, about thirteen miles northwest from Green Bay, in Brown County. It formed part of Duck Creek Parish up to October, 1895, when it was separated from that organization. A new parish was then formed, comprising Flintville, Little Suamico, Sobieski, and Abrams, the Rev. Father F. Laslow being appointed first resident priest. At present there are six missions attended by Father Laslow, they being Big Suamico Road, Sobieski, Little Suamico, Brookside, Abrams and Chase. There are about two hundred and fifty Catholic families in the parish.

Of the past history of Flintville and its outlying missions, but little is known. From the most reliable reports to be obtained, however, it is probable that the first Mass was said some time in 1863, at the residence of T. Doran, about two miles southwest of Flintville, by the priest then residing at Duck Creek.

At that time Messrs. J. Piontek, G. Phillipps, T. Doran, M. Kane, D. Page, P. Doran and P. Brunette were among the principal communicants of the parish. Of these, three have passed to their eternal repose, and one has fallen from the true faith; the rest still maintain an active interest in the growth and prosperity of the parish. Later on, the Rev. Father Vogt said Mass in Chase, at Mr. W. Blaser's residence, and still later the Rev. Father C. Beyerle, present pastor at Grand Rapids,

SS. Edward and Isidore's Church, Flintville, Wis.

Wisconsin, officiated at the same place. In the spring of 1883, the Rev. E. F. Van Hootegem said Mass on six different occasions in a shanty at Flintville, but the niggardly propensity of the inhabitants, demanding pay for accommodations granted, was such that the Catholics in the vicinity set about devising means for the erection of a church. In this they were successful, the corner-stone of the building being laid in June, 1883. In this structure, a brick veneer 24x48 feet, Mass was said by the respective priests of Duck Creek once a month. In 1895, the building becoming too small for pastoral purposes, the Rev. A. Belle set about the construction of an addition, which was completed by the Rev. F. Laslow, in the same year. Later in the fall, the congregation again bestirred itself, building a handsome one-and-a-half story veneered parsonage, 41x29 feet. This proved quite an undertaking, and the cost of these improvements—over $2,000—told heavily upon the resources of the congregation. But, above all things, these people were sincere, so that the undertaking, far from being an onus, has proved to them a matter of lasting gratulation.

The congregation is mixed, being composed of Irish, Poles, Germans and French, in almost equal proportions, although the Poles are somewhat inclined to predominate. As, however, the Germans, and with very few exceptions the French, are pretty thoroughly conversant with the English language, the SS. Edward and Isidore's congregation of Flintville is regarded as an English and Polish one.

There is a mission at Little Suamico, in Oconto County, which is attended by the resident pastor from Flintville. This mission numbers at the present time something over sixty families, although but about forty of them contribute anything to its support, the rest being too poor, or too lukewarm. Of the sixty, almost half are of Irish origin. Twenty of these live in Sobieski and in that same direction for from three to eight miles distant from the church. The rest of the congregation are of mixed nationality, there being quite a number of German, Irish and French among them. The number of the families in this parish as given also includes those residing at Brookside and Oak Orchard, both small hamlets, the former located four and the second eight miles northeast of Little Suamico. It is not of record, neither is it positively known by anyone residing in this neighborhood, who was the first priest to visit these places, but it is certain that they were attended from Duck Creek untilt Flintville was separated, at which time they were embodied in the new parish. Since then Little Suamico has been visited by the pastor from Flintville on every fourth Sunday, and on all the feast days of obligation except Easter, Pentecost and Christmas.

Brookside is also visited at times from Flintville, when Mass is said—there being no chapel there—in the house of Mr. Pillsbury. These visits are made with the intention of recalling to their faith some ten or more Belgian families, who have become spiritualists, and to instruct the children in the catechism. Sobieski is without a place of worship, although the people, who are exclusively Poles, intend to build one in the near future, and would, in fact, have done so long since but for lack of the necessary means. The people in this vicinity are very good Catholics, but, being poor and but recently arrived, they cannot accomplish all that their sense of duty inspires. Another drawback to the interests of Catholicism in Flintville, is the want of a school, which is badly needed; however, that is also an impossibility for the present time at least.

Interior and Exterior of a Polish Settler's Dug-out at Sobieski, Wis.

At Chase there are five German Catholic families. The distance from Chase to Flintville is about eight miles, which is traversed by them several times each year in order that they may attend divine services at the mother parish. Occasionally the pastor goes to Chase and says Mass there for the accommodation of a few old people who are unable to undertake so tedious a journey.

The last in the list of missions attended from Flintville is Spruce, which is located a distance of eight miles west from Lena, formerly called Maple Valley, a way station on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway. The congregation at Spruce numbers forty families, all of whom are Poles. The church at this place is a frame building, 28x40 feet, and was built in the year 1893. The Rev. Father Zielinski was the first priest to administer to the spiritual wants of the Catholics at Spruce, going there twice in 1892 and twice in 1893. In 1894 the Rev. Stanislaus Jeka, O. S. F., said Mass for the first time in the new chapel at Spruce on the 17th of May. In the fall of the same year, the Rev. Romauld Magott paid a visit to this mission, after which he continued to visit the place until the Easter of 1895, when the congregation was given into the care of the resident priest at Flintville. Here, also, as in the rest of the congregations attended from Flintville, the Poles constitute the larger element. They are as a class a thrifty and industrious people, showing marked respect for the authority of the Church and devotion to its institutions. It would not, therefore, be surprising, although their number at present is quite limited, should they at no distant time establish in this vicinity one of the most substantial and influential Catholic centers within the diocese. At present these people are very poor, and many of them are compelled to be satisfied with a dugout for a dwelling. The interior of these wretched places is no more inviting than is their external appearance, a bench and table, made of the roughest kind of lumber, an old wooden traveling chest and rude bed, constituting, in many instances, the entire furniture possessed. The struggle made by these people to obtain a foothold is sometimes a protracted and arduous one, as upon arriving at their location, they have but little, if any, money to do with. In some instances, and they are by no means of rare occurrence, the head of the family buys forty acres of land for $300 or $400, one-eighth or one-tenth of which, or even less, is all the money he possesses. In this condition he undertakes to clear the land, build a home, support a family and pay interest and principal on the investment. A few succeed in effecting their purpose, but there are many who fail, it often being the case that, after years of effort upon their part, they are compelled to yield up their interest in the property and seek an opportunity elsewhere, to begin life over again. Such surroundings and conditions are certainly no sinecure for the poor settler, no matter how stolid a disposition he may possess, nor are they overwhelmingly inviting to the one who is sent among these people to administer to their spiritual necessities; not that they are unwilling or indifferent, but rather that it is absolutely impossible for them to do for the cause of religion that which is ofttimes required of them.

Once established in his new home, however, the immigrant begins life in earnest and faces its various problems with a fortitude that deserves a more propitious fate than that with which it is generally rewarded.

Rev. Francis Laslow.

If money is limited and he is compelled to buy on time, prices are commensurately exorbitant; and there are so many things that he must need have—a wagon, a cow, poultry and numerous implements—all of which, of course, he can obtain, for in every settlement are to be found men both willing and anxious to extend credit for these purposes; but the price that he is compelled to pay virtually makes of him a slave for many years to come, and, in fact, he is lucky if he manages to escape from their clutches at all. As to the necessaries of life, why, such are generally obtained in abundance from the little garden patch, a sort of dernier resort, when all other means of obtaining sustenance have failed. The smaller tools used about the place are generally made by the farmer, and are naturally of the crudest, while he, in many instances, besides attending to his numerous other duties, converts himself into a clothier, shoemaker and hatter for the entire family. But, amid all of these discomforts, these people adhere to the teachings of the Church, and with really sublime confidence struggle along in the firm belief that affairs will ultimately turn out for the good. The foregoing gives but a brief and unsatisfactory idea of the original condition of many of the settlements throughout the Northwest, and it is from the knowledge born of experience that the pastor of the parish at Flintville and adjoining missions, whose people are fast nearing a stage of comfort and independence, expressed it as his opinion that this settlement will at no distant date become one of the strong Catholic centers of the diocese.

The Rev. F. Laslow,[1] pastor of the congregation at Flintville, is a Pole by birth, his proper name being Wlaslowski, which, however, to facilitate the pronunciation in America, was shortened to Laslow. He acquired his education for the priesthood in the schools of Europe, and was ordained in Germany. There, too, he acquired that breadth of mind which has ever made him a friend and sympathizer of the down-trodden and oppressed. Father Laslow acquired the rights of citizenship in the United States a number of years ago, and as such has ever been an ardent and consistent supporter of the Union. The one thing, however, of which he is particularly proud, is the fact that he is "by the grace of God, a priest of the Holy Roman Catholic Church." That he thoroughly appreciates that fact is strongly evidenced in the untiring and zealous manner in which he has labored for the interests of the different parishes which have been placed under his charge since coming to America.

Immaculate Conception Church, Florence, Wis.

ABOUT the year 1880, iron ore was first discovered in various places in Northeastern Wisconsin. At that time the Northwestern Railroad was being rapidly extended over the Menominee, through the lower part of Michigan, striking the State of Wisconsin again a few miles from Iron Mountain, Michigan, and thus crossing the mineral belt in our own State. Almost simultaneously iron mines were opened at Florence and Commonwealth, where the work of development was carried on as rapidly as possible. This called for a large influx of people, who came there and settled in such numbers that it was not long before the County of Florence was created. As might naturally be supposed, there was quite a sprinkling of Catholics among these early settlers, representing nearly every known nationality. In 1880 the Immaculate Conception Church, Florence, Wis.

Rev. Father Brady was appointed to attend both Florence and Commonwealth as missions, they being attached as such to the parish at Marinette, of which he was at that time the resident pastor. The work was of a somewhat thankless nature, as a majority of the people he was called upon to visit constituted a floating population of rough and uncouth characters, whose scene of residence shifted as often as new fields of operation were developed or the old ones gave out. Among such a class of people, therefore, it was hardly probable that the question of building a church would be considered, or that any adequate sum could be secured from them for such an enterprise. The meager records of church history in that section during that particular time strengthened this conviction, and it is probable that Father Brady had little else than the satisfaction of knowing that he had done his duty to reward him for the labors expended at that time. It is of record, however, that on October 9, 1881, a meeting was held at Florence for the purpose of organizing a Catholic congregation at that place. On the 18th of the same month another meeting was held in Commonwealth, and still another on the 23d, both of which were held in Juneau's Hall at that place. Another meeting of a similar character was held on the 13th of November in the National Hotel at Florence, when some definite arrangements must have been made, as during the summer of the following year the church at Florence was partially completed. Of this congregation the Rev. J. M. Seubert was appointed first resident pastor. He built a parsonage, but a number of years elapsed before the church was entirely finished, the final work on it being done during the pastorate of the Rev. E. E. Leccia, who came to Florence in 1883 and remained until September, 1889. During this pastor's administration quite a change took place in the character of the population, the rough and uncertain characters of a few years previous being superseded by people inclined to agricultural pursuits, who with their families settled down upon the land with a view of making a permanent residence there. The same condition of affairs practically pertained to the population at Commonwealth, and as a result, to-day these two places, which are but a mile apart, form a modest congregation of seventy-five families. When Father Leccia was transferred, in September, 1889, he was succeeded as pastor of the Florence congregation by the Rev. P. Pele, who remained until 1891. His successor was the Rev. August Roger, who during his administration added a steeple to the church. He left in October, 1893, his successor being the Rev. C. Vanier, who built a sacristy to the church. He was followed by the present rector, the Rev. Philip M. St. Louis, under whose administration the parish is coming into a more satisfactory condition. Since assuming this pastorate, Father St. Louis has established the League of the Sacred Heart, with eighty-five members; Catholic Order of Foresters, twenty-eight members, and a Catholic Library of three hundred and seventy-five volumes.

(1) Now at St. Hedwig's, Bexar County, Texas.

The Rev. Philip St. Louis, present pastor of the Immaculate Conception (French, German and English congregation) at Florence, Florence County, Wisconsin, was born at Little Chute, April 15, 1848. His earlier studies were followed under the guidance of the Servite Fathers at Menasha. Father St. Louis was ordained to the priesthood, April 7, 1876, by Bishop Krautbauer, it being the first time since his elevation to the episcopate that the prelate had been called upon to perform that duty. In the September following his ordination, Father St. Louis went to Chicago, and while there drew the plans and superintended the erection of the Servite Monastery in that city, and church at Cicero, Illinois, at the same time being located as pastor at Lyons, Illinois. In 1879 he paid a visit to a new settlement in Northern Wisconsin, now known as Phlox, where he celebrated Mass in May, 1880. Soon after he left the Chicago Diocese and went to Menasha, Wisconsin, from which point he attended Phlox and Antigo as missions. But the visits made to these places were of necessity few and far between, the distance being in the neighborhood of one hundred miles, half of which had to be traveled on foot. The vestments and other paraphernalia necessary for the proper observance of the Holy Mass were on these occasions carried by him in a rubber cloth strapped to his shoulders. In the year following he was stationed at Phlox, as resident pastor, having charge of that parish until September, 1893, when, owing to failing health, he removed to Green Bay. There he took charge of the Orphan Asylum printing office, which was kept up for two years, but finding this work much harder than that pertaining to parochial duties, he obtained the appointment as pastor at Florence, the duties of which he assumed October 10, 1895.

Rev. Philip St. Louis.

St. Ann's Church, Francis Creek, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Ann at Francis Creek, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, was organized in 1848 and is consequently fifty years old. According to the records of that parish the congregation was established by the Rev. Father Joseph Brunner, S. J., in that year, who continued as its pastor until 1853. The next pastor was the Rev. Joseph Maly, who attended St. Ann's from 1853 to 1870. The names of the priests ministering to this congregation from the latter year until 1877 are not on record, but in the latter year the Rev. F. Stern assumed the pastorate, which he maintained until 1885. During this period Father Stern made several improvements to the church property, and among other things built a school house. The first church, however, was erected during the pastorate of Father Joseph Maly. The congregation of St. Ann's consists of seventy families. The parochial school here has an attendance of fifty-two pupils and is conducted by Sisters of Charity from the Franciscan Convent at Alverno. There are two societies connected with this congregation, one being St. Ann's Ladies' Society, of which Mrs. Herman is president and Mrs. Augustin, treasurer, and a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, of which Engelbert Herman is president, John Ewen, secretary, and Michael Seidl, treasurer.

St. Ann's Church and Mission, Francis Creek, Wis.

The congregation of Holy Cross, in the town of Mishicott, Manitowoc County, is attended as a mission from Francis Creek by the Rev. Father De Haan. This congregation was established in the year 1869 by the Rev. Father Van Steenwyk, then resident at Two Rivers. It numbers seventy families, who are partly of German and partly of French origin. Services are held here on every Sunday.

The Rev. William Hubert Henry De Haan is a native of Amsterdam, in the Netherlands, and was born on January 19, 1858. His earlier studies were acquired at the gymnasium of Venray Limburg, in the Netherlands, and those in philosophy and theology at St. Mary's, Cincinnati, Ohio, which he entered on January 15, 1887. He was ordained to the priesthood on March 25, 1893, at Green Bay, his first appointment being as assistant pastor at Antigo, where he remained from the 28th of that month until the 17th of the following August. He was then appointed rector at Aniwa, where he remained from August 20 to July 3, 1895, when he was transferred to Morrison. From there he was appointed to his present position, of which he took charge August 14, 1896.

St. Lawrence's Church, Franklin, Wis.

IT was in the year 1862 that the Bohemian congregation of St. Lawrence was first organized at Franklin, Kewaunee County, Wisconsin. At this time a small church was built of logs which, though supplying the immediate wants of the Catholics attending it, was roughly constructed and was very meagerly furnished. When first used for divine services the building was without siding, plastering or floor, and it appears that it remained in about this condition until early in the seventies, until which time, also, it had but one small altar. On September 23, 1864, however, a resident pastor was sent to Franklin in the person of the Rev. Augustin Lang, who, owing to sickness, was unable at that time to bear the hardships attending a missionary life. Of course there was no such thing as a parsonage at that time, so he was compelled to take up his residence in the family of one of the parishioners. After Father Lang's pastorate terminated in 1867, the parish was from that time until 1882 without a resident pastor. It was visited, however, occasionally by different priests, some of whom were enabled from time to time to make slight improvements to what little property there was. Among such improvement was the erection of a rough building as a parsonage, which was commenced in 1876. In 1877 a floor was put into the church, and in August, 1882, an altar was donated to the parish by the missionary priest Father A. A. Cipin. The next pastor to take up his residence at Franklin was the Rev. Adalbert Kristan, who remained from February, 1883, until February, 1887. He was succeeded by the present rector, the Rev. V. Z. Kozelka. The congregation of St. Lawrence consists at this time of one hundred and twenty-seven families. Of societies to which the members belong, there are, a St. George's B. R. C. S. of the United States, thirty-four members, Jos. Mazanec, president; St. George's B. R. C. S. of Wisconsin, thirty-six members, Christoph Hruska, president; St. Aloysius B. R. C. S. of Wisconsin, twenty-one members, Mathias Pribyl, president; Society of the Sacred Heart, with one hundred and sixty-three members; Society of the Infancy of Jesus for Pagan Children, fifty-six members; Christian Mothers' Society of St. Ann and of the Rosary, one hundred and thirty-seven members.

St. Lawrence's Church, Franklin, Wis.

The pastor of St. Lawrence at Franklin also attends another mission in the Town of Montpelier, the church of which is dedicated to St. Wenceslaus. The history of this mission and church of St. Wenceslaus really dates from 1873, in which year the Bohemian families in the northwest part of the town of Montpelier obtained permission from the late Bishop Melcher to establish a Catholic church in that vicinity. In the selection of a site, however, there was such a lack of unanimity that it became impossible to immediately arrive at any satisfactory decision. One for instance desired a location at Pilsen, a point too far remote from the homes of the Bohemians living to the northwest to be available for them. The majority ruled, however, and the church of St. Wenceslaus was erected on its present site. At a later period, in the year 1874, the minority asked the late administrator of the diocese, Father Daems, for permission to establish a Bohemian Catholic church at Pilsen and as he was unaware of the fact that one had already been erected for the Bohemians but a mile and a quarter from that place, he gave his consent, and so the church was built, and the mission of St. Mary of Seven Dolors established at that place. This again created somewhat of a disturbance among the Bohemian Catholic settlers in the southwest part of the town of Montpelier, and so, in 1890, some members again withdrew from the mission of St. Mary and organized the third small mission of St. Anna, which is composed of sixteen families.

Now the congregation of St. Wenceslaus was established by the Rt. Rev. Joseph Melcher, D. D., Bishop of Green Bay, on the sixth day of October, 1873. During the year following a frame church was built and blessed by the Rev. George Brunner, then rector of Kewaunee. The congregation is composed of thirty-six families, all of whom are Bohemian. Services are held at this mission on every third Sunday or holydays. There are in the way of Catholic organizations connected with this mission St. John the Baptist Society R. C. B. S. of the United States, with twenty-three members; Holy Rosary Society, with forty members, and St. Joseph's Society for Catholic Families, which has seventeen members.

Rev. V. Z. Kozelka.

The mission of St. Wenceslaus was attended regularly from Luxemburg until 1882; from then until 1887 it was visited by the Polish priests established at Eaton and afterwards from Franklin. The people of this congregation are very much devoted to the interests of their religion and on occasions when the priests are unable to be present, services are conducted by Mr. Jacob Wavrunek. The church of St. Wenceslaus is a frame building 45x25 feet. The interior is richly decorated with three altars, the Way of the Cross and statues of saints. It is also equipped with a handsome baptismal font and numerous costly vestments.

The mission of St. Mary of the Seven Dolors, in Kewaunee County, is five miles distant from Franklin, from which place it is attended. It was established by the Rev. Fathers Daems, Administrator of the Diocese of Green Bay in 1874. The church was built during the next year and blessed in 1877, by the Rev. Father John Videnka of Luxemburg. Services are held in this church on every third Sunday in the month or feasts of obligation. The congregation is composed of twenty-five families, all of whom are Bohemian.

The Rev. Wenceslas Zigmund Kozelka was born on July 10, 1853, at Karthaus Waldic, near Ticin, Bohemia. Having acquired an ordinary education, he pursued a study of the classics, philosophy and theology at Koenig-Graetz and Prague. Before entering the priesthood, he was for some time an officer in the Austrian army, but was finally ordained on August 29, 1879. He came to the United States on July 5, 1887, and was appointed rector of St. Lawrence's congregation at Franklin on the 22d of the same month. During his administration at this church he has made numerous improvements to the property at Franklin, among other things rebuilding the parsonage and increasing its accommodations. He also, between the years 1892 and 1894, caused the erection of a handsome solid brick church at that place, which occupies an area of 106x50 feet, the plans and specifications being furnished by Mr. John Paulu, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

St. Nicholas' Church, Freedom, Wis.

PREVIOUS to the year 1845, the present town of Freedom in Outagamie County, Wisconsin, was but thinly settled, the entire population at that time being composed of non-Catholics. Then came Mr. Nicholas Juli, who purchased a farm, on which he set apart and finally donated the land whereon the Catholic church property now stands. Soon after, other Catholics located in the vicinity of Freedom, among them being Martin Van Dyke, Michael and John Roche, John Sanders, John Ermes, John Garvey and his sons, William, John, Michael, James and Patrick; John, Patrick and Timothy McCormick, Patrick Coffey and sons, William and Patrick Monahan and others, including a number of Dutch and German families. These people were compelled, for some considerable time, to attend church at Little Chute, which was between seven and eight miles distant from Freedom; otherwise, they but rarely saw a priest, though Father Van den Broek, then residing at Little Chute, was always willing to go to them when needed.

It was about the year 1850 or 1851 that Father Nuyts took up his temporary residence at Freedom, from whence he attended the mission at Center. He remained but a year, yet during that short time succeeded in building a small, frame church, the first erected at that point. After the departure of Father Nuyts, the Catholics at Freedom were regularly attended by pastors from Little Chute, Father Dejonge visiting there from 1852 to 1853, Father Daems, from 1854 to 1855, Father Verhoeff in 1855, Father Mauclerc in 1856 and Father W. Peiffer from 1857 to 1860. In June of the latter year Father Gerhard Spierings took charge of the congregation as its first resident pastor, boarding for the time being in the family of Mr. John Ermes. This manly and benevolent priest at once set about the erection of a parsonage, and though hampered for want of means and by the scarcity of help—the mutterings of rebellion had taken substantial form—he, by personal effort and application, succeeded in completing the dwelling which he began occupying in the following year. It is unquestionably due to the strength of purpose displayed and moral influence exerted by Father Spierings that the subsequent prosperity of the parish was largely due, and when he severed his connection with the people of Freedom in 1864, to accept the pastorate at New London, he did so regretted and respected by all. After the departure of Father Spierings, the Rev. Father De Gooy attended the parish as a mission, from Duck Creek. Some three months later, Father Van Luytelaar came as second resident pastor. He in 1865 established a parochial school at Freedom, conducting it himself with the assistance of one male teacher. He also built the foundation for the present stone church, for the erection of which Father A. Verberk worked zealously in 1867-68 and Father W. Wilkins in 1868-69. When Father De Wilt assumed the pastorate as a mission from Duck Creek, he found the congregation laboring under serious pecuniary difficulties. He at once set about correcting this untoward condition of affairs, meeting with such admirable success that when Father John Verstegen took possession in 1870, he not only found the debt entirely liquidated, but a snug little sum in the treasury besides. Thus emboldened, he immediately set to work, completed the church, to which he added a steeple, and built the present brick school house, of which the school Sisters of Notre Dame took charge on October 21, 1879, the enrollment at that time numbering ninety-seven children. Father Verstegen also bought an organ for the church, organized a choir and succeeded in bringing the parish to a high state of spiritual excellence. During his stay at Freedom Messrs. John and George Brady and M. McCann of this parish began their studies, at the conclusion of which they were ordained priests. In 1882, Father Verstegen was appointed pastor of the Immaculate Conception Church at De Pere, being succeeded at Freedom by the Rev. J. A. Geissler, who, however, was shortly followed by the Rev. Father Deuermeyer, who remained until the summer of 1883, when Father P. Lochmann became pastor. This zealous priest found an ample field in which to exert his energies. During his residence at Freedom, which continued until 1891, he decorated the interior of the church, built a new and commodious, solid brick parsonage, added a story to the school house, erected a brick residence for the School Sisters, purchased a pipe organ, new altars, and stained windows for the church, besides making numerous other valuable improvements. Fathers H. Huitink and P. Van Susteren celebrated their first Mass under him, as worthy sons of Freedom. Father Lochmann was succeeded as pastor by the present incumbent, the Rev. J. A. Selbach, who assumed the duties in the fall of 1891. During Father Selbach's pastorate, the church and parsonage have been provided with steam heat, the buildings repaired and improved, the cemetery embellished and an artesian well added to the church property. A stone addition to the church 40x64 feet, together with a basement chapel, is in the course of erection. The parish of Freedom is now a model one, both temporally and spiritually, which much desired condition is owing both to the zealousness of its pastors and the kindly and liberal disposition of the people. The parish now consists of two hundred families, and the school has an attendance of over two hundred. The Ladies' Altar Society, Young Ladies' Sodality, Guardian Angel Society, Holy Childhood Society and Catholic Order of Foresters, of which N. Schommer is chief-ranger, are all flourishing Catholic organizations connected with St. Nicholas church.

St. Nicholas' Church, School and Parsonage, Freedom.

Rev. J. A. Selbach.

The Rev. J. A. Selbach, who has been resident pastor at Freedom since the fall of 1891, was born on August 22, 1860, near Cologne, Germany. He first studied at Frielingsdorf, Germany, and afterwards at St. Trond and Louvain, Belgium. He was ordained in 1883, at Simpelveld, Holland, by Bishop Laurent, coming during the same year to America. Here he at once became associated with the Diocese of Green Bay, his first appointment being to the pastorate at Robinsonville, Brown County. He was next pastor of St. John's Church at Green Bay, where he also served for several months as secretary to the Bishop. He then went to Kingston, in Green Lake County, and thence to Wausaukee and later to Coleman.

St. Mary's Church at Freedom has an English and German congregation which receives regular attendance from the resident pastor of St. Nicholas.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Glenmore, Wis.

THE first settlers to come to Glenmore, or in that vicinity, are said to have located there as early as 1850. Those who were Catholics among that number were provided with no particular place of worship at that time, but were attended by visiting priests, who said Mass in the private houses scattered around the settlement. The first Mass is said to have been held at the residence of Mr. O'Leary, in the year already given, the celebrant being the Rev. Father Anderledy. In this manner the spiritual wants of the Catholic residents of Glenmore were attended to until the year 1874, when a church was erected. This structure was used continuously for services until 1886, when it was torn down and entirely rebuilt. Of pastors attending the congregation during this period, the parish records give the following list: the Rev. Fathers John O'Brien, 1874; John Wernert and L. Cornelis, 1875; R. Scholter and Rossochowitz, 1876; Wm. De Kelver, 1877, and Father Herbert in 1878. The Rev. A. J. Abb was appointed first resident pastor. He remained for thirteen months and was then succeeded by the Rev. A. Gardthaus and he in turn by the Rev. Fathers H. Jaspers, A. F. Masschelein and G. J. Pellegrin. Then, for a couple of years, the congregation was attended as a mission from Pine Grove, by the Rev. Father Gratza, and then again placed in charge of a resident pastor in the person of the Rev. Francis Tulley, who was succeeded by the present rector, the Rev. Max Oswald. The congregation of the Immaculate Conception is now limited to some thirty-seven families of mixed nationalities, the majority, however, being German and Irish. At one time this congregation was much larger, but the Polish element which constituted the greater portion of it withdrew and built a church of their own at Pine Grove, since which time the congregation at Glenmore has been limited to the number as stated.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Glenmore, Wis.

The congregation of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, at Stark, is attended as a mission from Glenmore. The church at this place was built about eleven years ago by members of the congregations at Cooperstown and West Morrison, who were thus enabled to secure a place of worship nearer their homes than those at which they had previously been compelled to attend.

The Rev. Max Oswald, present rector of the Immaculate congregation at Glenmore, was born in Bavaria at Richnachmuendt, near Regen, on the 11th of October, 1871. Having acquired his earlier education in the schools of his native country he came to the United States and on March 2, 1889, entered the Seminary at Mount Calvary, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, where he completed a commercial course. He then went to St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he completed his studies in philosophy and theology, being ordained to the priesthood September 19, 1897, by the Rt. Rev. S. G. Messmer in the Cathedral at Green Bay. After ordination he paid a visit to his native country, where he celebrated his first Mass. Returning to the United States, he was on November 25, 1897, appointed to the rectorate of St. Mary's Immaculate Conception at Glenmore.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Grand Rapids, Wis.

THE congregation of SS. Peter and Paul, at Grand Rapids, Wood County, Wisconsin, consisting of French, English and German, was first organized in 1857. Of the numerous pastors having charge at different times of these people, the Rev. Jacobus Stehle was the first of record, although no dates are given by which to denote the length of his pastorate. He was succeeded by the Rev. A. J. David, and he, too, successively, by the Rev. Fathers N. Hens, G. H. Spierings, John Gleeson, F. McDonnell, F. Tanguay, who built the present church edifice, William De Kelver, Charles Beyerle, who built a new school house, and the present rector, the Rev. W. F. Van Roosmalen. The present congregation of SS. Peter and Paul's is comprised of about three hundred families, or one thousand one hundred and forty souls. The Catholic parochial school connected with this congregation was opened by Father Beyerle in the parochial residence in 1886, and was continued there until the completion of the new school house some three years ago. This school is in charge of four Sisters from the Notre Dame Convent at Milwaukee, the average attendance of scholars being one hundred and fifty. Of Catholic organizations in this parish, there are the Catholic order of Hibernians, Catholic Order of Foresters, an Altar Society under the title of Our Lady of the Seven Dolores, and Young Ladies' Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, title Immaculate Conception. These two, the Altar and Young Ladies' Societies, were organized by the present rector of the congregation. Altdorf is a small and inconsequential mission attached to this parish.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Grand Rapids, Wis.

St. Joseph's Church, Altdorf, Mission of Grand Rapids.

Immaculate Conception Church, Greenville, Wis.

THERE is no written or published record extant of the exact date as to when the first religious services were held at Greenville. It is, however, accepted as a fact, emphasized by the combined testimony of a number of the earliest settlers in that section, that the first Mass was said at that place sometime during the summer of 1855. The celebrant on that occasion was either Father Kane or Father Fusseder, the services being held at the home of a Mr. Woods. Somewhat later, when a district school house had been built in the settlement, the same, being centrally located, was used for a considerable period by the Catholics as a place of worship. In this building, also, the first Holy Communion of children was held. During the interim, however, a church was gradually nearing its completion, and as soon as tenable the new structure was taken possession of by the Catholics. This church was consecrated by Bishop Melcher, the resident pastor at that time being Father Seubert. Other priests who assisted at the ceremony were Fathers Nussbaum and Wilkens. The trials and privations experienced by the early settlers at Greenville, as well as the priests who attended them, have become a part of the history of this section. At times it was almost impossible to obtain the services of a pastor, and one of the earlier settlers, Mr. Michael Wolter, in reference to the matter, states that he has on several occasions made painful and hazardous journeys through the woods in his endeavor to secure the attendance of a priest. On such occasions, the Father would generally come on horseback, carrying with him the articles necessary for supplying the functions of his holy office, these being tied up in a grain bag and slung across the back of his horse. After services were over, a collection would be taken up, the amount of which, no matter how small, was thankfully received by the missionary. Of pastors who visited these people during those earlier years were the Rev. Fathers Kane, Fusseder, De Becke and Dale or Dehl.

The parish of Greenville was established during the month of June, 1865. The first regular pastor to attend after that time was the Rev. Father A. Seubert, who was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers Guenterscheid, Wenning, who, in 1872, blessed a bell purchased by the parish, and Father Hellweger. After the latter, Father Buschle attended Greenville as a mission, as did his successor, the Rev. Father Mosle. Then once again the parish was given its regular pastor in the person of Father Rhode, whose successors were the Rev. Fathers

Immaculate Conception Church, Greenville, Wis.

Lau, Froehlich and the present incumbent, the Rev. A. H. Huitink. In connection with the earlier history of this place, it may be well to state that in 1858 Mr. Andrew Strupp made a gift of three acres of land for church and cemetery purposes. Mr. Mathias Knappstein also purchased an acre and gave it to the parish for the same purpose. The church was built in 1865, one hundred and thirty-one persons subscribing $1,211.75 towards the cost of its erection. The present congregation of the Immaculate Conception at Greenville consists of forty-eight families, and the parochial school connected with this parish is conducted by two Sisters of St. Francis, who have charge of between fifty and sixty scholars. An Altar Society for Married Ladies and a Young Ladies' Sodality are also connected with this congregation.

One of the oldest Catholic settlers in the vicinity of Greenville is Mr. Mathias Knapstein, who was born in Alfter, Prussia, March 21, 1825. There he lived for a number of years, following the vocation of farmer and harness-maker. In 1855, accompanied by his wife and children, he came to the United States, arriving at New York on March 9th of that year. He at once started west, arriving in Outagamie County on April 18 following, and has remained on his farm in that county until the present time, an honored and highly esteemed member of the community. Mr. Knapstein has also been one of the foremost in his duties as a Catholic to the church, enduring many trials and hardships for the sake of bringing the parish into its present satisfactory and flourishing condition.

The parish property at this time consists of a substantial and comfortable frame church, Sisters' house and school house. The parsonage, having become rather old and somewhat the worse for wear, will undoubtedly be replaced in the near future by a neat and altogether more appropriate building. There is a beautifully arranged cemetery connected with the parish.

Another long-time resident of Greenville, who has also been an active worker in behalf of the church, is Mr. Adolph Loschmidt, who was born in Bohemia, September 30, 1846. He removed with his parents to America some few years later, arriving at Baltimore in the month of May, 1855. From there they moved to St. Louis, where his mother died. He then went with his father to New Orleans, the intention of the former being to return to his native country, but there being no means for transportation available at the time, they drifted north, arriving at Greenville, Wisconsin, late in the fall of the same year, where they stayed for about eighteen months. They then removed to Terre Haute, Indiana, where, when of competent age, young Loschmidt learned the coopers' trade. During the Civil War he served over three years as a Union soldier, first as a member of the 35th Indiana Volunteer Infantry and for over two years and three months in the 8th Indiana

Rev. A. H. Huitink.

Battery. Returning from the army, he worked at his trade until the spring of 1873, when he and his father again came to Wisconsin and Greenville, where he has continuously resided for the past twenty-five years. Mr. Loschmidt was married to Fanny Stoehr May 25, 1874, and has been the father of thirteen children, eleven of whom, six boys and five girls, are living.

The Rev. A. H. Huitink was born September 30, 1849, in the province of Gelderland, Holland, where he lived with his parents until nineteen years of age. He then served in the army for two years, after which he returned to his parents for a short period, remaining with them until he began his studies for the priesthood.

Mr. Mathias Knapstein.

After the death of his parents in 1878, he came to America, where he continued his studies, being finally ordained to the priesthood in 1890 by the Right Rev. Bishop Vertin at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, Wisconsin. For two months after ordination he had charge of the souls in St. Mary's Church at South Kaukauna and afterwards was sent to Neshkoro, in Marquette County, from whence he attended seven missions. On September 1, 1892, he was placed in charge of St. Mary's congregation at Greenville, to which St. Patrick's at Stephensville is attached as a mission.

According to the records of that parish, the congregation of St. Patrick's at Stephensville, Outagamie County, was organized in 1860 by the missionary priest Father Joseph R. Hermon. The church at that mission was dedicated in 1867, the first Mass being read after its completion by Father Hermon. The first regular pastor who attended this congregation was Father Andrew Seubert, now of Menasha, and at that time resident pastor at Greenville. The congregation at the present time consists of about two hundred members. The Ladies' Altar Society, an active Catholic organization connected with St. Patrick's, has for its officers Mrs. P. Newcomb, president, Mrs. T. Kelly, secretary, and Mrs. W. Ludwig, treasurer. There is also a Young Ladies' Society, of which Miss Rettie Casey is president, Miss Catherine Whittlin, secretary, and Miss Annie Prunty, treasurer.

St. Mary's Church, Hilbert, Wis.

THE first meeting for the purpose of devising means by which the regular attendance of a priest might be obtained, was held by the Catholics at Hilbert, Calumet County, Wisconsin, on June 16, 1889, and on the 13th of November following, permission to build a church was granted by the Right Rev. F. X. Katzer. Work on the church began in May, 1891, and the building was completed in November of the same year and dedicated by Bishop Messmer on June 20, 1893. Regular weekly Sunday services commenced on July 23d of the same year, conducted by the Rev. A. J. Verberk, who began at once, most willingly assisted by the people, purchasing seats, carpets, communion railing, stations of the cross, side altars and a baptismal font. In 1894 they commenced to build a parsonage, which was finished during the following year. There are now about seventy families, or three hundred souls, in the congregation. A parochial school, established in November, 1892, is in charge of a lay teacher, and has a regular attendance of about fifty scholars. The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin have established a branch of that order in this parish, of which Joseph Marx is president; Martin M. Gavin, vice-president; Andrew Gehl, secretary, and Theodore Runte, treasurer. There is a Ladies' Altar Society and Young Ladies' Sodality.

Father Verberk, rector of this congregation, was born January 17, 1832, near the market place of Uden, a village in the province of North Brabant, Kingdom of Holland.

Anthony Joseph Verberk, the subject of this sketch, after acquiring a common and parochial school education in his native place, was sent to college, where he completed a six years' course in five years and four months. But his studies terminated for awhile, owing to the unexpected and severe illness of his father, which induced him to come to the assistance of his elder brother in carrying on the furniture manufactory established by the father. Then he followed a regular course in philosophy for two years under a private tutor.

In 1853 the Verberk family emigrated from their native land, and after a sea voyage of forty-one days landed in New York. On May 10th they went to Cleveland, Ohio, remaining in that city till 1856. In October of that year they removed to Green Bay, Wisconsin, but soon after returned to Cleveland. In 1861, at the earnest request of his friend, Father Spierings, at that time pastor of Little Chute, young Verberk resumed his studies for the priesthood, and having entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, he completed the regular course of theology and the other necessary branches of learning under the Rev. Dr. M. Heiss, and was finally ordained to the priesthood on St. John's Day, December 27, 1863, at the Cathedral in Milwaukee, by the Right Rev. John Martin Henni.

St. Mary's Church, Hilbert, Wis.

His first appointment was as temporary pastor of the Catholic congregation at Theresa, Dodge County, after which he officiated successfully at Freedom, Outagamie County, remaining there till March, 1865. Then he was appointed to the pastorate at Little Chute and the missions of Buchanan, Apple Creek and Wrightstown. At Little Chute he built a new parsonage, and later, in 1868, completed the church at that place. In 1869 Father Verberk was transferred to the church at Appleton, where he not only did much in the way of improving the parish and reducing the outstanding debt, but was foremost in establishing a parochial school at that place. This school was given in charge of Sisters, the attendance from the very first averaging over one hundred pupils.

In the latter part of June, 1872, Father Verberk started on a visit to his native country, where he arrived the first week in August. Here he had a severe attack of illness, which interfered with his intended journey through the Holy Land. It was so long, in fact, before he became convalescent, that his journey was brought to an end the first week in November, when he started for America, arriving in Wisconsin at the beginning of February, 1873. He then went to La Crosse, where he was placed in charge of St. Michael's congregation at Baraboo, and the mission of Durward's Glen. In May, 1874, he was appointed rector of St. Peter's, Eagle Point, Chippewa County, where there was a flourishing German congregation with a Catholic school. Here he would have been pleased to remain, but was recalled to the diocese of Green Bay in July, 1873, and at once placed in temporary charge of the congregations at Wrightstown and Kaukauna. Three months later he was transferred to the pastorate at St. Augustine's at Chilton, where he built two new churches, one for the English-speaking people and one for the Germans.

Rev. J. Verberk.

In the spring of 1881, Father Verberk was again sent to Little Chute.

Here, in 1888, by special order of the Bishop, a new substantial school building was erected, at a cost of about three thousand dollars, and a Catholic school started in charge of Sisters; besides, a number of improvements had been made in the last few years, and all paid for, only the old debt yet to be canceled. In the fall of 1889 Father Verberk returned to Chilton.

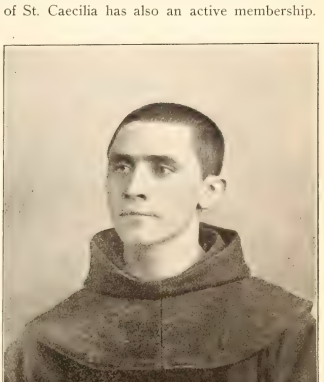
Upon arriving there, he found that during his absence many improvements had been made to the parish property, most conspicuous among which was a costly new school house; but there was also a heavy debt to be satisfied, while a marked spirit of contention existed among the members of the congregation. Here was a field in every way worthy the efforts of a good pastor, who at once set to work to harmonize the untoward conditions, and bring about that good spirit of unanimity which had heretofore prevailed among the people. He, therefore, busied himself in straightening out the accounts and paying off the debts of the parish, at the same time making many needed repairs, and trying especially to provide a good Christian education for the little ones.

But, whilst he was doing all this with moderate success, the Reverend Pastor was attacked with a bronchial affection, which obtained so strong a hold upon him that in the summer of 1892 he was compelled to apply to the Bishop for leave to retire. Having resigned the offices of Dean, Procurator, etc., he still retained all the functions and privileges of the diocese intact. From Chilton he went to De Pere to live; but finding, after nine months' residence there, that his health was not improving, he then sought relief by moving farther into the country, and located in May, 1893, at Holland, Brown County, where he still resides.

Having spent more than thirty years in the missionary fields of this State, but enjoying, at present, a comparative relaxation, for the last three years Father Verberk has had charge of the mission at Hilbert Junction, building up this young and struggling congregation until such time as the Bishop should see fit to give to it a resident pastor.

St. Stanislaus' Church, Hofa Park, Wis.

THE congregation of St Stanislaus at Hofa Park, Shawano County, Wisconsin, was established in 1884 by Rev. Schoell and by his successor, the Rev. L. Pescinski. He was succeeded in the pastorate at this place by the Rev. T. Maczynski, the Very Rev. Erasmus Sobocinski, O. S. F., the Very Rev. Hieronymus Schneider, O. S. F., the Rev. Stanislaus Jeka, O. S. F., the Rev. A. Lopatto, and the present rector, the Rev. Francis Manel, O. S. F. The congregation at the present time consists of one hundred and thirty-four families. This parish owns a school building which, owing to the inability of the congregation to support a teacher, has been leased out to the county for a district school. There are two Catholic organizations in this congregation. The Society of the Holy Rosary, for both sexes, is represented in the male division by Felix Ketpinski, president; Francis Kurowski, secretary, and Michael Schmidt, treasurer; while the female section of this organization has for its officers, Domicila Gatzka, president; Mary Adamska, secretary, and Anna Cholewinska, treasurer. The Society of St. Caecilia has also an active membership. In addition to these, Bishop Messmer has recently approved two other organizations in this parish: The Confraternity of the Sacred Heart, or the Apostleship of Prayer, and the Third Order of St. Francis of Assissi.



Rev. Francis Manel.

The Rev. Francis Manel, O. S. F., present rector of St. Stanislaus parish, was born in Poland in the year 1864, came to America in 1887, and entered the Order of St. Francis of Assissi at Pulaski, Oconto County, Wisconsin, in 1889. There he finished his novitiate in 1890, and made solemn profession in 1893. He studied his humaniora, philosophy and theology with the Franciscan Fathers of the Province of the Sacred Heart of Jesus in Teutopolis and Quincy, Illinois, and St. Louis, Missouri, and was ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. Archbishop John Joseph Kain on the 12th of June, 1897.

St. Francis Seraph's Church, Holland, Wis.

THE Parish of St. Francis of Assissi was founded in 1848 by seven Dutch families, who brought with them from Holland their own priest. For some months following, this priest, a Franciscan Father named Gothard, celebrated Mass in the open air and under a tree, which also supported the part of a residence. As matters progressed, a small log hut was erected which answered the dual purpose of church and pastoral residence. In the meantime, the Hollanders had purchased forty acres of land, which they at once deeded over to the Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni, of Milwaukee, for church purposes. Later, when the population had greatly increased and the country more thoroughly settled, the land was parceled off into lots and sold, the proceeds enabling the people to build a frame church 100x50 feet. Father Gothard remained at Holland for two years, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Fidelis Spierings, who during his residence built a frame priest house. Then followed as pastors Fathers Mauritius Hensler, Luitelaar, Bonaventura de Goey, during whose pastorate a new church, costing $20,000, and a substantial school building were erected. His successor, the Rev. Father Lemagie, built another large house, nearer to the church, which served both as school and Sisters' residence. Three Sisters who came to Holland from Silver Lake, Manitowoc County, Wis., in 1871, are still teaching there. The next pastor was the Rev. William Takken, a very zealous priest and successful worker. During his residence of nine years, he built a substantial brick parsonage, remodeled the church and laid out the cemetery of four acres. His successor, the Rev. C. De Louw, the present pastor, assumed the pastorate September 2, 1884. He also built an addition to the church which serves as a winter chapel, and a new Sisters' house, besides adding new furniture and furnishings to the interior of the church which cost in the neighborhood of $5,500. The present congregation numbers some two hundred families and the school has an attendance of one hundred and eighty-five scholars. In the congregation of St. Francis are also such Catholic organizations as the St. Francis Society, St. Joseph's Society, Sacred Heart Society, and a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

St. Francis Seraph's Church, Holland, Wis.

Rev. C. De Louw.

The Rev. Father C. De Louw is a native of Holland, where he was born August 27, 1839. When but six years of age he began attending the public school near his home, and three years later entered the French College there, from which he graduated with high honors after completing a four years' course. He then for four or five years worked in his father's cloth factory, at the end of which period he resumed his studies, attending the gymnasium at Jumet, a French village in Belgium, and there took a classical course preparatory to entering college at Enghien, where he studied philosophy and theology. He remained there from 1860 till 1866, being on June 6 of the latter year ordained to the priesthood at Bruges, and until 1871 he served as a missionary priest in various cities in Belgium and Holland. He then came to America, arriving in Green Bay November 16, 1871. His first appointment in this country was to the mission of Wrightstown in Brown County, where he shortly afterwards organized a parish, becoming its pastor, which position he retained for two years. During this pastorate he also established the missions of East Wrightstown as well as attending the mission at Sniderville. In 1873 he was transferred to Robinsonville, from whence he occasionally attended the missions at Dykesville, Thiry-Daems, Marchant, Little Sturgeon Bay and Delwich. He resumed his charge at Wrightstown in 1874, remaining until 1875, when he removed to Green Bay, where he was given the pastorate of the Holland Church in that city. In 1878 he was transferred to Little Chute, Outagamie County, where he had charge of St. John's Nepomuk Church. He then, at the urgent request of his former parishioners, returned to Green Bay, where he ministered to their spiritual wants until September 1, 1884, when be became pastor of the Church of St. Francis at Holland. In 1876 Father De Louw was appointed a member of the Bishop's Council, to which he still belongs.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Hortonville, Wis.

PRIOR to October 7, 1897, the congregation of SS. Peter and Paul, at Hortonville, Outagamie County, Wisconsin, was attended as a mission by the resident pastor at New London. Before the year 1861 the Catholics residing at and in the vicinity of this place were attended as a mission by pastors from Oshkosh and Appleton. In that year, however, a frame church was erected at Hortonville, and from that time until 1870 the resident priest at New London made regular visits to that place. Then another change was made, and from 1870 until 1879 the spiritual wants of these people were supplied by the pastor from Greenville. In the fall of the same year, affairs returned to their original condition, when this congregation came again under the administration of the pastor at New London.

The congregation of SS. Peter and Paul's, which is composed for a greater part of people of German nationality, consists of about eighty families. Services are held at the mission regularly on every other Sunday. The present church at Hortonville was built by the Rev. Father Gasper in 1892. It is a pleasing and substantial building, brick veneered, and well furnished inside.

On October 17, 1897, the Rev. Joseph Hemmer, last stationed at Whitelaw, Manitowoc County, was sent to Hortonville as first resident pastor. Some twenty-eight or thirty years ago, a little frame parsonage had been built by the congregation at Hortonville, with a view to obtaining a resident priest there, but this hope, it seems, was not to be fulfilled until quite recently. In the spring of 1898 a new priest's house was built.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Hortonville, Wis.

There are three Catholic organizations in this parish, there being an Altar Society, Christian Mothers' Society, and a Sacred Heart League. At present there is no parochial school; but it is to be hoped that after some years this will also be accomplished. For the present, the congregation at Weyauwega, Waupaca County, is attended by the resident priest from Hortonville. Mass is said there once a month on Sundays, and on week days about two or three times a month.

The German mission of SS. Peter and Paul's, Weyauwega, Waupaca County, is attended by the pastor from Hortonsville. Formerly the congregation for some considerable period held its services in the same church as did the members of the mother parish, the building at that time being located near to the village of North Point. Over a quarter of a century ago, however, this structure was destroyed by fire, and since that time the congregation at Weyauwega has maintained a church of its own. This little mission at the present time consists of some thirty families, all of whom are in a fairly prosperous condition.

The Rev. Joseph Hemmer was born on June 4, 1870, in Quidersbach, Rhenish Bavaria. As soon as old enough he attended the Latin School at Landstuhl, a small city of about four thousand inhabitants, remaining for three years. In October, 1884, he spent a year at the Latin School in Speyer, after which he came to the United States to St. Joseph's College at Teutopolis, Effingham County, Illinois, where he arrived in September, 1885. Here he finished his classical course in 1888, after which he began the studies of philosophy and theology at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee. This occupied the period extending from 1889 to 1893, and on June 24 of the latter year he was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary. His first appointment was to Marinette, on July 9, 1893. He was the assistant to the Rev. J. J. Fox, at the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, at which he remained until September 8, 1894. From that date until January 13, 1895, he was temporarily in charge of St. Mary's congregation at Ahnapee. He was next appointed rector of St. John's Church at Seymour, Wisconsin, with the missions at Black Creek and Isaar attached. To these he ministered until removed to take charge of the pastorate at Whitelaw, from where he was transferred to Hortonville, October 17, 1897.

Rev. Jos. Hemmer.

St. Casimir's Church, Hull, Wis.

THIS congregation was established in 1871 by the Rev. Joseph Dombrowski, rector of Polonia Polish congregation in Portage County, Wisconsin. Hull, where St. Casimir's is situated, is about four miles from Stevens Point and nine miles from Polonia. At this place Father Dombrowski built a little chapel, attending it regularly once each month from his pastorate. He continued to thus minister to the spiritual wants of these people until the fall of 1873,

St. Casimir's Church, Hull, Wis.

St. Casimir's School.

when the Rev. Josephat Walun was appointed first resident pastor. He remained until October, 1878, moving afterwards to Stevens Point, where he died in November, 1881. Father Walun built the present church during his pastorate in 1877. His successor was the Rev. J. Czarnowski, who took charge of the pastorate in October, 1879, and remained until May, 1886. He completed the interior work and finishing of the church, among other things purchasing three altars for which he paid $1,000. After Father Czarnowski resigned the congregation of St. Casimir's was for seven months without a pastor. Then the Rev. Lucas Pescinski took charge on November 28, 1886, remaining until April 15, 1895. He built the present parochial school during the year 1888 at a cost of $3,500. The enrollment now numbers about one hundred and eighty scholars, who are in charge of Sisters of St. Francis of Assisi. After Father Pescinski the Rev. Ladislaus Grabowski assumed the duties from April 15, 1895, to February, 1896. He died at Hull on the 25th of that month and is buried at Polonia. He was succeeded by the Rev. N. Kolasinski in

Rev. N. Kolasinski.

March, 1896, who is the present incumbent. Of Catholic societies in St. Casimir's congregation there are: the Holy Rosary Society, one hundred and fifty members, organized October, 1879; St. Casimir's Benevolent Society, forty members, organized 1888, and the Apostleship of Prayer, three hundred and fifty members, organized 1891. The congregation at the present time consists of eighteen Polish, four German and two English families, making a total of over nine hundred souls in all.

The Rev. Nicodemus Kolasinski, the present pastor of St. Casimir's congregation at Hull, was born on the 14th of September, 1846, at Mielec, in Galicia, Austria. His classical studies were acquired at the Gymnasium of Tarnow and Cracow and those in philosophy and theology at the University of Vienna, Austria. He was ordained to the priesthood on the 18th of September, 1875, by His Eminence Luigi Morichini, Cardinal and Archbishop of Bologna, Italy. From 1875 to 1878 he was assistant pastor in Gross-Siegharts, of the diocese of St. Polten, Austria. From 1878 to 1884 he was rector of the parish of Schoenau, near Vienna; from 1884 to 1893 rector at Berea and Toledo, in the diocese of Cleveland, Ohio, and from 1893 to 1896 pastor of the congregations at Amherst Junction and Hull in the diocese of Green Bay.

Immaculate Conception Church, Humboldt, Wis.

THE Flemish and Walloon congregation of the Immaculate Conception, at Humboldt, Brown County, Wisconsin, was established over a quarter of a century ago, at which time also the first church was erected by the Catholic settlers at that place. This edifice, when completed, was dedicated in honor of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The first pastor to have charge of the parish was the Rev. G. T. Pellegrin, who was followed successively by the Revs. E. E. Leccia, A. J. Drees, P. Cautereels, A. Vollebregt, B. Hoevenaars, and the present incumbent, the Rev. P. Van Heyster. The church at Humboldt is of brick, whilst the pastoral dwelling is a frame building.

Immaculate Conception Church, Humboldt, Wis.

There is a Walloon mission, which is also attended from the Immaculate Conception, which was dedicated in honor of St. Hubert, and is located a distance of two miles from the mother parish. Another mission attended by Father Van Heyster is St. Joseph's English Church, which is located at Eaton, a settlement lying some five and a half miles from Humboldt. These congregations were established at about the same time as was that at Humboldt. The three congregations combined consist of about one hundred and fifteen families, the majority of whom are in such limited circumstances, that at neither place has it thus far been possible to establish and maintain a parochial school. Services are held at St. Hubert's mission three times a month, and at St. Joseph's once a month. Each one of the congregations maintains a cemetery of its own.

Father Van Heyster was born in Venroy, Holland, April 16, 1851. He acquired his classical education in the Franciscan College at Venroy, and, after completing the other necessary courses, was ordained to the priesthood at Dongen, on March 19, 1886. He came to America in 1891, and after affiliating with the Diocese of Green Bay, was appointed by Bishop Messmer to the pastorate at Humboldt, Wisconsin, in April, 1894.

Holy Trinity Church, Jericho, Wis.

THE German congregation of Holy Trinity at Jericho, Calumet County, Wisconsin, established January 26, 1871, was first attended by the Rev. Father Guillaume, on March 3, 1872. From that time until the latter part of 1876, the congregation was attended as a mission by the Rev. Father

Holy Trinity Church, Jericho, Wis.

Von der Thannen, resident pastor of East Brothertown. Two years later the Rev. H. Hellstern, belonging to the Diocese of Milwaukee, visited this place but remained only a month, as the congregation properly came under the jurisdiction of the Diocese of Green Bay. The next incumbent of this pastorate was the Rev. Father Praessar, who remained until 1880, his successor being the Rev. P. Gasper, who erected a new frame church at Jericho, which cost $2,464. In 1883 he was succeeded by the Rev. L. Spitzlberger, who maintained the pastorate until 1885. The present rector, the Rev. John W. Voorjan, succeeded him. Since assuming the pastorate Father Voorjan has made a number of improvements to the property, among other things, veneering the church, and providing the interior with new altars. A new sanctuary and sacristy were also added in 1890, and in 1895 the present two-story school building was erected.

The congregation of the Holy Trinity at the present time comprises eighty-four German and one Irish family, and the parochial school, which is in charge of Sisters of St. Agnes, has an atttendance of eighty-four children. There are in the way of Catholic organizations connected with Holy Trinity, the following: Sacred Heart of Jesus Society, Apostleship of Prayer, and Holy Rosary Society.

The Rev. John William Voorjan was born in the year 1830, in the province of Westphalia, Germany, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1865. For some time subsequent to ordination, he discharged his pastoral duties in Germany, and later removed to the United States, where he became attached to the Diocese of Green Bay.

Holy Cross Church, North Kaukauna, Wis.

IN the earlier days of this settlement the Catholic residents assembled at Little Chute for worship, where the zealous missionary, the Rev. T. J. Van den Broek, had long before established religion. Here for more than half a century the people came regularly to attend Divine service. As the settlement grew, the congregation also increased, so that it was but a little while before the more imposing structure erected later became inadequate to the demands put upon it, and making it necessary for the residents of Kaukauna to build a church of their own. In 1869 they obtained permission of Bishop Melcher of Green Bay to erect a Catholic chapel, but its consummation was delayed owing to the attitude taken by the Vicar-General and the pastor of Little Chute, who deemed the undertaking impracticable. At last, however, through almost ceaseless importuning, they obtained their end and gained the coveted consent. The rest was easy; bountiful donations flowed in from every quarter, willing hands were ever ready to aid and assist, until, on Friday, December 26, 1873, the once considered questionable project became an assured fact, and a fitting and appropriate temple was dedicated to

Holy Cross Church, Kaukauna, Wis.

Holy Cross Church, Kaukauna, Wis.
(Accepted Plans.)

Almighty God. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Father Stern, assisted by the Rev. J. Hackl, of Buchanan; F. Lemagie, of Hollandtown; F. Adelair, of Wrightstown, and Fathers Venturi and Ackley, of Menasha. Being as yet unable to support a resident priest, this mission was assigned to the Rev. J. E. Hackl, of Buchanan, a zealous priest who labored faithfully and well in the interest of the faith. Father Hackl resigned in 1876, and three months later the Rev. A. N. Buschle was appointed to the vacant charge, which in the meantime had been supplied by the Rev. Verberk. Here a new era began, for Father Buschle was a man of immense energy and progressive instincts. Thus, during his short incumbency from March 1, 1876, to May 1, 1877, a new parsonage was built and furnished, a cemetery donated, cleared and fenced, while a new and sweet-toned bell bedecked the church tower. To him also belongs the credit of starting the first parish school, a room being fitted up in the sacristy, where sixty-nine children received the benefits of education, he personally superintending the work, assisted by Miss Grignon as teacher. The records through these months number forty-five baptisms. Forty-seven baptisms mark the brief year's pastorate of the venerable J. Gauche, who followed, the schoolhouse also being completed during that time. On September 21, 1878, the Rev. J. Rohde assumed charge of the parish, since which time the interests of the people, both moral and material, have been heedfully guarded. With his coming the work of improving continued to progress; old debts were paid off, Franciscan Sisters were placed in charge of the school, two lots were purchased and the over-crowded school house enlarged and a Sisters' house erected. Then, in 1882, the church was enlarged to its present capacity and beautifully frescoed, and two years later a pipe organ costing $900 was placed in the building. But again the unexpected happened, for by 1885 the congregation had so rapidly increased that a separation became necessary; the families residing on the south side formed a new congregation and built a new church, Father Rohde attending it as a mission for six months. In 1886 the foundation of "Holy Cross School" was laid, the cost of the building completed being $9,000. Here four teachers of the "Dominican Order" of Racine are employed. The attendance numbers two hundred and sixty-five. In addition to the improvements mentioned, some handsome side altars have been added to the church at a cost of $500, while several statues, donated by zealous members, improve to a marked degree the general appearance of the interior. During Father Rohde's incumbency there have been one thousand seven hundred and five baptisms and forty-five conversions. The Sacrament of Confirmation has also been administered in the church on five different occasions. On May 3, 1880, Bishop Krautbauer confirmed sixty-seven applicants. On September 14, 1880, he again administered Confirmation to a hundred and one souls, and on October 8, 1888, Bishop F. Katzer confirmed seventy-seven, making a total of five hundred and fifty-five. Additional zest was lent to the interests of the parish in the confirmation of two additional classes of one hundred and forty-six and one hundred and sixty-four members respectively by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer, on June 26, 1892, and May 3, 1896. Five flourishing societies, canonically organized, also exist in the parish.

As to the future, there is already nearing completion a well-devised plan to enlarge the church, thereby furnishing comfortable seating accommodations for at least six hundred and fifty persons. These improvements, which it is estimated will cause an expenditure of not less than twelve thousand dollars, involve the following explanation which has been furnished by the architect in charge:

"The old building is 40x100 feet with an unfinished tower in the center. The building when remodeled will be in extreme length 144 feet by 40 feet wide; transept 40x80 feet. There will be a new sanctuary 25x30 feet, society 20x22 feet. The basement will contain furnace and fuel rooms. Chapel 14x23 feet.

Rev. Jul. Rohde.

"The interior will be finished in Georgia pine with groin ceiling. The exterior will be veneered with pressed brick; spire on corner 16x16, 140 feet high; three rose windows. The front of the structure and the end of each transept will be appropriately ornamented. The art glass furnishings of the building will be made in special designs for each window."

The new parsonage built in 1890 is both handsome and commodious. It cost $4,000.

The Rev. Julius Rohde, present pastor of Holy Cross congregation at Kaukauna, was born in Deutschkrone, near Berlin, Prussia, February 1, 1850, and is a son of Martin and Rosalie (Manke) Rohde, natives of the same province, who came to the United States and took up their residence in Kaukauna, Wis., in September, 1881. Father Rohde obtained his earlier education in the schools of his native country, where he also completed an eight years' classical course at the Prussian Gymnasium. In 1872 he came to Milwaukee, where, two years later, he entered the seminary of St. Francis. Here he spent one year in the study of philosophy and three years in completing his theological education. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1878 at Green Bay by the Rt. Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, and was at once appointed pastor of the Catholic congregation at Kaukauna, with which he has remained until the present time.

St. Mary's Church, South Kaukauna, Wis.

ST. Mary's Church, which is situated on the south side of the city of Kaukauna, was founded in 1885, by the Rev. Father J. Rohde of the Holy Cross Church of that place. The church was built by a number of Catholic residents of the south side and former communicants of Holy Cross, who, finding the distance to that church inconvenient, petitioned the Ordinary of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Krautbauer, for permission to erect a church and school of their own. The request was granted and they at once procured four lots in the most beautiful and highest part of the city, the Lake Shore Railway Company donating two additional lots to the enterprise. The same year the Catholic congregation of the south side was incorporated under the title of St. Mary's Church of the Annunciation, the incorporators being the Rev. J. Rohde and Messrs. Michael Donahue and Joseph Kline. A large and handsome brick structure, 54 by 80 feet, was begun in October, 1895, and finished during January following. The upper part of this building was arranged for church purposes, the lower story being portioned off into school rooms and a dwelling for the Sisters. The first Mass wes celebrated in St. Mary's on the first Sunday in January, 1886, by the Rev. J. Rohde, who continued to attend it as a mission until July 1, when the work became too arduous and he was compelled to resign. Then the Capuchin Fathers of Appleton took charge of the congregation until December 1, 1886, when the Rev. N. Hens was appointed first resident pastor. At first Father Hens found but little to encourage him in this new field of labor, a heavy debt of nearly $5,000 hanging over the place like a pall, which seemed to cripple and overwhelm the struggling little parish, of which altogether there were but seventy-five families. But he worked with a will, and with business tact and zeal in addition to the confidence and support of his parishioners, soon managed to overcome all existing difficulties. It was a great work, well carried out, and e'er long the liberality of the parishioners of St. Mary's became known throughout the diocese.

In 1887 a pastoral residence was built on the church grounds, and in October of the same year two additional lots were purchased, giving to the church property a frontage of 260 by 240 feet. In the spring of 1888 an additional five acres of land was purchased, platted and laid out for a cemetery, and in July a brick dwelling was completed for the Sisters. Soon both church and school became too small, so an addition of 50 by 54 feet was made to both, which, including decorations, pews and desks, cost $4,000. The actual size of the church was now 130 by 54 feet, affording seating capacity for six hundred and sixty-two persons and school accommodations for five hundred children. Thus after four years of the most intense effort, free from debt, and with the utmost harmony prevailing, with a congregation of three hundred and seventy families and a school of four hundred and sixty pupils, St. Mary's takes rank with any parish in the diocese. The gross receipts for the five years of the congregation's existence amount to over $32,000, of which sum $25,000 is invested in property considered among the finest in Kaukauna. In societies and confraternities, the parish is also rich, there being: The League of the Sacred Heart, with nine hundred members; Confraternity of the Poor Souls of Purgatory, with three hundred and fifty members; the Rosary Society, four hundred members; Sodality of the B. V. M., one hundred and sixty members; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, sixty members; Catholic Foresters, one hundred and fifteen members, and St. Boniface's Association, sixty members.

St. Mary's Church, South Kaukauna, Wis.

The Rev. Francis X. Steinbrecher, present pastor of St. Mary's Church, was born in Cooperstown, South

Old St. Mary's Church.

Kaukauna, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, on June 3, 1865. After taking a private course in Latin, Greek and higher Mathematics from the resident pastor of his parish, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis near Milwaukee in September, 1880, remaining there until June, 1884, during which year he went to Europe. He then spent two years at the Seminary at Salzburg, Austria, and was from 1886 to 1888 at the University of Innsbruck, Tyrol. He was ordained to the priesthood on March 12, 1888, returning to the United States in June of the same year. Since then he has maintained the following appointments within the diocese of Green Bay, with which he has been continuously connected since the time of his ordination: Pastor at Shawano, July 19, 1888, to August, 1890; Special United States Indian agent from August, 1890, to December, 1890; secretary to the Right Rev. Bishop Katzer and Administrator Kersten, from December, 1890, to November 1, 1891; pastor of Montello from November, 1891, to August, 1892; secretary to the Right Rev. Bishop Messmer, from August, 1892, to January 1, 1893; pastor of Sevastopol, Jacksonport, Bailey's Harbor, and Egg Harbor, Door County, from January 1, 1893, to November, 1893; pastor of Lebanon, Manawa, Northport, Weyauwega and Waupaca, from November, 1893, to May, 1895; pastor of Manawa and its out-mission from May 1 to January 25, 1897, and pastor of St. Mary's Church of South Kaukauna since the latter date.

The new church of St. Mary's now in course of construction at South Kaukauna will, when completed, be one of the handsomest and most imposing structures in the diocese. The main part of the superstructure will be of solid cream-colored brick relieved by handsome trimmings of blue Bedford stone. The form of the building, which is Gothic in style of architecture, will be a Roman Cross, the total length being 158 feet while the width inside is 61 feet and the area occupied by the transept 32x96 feet. The basement, built of coursing stone, extends under the entire building and is 11 feet in the clear. This will be finished off for a winter chapel, society rooms and for heating purposes. The walls of the main body of the church are 26 feet and the transept and sanctuary walls 46 feet, while the crest of the roof will reach to an altitude of 78 feet above the grade of the street. The front of the church will be ornamented with three spires, the center one being 210 feet high, those on either side 125 feet respectively, and the turret over the transept 110 feet. Of the five main entrances to the building, three will be in front and one at each end of the transept. One of the main entrances leads to the basement while the sacristy is reached through the entrance on the side. The interior of the edifice has three naves with out-pillars and a magnificently groined ceiling with eight dormitory windows in the main body of the church. In addition to this, there will be two large windows 14x26 feet in either end of the transept. The main window in the sanctuary represents the Annunciation (the title of the church). The other windows in the sanctuary represent St. John, St. Boniface, St. Patrick, St. Anna, St. Rose, and St. Aloysius. The fourteen windows in the body of the church represent the mysteries of the Rosary. All of these windows were imported from Innsbruck, Austria, at a cost of $9,000. The three altars and communion railing are of white Carara marble and onyx. In the transept are two grottoes, one representing the Apparition of the Sacred Heart to Blessed Margaret Mary Alacoque and the other Our Lady of Lourdes. The height of the church inside, from floor to ceiling, is 50 feet. By no means the least attractive among the numerous interior effects will be the woodwork of white oak and Georgia pine, all of which will be furnished in the natural color. The body of the church will have a seating capacity of one thousand while the galleries will furnish accommodations for one hundred and fifty more. The cost of the structure when completed is estimated at $24,996.

Rev. F. X. Steinbrecher.

St. Joseph's Church, Kellnersville, Wis.

IN the year 1852 some fifteen Bohemian families settled around Kellnersville, which is situated about fourteen miles west of Manitowoc. During the following ten years many others also came to that locality and at present there are in the neighborhood of six hundred Bohemian families settled in the surrounding towns. These were all Catholics, although since that time, from one cause or another, some two hundred of them have fallen away from the faith. For nearly six years Kellnersville and missions have been attended by the Rev. Joseph Maly from Francis Creek. The first church built in the Bohemian settlement was a very small log building erected at Cooperstown, and dedicated to St. Wenceslaus. The people comprising the congregation numbered about one hundred and fifty families and were both poor and ignorant. A priest-house was built near the little church, but it was a very poor excuse at best, being as uncomfortable and incommodious as could be imagined. After the Rev. Father Maly left the Rev. Aug. Lang became the pastor. A dispute now arose concerning this property, which was to be given to Bishop Melcher of Green Bay, the Rev. Father Gedeon

Manazek taking part in the revolt against the See, for which he was suspended. The church became schismatic, in which condition it remained for five years, as the congregation after the death of Rev. G. Manazek, which occurred on Easter Monday, 1873, called as their pastor Sadimir Klacel, a renegade priest and atheist, and in those years the head of the Bohemian freemasonry in the United States; but the people soon became dissatisfied with his godless teachings and desired reconciliation with the Church, which was effected by help of the Rev. A. Cipin, at that time (1877) located in Carlton, under Bishop F. X. Krautbauer. In the meanwhile, when St. Wenceslaus church was closed, the better-minded population of Kellnersville signed a petition and obtained permission from Bishop Melcher to build a new church one mile south of the old site, and for that purpose they gave the Bishop a deed for a little over half an acre of land upon which to locate a parsonage and school. In these quarters resided successively the following priests, who also had charge of St. Wenceslaus and St. Augustin's congregation. The Revs. Joseph Maly, George Brunner (1871), N. Reves, Joseph Maly (1872), Ignatz Lager, Joseph Maly, Fr. Privoznik (1889), Wenceslaus Koerner, who by great zeal and liberality adorned and beautified the new church, himself donating three new altars, artistic paintings of Stations of the Way of the Cross and some splendid vestments. But through too sharply insisting on a strict adherence to certain rules he gave offense to some members, causing the apostasy of sixty families, who then bought for themselves a public cemetery. In the same deplorable manner a split was caused during that year in the mission of St. Augustin, from which some fifteen out of a total of eighty families also seceded. These also bought a public cemetery for themselves. The Rev. Father Koerner left during the summer of 1893, and was succeeded by the Rev. J. Jiranek, who resigned on Ash Wednesday, 1894. After a vacancy of a few months, the Right Rev. Bishop sent the Rev. Adalbert Cipin, who arrived on the seventh of August, and remained until the first of October, 1896. Under his administration, the debts of St. Joseph's congregation were paid, and many repairs were made on the church, priesthouse and school. The Catholic school in Kellnersville was built by the Rev. Joseph Maly and finished under the direction of the Rev. Ignatz Lager, who procured School Sisters from Silver Lake Convent to take charge of it. On October 1, 1896, the Rev. Rudolph Lakomy was sent by the Rt. Rev. Bishop to take charge of St. Joseph's congregation and missions, and under his direction the congregation is steadily increasing in number. During the last three years the congregation connected with the unhappy events as related has made great efforts towards a better understanding between them, and it may be conscientiously said that affairs in that direction have a decidedly more hopeful appearance. As regards the history of St. Augustin, or Kossuthtown, as it is possibly better known, considerable interest is also naturally exhibited. In the year 1862, Bohemian and German Catholic immigrants settled in Kossuthtown and built a church which is the second oldest in the Bohemian settlement. The congregation was prosperous from the beginning, numbering at times over one hundred families, whose spiritual wants were ministered to by pastors from Francis Creek and Kellnersville. After the trouble already referred to began, the congregation was reduced to a minimum of twenty-seven members. The school house in St. Augustin was commenced by the Rev. J. Lager and finished by the Rev. W. Koerner, Sisters of Silver Lake Convent being placed in charge of it. After the troubles began, however, the school was closed for two years and not reopened until the advent of Father Cipin in October, 1894. The number of pupils now in attendance averages thirty. Of Catholic societies in St. Joseph's, Kellnersville, there are the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, thirty members; St. John of Nepomuk Bohemian Benevolent Society, fifty members; Holy Rosary Society, seventy-eight members; St. Mary's Altar Society, sixty members, and St. Caecelia's Church Choir, twelve members. In St. Wenceslaus' congregation there is St. Mary's Holy Rosary Society of about fifty members, and in St. Augustin's congregation St. Mary's Holy Rosary Society with forty-two members.

St. Joseph's Church, School and Parsonage, Kellnersville, Wis.

Rev. R. Lakomy.

The Bohemian congregation of St. Wenzel's at Greenstreet, Manitowoc County, is attended as a mission by the resident pastor at Kellnersville.

The Rev. Rudolph Lakomy, rector of St. Joseph's congregation at Kellnersville, was born April 17, 1862, at Luttein, Moravia. He acquired his classical studies at Olmuetz and read theology at the University in Vienna, where he was ordained priest in St. Stephen's Church by Archbishop Angerer in 1887. Until August, 1895, he attended to the spiritual wants of the inmates of the St. John's Hospital at Linz, Upper Austria, but in August of the latter year came to America and on the 12th of September following joined the Diocese of Green Bay. He was then appointed assistant to the Rev. J. Kaster at Shawano, where he stayed from October 24, 1895, to September 24, 1896. On October 1, 1896, he took charge of St. Joseph's congregation at Kellnersville. In November, 1897, this pastor was transferred to Francis Creek, the Rev. F. J. Just being appointed as his successor.

The Rev. F. J. Just was born on the 24th of October, 1864, in Bohemia. He acquired his education in the gymnasium at Vysoke Myto and read theology, partly at Königgrätz, and partly at Prague. He then came to the United States, and having completed the necessary studies was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop J. C. Meraz for the diocese of San Antonio, Texas, on February 9, 1893. Following ordination he was assistant pastor at Halletsville, Texas, and rector of Weimar, Texas, removing from the latter place to the diocese of Green Bay in November, 1897, when the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer appointed him pastor of St. Joseph's Church at Kellnersville.

Rev. F. J. Just.

St. Michael's (Indian) Church, Keshena, Wis.

Historical Sketch of the Catholic Missions Among the Menominee Indians.

THE Menominee[1] Indians, a tribe numbering from fifteen to sixteen hundred souls, are a feeble remnant of the once numerous and powerful Algonquin, or Algonquain, Indian family. When first met with by the famous explorers of the Jesuit Fathers, these Indians inhabited the country bordering on the Menominee River and "the" Green Bay.

Father Claude Allouez, S. J., was the first Catholic missionary appearing among them. He came upon the Menominees in the beginning of May, 1670, and saying his first Holy Mass among them on the eighth of that month, being the feast of the "Apparition of St. Michael, the Archangel," he established the Catholic mission and placed this and the whole tribe under the patronage of the "Chief of Angel Hosts." During the long periods subsequent to the founding of Christianity among them, the Menominees were only sparingly visited by missionaries, who temporarily appeared and labored in the Catholic missions around "the" Green Bay. The names of these missionaries are recorded in the following order: Father Claude Allouez, S. J., founder of the mission; Father Louis André, S. J., successor to Father Allouez; Father Marquette, S. J., who made a passing visit in 1673; Father Charles Albanel, S. J., 1676, and Father John Enjalran, S. J., 1680.

(1) Also elsewhere referred to as Menomonees.

The Green Bay mission is said to have been abandoned by the Jesuit Fathers in the beginning of the eighteenth century, and was left alone until about 1820, or some time thereafter, when Father Gabriel Richard, a Sulpitian, labored in the mission. Then the Rev. J. V. Badin visited Green Bay, in 1825, being followed by the Rev. P. S. Deléan in 1828. The Right Rev. Bishop Fenwick, of Cincinnati, came a year later (1829) to Green Bay and held confirmation services there. The Very Rev. Father Résé also visited that place in 1830; he is said to have baptized many Menominees. The next missionaries who visited the Bay were two Redemptorist Fathers, who came there in 1832 and 1833. Their names are given as the Revs. S. Sanderl and F. X. Haetscher. They were followed by the Rev. S. Mazzuchelli, O. P., who came there towards the end of 1833.

From 1834 to 1838 the Rev. Theodore J. Van den Broek attended the Green Bay mission and labored a great deal among the Menominees It was this missionary that introduced among the tribe the celebration of the procession with the Blessed Sacrament on the feast of Corpus Christi, which is still held every year in the mission—now at Keshena, Wisconsin—with great solemnity. It is quite natural to assume that our Indians were not altogether the principal object of the care of the missionaries, since the white settlers naturally claimed attention first. So much the more it is to be wondered at that the germ of Christianity was not altogether exterminated in the hearts of those Menominees who had embraced the faith once, especially during the long period of abandonment, when no Catholic priest was near. Next to the divine mercy and the powerful intercession of their Heavenly patron, this may be accounted for by the fact that the Catholic Menominees, principally the half-breeds among them, were wont to go across Lake Michigan, to Point St. Ignace, where the Jesuit Fathers were yet stationed, to have their children baptized. By thus coming in contact with Catholic missionaries, time and again, the Catholic faith was kept alive in the tribe, even though largely intermingled with remnants of paganism.

About the year 1843, the Menominees settled on a reservation at Lake Poygan, where they built a church and school and went into farming more or less. Upon their entreaties, the Bishop of Detroit gave them a missionary in the person of the Rev. Florimond Bonduel, who, since 1838, had attended the Green Bay mission. Father Bonduel took up his abode with the tribe, and labored with great devotedness to raise his Indians from the deplorable condition in which he found them to a higher plane of existence. As soon as practicable, he started two schools, one for boys, taught by himself, and one for girls, taught by a certain Mrs. Dousman. His zealous efforts were crowned with success, so much, even, as to call forth the highest praise from Indian Agent Albert Ellis, in his official report to Washington in 1847.

St. Michael's Church, Keshena, Wis.

In consequence of a new treaty, the tribe moved, in October, 1852, from Lake Poygan to a reservation set apart for them in Shawano[2] County. Father Bonduel accompanied the Menominees to their new home, and stayed with them at Keshena, the principal settlement on the reservation. But hardly had a year elapsed when serious disturbances induced him to leave for another field of activity.

(2) Soon after the arrival of the Menominees on their present reservation, they established three principal points of location or settlements: First, at Keshena on the Wolf River and about two miles above the southern boundary of the reservation. Here is located the seat of the Green Bay Indian Agency, the agent and other government employes in charge of the reservation making their residence there. Second, at South Branch or Little Oconto, named after a fork of the Oconto River. This settlement, about eighteen miles northeast of Keshena, is located mainly in the three townships which form part of Oconto County. Third, West Branch or Kenepowa, about eight miles northwest of Keshena, in the neighborhood of a fork of the Wolf River, from which it probably derived its name.

It may be remarked here that a part of the Menominee tribe stayed in the territory formerly occupied by them, and live there still. They number a few hundred souls yet, but are in a greatly neglected condition. Religious indifference seems to be a special trait in them.

The successor of Father Bonduel at Keshena was Father Otho Skolla, a member of the Franciscan Order, and a saintly missionary. He labored several years on the reservation and among the surrounding whites, amid great privations. In consequence of slanderous reports set on foot by some superstitious Indians, the agency superintendent forced him to leave. The Father was accused of opening the graves of newly buried children and taking out the hearts of the corpses to use them in the preparation of "bad medicine," meaning a certain means employed in witch-craft. Instead of suppressing this brainless talk, as he most certainly should have done, the "man of authority" on the reservation was rather glad to find an opportunity for removing the good priest, since the missionary, by his presence, seems to have been in the way of certain sinister schemes.

Father Skolla was succeeded by a French priest, the Rev. Father Ménard, who, it appears, was compelled to leave the mission for want of sufficient material support. The same was the case with the Capuchins, the Rev. Anthony Gauche, and Brother Vincent, who accompanied him, who took charge of the Keshena mission in 1860. They toiled patiently on for three years, but wicked intrigues made a longer stay impossible for them. The Rev. Father Mignault, and after him Father Mazeaud, attended the mission for short periods until 1866, when three Capuchin Fathers, successively, once more took charge of that thankless field of labor for three years. They were Fathers Cajetan, Solanus, and Fidelis. Passing visits were thereafter made to the Keshena mission by the Rev. Father Beyerle, then stationed at Duck Creek Wisconsin, Father Verwyst, now a Franciscan, laboring then in New London, and the Rev. Father Vermare, then at Oconto, Wisconsin. In September, 1872, the Rev. J. Chebul, a missionary among the Chippewa Indians, visited Keshena for a few days, administering the necessary rites of the Church. Towards the fall of 1873, he returned, and remained in the mission till about the end of the year 1874. His presence was then most necessary in Keshena, since the greater part of the seventies was a period of great danger to the faith of the Catholic Menominees. Several succeeding Indian agents, the inferior employes, the Government trader, and a Presbyterian preacher from the neighboring Shawano, tried their best to estrange the Menominees from their Church and convert them to Protestantism. Every means within their reach and power was employed to secure success, but, happily, all of their efforts proved futile and unavailing. The fidelity of the Menominees was not shaken, thanks to divine Providence, and the zeal and watchfulness of Father Chebul and his successor, the Rev. Amandus Masschelein, who labored in the mission comprising Shawano County and the adjoining counties, from 1875 to September, 1880. Father Masschelein was already advanced in years, and felt that his strength was rapidly failing him. Being, therefore, no longer equal to the work depending on him, he asked his Bishop to relieve him of the heavy task. In consequence of this, the mission was given in charge of Franciscan Fathers, of the Sacred Heart Province, of St. Louis, Missouri, and the field has been held by the Franciscan community ever since the beginning of September, 1880, when the first members of the Order came to Keshena. The following is a full and complete list of the Fathers and Lay Brothers as they successively entered the mission, together with the date of their arrival: The Very Rev. Servatius Altmicks, O. S. F., first Superior, September, 1880; the Rev. Zephyrin Engelhardt, O. S. F., September, 1880—became Superior in 1882; Brother Arnold Wilms, O. S. F., September, 1880; Brother Ferdinand Reinhard, O. S. F., October, 1880; the Rev. Marianus Glahn, O. S. F., October, 1881; the Rev. Blasius Krake, O. S. F., August, 1882; the Rev. Hugo Fessler, O. S. F., April, 1883; Brother Remigius Berens, O. S. F., October, 1883; Brother Anthony Huelsbring, O. S. F., January, 1884; Brother Leonard Darscheid, O. S. F., May, 1884; Brother Rogerius Mueller, O. S. F., August, 1884; Brother Benedict Ockenfels, O. S. F., December, 1884; the Rev. Odoricus Derenthal, O. S. F., July 28, 1885, succeeding the Rev. Zephyrin Engelhardt as Superior of the mission; Brother David Petri, O. S. F., October, 1886; Brother Seraphinus Link, O. S. F., April, 1887; Brother Hermann Depmann, O. S. F., July, 1887; Brother Salvatore Rohr, O. S. F., December, 1891; Brother Sebastian Maier, O. S. F., May, 1891; Brother Fridolin Brueggemann, O. S. F., November, 1892; Brother Novatius Dierken, O. S. F., April, 1897, and Brother Simplicius Washbush, O. S. F., June, 1897. There were yet two other Fathers of the Order, the Rev. Pius Niermann, O. S. F., and the Rev. Norbert Wilhelm, O. S. F., who were also stationed at Keshena; but since they labored exclusively among the white Catholics in the vicinity of the Menominee Reservation, their names were not embodied among those given and designated as Indian missionaries. In the summer of 1888 the Catholic congregation at Shawano and other settlements, heretofore attended from Keshena, were given in charge of the secular clergy, consequently one of the Keshena Fathers could be transferred to another field of usefulness. At present there are laboring at Keshena two Fathers of the Order, namely, the Rev. Odoricus Derenthal, O. S. F., Superior of the mission, and the Rev. Blasius Krake, O. S. F., with six Lay Brothers, Camillus, Meinrad, Remigius, David, Sebastian, and Simplicius.

Rev. O. Derenthal.

The Rev. Odericus Ignaz Derenthal, O. S. F., was born in Roesebeck, Prussia, Germany, July 14, 1856, of Theodore and Mary (Wieners) Derenthal. Odericus Ignaz Derenthal attended the school of his native place until the autumn of 1868, when he began to study for the priesthood. For three years he attended the Gymnasium at Ruethen, Westphalia, under the direction of the Rev. Rector L. Becker, and in 1871 was transferred to the High School at Warburg, where he remained until July, 1873, when he joined the Franciscan Order. At Warendorf he passed the novitiate, and afterwards studied in Wiedenbrueck until May, 1875, when the so-called "Kulturkampf" obliged him, with many members of his Order, to seek a new home in America, they arriving at New York on June 30, 1875. After spending a year in study at Teutopolis, Illinois, Father Derenthal was sent to Quincy to study philosophy, and two years later to St. Louis, Missouri, where he finished his theological course. He was ordained priest in that city May 16, 1880. Father Derenthal's first appointment was to the Chippewa Indian missions around Superior, Wisconsin, where he labored for four years. Here his missionary field comprised a circuit of some two hundred miles. His next appointment was to the mission at Keshena,[1] where he remained from July 28, 1885, until succeeded by Father Krake. During his administration, ably aided by his conferee, the Rev. B. Krake, the mission school has proved an exceptional blessing. Besides the Superior and his assistant, there are six brothers of St. Francis and seven Sisters of St. Joseph associated with the work. Another mission attended by Father Derenthal is the one at Stockbridge, about eight miles from Keshena. Here there is a church with adjoining rooms for the priests' dwelling. The building, which is situated by a lovely lake, was built in the summer of 1894 and dedicated November 22 of the same year. A more detailed account of the Stockbridge mission is given later on.

Rev. B. Krake.

(1) Since this account has been written an unexpected change had to be made in the administration of the mission. The Chippewa missions in the northwestern part of the State, formerly attended by Father Derenthal, lost two missionaries in the course of the present year 1897—the one by death, and the other by sickness, which compelled him to discontinue his missionary labors. The ecclesiastical superiors, having no one to replace them, were compelled to transfer Father Derenthal, a master of the Chippewa tongue, from the Menominees to his former charge among the Chippewas. The Rev. Blasius Krake succeeded him as superior of the Menominee mission, having now for his assistant the Rev. Simon Schwarz, O. S. F., who arrived soon after the departure of Father Derenthal in the latter part of last August. Father Schwarz has charge of the congregations at Little Oconto and Kenepowa, heretofore attended by Father Krake, who is now in charge of the congregation at Keshena, the Industrial School there, and the Stockbridge mission.

The Rev. Simon Schwarz was born at Kenzingen, Baden, June 15, 1866; attended the parochial and high schools of his native place, came to America March 19, 1888, graduated at the Diocesan College of Teutopolis, Illinois, entered the Franciscan Order in 1887, and was ordained at St. Louis, Missouri, in 1894. He had at first charge of several congregations in the suburbs of Indianapolis, Indiana, whence he was transferred to Keshena.

The Rev. Blasius Krake, O. S. F., pastor at Keshena, was born August 9, 1853, in Krechting, Province of Westphalia, Germany. He came to America in 1873, and was ordained to the priesthood at St. Louis in 1881. He was first sent to the Chippewa mission at Bayfield, where he remained until August, 1882, when he was transferred to the Keshena mission, which at that time comprised the mission stations on the Menominee Reservation, and all the Catholic settlements of the whites in Shawano County, namely: Shawano, Gillet, Cecil, Gresham, Waukechon, and Leopolis, the two last being Bohemian settlements. At that time, even the few Catholics residing in Langlade County depended on Keshena. Father Krake had exclusive charge of the white congregations in Shawano County for one year, and then of the two mission stations at Little Oconto and Kenepowa on the Menominee Reservation, in addition to the other stations already mentioned. Besides this, he had to do nearly all the pastoral work at Keshena during 1883 and 1884. Since 1888, however, he has had exclusive charge of the Indian missions at Little Oconto and Kenepowa.

Under the active administration of these active and zealous laborers, the condition of the Menominee mission at once began to show signs of marked improvement. It had always been a matter of regret that of all of the missionaries formerly in charge at Keshena, none, with the exception of Father Bonduel and Father Anthony, were able to speak or understand the Indian language, or converse with those people without the aid and assistance of an interpreter. With such existing conditions, it is easy to see how impossible it was to effect any decided change in the moral condition of the people, or in working out any lasting and effectual good among them; hence, the horrible state of depravity found in the tribe by the Franciscan Fathers, as they gradually acquired the Menominee language and thereby became more and more acquainted with the many universal and deep-rooted evils which pertain to the tribe as a unit.

Incessant labor, prudence and patience, increasing vigilance, and unwavering energy on the part of the missionaries, assisted by divine grace, and sometimes even by manifestations of God's justice, in visible chastisement inflicted in cases of obstinate resistance to the call of grace and the admonitions of the priests, resulted at length in considerable improvement in the moral condition of the Menominees, not, however, without awakening the wrath of the infernal powers, who showed their resentment and unwillingness in giving up a domain held by them so long. They made stubborn opposition by throwing all kinds of obstacles in the way of the salutary work going on. Troubles were created which at times became very annoying and disheartening. Still, the missionaries kept on, and though much is left to be done, yet it cannot be denied that a great work has been accomplished. When vice and evil passions have become, as it were, a second nature of a people, it is certainly not so easy to uproot and supplant them by Christian virtues. To bring this most desirable condition about, however, a most effective means has been found in the establishment of a Catholic school.

The Reservation Schools.

Prior to 1880, the United States Government maintained three day schools for the Menominees, one being located at each of the principal settlements on the reservation, namely: Keshena, Kenepowa and Little Oconto. In 1880 the Government employes had converted the Keshena day school into a boarding school with a view to gathering there all the Menominee children from the whole reservation. Owing to various causes, the attendance was always very limited and irregular, and the general condition of the children, both in and out of school, gave evidence of marked neglect. This was especially noticeable as regards their religious vocation. To amend matters, the Fathers did their best to instruct the children in their religion, but were greatly inconvenienced in this work by the prevailing conditions. Depending on the good will and consent of the employes, the children at school, together with those left to run wild, had to be gathered at the church, or, as was necessary in winter, at the missionaries' little residence, to be instructed in the rudiments of Christianity. Of the numerous and great annoyances attending this undertaking, a detailed account cannot be given at the present time. Suffice it to say that, forced by necessity, the missionaries asked the Indian agent for permission to instruct the children at the Government school after school hours. The request was refused, and Father Zephyrin, then Superior, seeing no other way to improve matters, at once begun the erection of a Catholic boarding school close by the old mission church at Keshena, there to instruct the Catholic children. By about the middle of November, 1883, the school was in active operation, the Fathers laboring earnestly and assiduously to make of the poor neglected young ones of the Catholic Menominees all that good will and human ability could possibly accomplish. Sisters of St. Joseph from Carondelet, Missouri, took charge of this school, and at once essayed a vigorous campaign, conjointly with the missionaries, in the cause of religious training. These proceedings did not fail to arouse the fury of the bigoted agent then at Keshena, who vented his wrath, not only upon the managers of the school, but also on those Indians who sent their little ones to the mission school. But a worse disaster than that overshadowed the little community, when, a little more than three months after the school had been put in operation, on February 22, 1884, the building caught fire and was completely destroyed, together with the old mission church.

Not to be disheartened, however, by this terrible blow, the missionaries at once opened a day school in the house of an Indian, which they had succeeded in renting for that purpose. That this necessity limited their operations for the time being, can readily be understood when it is remembered that the destroyed school house was a substantial two-story frame building, 70x35 feet, having an addition of 36x16. The old church was also of about the same dimensions. Under the most trying difficulties, however, the missionaries continued their good work as best they could until the following summer, when a new building was erected. This consisted of a main part and two wings. The former, which occupied an area 95x28 feet, contained the school room, bath room, and dormitories for the girls, and the refectory for all the pupils. The kitchen, store room and Sisters' quarters were located in the wing attached to the west side, which was 35x21 feet, while a wing 40x21 feet, on the east side of the main structure, contained the little boys' school room and bath room below, and the little girls' dormitory on the second floor. While this building was nearing its completion, work was begun on the erection of a larger residence for the Franciscan Community, whose sole accommodations during the first years of their existence at the mission consisted of one little house, 18x20 feet, a story and a half high, with a little addition which was built to the rear of it. This structure had been built by the Menominees in 1858 or 1859, for their missionary, and was naturally in a bad state of preservation when the Franciscan Fathers adopted it as their residence. When the new residence, a new building 47x27 feet, was ready for occupancy in November, 1884, the large boys were quartered in the old mission house, which had been fitted up so as to serve temporarily as their school house.

As a substitute for their lost church, the Indians also built a shanty, 46x24, an uncouth affair, which had far more the semblance of a wood-shed or old stable than that of a house of worship. In this building, however, divine service was held during the summer of 1884, but, being entirely unfit for occupancy during the winter months, it was torn down as soon as the new school house had been completed, when, during the cold season, divine services were held in the school rooms. In the spring of 1885 another "shanty church" was erected, being some 60x24 feet in dimensions. This church was slightly better in all respects than the first one, and was used for divine worship during the warm season of 1885 and 1886, when the new church was built.

The larger boys being now in need of larger and better accommodations, a new building was erected for them in the fall of 1885. This house occupies an area of 50x31 feet, and contains a school room, bath room, infirmary and play room for the large boys, and dormitory for the little ones. With the occupancy of the new building, the old mission house was enlarged by another addition, and otherwise greatly improved, and the school bakery, carpenter and shoe shop located there. A large oven of solid mason work was built in the new addition, which, before its completion, nearly cost the life of one of the masons. It seems that the man, without waiting until the brick roof of the oven, which had been built over a row of wooden arches, had become sufficiently hard and solid, crawled into the oven to remove the wooden support. He had nearly succeeded in accomplishing this work when all at once, without a moment's notice, the entire mass of brick and mortar caved in, burying and almost crushing him by its weight. Fortunately, the accident had been witnessed by others near by, who were thus enabled to rescue the man, but even then only just in time to save his life. The oven, a total wreck, was at once rebuilt, without further damage to anyone, although it necessitated an extra expense, which could well have been spared at that time. In the winter of 1885-86, a one-story addition was built to the Franciscan residence, the size of it being 60x16 feet. In the spring of 1886 work was also begun on a new church. For the erection of this building, as well as for that of those already occupied, permission had been asked and obtained of the Commissioner of Indian affairs, who allowed the donation by the Indians of lumber which had been sawed out of fallen timber for that purpose. The Menominees, of course, were willing that their property should be employed for that purpose, as there was an immense supply of fallen timber on the reservation. But the reservation saw mill, located some two miles from the agency, was in such a badly demoralized condition as to be utterly unavailable. This condition of affairs was brought to the notice of the proper officials, who, however, for causes best known to themselves, put off the furnishing of repairs from time to time, and thus materially delayed the erection and completion of the new church. Tired out, at last, by their empty and broken promises, and realizing that no assistance was to be expected from that quarter, Father Odoricus Derenthal, then Superior of the mission, ordered outside the reservation nearly all the lumber needed for the erection of the church and other buildings. The timber purchased for these buildings had to be drawn a distance of eighteen miles over a bad road, and this naturally increased, to a large extent, the labor and expense involved in transportation. There were other delays, also, so that the church was not completed until the 8th day of December, on which day it was used for the first time for divine services. The building, as it now stands, is one hundred feet long and thirty-nine feet wide, and the ceiling, which is twenty-six feet high, consists of a series of arches in Gothic style. The steeple is 10x10 feet at the base and eighty-five feet high. In 1895 the church was beautifully decorated by Mr. H. J. Gaertner, a well-known church decorator of Milwaukee, who accomplished his work in a manner giving the utmost satisfaction, and calling forth high encomiums from every spectator. The work reflects the greatest credit on the artist.

It was at about this time that the Sisters in charge of the school began to feel the necessity of more extended accommodations for their own comfort as well as that of the constantly increasing number of scholars. It was not, however, until 1887 that their wishes were to a certain extent complied with, and a separate residence erected for their occupancy. This house, which was 50x36 feet, was connected with the west wing of the girls' school by an addition of 27x24 feet. The entire area underneath this building has been excavated to the depth of eleven feet, thus affording ample room for spacious cellars and a large cistern for the use of the occupants. The entire walls of the cellar are of solid and substantial masonry, while the cistern is 24x14 feet and 10 feet deep. At the same time, a small washhouse, built in 1884, was replaced by a building 50x24, which was supplied with everything necessary for a first-class laundry, including two cisterns, one of which is 16 feet in diameter and 20 feet in depth. During the same fall, work on an engine house, 16x26, was also begun. The engine occupying these quarters, among other things, operates a circular saw for cutting the fire wood for the establishment, and a steam pump which supplies the various buildings with water from a creek which runs through the school grounds. But in spite of all these additions and improvements, the demand still exceeded the supply, so that it became necessary, during the fall of 1888, to erect another two-story building. This occupies an area 63x24 feet, and contains carpenter and shoe shops below and dormitories for the large boys above. At the same time, the addition adjoining the missionaries' residence was enlarged, and the school bakery located there in 1890. The east wing of the girls' school house was next extended 50 feet, so as to enlarge the school room and furnish an infirmary for the little boys. Ample provisions had now been made for the satisfactory accommodation of the pupils attending the St. Joseph's Indian Industrial School, and it was hoped and expected that for some time, at least, rest could be obtained from the tiresome work of building and improving which had occupied so much of the missionaries' time for some years past. Vain hope! Another conflagration on the evening of January 19, 1891, destroyed the girls and Sisters' department, inflicting a loss estimated at fully $20,000. For the time being, the girls and Sisters had to be quartered in some of the remaining buildings, while provisions were immediately made for the erection of another school house. This work was carried on as rapidly as the season and circumstances would permit, and by the first of September following, a new building was ready for occupancy. One portion of this structure occupies an area 94x50 feet, while the other is 54x45, part of it standing on the original foundation. The building is complete in all of its appointments, containing all the necessary apartments for the girls and Sisters, including sewing and mending rooms, kitchen, store rooms, etc., besides school, play and bath rooms for the little boys. The entire building is heated throughout by a hot-water plant

To have completed this work in anything like reasonable time, and especially in so short a period as that taken, could never have been done with the help of the Indians alone, so a number of experienced craftsmen were employed by the mission authorities, which, while their addition to the force greatly facilitated matters, of course, increased the outlay for wages to a large amount. While the house was in course of construction, a new church was also built at Little Oconto, for which some white carpenters had to be engaged, too, since the Indians were unable to carry on the work alone. This church is of nearly the same size as the church at Keshena, and is built in a pleasing and substantial style.

Up to 1875 the Little Oconto Indians were without a church, the divine mysteries being celebrated in the house of an Indian family. When Father Masschelein took charge of the Keshena mission, in the year mentioned, he at once urged upon the Indians the necessity of having a church, be it ever so plain, so as to have at their command a place separate and more befitting for religious purposes, and to them he left the selection of a suitable site. The Indians finally agreed upon a plot bordering upon a pretty lake, and there, in the fall of 1875, began the erection of their first little church, the dimensions of the same being 42x24, with sixteen-foot posts. When the church had been completed, a serious controversy arose between the missionary and the Indian agent. The latter wanted the church to be used at the same time as a school house for the Government teacher, but Father Masschelein earnestly protested against this, as he did not want the house of God profaned by Government employes. The quarrel lasted for some time, and was finally settled by the teacher, a half-breed Indian, who located the school room in his own house. The church was dedicated to St. Joseph by Father Zephyrin Engelhardt in 1881. It was not long, however, before the church proved entirely inadequate to the demands put upon it. Although it was used for divine services for a period of fifteen years, at the end of that time the building had come into such a ruinous state that it was no longer tenable, and it was through the untiring efforts of Father Blasius, the present pastor, that the new and commodious church above mentioned was erected in 1891. For this building the Indians provided the lumber, besides which they collecter several hundred dollars for the work. There was still, however, a discrepancy of $700, which amount was supplied by the pastor. In connection with this enterprise, a particularly favorable mention is made of the old half-breed Indian, Louis Laframbois, who made an individual donation of $100.

A similar structure has also been erected at the Kenepowa Settlement, although, owing to want of means and cold weather, it was not at once completed. Work upon it, however, was taken up again during the following season as soon as the Keshena saw mill, which had again become sadly out of repair, was restored to running order.

The church at Little Oconto was dedicated by the Right Rev. S. G. Messmer, Bishop of Green Bay, on the 17th of June, 1893, who honored the Menominees by his presence on the feast of Corpus Christi.

In November, 1891, an ice house 16x32, one story high, was erected, as were also a number of out-houses, including barns, woodshed, tool house, boat house, etc., which complete the list of buildings erected by the Franciscan Community among the Indians in Northern Wisconsin. There is another building yet to be mentioned, which belonged formerly to an Indian; but with the consent of the Government authorities, the Franciscan Fathers purchased it, together with a good-sized barn and adjoining lands, from the owner, who wished to move away from Keshena to the Little Oconto Settlement. In 1894 another building had to be added to the concern of the mission, to serve as a residence for the teacher of the boys. The main part, two stories high, covers an area of 40x22 feet. It has an addition measuring 26x16 feet, one story high.

Concerning the means for the maintenance of the mission and school, it must be said that from the beginning they have been a source of constant worry of mind for the Superiors. It is largely, in fact, from liberal charitable donations that the missionaries have been enabled to establish and maintain their work. The principal support, however, came from the Provincial Superiors of the Franciscan Fathers, and through their mediation from other members of the Order, who sent large sums of money to Keshena to uphold and carry on the mission and school.

Through the combined influence and efforts of the Bureau of Catholic Missions at Washington, Senator Townsend, of Illinois, and other persons of distinction, the St. Joseph's Indian Industrial School obtained a contract for educating one hundred Indian pupils with a per capita compensation of one hundred dollars. This sum was afterwards increased to one hundred and eight dollars, and the number of pupils for which the contract compensation was granted was gradually increased to one hundred and forty. That the Government support has been, and still is, insufficient to maintain the school on a scale set by the Government itself, need hardly be mentioned. Charitable assistance was, therefore, needed all the time, nor has this been wanting up to the present. Such being the exact status of affairs, both mission and school are greatly indebted to a large number of benevolent people, and the missionaries gladly avail themselves of the present opportunity to tender these benefactors their earnest and sincere thanks. Prominent among those who are thus gratefully remembered by the Reverend Fathers are the Very Rev. Vincent Halbfas, O. S. F., and his successor, the Very Rev. Mauritius Klostermann, Provincials of the St. Louis Franciscan Fathers, the Bureau of Catholic Missions, and especially its reverend director, Father J. A. Stephan, the venerable Mother Katharine Drexel, the Most Rev. F. X. Katzer, Bishop of Milwaukee, the Right Rev. S. G. Messmer, Bishop of Green Bay, the Sisters of St. Joseph at St. Louis and Chicago, and a large number of other benevolent persons comprising a list too voluminous to be given at the present time. In addition to this, the missionaries also feelingly refer to the generous work done in their behalf and assistance rendered to them by the various Catholic newspapers of the country, among those most prominently active in the work being the Columbia and Catholic Citizen, of Milwaukee; the Catholic Review, of New York; the Katholische Volkszeitung, of Baltimore, and the Stimme der Wahrheit, of Detroit, all of which have collected considerable sums for the benefit of the missions.

Taking into account an average attendance of one hundred and thirty pupils throughout the twelve years that the St. Joseph's Indian Industrial School has been in existence, considering that every available requisite for the support and comfort of this number draws on the mission funds, and adding to this a loss by fire of thirty thousand dollars, and remembering the large number of buildings erected and other improvements made to the property pertaining to the mission school, one will have but little difficulty in conjecturing the enormous sums needed to carry on this noble enterprise.

The land assigned to the mission comprises, in all, about thirty acres. The original plot set apart by the Keshena Indians as church land measures about five acres. Of this tract, which is slightly elevated above the general run of land around that section, about half is occupied by the various buildings and the mission garden, while the remainder is laid out and plotted for cemetery purposes.

When the boarding school was first established, the grounds originally assigned to the mission were found to be too limited for the purpose of the school, and application was, therefore, made to have six acres adjoining the property assigned to the school. Part of this addition, while unfit for cultivation, is well adapted for use for play grounds, which were much needed for the children. With this assignment, then, the land surrounding the mission and building thereto now occupies an area of ten acres, a portion of which is under cultivation. At a later date, in order to comply in toto with the requirements of the contract, another piece of land, lying about half a mile from the school, was bought from an old Indian who had formerly lived upon it and cleared a small patch. The old man, however, had abandoned the place, and moved to the settlement of Little Oconto, though he still maintained his claim to the property. This, for a reasonable compensation, he ceded to the missionaries, who expended a large amount in fencing, clearing, and improving the land. This acquisition represents the only land within a reasonable distance from the mission which is susceptible to or suitable for cultivation, as that upon which the mission stands, in fact the greater portion of land in that section, is very sandy, and therefore unfit for pasture or the raising of cereals. The patch now under cultivation, including the improvements made upon it by the missionaries, is valued at twenty dollars an acre, or just nineteen dollars more than its actual value when purchased by them. As to the value of the mission buildings, a careful and conservative estimate would make them represent a valuation of at least eighty thousand dollars. Most of this work of improvement has been done by the Indians, under the supervision of Brothers Leonard, Seraphin, and Sebastian, each succeeding the other as named. The first, Brother Leonard, built the Keshena church, the Franciscan residence, the school house which was destroyed by fire in 1891, and the large boys' school. Brother Seraphin, who succeeded him in charge of these affairs, added the (afterwards destroyed) Sisters' residence to the property, and a number of less important buildings. Brother Sebastian superintended the erection of the present girls' school, and the three new churches at Little Oconto, Kenepowa, and Stockbridge. With such labor as was then at command, the work was necessarily slower than had skilled mechanics been employed, but it has always been the aim of the missionaries to favor Indian labor, since all the work undertaken was done for the sole benefit of these people.

As the title of the mission school, St. Joseph's Indian Industrial School, implies, the school work comprises, besides the usual class instruction, various branches of industry. The class work includes all the branches of common school instruction, with a course of book-keeping for some of the larger boys. The industrial training comprises farming, gardening, care of stock, carpentering, shoemaking, baking, book-binding, and various house duties for boys, while the girls are instructed in all that pertains to general housewifery, dress-making, fine needlework, flower-making, etc. The industrial department for boys is under the immediate supervision of the Franciscan Fathers, while the class for the larger ones was, until the latter part of December, 1896, under the charge of Mr. Joseph Albert M. Weber. This earnest and noble worker, whose death occurred on the 29th of December, 1896, had been in charge of the school since October, 1890. He was a gentleman of rare experience and long professional training, and was greatly devoted to his vocation and always ready to make personal sacrifices to further the interests of the cause in which he was engaged.

The girls and smaller boys attending the school are under the charge of the Sisters, to whose zealous labors the advancement of the Menominee youth is to a great extent due. The average attendance, during the thirteen years which St. Joseph's Indian Industrial School has been in existence, numbers about one hundred and thirty scholars.

That the efforts of the teachers have been successful may be well said. It can best be proved, however, by the work of the children on exhibition at the World's Fair, and which was classed as second best at the diocesan exhibit held at Green Bay during the week following Easter Sunday, 1893. The examination papers, especially those of the large boys, as also their drawings, earned great credit for pupils and teachers alike. Of this really splendid display, the Green Bay Advocate, of April 13, 1893, says many kindly things, devoting a long article to a description of the exhibit made by St. Joseph's School at that time. It particularly referred to the drawings, including the large plans of buildings, maps, etc., as excellent, and also of the pencil drawings of Washington and the President of the United States. The article also reviewed commendably the results of the industries pursued at the school, giving a minute description of the miniature steam engine, working a circular saw, and as complete and perfect in its construction and workings as the costly machines exhibited at the World's Fair. This little contrivance was manufactured by the shoemakers out of parts and scraps of wornout articles, such as a parasol, mouth-organs, brass penholders, and numerous other things, and proved the center of attraction for large crowds of visitors. The Advocate still further says: "It is quite astonishing and, indeed, most gratifying, to see from the examination papers of these children of the forest the proficiency which they have obtained in the ordinary branches of a common education. Only those who have examined the entire work will appreciate this value, and understand how much credit it reflects upon the managers of the school."

The highest compliment, however, was tendered to St. Joseph's School by the Committee on Awards of the World's Columbian Exposition, endorsing the above testimony by granting the school the official ribbon and medal of merit.

As far as can be remembered, about twenty-four teachers have been employed in the mission school since the 10th of November, 1883, when the first three arrived at Keshena. They were the Sisters Clarissa, Superior; Leonella, and Laura, who, after a few weeks, received additional help by the arrival of the Sisters Salesia and Tharcissa. These five Sisters will ever live in grateful memory for the almost numberless sacrifices of health and comfort made by them for the spiritual, as well as temporal, good of the children entrusted to their care. But rarely, indeed, will a Sister Community be called upon to pass through trials and hardships such as those experienced by these noble souls. Their life at Keshena, for the first months, at least, was a living martyrdom, owing to the needy condition of the mission and other and general conditions which at that time prevailed.

The exact time of the arrival of those who followed cannot be given, as neither can their family names. The names given them on entering the religious state are as follows: Mother Augustine, second Superioress; Sisters Evarista, Agnes and Holy Angels; Mother Priscilla, third Superioress; Sisters Vincentia, Susanna, Ludmilla, Laurentia, and Urbana; Mother Matilda, fourth Superioress; Sisters Stanislaus, Eutychiana, and Josephine; Mother Walburga, fifth Superioress; Mother Wilhelminie, sixth Superioress; Sisters Mildred, Ethelbert, Thomas, and Anselma; Mother Basil, seventh Superioress, and Sisters St. Theresa and Paulina. Mother Francis, of the Five Wounds, eighth Superioress, and Sisters of Holy Angels, Stanislaus, Ethelbert, St. Theresa, Angeline, and Theresa, are found in charge of the school in 1897.

Through the united efforts of Father Oderic and the agency authorities, the "Menominee Hospital" was established at Keshena in 1887, the management of the same being given to Mother Clarissa with two Sisters as assistants. The founders of the hospital could hardly have selected a more competent director, she being active, circumspect, devoted, and full of tender interest for her Indian patients. Mother Clarissa remained at the head of the institution for seven years, when she was assigned to another field of labor. At present there are at the hospital, Mother Augustine, Superioress, the devoted Sister Michaela, and Sister Katharine, with two secular employes subsequently engaged. The hospital is maintained by appropriations made by the Government out of the Menominee logging funds; on this account no one but Menominee Indians are allowed to be received and attended there.

As a resumé of the foregoing article, it may be said that the number of Menominee Indians now living on the reservation is estimated at something over one thousand three hundred, while of those of the tribe who have embraced the Catholic faith there are fully one thousand; the rest adhere to paganism. The latter are distributed through the principal settlements of the reservation, besides which there are some smaller settlements of pagan families in remote parts of the reservation, where they are said to have located so as to be out of reach of the agency authorities who might try to induce or compel them to send their children to school. The number of Catholic families at Keshena is ninety, while there are ninety-five at Little Oconto, and sixty-five at Kenepowa. These figures are not, however, at all times to be relied upon, for the Indians are of a very roving and unsettled disposition, frequently removing from one station to another, so that it is almost impossible to make any reliable estimate as to the population of either of the settlements for any length of time. The principal station on this reservation, Keshena, is attended by the Rev. Father Odoricus Derenthal,[1] O. S. F., who is, at the same time, superintendent of the boarding school and Stockbridge mission. The stations at Little Oconto and Kenepowa are in charge of the Rev. Blasius Krake, O. S. F., who visits them alternately. A fierce war has been made by these reverend Fathers against the habit of drunkenness, prevailing on this reservation to an alarming extent. To this end they started a Catholic Temperance Society, or rather revived one established by Father Cebul in 1874, which had been, to a great extent, impotent. It has been a bitter struggle and most arduous undertaking for them, owing to the fact that the good work effected by Father Chebul was practically nullified as soon as he left the reservation. His successor, Father Masschelein, a zealous and earnest worker, was both anxious and willing to continue this good work among the Menominees, but, unfortunately for him, as well as for the welfare of the society, his want of knowledge of the Indian language made it impossible for him to do so. Owing to this, the society disbanded, and free scope was given once more to the evil craving for intoxicants. Since its reëstablishment, the organization has wrought much good, but, unfortunately, the desire for liquor has still a powerful hold over the weak-minded Indians, so that it is hardly possible that the evil will ever be entirely eradicated from their midst. This the more so as the vice of drunkenness is constantly fostered and kept alive by unprincipled white men in the neighborhood, for whom it is a productive source of pecuniary profit. One of them, a well-to-do man, has been reported as bluntly retorting to a reproof: "It matters not whether the drunken Indians are lying thickly on the road. That is all right, as long as there is room enough left for us to pass between them. All we want is their money." This "philanthropic" remark speaks volumes, and must convince every thinking man that the best of efforts prove unavailing in the face of opposition made by men ruled by such principles. But, then, let no one throw any blame for fruitless labor on those who strive in all earnestness to effect a little good, as long as they have arrayed against them morbid passions leagued with criminal avarice. The Menominee Temperance Society at the present time numbers about fifty members. Of other organizations established by the Franciscan Fathers, there may be mentioned St. Mary's Altar Society, organized to reform the morals of the women and to provide for the embellishment of the interior of the churches. This society, which is represented in all three of the missions, has a total membership of ninety. Besides this, the Third Order of St. Francis has been introduced for the purpose of inculcating into its members a deeper sense of pious and Christian principles. The work in this direction, however, is slow, the Indians failing as yet to fully grasp its intentions or the importance of its purpose. The membership is twenty-five. Another step towards elevating and refining the social life of the Indians was made by Father Odoric in the fall of 1890, when he purchased the necessary instruments and organized the Keshena Brass Band. The band now numbers twelve members, who have made commendable progress in their musical education.

(1) See foot-note concerning this article.

The records now show that since September 1, 1880, there has been a total of six hundred and forty-six baptisms of children and sixty-one adults, six hundred and forty-two deaths, and one hundred and thirty-two marriages on the reservation.

South Branch, or Indian Oconto, is an Indian settlement located some sixteen miles northeast of Keshena, from which place it is attended as a mission. This settlement, as mentioned before, is, for the greater part, located within the three townships of the Menominee Reservation for that part of Oconto County. The settlement was made soon after the removal of the Menominee Indians from Lake Poygan to their present reservation in October, 1852. There are some ninety-five families of Menominee Indians belonging to this congregation, in addition to the eighteen white families who are located in the town of Howe, Oconto County. These white settlers are, for the most part, of German origin, although there is also a small sprinkling of English and Irish. Services are held at the mission of Little Oconto twice every month.

St. Mary's Altar Society, to which a number of the members of the congregation belong, was in the first instance established for the purpose of providing means for embellishing the church and procuring additional furnishing for the interior. In this way it has proved of special benefit, and, considering the extreme poverty of the people, has effected much good. A St. Michael's Temperance Society is also mentioned in the congregation. At no time since the existence of the mission has a Sisters' school been established at this place. There was, however, a day school at one time, which was conducted by half-breed teachers for a period existing from ten to twelve years. In 1888, however, this undertaking was abandoned.

There is another mission at Kenepowa, of West Branch, an Indian settlement, which is situated about eight miles northwest from Keshena. The origin and establishment of this mission was in most respects similar to that of the mission at Little Oconto, with the exception, perhaps, of the fact that a school house built by order of the United States Government in the early seventies, for the Indians in this settlement, was allowed to be used for church purposes. This building, which was located six miles northwest of Keshena, was, however, too small for the accommodation of the members who desired to attend the services, and, besides, was in a remarkably poor state of preservation. The erection of a new church was, therefore, begun in 1892, and completed during the following year. It stands on a piece of ground about eight miles from Keshena, which had been cleared by a half-breed Menominee for a little farm, but was then donated by him for a new church to be built thereon. A cemetery was also plotted and prepared at the same place. Previous to this latter provision being made, the Indians of Kenepowa Settlement were compelled to bury their dead in the cemetery at Keshena. The church of this congregation at this place, which is dedicated to the Mother of Sorrows, is attended by some sixty-four Menominee families. Services are held there twice a month. Here, also, as at the other stations, an Altar Society has proved of unusual benefit in improving the property and adding to the furnishings of the church. At one time a day school was also conducted at the Kenepowa mission by Government employes, but this was abandoned about the year 1880, when Keshena day school had been converted into a boarding school.

Speaking of the condition of the Menominee Indians and the progress of Catholic work among them, the fact must be taken into consideration that the conversion of a great number of these Indians is an undertaking of but recent date, and that, while the success of the efforts already made in that direction has been marked and most gratifying, many years of devoted and faithful service will undoubtedly be necessary before they are brought to a desirable understanding of their present unhappy condition. In other words, it must be a work of moral conviction, and not of mere information. Beliefs and traditions of centuries have to be uprooted and overcome, and the untutored mind brought to an active realization of the all-enduring power of that religion whose benefits are not to be seen by mortal eye. Such work as this necessarily calls for the utmost patience, while much allowance should be made for the many lapses in belief and generally unsettled and erratic condition of mind in its ofttime vain attempts to grasp the situation as represented. To such undertakings as these the lives of the missionary pastors were devoted; and, in our opinion, no casual observer could ever compute the enormity of the work, or do justice to the grandeur of the effort. As a simple evidence of the difficulty of this task, it may be stated that even at the present time some of the pagan Indians have their children baptized much sooner than they are willing to assume the responsibility of that Sacrament themselves.

About the middle of the present century the Stockbridge Indians, who originally resided in Massachusetts, but in course of time moved gradually westward, purchased from the Menominees two townships on the southwestern border of their reservation, and in 1856 removed thither from Lake Winnebago, where they lived for some time. They number in all about five hundred souls, of whom only about four hundred live on the reservation. These are somewhat mixed in their religious beliefs, some of them being Presbyterians and a few Methodists, while the majority must be classed as heathens. Until 1881 not one of this tribe belonged to the Catholic Church, but since that time seventy-eight have received Baptism and many others are preparing for it.

When the Civil War broke out in 1861, a number of Menominee and Stockbridge Indians volunteered their services in defense of the Union. One of the latter, Stephen Gardner, being wounded during an engagement, was conveyed to a hospital in Memphis, Tennessee. Here, he relates, he saw some women dressed in black, who were so good and kind to the sick soldiers, rendering them every possible service in their suffering and distress. These acts of charity seemingly touched him, for he asked one of his comrades who the women were. Upon being informed that they were Catholic Sisters, he ventured the opinion that "those Catholics and their religion cannot be so bad after all, and I shall try to find out more about them." He did so; and at the conclusion of the war returned home, became an attendant at the Catholic church, and acquired his first religious belief from instruction given there. This may be said to have been the first cause from which, eventually, sprung those friendly relations which have ever since existed between these Indians and the Church. In 1881 the Rev. Servatius Altmicks, O. S. F., then in charge of the Keshena mission, was invited by some of the Stockbridge Indians to visit their reservation and give them Catholic instruction. He did so, and on his first visit celebrated Mass and preached in the home of Stephen Gardner.[1] Through him this little flock first gained their knowledge of the Catholic religion, to which, in ever-increasing numbers, they still adhere. After a few visits, when these people had become more thoroughly acquainted with the demands put upon them, ten were baptized, the first being Stephen Gardner, who, as the reverend Father puts it, thus became, as it were, Captain of the new regiment. The success of this undertaking, and the hold acquired upon these people by the Church, was not, however, obtained until much earnest labor had been expended and many and numerous difficulties overcome. There were members of the tribe whose hatred and jealousy impelled them to the use of every untoward and crafty design that such a state of mind could suggest, in order that the good work might be discontinued, and the Catholic clergy deterred from the privilege of visiting the mission and ministering to the spiritual wants of the converts. They went so far as to notify the priest that his visits must be discontinued, stating that the tribe was already sufficiently supplied with ministers of their own faith to preach to them from their own Bible. The zealous Father, however, was not to be deterred from performing so evident a duty as that which he had undertaken, but continued as before, paying occasional visits to the reservation and celebrating the Sacrifice of the Mass at Stephen Gardner's home in the presence of his little flock. Their former threats failing to have the desired effect, the hostiles now threatened to shoot the ponies owned by David Istaca, the Indian who accompanied the priest, and even to inflict personal injuries, so that it was deemed the best policy under the circumstances to cease visiting the reservation for the time being, and, therefore, Father Altmicks discontinued his visits and transferred his labors to another mission.

(1) This house was destroyed by fire in the winter of 1891-92.

In April, 1890, an old Stockbridge Indian, Edd Bowman, being at the point of death, asked for the services of a Catholic priest. In response to this request made by the daughter of the dying man, Father Odorick Derenthal visited the reservation, arriving there in time to offer the consolation of religion and baptize him. From the time of this incident, a new epoch seemed to dawn upon the Stockbridge community. Soon religious indifferentism gave way to a new uprising in behalf of the Catholic faith. As a result of all this, the baptism of children and adults followed to the number of ninety-five, and gradually a spirit of greater and more fervent Catholicism took possession of a portion of the Stockbridge people. Those favoring this progressive movement so rapidly increased in numbers that it became evident that it would be necessary to at once erect a suitable building in which the meetings might be held.

To this most worthy end, Stephen Gardner donated a piece of land on a little elevation bordering on the margin of a lovely lake. And there, in the midst of a beautiful grove, a church was erected in 1894 by Brother Sebastian, at an expense to the Franciscan Fathers of $2,500. On the feast of St. Caecilia, November 22, it was dedicated by the Rev. Michael Richardt, O. S. F., Provincial of the Franciscan Fathers of the St. Louis Province. During the next year, two bells were procured for the church and blessed on May 14 by the Right Rev. Bishop Messmer, who at that time paid his first visit to the Stockbridge Reservation.

It is the pious desire of the pastor of this little congregation that the Holy Angels, to whom both church and bells have been dedicated, may soon call all of the Stockbridge people to the true faith, and that ere long there may be one flock and one shepherd.

Strife and Trials.

The foregoing sketch of the Menominee mission would indeed be very incomplete would we pass over in silence its most important and most interesting chapter, or satisfy ourselves with the passing hints made in the foregoing concerning difficulties experienced by various missionaries. A complete account of the fierce opposition made against the Catholic mission work in the Menominee Reservation by the agencies of the infernal powers ever since the settling of the Menominees on their present soil, would form a volume of respectable size, and this, of course, is not our province now to furnish. We can only recite a few facts that will give the readers an idea of the difficulties encountered by various missionaries in their noble efforts for the welfare of the Indians, in addition to the privations and hardships of missionary life.

The first victim of wicked intrigues and black gratitude was Father Bonduel, who so generously exerted himself for the welfare of the tribe, temporal as well as spiritual, while yet residing at Lake Poygan. In former ages the Menominees claimed for their property the northeastern portion of the territory which now constitutes the State of Wisconsin, about one-third of the whole area. By several treaties they gradually ceded this large tract of land to the United States, until at last only a limited reservation at Lake Poygan was left them. Even this they were required to exchange for a reservation of six hundred thousand acres west of the Mississippi River, and a treaty to that effect had been made in 1848. But the tribe, it is said, was reluctant to give up the native country for a new, unknown home, and hired a certain lawyer at Washington to have the contract rescinded. The lawyer, it is claimed, was very careful to secure his pay out of the tribal funds—created by the sale of lands—the sum of forty thousand dollars being the price charged by him, for what he should have done, but evidently failed to do. Father Bonduel offered them his service to represent, for a reasonable compensation, the cause of the Menominees, and procure for them a reservation in their native territory for their final settlement. The Indians made an agreement with him, and the Father's efforts with the Legislature succeeded in having the present reservation located, whereon the tribe moved in October, 1852. Father Bonduel accompanied his Indians to their new home, sharing with them all of their hardships, privations and inconveniences in what was then a wilderness. The Indians, coming up the Wolf River in their boats and canoes, had landed on the site where Keshena now stands, and Father Bonduel erected a large cross on a hill overlooking the site from the north.

The agreement made with the missionary by the tribe provided that he should be paid for his labors, while negotiating with the Legislature, at the first term the annuities[1] would be paid the tribe; this was in the fall of 1853.

The Indians had made an agreement to pay their missionary an annual salary of four hundred dollars out of their annuities; the sequel showed how "faithfully" this salary was paid under the control of the "ruling faction" in the tribe.

Father Anthony Gauche and Brother Vincent, Capuchins, were at Keshena in the beginning of the sixties, holding out there for about three years amid great privations. But then they found a longer stay impossible; they did not like to be starved to death when the tribe could well afford to provide for their living.

One morning after Mass the Father called in one of the Indians, led him into the church, where he had veiled the altar in black, pointed to the altar and said, in answer to the Indian's surprised inquiry why that was done: "This is done, because I will not say any more the 'great prayer' (Holy Mass) at this 'prayer table' (altar); I shall go away, and you will not have a 'black-gown' with you, because that and that chief[2] (naming them) will not let it be possible for me to stay here." Handing, then, a quarter to the Indian, he continued: "Here, take that and bring it to Chief N—— (naming him), and tell him that I give this to him for the trouble he has taken to deprive me of my support." The Indian did as ordered, and Father Anthony and Brother Vincent left Keshena and returned to their convent.

In 1861 a man had been appointed United States Indian Agent for the Menominees, who for bigoted and fanatical propensities was second to none. During his administration—it was in 1864—an epidemic of small-pox raged throughout the reservation, carrying off a great number of victims. This gave rise to serious difficulties with Father Mazeaud, a French priest, then in charge of the mission. The good Father was untiring in visiting the sick and dying, sparing himself in nowise when he knew that the spiritual welfare of one of the sick was at stake. He acted faithfully, according to the Catholic ritual, taking the corpses of the deceased to the church, performing the funeral service there previous to interment. In the case of those who died of the smallpox he made no distinction, as he feared no danger of contagion. And wonderful it is, indeed, that he remained untouched by the disease, notwithstanding his coming daily in close contact with the sick and dying, in administering to them the consolation of the Church. But what he did not fear was so much more dreaded by the officials, who attributed the spread and duration of the epidemic to the pious practice mentioned. Father Mazeaud was, therefore, ordered to discontinue the funeral service in the church, but he evidently cared more for the precepts of his Church than any orders to the contrary, using no discretion in this case, as he certainly should have done. The consequence was that a sheriff was sent from Shawano, eight miles away, to arrest the missionary. The arrest, with accompanying circumstances, was executed in a manner truly becoming the spirit of bigotry and fanatical hatred by which the officials were actuated. The sheriff, pointing his revolver close to Father Mazeaud's breast, demanded his surrender. The Father protested, but was carried off at once, just as he was, without having any time given him to arrange his effects. At Shawano the poor prisoner was led about the streets and held up to the scorn and scoff of the populace. When John Warrington, a half-breed, who happened to be at Shawano, witnessed this shameful treatment of the missionary, he felt pained to the extreme, and said to his companion: "Come, let us share the shame of our Father! We will not let him go alone that way; let's go along with him!" The two then escorted their priest on his humiliating march to his place of confinement. At the trial, coming off the next day, Joseph Maurer, a Catholic lawyer of Shawano, showed the folly of the officials arresting the missionary; he proved that there was no sufficient evidence against him to justify the arrest, and had the Father released. The latter remained with Mr. Maurer for a whole week, and left then for Milwaukee. When he was carried off from Keshena, his effects were taken to Shawano by the Government farmer in charge of the reservation. This man, while on the way, perpetrated an act of atrocious villainy. He broke open the box containing the Father's books, and scattered a lot of them along the road. It seems that among this number were some of the church records, some of which must have been lost, as there are only fragments left covering the former period of the mission.

Father Mazeaud also made bitter complaints against a woman whom he believed was principally instrumental in withholding from him the salary stipulated by the Indians. There was evidently an intimate understanding between her and the Government officials, without whose authority and that of a few leading chiefs, the woman would not have been so successful in the base intrigues laid to her charge. What was done with the missionary's salary, these "noble souls" surely knew best. Father Mazeaud depended solely on the alms sent him from abroad by charitable friends, principally good hearts of his acquaintance in France, his native country. Still, in the face of these facts, the Government agent had the effrontery to send an official report to Washington, dated September 25, 1865, that fully exhibits the true character and spirit of this intolerant and lying bigot. Among other things he says:

(1) The annuities were partial payments made to the tribe by the United States Government for the lands ceded by the Indians to the United States.

(2) The names of the chiefs are well-known, but for the sake of their kindred are not published here.

"The conduct of the Catholic missionaries sent to these Indians, since they came under my charge, has been such as to degrade rather than educate them. Every priest sent to this mission for the last four years has been a constant disturber of the peace in the tribe, and a continual source of annoyance to agent and employés. One demands that the agent shall retain a sufficient amount of the annuity to pay his claims, regardless of any instructions[1] from the Indians to whom the annuity belongs. * * * Another calls upon the agent to pay his demands out of any Indian funds on hand. When these demands are not complied with, the priests improve every opportunity to create a distrust toward all employés. They have all left the reservation, preparing large claims against the Indians. In some instances these Indians have asked me, as a friend, to examine into the justice of these claims, and when I have complied with the request, I have found that the priest had been paid double the amount due him.[2] The system by which money is obtained from the Indians for various church services is unjust in the extreme. Many of the Indian women who have had a husband or son in the army, have paid their last cent to the priest for saying Mass for absent friends, while the family at home would suffer for the necessaries of life. During the entire month of May, when the Indians should have been busy in getting the crops into the ground, the priest held meetings at the church, occupying the whole day. The consequence was that most of the crops were put in too late. * * *" Reading especially the last part of this passage, extracted from the report, we are forced to believe that the fanatic scribbler must have considered the authorities at Washington a set of dupes, when he dared to report to them officially such trash, counting on their credulity as a safeguard against the discovery of his own atrocious behavior. Just imagine a congregation holding meetings at church, occupying the whole day, for an entire month! The man had, surely, no idea of May devotion, when it is held, and how long it lasts.

A time of trials, rife with extreme danger for the faith of the Catholic Menominees, dawned upon the mission about the beginning of the seventies when the Fathers Cebul and Masschelein succeeded each other in charge of the mission. It is well known that, under President Grant's administration, the various Indian reservations were assigned to different religious denominations, to be Christianized by them, regardless of the religious belief eventually professed by the Indians already. Every means within reach was employed by Protestant preachers to make sure of success, especially where Catholic Indians were the object of their zeal.

The Menominees were not spared the earnest and persistent efforts on the part of Protestant proselytizers to have them "converted" to sectarianism. In fact, all the government employés appeared to be so many preachers in disguise, if we are to judge from their actions. Perhaps the most dangerous one of them, because of the pernicious influence exercised by him over the Indians, was the Government trader. This man was really a Presbyterian preacher, and held the tradership on the reservation for a good many years. His bland and suave manners won for him the hearts of the Indians, and then he had no difficulty to convey the impression by sweet and pious talks that he was a righteous, a "scrupulous man," which latter epithet was generally given him by the "nosed" Indians. He made them believe that strict integrity and disinterestedness guided him in his business transactions, and thereby gained their unbounded confidence, which, of course, he knew how to turn to his own profit, and, what is worse, made the best of it in the interest of the sectarian schemers. With his tradership he combined the office of preacher, in as much as he improved every opportunity to speak to the Indians of religious matters. He denounced it as the greatest folly to believe in the doctrines of the Catholic Church, defamed her teachings, ridiculed her ceremonies, and, in fact, made every attack upon Catholics and their priests that his fanaticism would suggest. One day he succeeded in talking his illiterate interpreter, a half-breed Indian, into such excitement, that the man ran into the church where, just then, instruction was given to a number of children preparing for first Holy Communion. He interrupted the instructor employed by Father Masschelein, abused him right there in church before the children for "teaching such nonsense as Catechism," and told him he had better give up that humbug. The man, in this way, only gushed forth the venom he had imbibed from his preaching employer.

The other officials, agents and inferior employés, all combined their efforts with those of the preaching trader towards the "conversion" of the Menominees. But this was not enough. Another Presbyterian preacher of Shawano was engaged to make weekly visits to Keshena, to give his harangues at the Council House; still, all efforts made to divert these Catholic Indians from the Church failed; the fiasco of the proselytizers was entire. Never did the Menominees waver in the faith they received from Catholic missionaries, but firmly adhered to it.

(1) Note the agreement mentioned above.
(2) Remark: Probably in the entries on the book, but not in reality.

Touching upon this fact, the official agency report of 1873 remarks: "The only purely religious work among them—meaning the Menominees—has been done by the Romanists, who now have a priest at Keshena." The report of the following year says: "The efforts of the Catholic priest among the Menominees have been remarkably successful. He, however, thwarted the attempts of the agent and employés to supplement his labors by holding temperance meetings at the Council House and school house upon Sundays." These remarks, made by a Protestant official, and one who could certainly not be accused of sympathy with the Catholics, ought to be satisfactory for every fair mind. The Catholic missionary staying then at Keshena, but only temporarily, was Father Cebul, an active, zealous and fiery character, who saw clearly the snares laid for the Indians who were to be trapped by harmless sounding "temperance meetings" and Sabbath schools. He told the Indians plainly what was in store for them, and these heeded his warning voice and followed the advice he gave them.

As to the agent's complaint that the missionary "thwarted the attempts of the agent and employés to supplement his labors by holding 'temperance meetings,'" etc., what are we to think of it when we learn that the agent, after holding his office only a little over a year, was discharged on account of habitual drunkenness, and because of the bad example he gave to the Indians? And such a hypocrite would talk of holding "temperance meetings" to supplement the labors of a Catholic missionary! Comment is needless.

This agent's worthy successor combined the office of preacher with that of a United States Indian Agent. He delivered, regularly, religious harangues in the "prayer meetings" held at the Council House. He boasted of being "a Christian man" so frequently that he goes with the Indians under that name at present.

How "charitable" these proselytizers showed themselves, when Catholics were concerned, may be seen by two incidents. The Government blacksmith was at one time greatly crowded with work. By a good chance he found one whom he could engage for an assistant. This man was a Catholic, and showed himself as such, too. The Government employé found no fault with him so long as work was pressing. This over, though, he rudely discharged the man again, "because," he told him, "you never attend the Protestant prayer meetings held in the evening at the farmer's house."

In the spring of 1878, Father Masschelein was suddenly requested to visit, at once, an old Indian living at Little Oconto, a distance of about eighteen miles. The old man had been fatally injured and was dying. There being no team at hand, Father Masschelein applied to the Government farmer for a horse, telling him the circumstances. When the farmer heard of the "sick call," he at once retorted that he had no team to serve superstition; administering the Sacraments was nothing but superstitious practice, and he would not lend a help to that. The Father would have started at once on foot, but bad weather had rendered the road impassable, and so he was compelled to wait till the next day, when he could get an Indian team. Coming at last to Little Oconto, he found the poor man dead.

As to his income while with the Menominees, Father Masschelein fared somewhat better than his predecessors. A small share of the annuities was set aside for his support, but over-anxious that the money might not be lost by the missionary, in some way or other, the agent handed the money at paytime over to the trader, the one spoken of before, who had to hold the money "in trust" for the missionary, and who allowed the latter only so much in goods from his store as would cancel the sum deposited. An understanding to this effect had been made between the agent and trader, and thus the two were always sure of their own profits out of the "priest's salary." In this way the good Father was entirely dependent on the two, receiving in cash only a few nickels, now and then, for pocket money, such as a landlord would throw to his menial. He keenly felt his humiliating position, but he had it not in his power to amend matters. He had to satisfy himself with this source of support, if he would not lose all and be compelled to abandon the mission.

To put an end to the unceasing efforts of the preaching officials to convert the Menominees, a petition, signed by the Catholic chiefs of the tribe, was directed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The petitioners protested against the action of the proselytizers, and asked to be relieved of their uncalled-for importuned services. This had the desired effect, and the Menominees were thenceforth left unmolested by the preachers.

Mention has been made already of a fierce storm breaking in upon the mission in 1883, when the Catholic mission school was started. As this undertaking was contrary to the plans of the Indian Agent, a bitter warfare ensued between him and Father Engelhardt, who brought the mission school into existence. The quarrel ended with the discharge of the agent and the appointment of a Catholic to the agency in 1885.

Passing over a series of incidents of a similar nature as those related in the foregoing, an occurrence must be added, which clearly illustrates and markedly sets forth how insufficiently rooted are the doctrines and precepts of the Church in the minds of a portion of the Catholic population of the tribe.

There was a young half-breed who had been baptized, but had in no way lived as a Catholic. It had been almost a matter of surprise when he was seen in church, so very seldom did he attend the divine service; so it is needless to speak of frequenting the Sacraments. Religious ignorance, of course, explained all; but then he made no effort whatever to be instructed, as many others like him did, though he had the best chance to do so. He was addicted to drunkenness, and had freely indulged in it one day, while visiting the Shawano County Fair last year (1896). Dead drunk he left the city at night. He had to pass over a bridge, and dropped, or, as some suspect, was thrown off the bridge, and drowned in the pond below. Thus he died as he had lived. His relatives soon recovered the body and brought it to Keshena, where they applied to the pastor, Father Derenthal, for burial in the graveyard. They were, of course, not permitted to inter the man there, for the reason that one who did not live and die as a Catholic has no right to be buried in a Catholic cemetery. The party, apparently satisfied, went to Little Oconto and buried the corpse in the cemetery there, knowing right well that there was no priest around to prevent them doing so; and thus, defying ecclesiastical authority, desecrated the sacred place. They evidently cherish the childish principle: "Live as you please, but see that you are buried on blessed ground and all is right." As if thereby they could secure Heaven.

As could be expected, Father Krake, then the pastor of Little Oconto, was soon informed of the fact, and with three companions repaired at once to the scene of desecration to remove the corpse. The intelligence thereof spread like wild-fire through the settlement, and in a surprisingly short time the kindred and friends of the deceased gathered at the graveyard, evidently determined to prevent the removal at any cost. Wild excitement reigned in the motley crowd, and bloodshed seemed unavoidable. Still, even the most fierce and embittered characters dared not do anything beyond their tongue-fight, and this was quite naturally very hot. It seemed that an invisible power interfered and hindered the perpetration of any criminal act until the removal had been accomplished. The corpse was then buried outside the fence.[1] Still desirous of obtaining satisfaction, some of the family attempted to institute a suit for damages against FatherKrake, but were unsuccessful. To their credit, though, it must be said, that they allowed their blood to cool down, and at present think more reasonably over the matter. It can neither be laid exclusively to their charge that bad feeling against the missionary was entertained for a longer time. Whites of the neighborhood, sworn enemies of Catholicism, did much to increase and keep up the excitement.

The foregoing account may suffice to show a little of the ups and downs in the Menominee missions, and it is to be hoped that occurrences which better remain buried in oblivion may never come to be repeated in future, but that Christian harmony may ever reign between missionaries and their flocks for their welfare, both temporal and spiritual, for time and eternity.

(1) Father Krake acted fully in accordance with orders from higher Church authority.

Holy Rosary Church, Kewaunee, Wis.

THE first resident pastor at Kewaunee was the Rev. Charles Exel, who first came there in 1863, during which year a church was built. Three years later the Rev. Father Steenwick, who was then pastor, commenced the erection of a school building, which was completed by the Rev. George Brunner in 1871. In 1883 a new and larger church was built by the same pastor, and in 1890 a new and commodious parsonage was erected by the present incumbent, the Rev. Joseph Kirpal. Both church and parsonage are of solid brick. The present congregation of Holy Rosary numbers one hundred and thirty-two families, seventy-seven of whom are German, forty Bohemian, ten English and five French. The parochial school, now in charge of Sisters of Notre Dame, is attended by one hundred and fifteen children. Of Catholic societies organized in this congregation there are the following: St. Joseph's Society: T. Baumeister, president; A. Becker, secretary; William Nolde, treasurer. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: Sac. Stangel, president; S. Banjert, secretary; A. Bangert, treasurer. Catholic Bohemian Knights: T. Mleriva, president; A. Dangert, treasurer; F. Lloyd, secretary. Catholic Order of Foresters: S. Walsh, high chief ranger; F. Lloyd, secretary; A. Schumerth, treasurer. Aside from his congregation at Kewaunee, the pastor of Holy Rosary has missions also in Alaska and West Kewaunee.

Holy Rosary Church and School, Kewaunee, Wis.

The Rev. Joseph Kirpal was born in Bohemia in 1844. After obtaining an ordinary school education, he attended the Gymnasium at Prague, afterwards taking three years in philosophy at Pressburg and three in theology at the university at Innsbruck, Tyrol. At the latter place he was ordained to the priesthood, afterwards becoming professor of Latin at several of the institutes in Austria and Hungary. He came to Wisconsin in 1884, and became pastor of St. Joseph's in Carlton, where he remained until 1888, when he assumed his present position.

Rev. Joseph Kirpal.

The Polish mission of St. Hedwig's at West Kewaunee, Wisconsin, which is attended from Kewaunee, was established in the year 1880. It consists at the present time of about forty-five families or about three hundred and twenty souls. There is but one society, that of the Holy Rosary, which has twenty-five members, connected with this congregation. Services are held at St. Hedwig's twice each month, on the third Sunday and one week day.

Another mission attended by the same pastor is the German and Bohemian one at Piercetown, which consists of thirty-five families or one hundred and fifty-five souls. This congregation was organized in 1879 and is now visited twice a month, on the first Sunday in each month and on all holydays. There is a Rosary Society of twenty members connected with St. Mary's Congregation.

St. Caecilia's Church, Kilbourn City, Wis.

THIS congregation was founded at Kilbourn City in 1850, and to it belonged all the Catholics residing in the towns of Dell Prairie, New Haven, Quincey and Easton, all of which are in Adams County. The mission stations attended from this parish are at Olin, Point Bluff and White Creek, also in the same county. There are also a few Catholic families residing at Lyndon, or Kildare, in Juneau County, who attend this church. In the year 1851, the Rev. and revered Father Anthony D. Godhardt came to Kilbourn City from Fort Winnebago, better known at present as Portage City, and completed the organization of this parish. After him Father Gardner of Kildare, now Lyndon, took charge of the parish, continuing to do so until 1854. Then in 1856, Father Stehle became pastor and in 1858 Father Montague took charge, remaining there until 1866. Up to the year 1866 the people of this parish were without a church. During that year the Rev. George Strickner administered to the spiritual requirements of the Catholics at Kilbourn, attending there from his resident pastorate at Portage City. He is regarded as the apostle of the Germans throughout the entire country and far to the north of Mostrum, having been the first German priest to celebrate the Holy Mass in Kilbourn, conducting the services in the home of a German settler there. At other times he celebrated Mass in the home of Captain Miller, who with his good wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Miller, first president of the Ladies' Altar Society at Kilbourn, afforded the hospitalities of their home on more than one occasion to Bishop Henni.

St. Caecilia's Church, Kilbourn City, Wis.

It was during his pastorate at Kilbourn that Father Strickner planned the erection of a church, which his successor, the Rev. Father Reindl, carried into effect, the result being that the edifice was dedicated to St. Caecilia, in 1868. Some years later Father Reindl died at Oshkosh, but Father Strickner is still living, though now retired at Kilbourn City among descendants of the hardy and faithful laymen who were among the first to settle at the famous Wisconsin dells.

In this year, the care of the St. Caecilia Mission was transferred from the pastor at Lyndon to the one at Portage City, at that time the Rev. Thomas Keenan, who continued his visits to Kilbourn until 1871. In July, Kilbourn City was given its first resident pastor in the Rev. William De Kelver. This pastor inaugurated the event by the erection of a handsome parsonage. A great deal of the picturesque and reminiscent in the history of this section dwells around the pastorate of Father De Kelver. During this period, the general appearance in the surroundings of St. Caecilia congregation became greatly changed, the heavy woodlands and general quiet giving place to those less aesthetic conditions pertaining to city life. By 1871 the cemetery, as well as the forest around the church, had been supplanted by a new condition of affairs, and to-day the church of St. Caecilia stands in the geographical center of Kilbourn City. There are other features which make this section of the country of more than usual interest to the' public, although not pertaining in any particular degree to the history of the Church; for instance, within the present limits of the parish are located the famous Dells, noted among the summer resorts of the country as one of the most beautiful and picturesque. It was also through this particular spot, in 1832, that John De la Ronde, a native of France, passed on his way to Mauston, in the vicinity of which place he finally located. He was the first white man to visit this section of whom any record has been made. To him also is accredited the fact of having constructed the first wagon road from Portage to Lemonweir, which he did in 1840, and is generally recognized as the first Catholic settler in this section. Father De Kelver's administration ended in 1873, his departure being greatly deplored by people of all classes, with whom he had become familiar and a general favorite. Following him came in quick succession, as pastors of this church, the Rev. Fathers Gallweiler, Gonthyn, Scholter, Hackl, John Ryan, Henry Sinner and William Rice. On January 20, 1882, the Rev. Martin Smits took charge of the parish, laboring with great zealousness until the time of his death, February 27, 1897. His successor, the Rev. John Holzknecht, a native of Green Bay, Wisconsin, and present pastor of St. Caecilia's congregation, celebrated his first Mass at Kilbourn City, on the feast of St. Patrick. The Catholics in this parish are of a zealous and energetic class and are doing all in their power to advance the interests and improve the condition of the church property. It is generally understood that among other additions contemplated to this property in the near future will be a new church and school house. Of the number of Catholic societies connected with this congregation, there are: Blessed Virgin Altar Society; St. Caecilia's Young Ladies' Sodality and Sacred Heart Society. The trustees of the parish, elected during the present year, are: John Baggot, A. W. Nehls, Theodore Leuthe, John Sullivan, D. McManman and Thomas Connor, all of whom are prominent members of the congregation.

Rev. J. Holzknecht.

The Rev. Father Holzknecht was born December 13, 1855, at Green Bay, Wisconsin, where he pursued his earlier studies, graduating at St. Mary's School in that city when but thirteen years of age. He then entered St. Francis Seminary in 1869 and, after a short residence there, was for some time a student at St. Lawrence's College at Mt. Calvary, where he completed his fourth and fifth courses in Latin. He then again entered the Seminary of St. Francis, where he finished his studies in philosophy and theology, and was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, on June 29, 1879. His first Mass was celebrated on the 2d of the month following at St. Mary's Church, in Marytown, Fond du Lac County. He was then appointed as assistant pastor at St. Mary's Procathedral, at Green Bay, as which he remained from July 6 to October 28, 1879. He was then, until March 1, 1884, rector of St. John's Church in Morrison, Brown County; from March, 1884, to May 1, 1885, rector of St. Mary's Church at Winneconne, Winnebago County; from May 1, 1885, until May, 1887, at Clark's Mills, Manitowoc County, and from May, 1887, to August, 1892, rector of St. James' Church, at Cooperstown, Manitowoc County. His next appointment was as pastor of St. John's Church at Montello, Marquette County, where he remained until August 12, 1896. He was then transferred to St. Joseph's Church, at Stevens Point, in Portage County, which charge he left on March 15, 1897, to become rector of St. Caecilia's at Kilbourn City.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Kingston, Wis.

THIS parish was established in the spring of 1876, at which time a church was built. This church was completed and blessed by the Rev. Father Martin Kundig, Vicar-General of the Archdiocese of Milwaukee in 1877. The first pastor appointed to this congregation was the Rev. James Stehle, who remained from August, 1876, to July, 1881. He was then followed successively by the Rev. Fathers W. A. Goebel, August, 1881, until September, 1883; J. A. Schiefen, September, 1883, until February, 1886; Nicholas Kils, May, 1886, to July, 1887; M. J. O'Brien, July, 1888, to November, 1888; J. A. Selbach, December, 1888, until August, 1889; J. D. Schwartzmeyer, October, 1889, to September, 1890; J. A. Bourgmeyer, December, 1890, to November, 1892; C. Krieger, December, 1892, until March 16, 1897, and L. Spitzlberger, the present pastor, who assumed the duties on March 20. The congregation consists of forty-four families, ten or twelve of whom are German.

The congregation of St. Andrew's at Buffalo, Marquette County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission from Kingston. This parish was first organized about forty years ago by the Rev. Father Gray. It is comprised almost entirely of Irish families, fifty-five of whom are members of the congregation. Services are held at this mission on every alternate Sunday. The present church at Buffalo was built by the Rev. J. D. Schwartzmeyer at a cost of $3,000. It occupies an area of 30x75 feet and is of solid brick.

The Rev. Lorenz Spitzlberger was born in Frontenhausen, diocese of Ratisbon, Bavaria, on May 27, 1830. After acquiring a Catholic common school education in his native country he took a classical course in Germany, after the completion of which he came to the United States, arriving here on December 25, 1854. He then read philosophy and theology in St. Vincent's College, Pennsylvania, and was ordained to the priesthood at St. Mary's Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, on April 23, 1858, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Fr. Baraga of Marquette, Michigan. His first appointment was as pastor of the Catholic congregation at Camp Spring, Kentucky, where he remained for five years. He returned to Pennsylvania in 1863 and took charge of St. Mary's in Brady's Bend, remaining there until 1866, in November of which year he removed to Pittsburg. In January, 1867, he went to New Orleans, Louisiana, and Galveston, Texas, and Chicago, on a trip, arriving finally in Wisconsin August 10 of the same year. Here he was stationed at Fountain City until 1871; Marathon City 1871 to 1874; Lorettoburg, Sauk County, 1874 to 1875, and Humbird, Clark County, until August, 1876. He then went to St. Cloud, Minnesota, taking charge of the congregations at Perham, Brainerd and Moorhead. From 1878 to 1883 he had charge of fifty missions in Minnesota and Dakota. He then returned (1883) to Wisconsin, taking charge of the congregation at Jericho, Calumet County. In 1885 he went to Europe, where he made extended visits in England, Ireland and Austria, returning, however, in October to assume the pastorate at Manitowoc Rapids, where he remained until November, 1887. Then he was in Poygan until May 1, 1888, and afterwards at Morristown, Brown County, Wisconsin, until 1890. Following this he was at Lanark, Portage County, and Sherwood, removing from the latter place to his present pastorate on March 20, 1897.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Kingston, Wis.

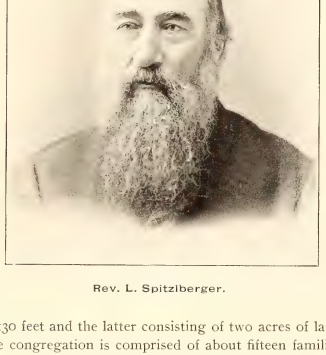
Another mission attended by the pastor at Kingston is St. Mary's congregation near Cambria, Columbia County, Wisconsin. This mission has a church and cemetery, the former a frame building covering an area



Rev. L. Spitzlberger.

20x30 feet and the latter consisting of two acres of land. The congregation is comprised of about fifteen families, all of whom are German. The pastors attending this congregation since its regular organization in 1862 are as follows: The Revs. J. B. Reindl, 1862; P. Deberge, October, 1862, to January 23, 1863; Fathers Fusseder, J. E. Halbenkann, William Wilkens and Max De Becke, to December, 1874; J. Stehle, November, 1876, to January, 1877; W. A. Goebel, December, 1882, to December, 1883; J. D. Schwartzmeyer, May, 1888, to December, 1889; J. A. Bourgmeyer, May, 1891, to November, 1892; C. Krieger, December, 1892, to September, 1896, and Lorenz Spitzlberger, the present pastor, since April 19, 1897.

The pastor of the Immaculate Conception has also recently established a mission at Markesan, in Green Lake County, which is at the terminus of the branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway from Brandon. At this place Father Spitzlberger celebrates early Mass on one Sunday in the month. There is no church at Markesan at present and divine services are held in a private house. The congregation, all of whom are English speaking, numbers ten or twelve families. The mission is dedicated in honor of St. Joseph. Markesan lies about eight miles east of Kingston, of which place it will continue as a mission. The population here numbers altogether some five hundred people, and there are already three or four churches of other denominations in the place. Mass was celebrated for the first time at Markesan by Father Spitzlberger on July 25, 1897, previous to which time the Catholic residents in that vicinity were debarred to a great extent from receiving the benefits of the church, the roads being exceedingly bad and teams scarce.

St. Patrick's Church, Lanark, Wis.

ST. Patrick's Parish, established in October, 1890, had been attended from Stevens Point from 1865 to 1885, and after that date from Stockton. A fine frame church was built here by the Rev. Jos. Geissler in 1888, the first resident pastor of the charge being the Rev. Lawrence Spitzlberger, who came October 1, 1890. He was succeeded by the Rev. E. P. Lorigan, whose pastorate began November 1, 1893. The parish embraces the towns of Lanark, Buena Vista, Almond and Belmont, their combined Catholic population numbering one hundred and twenty-five families. The most of the settlers of Lanark came from the city of Stevens Point. A bell was donated to this parish in 1894 by Mrs. Patrick Ryan, and was solemnly blessed by Bishop Messmer on November 14 of the same year. The nucleus from which the Almond settlement may be said to have originated was a colony of some twenty families who came from the celebrated powder mills of the Duponts near Wilmington, Del., and settled in the towns of Almond and Buena Vista about thirty years ago. George McMulkins, a popular foreman in the mills, was the leader of this exodus. The church built at that period still remains, although the all too evident ravages of time lay thick upon it, made still more apparent by the many marked improvements in and about the surrounding country. Latterly, a colony of Poles have taken residence in Belmont, where a temporary church was built, in which the first Mass was said on March 25, 1896. These people are steady, industrious and generous; although, unfortunately, absolutely ignorant of the English language. The field contiguous to Lanark is a promising one, and bids fair in time to become a more than ordinary credit to the diocese.

St. Patrick's Church, Lanark, Wis.

Rev. E. P. Lorigan.

Father E. P. Lorigan, the present resident priest of St. Patrick's, was born in County Limerick, Ireland, in 1840, and is the son of Bartholomew and Mary (Sheahan) Lorigan. After the death of his parents, and while still very young, he came to America with his older brothers, locating at first in Philadelphia. He then moved to Pittsburg, and was there for about a year in the office of Dr. Drake, a leading physician of the city. Later, through the kindness of his brother, the Hon. Bryan S. Lorigan, now of Manitowoc County, he entered St. Vincent's College, Westmoreland County, Penn., at the age of thirteen, and remained four years. He next went to St. Thomas Seminary, near Bardstown, Ky., and two years later entered St. Francis Seminary, Milwaukee. Here he was seized with the rheumatism, and to gain relief he returned to Ireland. While there, the class of mathematics in Thurles College, at Tipperary, was offered him, by his cousin, the Rev. Edward Ryan, president of the institution, but he remained in Ireland only about a year. Returning to America he resumed his studies at the Jesuit Seminary at Spring Hill, Ala., and there he was ordained June 24, 1866. His first charge was at Huntsville, Ala., where he remained four years. He was next stationed at the cathedral at Mobile, Ala., for three years, whence he returned to his former parish in Huntsville. Father Lorigan then came to Milwaukee, and after he was three years in the Cathedral, he for eight years had charge of the Catholic interests at Chilton, Wis. In October, 1889, he assumed the charge at Stevens Point, but in November, 1890, failing health compelled him to relinquish his duties for two years. After a protracted tour through the West he returned to Wisconsin and in 1892 located at Lebanon, Waupaca County. From there he came to St. Patrick's Church in Lanark Township, November 9, 1893, besides which he acts as chaplain of the Wisconsin Veterans' Home near Waupaca.

St. Patrick's Church, Lebanon, Wis.

THERE is but very little, indeed, of an historical character forthcoming in regard to the congregation of St. Patrick's at Lebanon, although it ranks among the oldest parishes in the diocese of Green Bay. It is on record, however, that the first church was built in the year 1856. Prior to this, it is reasonable to suppose that the Catholic settlers dwelling in and around Lebanon, received attention from the priests established in neighboring parishes, or those in transition from one portion of the State to another, as was so often the case in the first years of the Church in the Northwest. It is also apparent that the people who organized this congregation and maintained it, must have been of a thrifty and progressive character, as we find it also a matter of record that a new church was built to take the place of the old one in 1865. As a mission the congregation of St. Patrick's was attended by the resident pastors from Oshkosh and New London, but as to when it was changed from a mission to a parish and awarded a resident pastor of its own, it is not given to us to state. However, of those who had a hand in building up the spiritual life of this community and bringing it to its present state of usefulness, there are a few whose names have been handed down.

The first among these was the Rev. Father Hermann, who was followed in succession by Fathers Keenan, Spierings, Verwyst, Le Magie, Duen, Huehn, A. O'Connor, P. L. Gasper, J. P. Dillon, O'Brien, Pele, E. P. Lorigan, F. X. Steinbrecher, G. J. O'Connell, and the Rev. M. Kelleher, the present incumbent. The congregation of St. Patrick's numbers at the present time some three hundred and fifty souls. At one time there was a parochial school in connection with this parish, which, however, for some reason or other, went into disuse a long time ago. Of Catholic organizations in connection with this parish, there is but one, the Society of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, which was established in 1894.

St. Patrick's Church, Lebanon, Wis.

The English mission of St. Bridget's, at Northport, Waupaca County, Wisconsin, is attended at regular intervals by the resident pastor of St. Patrick's Catholic congregation at Lebanon, to which it is attached.

In the earlier days of this congregation, the members attended divine services in the same church as did the present members of the mother parish, the building used for that purpose then being located in the vicinity of Northport.

In the neighborhood of thirty years ago this building was totally destroyed by fire, and it was at that time decided, as a matter of convenience, that the congregation should be divided, each party erecting its own edifice.

The church at Northport was then built, and has since been in constant use. This mission now consists of about thirty families, and is in a fairly prosperous condition.

St. Peter's Church, Lincoln, Wis.

THE Catholic congregation at Lincoln, Kewaunee County, Wisconsin, was established in 1857, a church being built there by the Rev. P. Crud, who is the first priest mentioned as having visited and administered to the wants of these people. His successor was the Rev. Pellegrin, during whose time the church was struck by lightning and totally destroyed. Not to be discouraged, Father Pellegrin at once set to work and succeeded after much labor and considerable effort on his part in partially erecting the present spacious brick edifice. Being called away before its completion, the work was, however, finished under the administration of the Rev. Father Hens, during whose pastorate it was solemnly dedicated by the Right Rev. Bishop Katzer. The dedication took place on October

St. Peter's Church, Lincoln, Wis.

4, 1886, over eleven years ago. Father Pellegrin succeeded Father Hens, maintaining the pastorate on this occasion for a priod of four years, when he was succeeded by the Rev. A. Belle. The congregation of St. Peter now consists in the neighborhood of one hundred and twenty-five families. There are in the way of societies connected with this congregation a St. Anna's Altar Society: President, Mrs. H. Moreau; Secretary, Mrs. T. Dewesh; Treasurer, Mrs. A. Defult. St. Aloysius Society for Young Men: A. Kipping, President; George J. Bottkol, Secretary. Sodality of the Holy Rosary for Young Ladies: President, Miss Mary Gigot; Secretary, Miss Katie Noel.

The Rev. A. Belle, resident pastor at Lincoln, was born in Wiltz, Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, and educated in Liege, Belgium, being ordained to the priesthood in 1887. He then came to the United States and was appointed to the charge at Clintonville, Wisconsin, where he remained until 1893, when he was transferred to the pastorate at Duck Creek. His next appointment was to his present pastorate at Lincoln, which he has maintained for several years.

Rev. A. Belle.

St. John Nepomucene's Church, Little Chute, Wis.

THE congregation of St. John Nepomucene, at Little Chute, Outagamie County, Wisconsin, one of the oldest, was founded by the Rev. Father Theo. van den Broek, in 1833 or 1834. At that time those comprising the congregation were nearly all Indians, but since 1848 the settlement has become almost entirely populated by the Dutch, the first colony of whom were induced to come by Father van den Broek in that year, while on a visit to his native country, for the purpose of laying before the people the many advantages to be obtained by settlers in the new world. Since that time this settlement may be said to have been almost entirely under the administration of Fathers of the Holy Cross, whose convent was first established in Little Chute, but transferred to Bay Settlement, Brown County.

In 1851 Father van den Broek was succeeded as pastor of Little Chute by the Rev. William de Yonge, who remained in charge until 1853. He was then followed successively by the Rev. Edward Daems from 1853 to 1855; Rev. William Verhoeff, from 1855 to 1856; Rev. A. Mauclerc, from 1856 to 1857; Rev. W. Peiffer, from 1857 to 1860; Rev. E. Spierings, from 1860 to 1865; Rev. Anton Verberk, from 1865 to 1869; Rev. Elzear de Wilt, from 1869 to 1874; Rev. A. Wubbels, from 1874 to 1879; Rev. C. de Louw, from 1879 to 1881; Rev. Anton Verberk, from 1881 to 1890, and the present rector, the Rev. Theodore Knegtel, from 1890 until the present time.

The congregation now consists of some three hundred families, or fourteen hundred souls. The parochial school, which has a regular attendance of about two hundred and eight scholars, is conducted by Sisters of St. Dominic from the convent at Racine. Of Catholic organizations connected with St. John's there are the following: Catholic Order of Foresters, H. Bongers, chief ranger; St. Elizabeth's Society, Mrs. A. Gloudemans, president; St. John's Society, John Evens, president; Union Society, T. Weijenberg, president; the Guild Society, A. van Handel, president, and the Young Ladies' Sodality, Nellie van den Wildenberg, president.

St. John's Nepomucene's Church and School, Little Chute, Wis.

The Rev. Theodore Knegtel, present pastor of St. John's, was born in Tilburg, Holland, in 1845. He acquired his theological studies at the Seminary Haaren, in that country, and was ordained priest in 1872. He was then for a while chaplain in Stiphout, Made and Geldrop, but came to America in 1882, when he was appointed rector at Preble, remaining as such until 1890, when he became pastor of St. John's at Little Chute. Under his direction a sanctuary, two vestries and a basement have been added to the church, which, after being polychromated, with its stained glass windows, striking tower clock and chime of bells, is one of the finest churches in the diocese and the glory of the altogether Catholic population.

Rev. Theodore Knegtel.

St. Mary's Church, Luxemburg, Wis.

THE Catholic settlers in this locality were first visited by the Rev. Father Albers. In 1862 the Rev. F. X. Pfaller, pastor of the German congregation at Green Bay, attended these people about once a month, saying Mass in a small school house situated east of the present church and opposite the home of John Spitzer. Father Pfaller encouraged these few German families to erect a church, and on his departure from there, in 1864, he had the satisfaction of seeing a log structure well under way. This was built on the site now occupied by the present church. This site, as well as that of the cemetery, was selected and blessed by him, the land being the gift of Nicolaus Merens and John Kaut. After the Rev. Father Pfaller's departure from Green Bay, the Very Rev. Father Daems visited Luxemburg occasionally, saying Mass in the house of Simon Thibodeau. He encouraged those of Canadian birth among the settlers to build a church of their own, for which, as administrator of the diocese, he provided the means. In the year 1875 he blessed this little church in honor of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. At present there are only about fifteen families belonging to the congregation, most of whom are Canadian French. Mass is said in this church once a month. Father Daems also greatly discouraged the project of the German faction to organize a congregation of their own. For some time following Luxemburg was attended as a mission from New Franken. The first to assume the charge was the Rev. Father Camencind, who came in 1869. Then came the Rev. Fathers Boden and Leitner in 1870; Welbes from 1870 to 1875—he bought a bell for the church at a cost of $329; and Guenterscheid, who stayed for about three months. When the parsonage was built in 1876, the Rev. Father Videnka became the first resident pastor. He bought stations for the church and made other improvements. In addition to this charge, Father Videnka also attended the neighboring German and Bohemian missions and, as the work was now too much for one priest, the Rev. G. J. Pellegrin was sent to him as assistant. Father Videnka remained at Luxemburg till the end of 1880. In December, 1881, the Rev. Hugo Praesser took charge of the congregation. He established a parochial school and engaged Miss Weiss as teacher, who conducted it in a most creditable manner. Father Praesser was also successful in his efforts to erect a new stone church, which undertaking was decided upon at a meeting of the congregation held about this time. In 1882, a quantity of material was brought to the ground and the old log church moved away. In May, 1883, the corner-stone of the new church was laid and on January 1, 1884, the first services were held in it. The old church was remodeled for a school, which was given in charge of Franciscan Sisters of Milwaukee in 1883. On April 28, 1884, the Rev. Father Praesser left Luxemburg and went to Europe, and on June 16 following the Rev. John

St. Mary's Church, Luxemburg, Wis.

A. Drees was appointed as successor to the pastorate by the Right Rev. Bishop Krautbauer. On September 29, 1885, the feast of Archangel Michael, the church was consecrated by Bishop Krautbauer in the presence of many priests and people. An altar of marble was donated by the congregation for this occasion. Under Father Drees' administration a Sisters house was built in 1889 and the church was furnished with two new side altars. On April 28, 1892, Bishop Sebastian Messmer blessed two new church bells, assisted by the Rev. Clemens Lau of Green Bay, Rev. N. Hens of South Kaukauna, Rev. A. Cipin of Ahnapee, Rev. Joseph Kirpal of Kewaunee and some others. On September 13, 1892, Bishop Messmer conferred the Sacrament of Confirmation on eighty-one persons at Luxemburg. On

Rev. Michael Schoell.

January 11, 1893, the Rev. Father Drees became rector of St. Lucas congregation at Two Rivers; he died March 16, 1897, at the Sanitarium in Milwaukee. March 30, 1893, the Rev. C. Ulrich was appointed pastor of St. Mary's at Luxemburg, and three years later celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as priest. At the same time the Holy Rosary Society was organized in presence of Bishop Messmer. On August 14, 1896, Father Ulrich was succeeded by the present incumbent, the Rev. Michael Schoell, who was rector of the Guardian Angels' congregation at Buchanan, Outagamie County, for the twelve years preceding.

The congregation of St. Mary's comprises one hundred and twenty-eight families, three of whom are English, and the parochial school, under the direction of the Sisters of St. Francis, is attended by one hundred and thirty scholars.

Catholic societies connected with this congregation are: Mothers' Society, one hundred and four members; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, thirty-three members; St. Joseph's Society, forty members; Young Ladies' Society, fifty members; Society of the Third Order of St. Francis, twenty-three members, and Childhood of Jesus Society.

The mission church of the Sacred Heart at Peot, Kewaunee County, is attended regularly by the resident pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Luxemburg. This congregation is composed entirely of people of French nativity or their immediate descendants.

The Rev. Michael Schoell was born in 1849 at Goeggelsbuch, in the Deanery of Hilpolstein, Mittelfranken, Bavaria, Germany. Acquiring his early education in the schools of his native country, he, at the age of 22 years, came to the United States, arriving in New York on September 17, 1871. He then became a student at the college of St. Vincent, Pennsylvania, where he read for the priesthood. He was ordained at Green Bay on April 6, 1879, saying his first Mass in St. Mary's cathedral on the 13th of that month. He was then assistant pastor of the church in Holland, Brown County, Wisconsin, from whence he was transferred to Menasha, remaining there until July, 1880. He then was appointed pastor of the congregation of St. John's at Seymour, Outagamie County, and its attendant missions, where he remained until August 7, 1884. He then became pastor of the Holy Guardian Angel's Church at Buchanan, Outagamie County, being transferred from that place to Luxemburg, in Kewaunee County, on August 13, 1896, where he became pastor of St. Mary's congregation.

The French congregation of the Sacred Heart at Peot, Kewaunee County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission by the Rev. M. Schoell, resident pastor of the Immaculate Conception at Luxemburg. This Mission was first established in 1868 by the Rev. Father Daems, afterwards administrator of Green Bay diocese, and at the present time, consists of sixteen families, ten of whom are French and six Bohemian. Services are held at this mission on every second Sunday of the month. The first Mass was said at Peot in 1867 or 1868, in the house of Mr. Simon Thibodeau, which place continued to be used for that purpose for nearly a year. Peot is perhaps better known to the general public at the present time as Casco Junction, and is also called by quite a number Bunker Hill.

Sacred Heart Church, Manawa, Wis.

PREVIOUS to the year 1874, Mass was said occasionally within the jurisdiction of the present parish at Manawa at the residences of Messrs. John Gilroy, Robert Smith and John Carew, though for nearly ten years priests residing at New London, and later others from Lebanon, visited the Catholics of that vicinity. Among the latter were the Rev. Fathers Verwyst, Lemagie and Duerr. In 1874 Father Annen, then residing at Lebanon, built a church at Manawa, on a tract of land donated for that purpose by Mrs. Mary Davy. This building, though plain, was comfortable and large enough to accommodate the demands of the Catholic community, at that time occupying an area of twenty-four by forty feet. From this time until 1894, Mass was said regularly once a month on Sunday and occasionally on week days, the members of the congregation being attended successively by the following pastors from Lebanon: The Rev. Fathers Annen, 1874, to 1876; Arthur O'Connor, 1876, to 1883; P. L. Gasper, 1883, to 1889; J. P. Dillon from June, 1889, to July, 1890; M. J. O'Brien, from July, 1890, to December, 1890; P. Pele, from December, 1890, to December 1891. After the administration of Father Pele a vacancy occurred, the congregation being unattended until July, 1892. From that date until November 8, 1893, the Sacred Heart congregation was visited by Rev. Father Lorigan, he being succeeded on that latter date by the Rev. F. X. Steinbrecher. On May 1st following, Father Steinbrecher regularly organized the parish, becoming its first resident pastor. Since then Mass has been said regularly every Sunday, with the exception of the second in each month, when the pastor officiates at Waupaca, which is served from Manawa as a mission.

Sacred Heart Church, Manawa, Wis.

The present church of the Sacred Heart at Manawa was built by Father Steinbrecher in 1894. The building is of brick veneer and occupies an area of forty-two by eighty-eight feet, having seating capacity for four hundred. The basement of the church is divided into several compartments, besides which there is a large hall fitted out for parish and society meetings, which has a seating capacity of from two hundred and seventy-five to three hundred. The cost of the entire structure, including the interior furnishing, amounted to about seven thousand five hundred dollars. After the completion of the new church, the old building was entirely remodeled and is being used temporarily as a parsonage.

Rev. F. Vollebregt.

The congregation of the Sacred Heart now consists of about one hundred and thirty families, seventy of whom are Irish, fifty-five French and five Polish. Of societies connected with this congregation, there is a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, of which Mr. E. E. Colien is president; League of the Sacred Heart, with two hundred and forty members; Confraternity of Christian Mothers, seventy-eight members, Mrs. J. Scanlan, president; Young Ladies' Sodality, forty-two members, Miss Mary Hanna, president, and a reading circle with fifty members.

The congregation of St. Mary Magdalen at Waupaca City, is attended as a mission by the pastor from Manawa. The mission has now been in existence for nearly eight years, having been founded by the Rev. John Dillon on March 30, 1890. The congregation consists of about sixteen families, most of whom are Irish. Regular services are held by the pastor at St. Mary's once a month. The Catholic families at the Soldiers' Home, of whom there are some twelve, are attended by the pastor from Waupaca. The Home is about three miles distant from the mission.

The Rev. F. Vollebregt, present rector of the Sacred Heart, English and French congregation at Manawa, Waupaca County, Wisconsin, was born at Delft, Holland, in 1857. He acquired his education in the schools of his native country, and was ordained to the priesthood at Hertogenbosch by the Right Rev. Bishop Godschaler in 1885. At the request of the late Rt. Rev. Bishop Flasch, he came to this country, being appointed on his arrival to the Sacred Heart congregation at West Superior, where he built a school and church combined for the French-speaking element of that place. In 1892 he was transferred to the pastorate of Turtle Lake, and after serving there for a short time, left in order to pay a visit to his native country. Upon his return, he was admitted to the Diocese of Green Bay, his first appointment being that of pastor of Aniwa and adjacent missions. This property was greatly improved under his administration, among the most valuable additions made to it being a pastoral residence at Phlox. In 1897 Father Vollebregt was appointed rector of the congregation at Manawa with Waupaca as a mission.

St. Patrick's Church, Maple Grove, Wis.

SOMEWHERE about the year 1850, the Catholics of Maple Grove and vicinity at that time some fourteen in number, held divine services in the house now occupied by Mrs. B. S. Lorrigan, an old resident of the place. The pastor at that time was the Rev. Father Brunner, S. J., of Manitowoc Rapids, who, like a majority of the missionary fathers of that period, had a difficult and laborious time of it. Traveling was extremely tedious in those days, the means afforded being the narrow and winding Indian trails whereby transit was effected from one settlement to another. Father Brunner was a devout and zealous worker in behalf of the people, and no undertaking seemed too arduous, or journey too severe for him, where their spiritual welfare was at stake. A Hungarian by birth and partially unacquainted with the manners, characteristics and language of the people, he, however, quickly adapted himself to his surroundings. During his residence in the North, he had become conversant with the Indian dialect. He was succeeded as an attendant upon the mission of Maple Grove by the Rev. Father Knight. To him belongs the credit of having built the first church, during the construction of which he held services at the home of Thomas Watt, since deceased. The Rev. Gernbauer succeeded Father Knight for a short time, when Father Sebastian took charge—this was about the year 1861—when the Civil War had just started and one of Father Sebastian's greatest efforts in the way of oratory at Maple Grove was a speech in which he exhorted the people to do their duty and come unhesitatingly forward to the defense of their imperiled country. Somewhat later he himself was drafted into the service. In 1865 the Rev. Eugene McGinnity, now of Janesville, took charge of the pastorate. During his brief residence at Maple Grove he paid off the entire debt on the church property. The corner-stone of the present brick church at Maple Grove was laid November 1, 1868. It is one of the most noticeable specimens of church architecture in the State of Wisconsin and was designed under the administration of the Rev. James Mahoney. The building, however, was completed during the pastorate of the Rev. Andrew Seubert, now of Menasha, his successor, who defrayed most of the expenses of its construction. The next pastors were the Revs. Louis Cornelios and Lemagie, who occupied the period extending until 1879, when Father Roman Scholter took charge and made many improvements. He was succeeded by the Rev. W. J. Rice, who, during six years' residence at Maple Grove, made several additions to the church property. The next pastor was the Rev. Conrad Saile. He added two side altars by way of improvement to the interior furnishings of the church, and also made arrangements for the main altar, which was completed after his departure, at a cost of $1,200. The little congregation of fourteen families has now increased to the number of one hundred and sixty-eight.

St. Patrick's Church, Maple Grove, Wis.

Rev. T. J. Ryan.

It is one of the prosperous missions in the diocese. For some considerable period after the establishment of this congregation, there was no school connected with it, but to-day there is an educational institution associated with the church which is in charge of School Sisters of St. Francis from Silver Lake Convent, and has a regular attendance of some forty scholars. In connection with the congregation there is also a League of the Sacred Heart with a membership of three hundred and ten, of which Miss C. Doolan is secretary and Miss Mamie Guhin, treasurer; the Christian Mothers' Confraternity with a membership of fifty, and the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin with a membership of thirty-two, of which John P. Watt is president; P. O'Hearn, recording secretary, and Math. Reddin, corresponding secretary.

The Rev. T. J. Ryan, present rector of St. Patrick's Congregation at Maple Grove, Wisconsin, was educated in Dublin, Ireland, and ordained to the priesthood in 1884. He was placed in charge of the Missions of Winneconne and Omro in 1885, and during his ministrations there built a church at the former place. He was then transferred to the pastorate at Berlin, Wisconsin, where he built a pastoral residence and made numerous other improvements to the church property. After remaining there for seven years, he was appointed to his present charge at Maple Grove.

Sacred Heart Church, Marinette, Wis.

THE congregation of the Sacred Heart, at Marinette, Wis., was founded by the Rev. J. J. Fox, pastor of the church of Our Lady of Lourdes and present vicar-general of the diocese of Green Bay, in 1893. The Rev. Father L. Staroztzick was the first pastor of the Sacred Heart Church, who remained with the congregation but four months, when Father Joseph Kominek became the resident pastor. A year later he was succeeded by the Rev. Valentine Wiercinski, who is still in charge. The congregation of the Sacred Heart Church is composed of about sixty-six families, fifty of whom are Polish. In this parish there are three Catholic societies, which are as follows: St. Joseph's Society—Anton Kuffel, president; Frank Sadowicz, vice-president; Andrew Banasinski, secretary, and Joseph Zielinski, treasurer. Sacred Heart Confraternity—Mrs. Mary Zielinski, president, and the Holy Rosary Confraternity, of which Mrs. Victoria Lawinczak is president.

Sacred Heart Church and Parsonage, Marinette, Wis.

Father Valentine Wiercinski was born in West Preussen, Germany. He came to America in 1886, and, completing his classical studies at Newark, N. J., and his theological studies at Cincinnati, Ohio, was ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. Bishop S. G. Messmer in 1894. Since assuming the pastorate of the Sacred Heart congregation, Father Wiercinski built a new priest house and organized the three societies of which mention has already been made.

Rev. V. Wiercinski.

Our Lady of Lourdes' Church, Marinette, Wis.

THE congregation of Our Lady of Lourdes, at Marinette, Wisconsin, was founded in the year 1868. Previously, as far back as 1848, the Catholics of Marinette were visited occasionally by the Revs. John C. Perrodin, of Fond du Lac, Father Bonduel, of Green Bay, and B. De Goey, of Duck Creek, Wisconsin. Beginning, however, with 1865 the people of this congregation were attended by the Rev. A. M. Jos. Mazeaud, at that time a resident of Peshtigo, and during that year a small church was built on a piece of property, donated for that purpose by Mr. J. Spalding. In 1868 the Rev. P. Pernin, also of Peshtigo, assumed the pastorate. Three years later, and during the administration of the same pastor, the church was totally destroyed by fire. Father Pernin then built a large house, part of which was devoted to church purposes, while the remaining portion was converted into a residence. Later the entire building was used for a school, being bought by the Sisters of Notre Dame for that purpose. Towards the end of his pastorate Father Pernin began the erection of a new church, which, however, was not completed until 1876. The Rev. W. J. White was the next pastor of St. Mary's, although but for a few months during the latter part of 1874. After his retirement the congregation was without a pastor, failing for some reason or another to obtain one until September, 1875, when the Rev. John Chebul was appointed. During his administration, which lasted until December, 1876, the new church was completed, a school established, and Sisters of Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee, secured to take charge of the same, and this school was successful from the start, the records showing a regular attendance of forty scholars soon after its being established. From December, 1876, to April, 1877, the Rev. M. G. Smits administered the duties of this pastorate, being succeeded on the latter date by Father Charles Beyerle, who remained until August, 1878. This pastor paid off all outstanding debts on the church property, so that his successor, Father John M. Brady, found the field clear for further improvements. It was during his residence at Marinette that a new and substantial parsonage was erected. From May, 1881, until the summer of 1883 the Rev. A. Th. Schuettelhofer was the incumbent, he being succeeded in August of the latter year by the Rev. Jos. J. Fox. For eleven years Father

Our Lady of Lourdes Church, School and Parsonage, Marinette, Wis.

Fox labored zealously and successfully among the Catholics of Marinette, doing much for the lasting benefit, both spiritual and material, of the parish. Through his efforts a new school house, costing $6,000, was built; $400 was invested in a bell, $500 was expended on side altars, $1,000 for handsome windows for the church and $900 for an excellent pipe organ. In addition to these, new Stations of the Cross and numerous statues were procured to augment the interior furnishings of the edifice, in which also was placed a new furnace and system for electric lighting. Many necessary as well as comfortable additions were also made to the interior of the parsonage during the same period.

In 1889 the French members of St. Mary's withdrew from that organization, establishing one of their own, which was dedicated to St. Joseph, and four years later the Polish members organized that of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. During the year 1891 the School Sisters of Notre Dame erected a new building at Marinette for the higher education of young ladies, naming it St. Mary's Institute.

Rev. Theo. Richard.

On August 12, 1894, the Rev. Joseph J. Fox was summoned to Green Bay to assist the Right Rev. Bishop Messmer in the diocesan work as Vicar-General. He was succeeded as pastor of St. Mary's by the Rev. Theodore J. Richard, who is still in charge of the parish. The congregation of Our Lady of Lourdes now comprises some three hundred and fifty families, and the parochial and high school, in charge of six Sisters of Notre Dame Convent, of Milwaukee, have a combined enrollment of four hundred scholars. At St. Mary's Institute, which is also in charge of Sisters of this order, the course of instruction embraces all the requisites for a solid and refined education, as well as the highest proficiency in music.

A number of Catholic societies are connected with the congregation of St. Mary's, among them being: The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, one hundred and forty-two members: P. Clifford, president; Joseph Le Roi, secretary. Ancient Order of Hibernians, sixty-five members: William Moore, president; George Grogan, secretary. Catholic Order of Foresters, one hundred and fifty-two members: L. J. Evans, chief ranger; F. Raiche, secretary. St. Joseph's Society, eighty-one members: L. Walters, president; Joseph Albel, secretary. Catholic Order of Foresters for Ladies, twenty-five members: M. Corry, president; E. Nowakowsky, secretary. Daughters of Erin: J. Boyle, president; Ella Moore, secretary. Guard of Honor, one hundred and eight members: A. McGillis, president; A. Wink, secretary. Young Ladies' Sodality, ninety members: H. McCarthy, president; T. Cannon, secretary; and the St. Agnes Children's Society, one hundred and ten members.

The Rev. Theodore Richard was born in Arlesheim, Canton Basel, Switzerland, on December 17, 1851. For several years he attended the common schools and high school at that place, after which he spent one year in the University of Freiburg, Germany. He then came to the United States and Appleton, Wisconsin. He next spent a year at the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, and still another in the Seminary at Suspension Bridge, Niagara County, New York, where he completed his theological studies. When a little more than twenty-two years of age, he was ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. Bishop Foley, at Chicago. His first appointment was as assistant pastor at Wausau, Marathon County, to the charge of which he was soon after transferred, maintaining the same for a period of nearly twenty years, during which time he employed his every effort in behalf of St. Mary's congregation, greatly to its spiritual as well as material benefit. From a period when it was an incorporate parish, small in numbers and seemingly with anything but a prosperous future, it has under his careful and judicious management advanced to one of extensive dimensions and unusual activity and well being; this, too, in spite of the fact that it is not many years since a large number withdrew from the congregation in order to form that of St. Michael's. Under his administration the prospects of the parish of Our Lady of Lourdes, at Marinette, are unusually bright and promising, as he will undoubtedly effect much and lasting good there.

St. Joseph's Church, Marinette, Wis.

THE French Catholic Church of St. Joseph's was built at Marinette, Wis., by Father L. A. S. Caron, in November, 1890. This structure, which is now used for school purposes, was necessarily of a temporary character, and but feebly voiced the zeal and enterprise of the Catholics in that vicinity. The real undertaking began, when in May of the following year the foundation was laid of the present imposing edifice, which, when completed, cost $22,000.

St. Joseph's Church, Marinette, Wis.

The membership consists of about three hundred and sixty families. There is a free school connected with the church which was established in 1893, and has now an attendance of over a hundred pupils. The entire property owned by this congregation is valued at $30,000.

The Rev. Father Caron, to whose untiring energy is due the accomplishment of this really remarkable undertaking, was born near the City of Quebec, Canada, on January 5, 1847, and is the son of Louis M. and Apolline (St. Peter) Caron, who were also both natives of the same parish. Father Caron was educated at St. Ann's Seminary in the diocese of Quebec. He afterward read law, being admitted to the bar at Montreal in 1875. He then opened an office at l'Islet, where he practiced for three years, but at the end of that time, concluding to abandon his profession for the priesthood, entered the College of Checoutini, from which he graduated three and a half years later, when he was ordained priest. His first appointment was at St. Prime Lake, St. John County, province of Quebec, where he officiated as assistant to Father F. X. Bellay, now vicar-general of the diocese of Checoutini, his particular attention being given to the missions of St. Felician, St. Methods and St. Cyrille, which were attached to that pastorate. Two years later he was sent to St. Croix and Tadoussac, Saguenay County, where he remained until 1888. While there he built a handsome stone church at Tadoussac, and a smaller one to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, a mission connected with that parish. He was next appointed pastor of the latter church, in connection with which he also attended the mission of Anse St. Etienne. He then went to Little River in Charlevoix County, remaining but a short time, when he came to the United States and assumed the pastorate of St. Joseph's parish, Marinette, on October 25, 1890. Father Caron is a member of the Catholic Knights, Catholic Order of Foresters and Benevolent Association.

Rev. L. A. Caron.

St. Martin's Church, Martinsville, Wis.

THE Walloon and Flemish congregation of St. Martin's at Martinsville, Kewaunee County, Wisconsin, was established in 1878. In that same year the Rev. Martin Smits, now rector at Kilbourn City, built a priest's house and became first resident pastor of the new Parish. He was succeeded in 1880 by the Rev. A. Masschelein, who remained until 1887, when the Rev. Louis Martin took charge of the congregation. Upon his being transferred to another parish, the Rev. J. Darche assumed the pastorate in 1889, remaining, however, but a few months, when he was followed by the Rev. A. Le Bras, who continued to administer the duties until 1891. The next pastor was the Rev. P. Van Heyster, whom the present pastor, the Rev. L. J. Broens, succeeded on May 9, 1894. At times when this congregation was without a resident pastor, divine services were held by the Very Rev. J. J. Fox, the Rev. Father Cautereels and Father Drees, at that time resident pastors in the neighborhood.

The congregation of St. Martin's at the present time consists of about sixty families. Of Catholic organizations in the parish there are the following: Altar Society; officers, Mmes. Adele Jouet and Emma Breduel. Ladies' Society of the Blessed Virgin Mary; officers, Mary Trisque, Josie Breduel and Emma Van du Veldt.

St. Martin's Church, Martinsville, Wis.

The Rev. L. J. Broens, present pastor of St. Martin's, was born on the first day of July, 1865, in Wert, Holland. His earlier studies were obtained in a college at that place, after which he, on the 13th of October, 1886, went to Heeswegk, Holland, where he entered the College of Beme. Here he studied philosophy and theology and was ordained to the priesthood on the 26th of June, 1892. He was then sent to America with the Rev. B. Pennings to open a mission for the Order of Praemonstratensian. On the 1st of November, 1893, he became assistant to his brother, the Rev. Alphonse Broens, at Sturgeon Bay, resigning from that position to occupy his present rectorate at Martinsville, on May 9, 1894.

The Mission of St. Joseph (Walloon) at Robinsonville, Brown County, Wis., is attended by the pastor from Martinsville, who holds services in that church once every week. This congregation was organized some time in 1860. Twice since it came into existence it has maintained a resident pastor, once in the person of G. Wilkers and again when the Rev. R. Schir came there. It was also in charge of the Rev. Fathers De Louw, Leccia and Selbach. The congregation at the present time numbers eighty families.

There is also located at Robinsonville a convent of the Sisters of St. Francis "La Chappelle," which was erected by Sister Adele, who died in 1896. The present Superior is Sister Magdalene. This convent is attended by the pastor of Martinsville. Mass is said in the chapel of this institution every Sunday and occasionally on week days. On Sundays the Sisters attend Mass at St. Martin's. There is a boarding school for orphans and other poor children, which is conducted in connection with the convent. "La Chapelle" is widely known throughout the country on account of the annual pilgrimage which is made to the Blessed Virgin at that place, who is said to have appeared to Sister Adele. This pilgrimage is held on the 15th of August every year, on which occasion a large number of people, some three thousand, it is estimated, come from all sections of the country.

Rev. L. J. Broens.

Still another mission that is attended by the Rev. Father Broens from Martinsville is that of St. Amandus, also Walloon, which is located at Walhain, a small settlement in Kewaunee County.

The congregation of St. Amandus was established in 1875, nearly a quarter of a century ago, and consists at the present time of about forty families. Though small in numbers, this congregation is in a fairly prosperous condition. Services are held at St. Amandus once each month.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Menasha, Wis.

IN the year 1888 some seventy-five Polish families belonging to St. Mary's Church at Menasha, severed their connection with that congregation and established one of their own. The church which they built at that time, and is still occupied by them, is a two-story brick structure and occupies an area 40x90 feet. This building was erected under the supervision of their former pastor, the Rev. Andrew Seubert of St. Mary's, who arranged the upper portion of the building for church purposes, while the lower part was used as a school and Sisters' residence. The first resident pastor of St. John's was the Rev. John Monczynski, who took charge in July, 1888. He remained but a short time, being succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Grenbowski on October 1 of that year.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Menasha, Wis.

This pastor built the present parsonage and established a parochial school. He was succeeded on September 8, 1891, by the Rev. Adalbert Pelczar, who retired the following May. Father Q. Zielinski was the next pastor, remaining for two years, when Father S. Wozny took charge on May 1, 1894. Four months later the Rev. L. Grabowski became the pastor, continuing so until April 15, 1895, when the Rev. L. J. Pescinski assumed the pastorate. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, the Rev. V. Wiercinski. There are two hundred and fifteen families now in the parish. The school connected with this congregation is conducted by Sisters of St. Francis, from Milwaukee, and is attended by about one hundred and fifty scholars. The following Catholic societies are represented in this congregation: St. Peter's Benevolent Society, organized October 2, 1888, ninety members; Sacred Heart of Jesus Altar Society, organized November 1, 1888; Holy Rosary Society, organized October 1, 1892, one hundred and fifty members; Apostleship of Prayer Society, organized in 1892, two hundred and fifty members; Third Order of St. Francis, organized December 14, 1895, thirty-five members; Young Ladies' Sodality, forty-four members.

St. Patrick's Church, Menasha, Wis.

AS early as 1836 occasional services were held on and about Doty Island, but it was not until 1848 that the Rev. Father Theodore J. Van den Broek, stationed at Little Chute, established a regular mission west of Menasha for all of the Catholics of the two towns of Neenah and Menasha and the adjoining country. Several priests served this mission up to 1853, when a church building was erected on the Island on an acre of land donated by Mr. Laughlin B. McKinnon for Catholic Church purposes. The first priest who served these people was the Rev. Father Ferinaci, who took charge of the mission in 1853. His successor was the Rev. Father Max de Becke, whose pastorate extended from 1857 to 1859. Then successively came the Rev. Fathers Seif, 1859 to 1860; Louis Dael, 1860 to 1863; William Wilkens, 1863 to 1864; Edmund Walsh for three months, and Father Uhlemeier from 1864 to 1870. During the latter's pastorate the German Catholics withdrew from the congregation and built a church of their own in Menasha in honor of St. Mary. The original property of St. Charles parish was in 1870 assigned by the Rt. Rev. Joseph Melcher to the Servite Fathers Morini, Moreshini, Moreti, Baldi and Venturi, who co-jointly served the parish until 1883, when the property was again redeeded to the Rt. Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, Ordinary of the diocese.

St. Patrick's Church, Menasha, Wis.

On March 7, 1882, the first frame church on Doty Island was destroyed by fire, but soon after ground was broken for the erection of a larger and altogether more pretentious structure. This building was so far completed during the Rev. Father O'Connor's pastorate as to admit its use for church services without being plastered or floored. Father O'Connor had sole pastoral charge of this congregation from 1883 to 1884, during which period of service he changed the patronage of the same from St. Charles to St. Patrick. Since that time the heavy debt resting on this church when first built has been gradually diminished and the interior finished and furnished complete.

While the Servite Fathers were in charge of the congregation a school house was built at Menasha and placed in charge of Servite Sisters from England, they continuing to conduct the same until 1887, when they were succeeded by Sisters from Notre Dame Convent of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. At the present time the school is in a flourishing condition, being the equal of any in the two towns. From time to time missions have been conducted in this parish by Rev. Fathers Daly, Splinter, Hennebery, Damen, Van der Eerden, and last of all by the Revs. H. Finnegan and T. E. Sherman, all being attended by a large proportion of other denominations. The parochial school has at the present time a regular attendance of one hundred and eighty scholars. Of Catholic societies in connection with St. Patrick's Congregation there are the Ancient Order of Hibernians, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Catholic Foresters, Altar Society, Sacred Heart League, and Young Ladies' and Holy Rosary Societies.

The Rev. William De Kelver, present rector of St. Patrick's, was born in Kewaunee County, Wisconsin, in April, 1843. His father, Peter de Kelver, was a native of Belgium, in which country he was born in 1812. He emigrated to the United States with his wife in 1842 and upon arriving in this country at once came West to Wisconsin and located on a farm in Kewaunee County, where the subject of this sketch was born. Young De Kelver remained upon the home farm until 14 years of age, when he hired out as a farm hand, at which work he remained for four years. He then removed to Kewaunee and worked in a lumber camp, remaining there until the breaking out of the civil war. In August, 1863, he became a member of Company A, Twenty-Seventh Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, serving with the same until April, 1864, when, owing to a severe illness which unfitted him for further duty, he was honorably discharged. Returning home he decided to enter the priesthood and was for seven years following a student in St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee. He was ordained to the priesthood in June, 1871, his first charge being that of Kilbourn City, where he remained for two years. For a similar period he also served at Grand Rapids and subsequently he was for one year in Green Bay and for nine years at De Pere, in Brown County. From the latter place he was transferred to this present pastorate at Menasha.

St. Mary's Church, Menasha, Wis.

FOLLOWING the advices of the Right Rev. Martin Henni, the Catholic Germans residing in Menasha separated from the congregation of St. Charles Borromeo, now that of St. Patrick's, and under the direction of the Rev. William Wilkens, the pastor, organized the parish of St. Mary's in the spring of 1867. For this purpose they bought a church owned by the Congregationalists at Menasha, which was first used by them under the administration of the Rev. F. Uhlemayer, who assumed the charge of the parish in November, 1867. He also during his residence at Menasha established a parochial school and erected a building for the same. Father Uhlemayer severed his connection with the parish in May, 1871, from which time until December, 1872, the Rev. Joseph Nussbaum had charge and during his rectorate at that place organized St. Joseph's Benevolent Association in the congregation. When he left, in December, 1872, the Rev. J. Jaster assumed the charge, maintaining same until March, 1875. From the latter date until the present time, the Rev. A. Seubert has had continuous charge of the parish. There are now in the neighborhood of three hundred families in this congregation. The parochial school, which is conducted by eight Sisters from Notre Dame Convent, has a regular attendance of three hundred and twenty-five scholars. While the interests of this parish have progressed in an altogether satisfactory manner since its organization, it has not been entirely free from those trials and difficulties which are liable to overtake the people of any community. On Ash Wednesday, 1883, the church was entirely destroyed by fire. Within three days from the time of the disaster, however, a sum amounting to $14,000 had been subscribed towards the erection of the present structure. The present school house connected with St. Mary's was built in 1893.

There are in the way of Catholic organizations connected with the parish, a St. Joseph's Society, Phillip Schwab, president; William Laemmerich, vice-president; Joseph Kremer, secretary; Joseph Marx, treasurer. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Fred Mayer, president; A. Whale, vice-president; Louis Jordan, secretary; Charles Yung, treasurer. Catholic Order of Foresters, John Schreiber, chief ranger; F. Sensenbrenner, vice-chief ranger; John Lenz, past chief ranger; A. Luekenbach, recording secretary; Edward Schrage, treasurer.

The Rev. Andrew Seubert was born December 16, 1846, in Bavaria, Germany. He came to this country with his parents, who located in Addison, Washington County, Wisconsin, in 1857. He entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, in 1860 and was ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. Bishop Melcher, at Green Bay on May 22, 1869. This gave him the distinction of being the first priest ordained for the new diocese. On May 24 of that year, he was given charge of the congregation at Greenville and missions in Outagamie county. From May, 1870, to August, 1874, he was in charge of St. Patrick's congregation at Maple Grove, in Manitowoc County, and from August, 1874, to March, 1875, was rector of St. Francis at De Pere. Father Seubert has always taken great interest in the welfare of the entire diocese and has for many years been one of the Consultors.

St. Mary's Church, Menasha, Wis.

Rev. Andrew Seubert.

St. Francis Xavier's Church, Merrill, Wis.

ST. Francis Xavier's, the first Catholic church erected at Merrill, Wis., was built in 1884. The Rev. Engelbert Blume attended Merrill at that time and continued to do so until he succeeded in nearly wiping out the debts accumulated during the construction of the church. His successor was the Rev. John Hummel, who built a new parsonage, bought two lots for school purposes and ground for a cemetery. The third and present pastor of St. Francis Xavier's is the Rev. Edward F. Van Hootegem. He has made many notable as well as valuable additions and improvements to the property, among others, reseating the church throughout, at an expense of $1,000, and the purchase of an additional lot for school purposes, altars, furnace in church and parsonage, etc. The resident congregation of St. Francis now numbers sixteen hundred souls, although that number is largely augmented during certain seasons of the year by a floating population of woodsmen and mill hands. There is also a mission at Bloomville of fifteen German families, which is attended from Merrill. Besides a number of local confraternities the following Catholic societies are represented in this parish: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin—President, John Secard; Vice-President, Frank Petska; Secretary, Richard Barrett; Treasurer, Joseph Downie; trustees, George Boyer, Joseph Schneider and Adam

St. Francis Xavier's Church, Merrill, Wis.

Salschneider. Catholic Order of Foresters—John Van Hecke, chief ranger; Thomas Donnelly, vice-chief ranger; John Stafford, past chief ranger; Herman Walther, recording secretary; James Hurley, financial secretary; Owen Love, Tom Sanford and D. Dawson, trustees.

The Rev. Edward Francis Van Hootegem, rector of St. Francis Xavier's, was born in Flanders, Belgium, March 3, 1856, and is the only son of John and Sophia (Desmet) Van Hootegem. He acquired his earlier education in the common schools of Belgium, remaining at home on the farm until the age of thirteen, at which time he went to Eecloo where he took a collegiate course of eight years. From there, he went to St. Nicholas for one year's study of philosophy and thence to Louvain for a three years' theological course in the American College connected with the famous university of that city, from which institution he graduated in 1881. On May 21 of the preceding year he received minor orders in Malines, Belgium, at the hands of Bishop Van Den Branden de Reeth; sub-deaconship, December 18, of the same year in Liege, Belgium, by Bishop Doutreloux; deaconship March 12, 1881, and was ordained to the priesthood on April 2 following in Roermond, Holland, by Bishop Paredis. Soon after his ordination, he left his native country for America, arriving in New York on the sixth of the same month. Two days later, he was appointed by Bishop Krautbauer to the church of St. John the Baptist in Duck Creek. There his first work was to pay off a debt of three thousand dollars and to generally improve the church property. For eleven years following, he had charge of Duck Creek, Flintville, Little Suamico, besides attending the new missions of Coleman, Maple Valley and Stiles; the two first from 1882 to 1884, and the latter for a few months until each of these places was given in charge of a permanent priest.

Somewhere around the year 1885, St. Edward's and Isidore's Church was erected in Flintville, and two years later, St. Leo's in Little Suamico. In 1888, a substantial school building was erected in Duck Creek, which completed cost not less than five thousand dollars. Four years from that time, Father Van Hootegem was transferred by Bishop Messmer, of Green Bay diocese, to the pastorate of St. Francis Xavier's at Merrill. Here he also proved a zealous and active worker, the two first years of his pastorate realizing many needed and valuable improvements to the parish property. Among these were the reseating of the church at a cost of one thousand dollars, erecting of altars, and furnishing the parish house with water works, steam plant and electric lights.

St. Francis Xavier's School, Merrill, Wis.

Since his first arrival in America, Father Van Hootegem has twice revisited his native country. The first occasion was during the summer of 1887, when he went to Belgium and Holland, besides making a tour through Switzerland and on the Rhine. He also made another journey in 1895, when, after visiting extensively throughout the eastern States, he went to England and Ireland, and made a somewhat extended tour through Italy, Tyrol, Austria, Bavaria, and again on the Rhine, visiting Rome, Naples, and, in fact, all of the principal cities in these countries. He next turned his attention to France, over which country he travelled extensively, going from Paris to Lyons, and from there through the most picturesque parts of France, the Chartreuse district and the Cevennes; journeying through Toulouse and the famous sanctuary of Lourdes, and from there to Biarritz and Bordeaux, along the Atlantic coast to Paris, Rouen and Belgium, returning to the United States from the latter country in July, 1895.

Rev. E. F. Van Hootegem.

Father Van Hootegem has already perfected arrangements for the erection of a new school building and Sisters residence at Merrill, during the summer of 1898. This building is to be brick-veneered, and two stories in height, exclusive of the basement. The dimensions are 67x70 feet, 6 inches, an addition of 32x40 feet being used for a Sisters residence. The basement will be done off into a hall 25 feet 6 inches by 54 feet, having a stage 12x18 feet, boys' and girls' toilet rooms, play room, furnace room, and store room for the Sisters' use. On the first floor there will be four school rooms, each 26x32 feet in dimensions, while through the center of the building there will run a 10 foot hallway connecting directly with the Sisters' department, which will consist of a music room, sitting room, library, dining-room, kitchen with pantry, china closet and laundry. The second floor will be arranged practically the same as the first, with the exception that the Sisters' department will be done off into four single chambers, a dormitory 12x22 feet and a bath room. The building is to be finished throughout with Georgia pine, the floors being of maple. Special attention is also being given to the lighting, heating and ventilating of the building, which, when completed, will cost in the neighborhood of $10,000.

Holy Cross German and French Church, Mishicot, Wis.

THE German and French Catholic congregation of Holy Cross at Mishicot, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, is one of the parishes erected in Green Bay during the past year. The congregation at this place is in charge of the Rev. A. Bastian. There is no parochial school in connection with this parish.

St. John's Church, Montello, Wis.

MONTELLO'S history as a factor in the growth and progress of the Catholic religion in Wisconsin is said to have begun in the earlier part of June, that is, between the 7th and 10th, 1673, at which time Father Marquette is reported as having blessed a fountain at St. Marie; aside from this, however, the place has the distinction of having and still maintaining the oldest church in the counties of Green Lake and Marquette. In honor of this the Right Rev. Bishop J. M. Henni dedicated it sub titulo: Sancta Maria ad fontem. From this parish dates the existence of those at Princeton, Neshkoro, Kingston and Montello. The old Mother Church is now known far and wide as a famous pilgrimage shrine established in honor of Mary and the saintly Marquette.

The first Catholic families to settle permanently at or around the spot where Montello now stands came to that place in 1850, the leader or promoter of the expedition to which they belonged being a Mr. Anton Quantius. As in other unfrequented and sparsely settled districts, however, these Catholics were found by the members of the clergy who traversed those regions. It is of record that the Rev. Father Godfrey of St. Marie was the first to visit these people and to celebrate Mass in that settlement. This he did occasionally in the small log church which had been hastily constructed at a point about one mile north of that on which Montello now stands. This building was superseded by a brick structure of more commanding proportions in 1856, which later became celebrated far and near as the center of an extensive granite quarry. Eight years subsequent to the time that the frame church was built the Rev. A. Fagen took up his permanent residence at Montello, where he continued to live for some time. He was succeeded by the Rev. M. Monaghan, who remained until 1871. His successor was the Rev. Father James O'Malley, who left in 1874, and from that time until 1876 the Rev. Father Elzear DeWilt maintained the pastorate, being then succeeded by the Rev. John Larmer. He built the present church edifice, which was in due time dedicated in honor of St. John the Baptist, under whose patronage it is still maintained. Following Father Larmer came the Rev. Father Honeyman, who completed and added much beauty to the entire structure. He also erected a large brick school building in 1889, and added many other valuable improvements to the property in general. His pastorate ended in 1891, at which time the Rev. F. X. Steinbrecher took charge. He infused considerable interest into the congregation by the organization and establishment of various societies. In 1892 the Rev. J. Holzknecht became pastor of St. John's. He effected an innovation by the introduction of Franciscan Sisters from the Bay Settlement, whom he placed in charge of the parochial school. Under their careful administration this institution has been brought into a most flourishing condition, and the present attendance is now estimated at an average of not less than one hundred and fifty scholars.

St. John's Church and School, Montello, Wis.

The congregation of St. John's comprises some one hundred and fifty families, part of whom are English, part German and part Polish. Of societies in the congregation there is a branch of the Catholic Order of Foresters, organized in 1894, with ninety-five members, of which Mr. Patrick Duffy is chief ranger, and F. Campion, secretary. There is also a society of the Third Order of St. Francis, and a St. Ann's Altar Society. The Rev. Pastor of Montello also has charge of the pilgrimage in St. Marie, and of the vacant missions of Briggsville, pro tempore.

The Shrine of St. Marie.

The history of the Shrine of St. Marie, of which the pastor of St. John the Baptist has charge, begins with Father Allouez, who erected there on Le Cote de St. Marie, a cross, in 1670. Thence, history has it, he ascended the Fox River, erecting another cross at the chief village of the Mascoutins, which is now known as the village of Marquette. From that point Father Allouez proceeded to Montello and Portage city, in each of which places he performed a similar service. Succeeding him came Father Marquette, who arrived at Marquette on or about June 7, 1673, and tradition has it that while there he blest a fountain which still exists at that place, in honor of St. Mary. The Jesuit historian, Charlevoix, speaks of this fountain at some length, and refers to it as being a quite remarkable one, being as he found it in the midst of a morass. In speaking of this fountain Father Marquette calls it a mineral water, but makes no reference at all to having blest it. When the early Catholic settlers built their first brick church in the vicinity of the fountain in 1861, Bishop Henni gave it its dedicatory title: St. Maria ad fontem (St. Mary by the fountain) possibly from his belief in the tradition. This, however, is not authoritatively stated. It may further be said that reference is made to the blessing conferred by Father Marquette, in the history of Northwestern Wisconsin, published in Chicago some years ago, and also by Bishop Marty in his life of John Martin Henni. A large oak cross now indicates the place where the fountain is located, and the spot is venerated by many of the pilgrims who annually visit the Shrine.

Shrine of St. Marie at St. Marie.

Rev. J. D. Schwartzmeyer.

The Rev. J. D. Schwartzmeyer, present pastor of St. John's congregation at Montello, since August 15, 1896, was born at Nemanice, Bohemia, May 29, 1855. In 1864 he came to the United States and began studying for the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary near Milwaukee. He then went to Louvain, Belgium, from which place, having completed the necessary course, he returned to the United States, and was ordained to the priesthood at Green Bay, by the Right Rev. Bishop Krautbauer in 1881. His first appointment as pastor was of the congregation at Briggsville, Wisconsin, from which place he also attended Portage City, Friendship, Kingston and Buffalo, as missions. His second pastorate was at Custer, with Sharon for a mission; his third at Cooperstown, and fourth at Sturgeon Bay, from which he was transferred to Montello.

St. John the Evangelist's Church, Morrison, Wis.

THE first Mass was celebrated at Morrison, January 28, 1855, by Father Perrodin, a native of France, in the house of John Rice. The service was repeated in August of that year at William Rice's, and in February, 1857, at John Clark's, where also Father Vivaldi, of Italy, celebrated the same service in December, 1857, and February, 1858. In January, 1859, the parish was reorganized by Father Bonduel, Mass being said by him at the home of Thomas Brady. At this time, also, John Clark donated two acres of land for a church and parish house, and Patrick Boylan gave an acre to be used as a cemetery. The erection of the first church was begun in December, 1860, by Father Seif, and was finished by Father Verboort in 1865. This building cost $950. In 1868 Father Verboort built another and larger church at Morrison, which cost $2,500. Father Lane, a native of Ireland, became first resident pastor of this congregation on the fifth of November, 1870. In the following year the parsonage was built, and in 1875 an addition and steeple was built onto the church, and a bell purchased, the total expenditure in making these improvements being some $2,000. The Rev. Father Herbert was appointed assistant pastor in October, 1876, and Father Lane dying January 25, 1877, the Rev. Father Abb was assigned to the pastorate in the following May. Fathers Lane and Herbert are both buried in East Holland. The Rev. Father Gaellweiler succeeded Father Abb September 13, 1877. The Rev. Father Andalschek became pastor in April, 1878, and was followed by the Rev. Father Holzknecht in November, 1879. Father William Rice, a native of Morrison and son of Mr. John Rice, said his first holy Mass July 4, 1880, in this church. During the pastorate of Father Holzknecht many improvements were made to the church property. The building was thoroughly overhauled and repaired and a new cross erected on the steeple. A number of handsome and costly ornaments were also secured or donated, among them being a baptismal font, statue of St. Joseph, vestments, and a chalice valued at $120, the latter being a gift to the church by Mr. John Toher and family. On September 21, 1882, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Krautbauer confirmed one hundred and seventy-three in the church, and on the same day $130 was raised for the benefit of the parish school, which, with a Sisters' house and addition to the parsonage, cost about $450.

On November 6, 1883, the church, school and parish house were totally destroyed by fire, a loss of $8,000, on which there was only $2,600 insurance. From that time the interests of St. John's congregation began visibly to decline, many of the members leaving and joining neighboring churches. In addition to this the congregation was subjected to another severe trial in the loss of $560 of its funds, which were deposited in Strong's Bank, De Pere, Wis., when that institution failed. In spite of these repeated losses, however, the remaining members at once set to work and built a new priest's house, into which the pastor, Father Holzknecht, moved December 21, 1883. In February, 1884, a building committee, consisting of P. Boylan, P. Hobbins, John Crowley, J. Joyce, and Leopold Rockl, let a contract for the erection of a new church, to cost $2,800. To this new building, the dimensions of which are 36x75 feet, Mr. John Crowley donated a beautiful circular window representing the Sacred Heart for the Sanctuary. Father John Holzknecht was succeeded by the Rev. E. Blume, who remained from November, 1884, until June, 1885. Then followed the Rev. Conrad Saile, from August, 1885, to May, 1886; Rev. A. N. Buschle, September, 1886, to September, 1887, and the Rev. A. P. Masschelein, from September, 1887, to May, 1888. This priest started the mission of Stark, but a few miles from Morrison, thereby weakening the mother church to a still greater extent. In May, 1888, the Rev. L. Spitzlberger took charge of the congregation. Under his administration a mission was held by Father Mathias Neumiller of Prairie du Chien, when two hundred and fifty communicants were received. It was also during his pastorate that a new bell was purchased and a new ciborium presented to the church by Mrs. Helena Toher. Father Spitzlberger was succeeded by the Rev. P. A. Van Susteren in August, 1891, who, during his stay, built an addition to the parsonage and made other necessary improvements. From June 23, 1895, until August 13, 1896, the Rev. W. H. De Haan was the officiating priest. He was succeeded August 19, 1896, by the present pastor, Father F. W. Geier. The present congregation is composed of forty-five families. There is also an Altar society of twenty-five members, established in 1888, of which Father Geier is secretary and treasurer.

St. John the Evangelist's Church, Morrison, Wis.

Rev. F. W. Geier.

The Rev. Father F. W. Geier was born September 12, 1865, in Bodenwöhr, a small village in the diocese of Ratisbon, Bavaria, Germany. He came to America April, 1881, for the reason that in Catholic Bavaria a very obnoxious law existed, preventing any boy from taking up and pursuing studies in the public institutions after having completed his twelfth year. He obtained his classical education at St. Vincent's College, Pennsylvania, and also took a two years' course in philosophy and one year in theology under the celebrated "Hebrew" scholar, the Rev. Julian Kilger, O. S. B. He then completed his course at St. Bonaventure's Seminary, Allegheny, N. Y., and was ordained to the priesthood July 3, 1892, by the Rt. Rev. S. G. Messmer, D. D., bishop of Green Bay, Wis.

St. James' Church, Neshkoro, Wis.

Up to the year 1874, the Catholics residing in the country round about the present town of Neshkoro, were attended by visiting priests who held divine service and said Mass in the houses of the settlers. Among the first of these to visit this section of the country, were the Rev. Fathers Bonduel, Grey, Fagen and Monaghan. In 1874, however, the Rev. J. O'Malley, of Montello, organized a congregation at Neshkoro, and at the same time built the first church at that place. Father O'Malley was succeeded by the Rev. Father De Wilt, who remained as pastor of the congregation at Montello and its out missions until 1876. His successor, the Rev. J. Larmer, made several improvements and additions to the church property. He was succeeded by the Rev. P. Honeyman, who assumed charge of the Montello parish and missions on October 31, 1886.

St. James' Church and School, Neshkoro, Wis.

A notable change was made in the history of the congregation at Neshkoro, when on June 6, 1888, it was made a parish, and given the Missions at Princeton and Wautoma. Of this new parish the Rev. J. Kaster was appointed first resident pastor. He also conducted an active administration, making many necessary improvements to the property, and building a new and comfortable house for the pastor. He was succeeded on September 15, 1890, by the Rev. A. Huitink, during whose residence at Neshkoro land for a cemetery was bought. On March 8, 1893, the Rev. F. Geier became pastor of St. James, remaining as such until the Rev. F. Fiss was appointed on September 1, 1896. This congregation is composed of thirty-eight families, all of whom are English speaking. There are connected with it three Catholic organizations: A Young Ladies' Sodality, a Sacred Heart Society, and Altar Society. Mass is said here every third Sunday and on all holy days.

Rev. F. J. Fiss.

After the village of St. Marie became extinct, and the bridge across the river broken down, the Catholics abandoned their old church, locating at Princeton in the year 1868. For some time following they were attended by the Polish priest residing at that place, and also by the pastor from Montello, but when Neshkoro was erected into a parish, in 1888, St. Patrick's was attached as one of its missions, services being held in that church on every third Sunday. The nationality of the members of this congregation with the lapse of time became somewhat changed, for while originally it consisted of English speaking people, it is now composed of nine English and twenty-one German families.

In 1885 the Catholics of Waushara County met, organized and built St. Joseph's Church, where from time to time some pastor was wont to visit. When, however, Neshkoro became a parish, St. Joseph's Church at Wautoma was attached to it as a mission, and, as at Princeton, Mass is celebrated there on every third Sunday.

The actual congregation connected with St. Joseph's consists of about twenty families, although there are a far greater number of Catholics who are residents of the county. The majority of these living long distances from Wautoma, are thus unable, excepting occasionally, and then with great inconvenience, to attend divine services at any place, as there is no other church in the county. This congregation is also composed of English and German speaking families.

St. Kilian's Church, New Franken, Wis.

IT was in July, 1845, that the families of John Peter Schauer, Michael Burkhart, Michael Lang, Valentine Lang, Wendelin Sohler, Caspar Schoerger, Andrew Schott, James Schauer, and Andrew Schmitt, came from Unter Franken, Bavaria, and located in Green Bay. These were followed in 1846 by George Schauer, Melchior Schauer, Martin Heim and Nicolaus Holzapfel, while in 1848 the families of Peter Schaut, Gerhard Schaut, Christopher Simons, Henry Simons, Anthony Goetzmann, Michael Listel, Sebastian Gehring and Lawrence Wolfert came to the same place from Prussia. These were the first members of the original Catholic congregation at New Franken, and the only ones, in fact, until 1849. One of the main objects of this little settlement in gathering at this particular point was to be able to build a church and obtain the services of a resident pastor. The settlement is located some ten miles east of Green Bay, and at the time these people came there was but one Catholic church within a distance of twelve and a half miles, that having been erected at a point south of Green Bay. There, for a time, and prior to the erection of a structure of their own, these people would go on Sundays to attend Divine services. In 1847 Father Rehrl came to this vicinity from his place of residence in Calumet County, where the Capuchin Convent of Mount Calvary is at the present time located. These journeys were made by him on foot, he being compelled on such occasions to carry the requisite paraphernalia for conducting the services upon his back. When Father Rehrl heard that there were a number of Catholic families living at New Franken, he visited them and offered up Mass for the first time in that settlement in a log house occupied by one of the families. From thenceforth he came to New Franken twice a year, passing on from there to Cooperstown, Francis Creek, Mansing, and Sheboygan, and in his journeyings visiting all the Catholic families in that part of the State. While visiting New Franken for the first time, Father Rehrl pointed out to the settlers the necessity of providing the necessary requisites for Divine services by the time that he came again, as it would be too wearisome an undertaking for him to carry such a burden along. The request, though in every way proper, implied a task of unusual difficulty, as New Franken was at that time at the extreme limits of civilization, and very far, indeed, from any place where such articles could be readily procured. Fortunately for them, however, there was located at a settlement now known as Little Chute a priest by the name of Van den Broek, who had but lately arrived from Holland, bringing with him a number of sacred utensils. Hearing of this, the late Paul Fox of Green Bay and John Peter Schauer called upon him and made known the predicament in which they were placed. He responded by presenting them with two chasubles and some sacred vessels, to which numerous acceptable additions in gifts were subsequently made by friends living in the old country. When Father Rehrl appeared among these people for the second time, he informed them that Bishop Henni had instructed him to erect a church wherever he could find sufficient Catholics to warrant the undertaking and had also authorized him to select a place for the building, and to erect a cross at the point where he desired it to stand. A short time afterwards, he decided upon a point, where, after erecting a cross, he instructed the late John Peter Schauer to have a suitable edifice built, saying to him: "I have found a place where I have erected a cross, and there you shall build a church without any contradiction; in the name of God, begin your work, and He will bless you." During the intervening period, a number of other German families settled at New Franken, thus giving further impetus to the Catholic congregation. In 1849 two priests of the Society of Jesus, the Rev. Father Brunner and the Rev. Father Anderledy, came to America from Switzerland, and took charge of the congregation at Green Bay with the neighboring missions. Father Brunner went once a month to New Franken, where, on each occasion, he remained for a few days, looking after the spiritual wants of the people. He also encouraged them to erect a church, and so they at last went to work in earnest and put up a log building 45x28 feet. In carrying out this undertaking, the people were generously aided by liberal donations from friends who had located at Green Bay. The church being completed, it was dedicated in honor of St. Kilian, the patron of the diocese of Wuerzburg, that name being selected as the majority of the families connected with the congregation had come from that place. In June, 1851, but a short time after the church had been completed, the celebrated missionary, the Rev. F. X. Weninger, S. J., came to Green Bay, where he held a mission. A number of the people from New Franken attended this mission, which made a strong and lasting impression upon all of the Catholics in that section of the country. When Father Weninger learned that a Catholic congregation was to be established at New Franken, he also held a mission at that place, where he received a spontaneous and hearty welcome. The congregation at New Franken now numbered thirty families, services being conducted for the benefit of these people once each month, by the resident pastors from Green Bay, who, besides conducting the services, always remained for a few days to look after the general interests of their parishioners. Those thus visiting this mission were the Rev. Fathers Seif, Smedding, Hartlaub, Pfaller, Stein, Minderer, a priest from the Bay Settlement, whose name cannot be obtained, Daems, Verhoef, Weits, and Orts. In 1854 the late Father Joseph Salzmann, while making a tour of the State to secure means for the erection of his priests' seminary at St. Francis, stopped at New Franken, where he succeeded in obtaining $342 as a donation towards the enterprise. Before leaving, and at the oft-repeated and urgent requests of the people, he promised to send a resident pastor to this congregation as soon as possible. It was some time before this promise was fulfilled, but, at last, through the further efforts of Father Pfaller, Bishop Henni in 1865 appointed the Rev. A. Comenzin to take charge of the congregation. He remained there from February to April of that year. For some time following his departure, the congregation was without a pastor, but, finally, the Rev. William Boden assumed the charge in August, 1863 or 1864, remaining until December of the following year. It was during this brief pastorate that a new church, 70x40 feet, was erected at New Franken. In 1868 the Rev. F. X. Weninger held his second mission at New Franken, which was also remarkably successful. At the expiration of Father Boden's pastorate, he was succeeded in turn by the following priests: the

St. Kilian's Church, New Franken, Wis.

Rev. M. Welbes.

Rev. A. Leitner, from December, 1869, to August, 1870; the Rev. M. Welbes, from August, 1870, to January, 1877; the Rev. A. B. Rinkes, from March, 1877, to March, 1879; the Rev. J. Moser, from March, 1879, to June, 1879; the Rev. J. J. Fox, from September, 1879, to May, 1880; the Rev. W. Reuter, from June, 1880, to June, 1881; the Rev. F. X. Pfaller, from January, 1883, to December, 1890; the Rev. R. Frank, from January, 1890, to December, 1891; the Rev. F. X. Pfaller again, from January, 1892, to September, 1892, when he died, and the Rev. M. Welbes, present rector of the congregation, from January, 1893, to the present time.

The congregation of St. Kilian now comprises some sixty families, which is somewhat less than it was a few years ago. This, however, was caused by a number of German families separating from it and joining the parish at Bay Settlement. A number of Belgian families have also affiliated with a neighboring Belgian parish, which, of course, resulted in the thinning out to a considerable extent of St. Kilian's membership. As it is, however, the parish is in a prosperous condition and bids fair to maintain its own in the general growth and progression of the diocese. The parochial school in connection with St. Kilian's is conducted by two Franciscan Sisters and has a regular average attendance of about one hundred scholars.

The Rev. M. Welbes, present rector of St. Kilian's, was born in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg in 1834, and was ordained to the priesthood on June 10, 1870, by the Right Rev. Joseph Melcher, first Bishop of Green Bay.

Church of the Most Precious Blood, New London, Wis.

THE records of the Catholic Parish at New London, Wisconsin, go to show that services were first held and Mass said at that place in 1855, by the Rev. Farinacci. The place was also attended, from 1862 to 1863, by the Rev. Thomas Keenan from Oshkosh, and from 1863 to 1864, by the Rev. M. Retzer. During the administration of the latter, the first church, a small frame structure, was built at New London. Father Retzer was succeeded by the Rev. H. Spierings, and he, in 1865, by the Rev. Christopher Verwyst, who later became a member of the Franciscan Order. During his visits to New London, the number of the congregation became visibly increased, and as a result he built quite an addition to the original church structure. In 1868 Father C. L. Lemagie assumed the pastorate, of which he remained in charge for three years. His successor, Father Clement Duerr, remained but a year, being succeeded by the Rev. N. Guenterscheid, who remained from 1872 until 1874. Then the Rev. M. G. Smits was pastor of New London, continuing as the same until 1876, when Father F. X. Scholz came there. His pastorate extended over a period of thirteen years, during which time he made several noticeable improvements to the church property. Among other things, he in 1881 built the present school house, a red brick structure of commodious and comfortable proportions, and five years later he also built a parsonage. The Rev. L. A. Gasper succeeded Father Scholz in 1889, remaining until the advent of the present pastor, the Rev. John Hummel, who assumed the duties in that parish in 1894. During Father Gasper's residence at New London, he in 1891 built the present church. The congregation of the Most Precious Blood now consists of about one hundred and eighty families. The school, which is in charge of Sisters of St. Agnes from Fond du Lac, has a regular attendance of one hundred and fifty-three pupils. Of societies in this congregation, there is a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: Theo. Knapstein, secretary; Charles Rice, treasurer. St. Joseph's Benevolent Society: Theo. Knapstein, president; George Freiburger, vice-president; Leopold Froehlich, secretary; Henry Knapstein, treasurer. Altar Society: Mrs. Leopold Froehlich, president; Mrs. G. Cline, secretary; Mrs. K. Schaller, treasurer. Young Ladies' Sodality; Miss M. Lueck, prefect; Miss Katie Ashgar, secretary; Miss M. Jordan, treasurer;

Church of the Most Precious Blood, New London, Wis.

Miss M. Brill, librarian. League of the Sacred Heart, and Confraternity of Christian Mothers.

The congregation of SS. Peter and Paul at Hortonville,[1] Outagamie County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission by the resident pastor at New London. Prior to the year 1861 the Catholics residing at and in the vicinity of this place were attended as a mission by pastors from Oshkosh and Appleton. In that year, however, a frame church was erected at Hortonville, and from that time on until 1870 the resident priest at New London made regular visits to that place. Then another change was made, and from 1870 until 1879 the spiritual wants of these people were attended to by the pastor at Greenville. In the latter fall the affairs of the parish returned to their original condition, when these again came under the administration of the pastor at New London, and have so remained until the present day. The congregation of SS. Peter and Paul, which is composed mostly of people of German nationality, consists of about eighty families. Services are held at the mission regularly on every other Sunday. The present church at Hortonville, was built by the Rev. Father Gasper, in 1892. It is a plain but substantial building, well furnished and in keeping with the rest of the church property at that place, which indicates the thrift and enterprise of the people. It is now understood that Hortonville will within a short time be given a regular pastor of its own. There are three Catholic organizations in this parish, there being an Altar Society, Christian Mothers' Society and a Sacred Heart League. At present there is no parochial school.

(1) SS. Peter and Paul's was made a parish church and the Rev. Jos. Hemmer appointed the first resident pastor.

Rev. John Hummel.

. The Rev. John Hummel was born on August 29, 1862, in Douzdorf, Wuerttemberg, Germany. He came to America in 1880, finished his classical studies at St. Francis Solanus College at Quincy, Ill., studied philosophy in St. Francis Seminary near Milwaukee, theology at the same institution, and at Innsbruck, Tyrol, and was ordained to the priesthood by Archbishop Heiss in 1888, for the Diocese of Green Bay. His first appointment was as pastor of the Catholic congregation at Stockbridge, Calumet County, Wisconsin, after which he was transferred successively to the pastorates at Merrill, Lincoln County, Custer, Portage County, and has for the past two years and a half been located at New London.

St. Joseph's Church, Oconto, Wis.

THE foundation of this congregation dates back to the year 1870, prior to which time St. Peter's was the only Catholic church in the city. The new parish was organized during the administration of the Rev. Mathias Schwebach, who in the year 1869 was appointed by the Bishop of the Diocese pastor of St. Peter's Church. By this time the congregation of St. Peter's had acquired such a membership that the church was entirely inadequate to the demands made upon it for their suitable accommodation. Beside this, there was such an array of nationalities, and consequently diverse interests in the congregation, that the authorities deemed it expedient to establish another parish without unnecessary delay. Six months after assuming the duties as pastor of this church, Father Schwebach, together with some one hundred families, withdrew from St. Peter's and organized the congregation of St. Joseph's. The task of establishing this new parish and the erection of necessary buildings proved neither easy nor pleasant, as the people, though zealous and liberal as it was possible for them to be, were sadly deficient in means. However, as evidence of the earnestness involved in this undertaking, the Rev. Pastor with his own means purchased the necessary land for a site, while a committee appointed by the congregation at once set to work soliciting funds with which to procure the necessary materials for the buildings and pay for the labor employed in the erection of the same. The members of this committee were: Messrs. Thomas Tully, Anton Links, George Davis and John Stack. Not satisfied with soliciting the aid of Catholics living in their immediate vicinity, these men visited a number of the lumber camps located around the northern part of the State and received from them much material aid and encouragement. Finally, with sufficient funds in sight to guarantee them in the undertaking, and a liberal donation in labor and material from citizens of all denominations, work on the church was begun. Matters now progressed rapidly, so that in November, 1870, services were held in the new building. The church was completed during the early part of December, the dedicatory services being held by the Rt. Rev. Joseph Melcher, first Bishop of Green Bay, on the 15th of that month. From this time the work of improvement went gradually forward; pews, bells, altars, vestments, interior decorations were added one by one to the common property, until to-day St. Joseph's stands as well and fully equipped as any church in the diocese. So encouraged had the people become by their successful efforts to acquire a church, that they soon after decided to establish a parochial school. To this end work was begun on a building in 1873, the same being finished and ready for occupancy in 1874. The school was dedicated in July of that year, and it was then placed in charge of Sisters of Notre Dame, who opened it for regular attendance during the following October. This school has proved a blessing in many ways to the Church at Oconto, where previously Catholic educational interests had been sadly neglected. The Sisters of Notre Dame, however, enthused new life into the community, and as a result since their establishment there the parochial school and its interests here became a factor of paramount importance to the community. Two years prior to the completion of the school a bell weighing seventeen hundred pounds was purchased and placed in the church tower. This of course was duly blessed, its sponsors being Mrs. A. Dillon, Mrs. P. Guck, Mrs. George Lynes, Mrs. Norton and Messrs. George Davis and William Luby.

St. Joseph's Church, Oconto, Wis.

In this manner improvements were made on the church property and additions added to it until the year 1883, when the members of St. Joseph's congregation became thoroughly aware of the fact that the capacity of the church was entirely inadequate to the demands that increasing members put upon it. So it was unanimously decided to build an addition to the original structure. This in the first place had been forty by eighty feet, and it was decided that this space with an additional twenty feet added to the west end of the building would not only prove amply sufficient but at the same time allow the church to maintain an appearance of reasonable proportions. Without unnecessary delay this addition as well as a sacristy was built onto the church, the work when completed representing an outlay of some $1,500. Nothing further in the way of additions or improvements occurred until 1888, when the present beautiful altars and handsome and substantial altar railing were placed in the church. At about the same time the interior of the church was handsomely decorated and statues of St. Joseph and Our Lady purchased

In the latter part of 1891, owing to his advanced age and growing infirmities, the venerable pastor of St. Joseph's, Father Schwebach, asked for and obtained an assistant in the person of the Rev. P. J. Lochman, who assumed the duties of co-rector on November 3. It is proper to mention here that at different periods preceding the advent of Father Lochman the congregation had paid to Father Schwebach the purchase money advanced by him for the original church site and other accumulated church properties, receiving from him warranty deeds for same. This condition applied to everything except the parochial residence, which still belonged to the pastor, although there existed a contract executed by him and the congregation jointly whereby it was also to become parish property on the payment of a stipulated amount. Of this but little had been at that time paid, so that when Father Lochman assumed the active pastoral duties, that together with other outstanding indebtedness amounted to over $3,000. On March 4, 1892, occurred the death of the venerable Father Schwebach, who had labored faithfully and continuously in behalf of the people of this congregation for a period extending over more than twenty years. His remains now rest in the Catholic cemetery at Stevens Point, Wisconsin.

Rev. P. Lochman.

From time to time under the administration of Father Lochman many improvements have been made to the property in general. Among these may be mentioned galleries in the church and the decoration of church windows, the remodeling and entire refurnishing of the pastoral residence and enlargement and general improvement of the school building, which had come into a rather dilapidated condition. A basement was built under the school and divided into compartments which were used as kitchen, dining room and store rooms by the Sisters. Besides these there was a furnace room and a hall which is used for church meetings as well as by the different societies belonging to the congregation. This created an additional expense; however, the entire church debt had been paid off before the end of 1894. The next improvement decided upon by this energetic pastor and congregation was the remodeling of the church, which in many ways had become sadly out of repair. This was done, the structure being moved to the corner of Fourth and Section streets, where the pastoral residence stood, while that building was transferred to its present location, where it was placed upon a substantial stone basement. While the reconstruction of the church was going on the members of St. Joseph's congregation held divine services in St. Peter's Church. At last the work was completed, and on January 1, 1896, the church was solemnly dedicated by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer of Green Bay, assisted by the Very Rev. Vicar-General Fox, a life long friend of the congregation, and some twenty members of the clergy. Among the latter were the Rev. Father Reagan, professor of Notre Dame, Indiana, who was born and reared in the parish, and the Rev. Leopold Drexel, a professor of St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee. Since the rebuilding of the church it has received additional improvements in the way of furnaces and electric lights, the latter having also been placed in the parsonage. The estimated value of the entire property as it now stands is not less than $35,000. The present congregation of St. Joseph's numbers about four hundred families, and the parochial school, which is in charge of Sisters of Notre Dame, has a regular attendance of three hundred and fifty pupils.

During the lifetime of St. Joseph's congregation several interesting and successful missions have been held, among the number being one by Father Cooney, in July, 1875, one by Father O'Neil in March, 1878, and one by the Redemptorist Fathers during the present pastorate in April, 1892. Of societies organized in the congregation there are the following: Society of Our Lady for Young Ladies, organized in 1878; Catholic Knights of America, 1878; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, 1885; Ancient Order of Hibernians, 1890; Catholic Order of Foresters, 1893, one hundred members; Altar Society, one hundred members; League of the Sacred Heart; Young Ladies' Sodality, eighty members. There are also some flourishing Sodalities for the children, which were organized in 1894. In addition to these there is a Literary Club, organized in 1896, with about sixty members, and a Ladies' Auxiliary, established at about the same time with forty members.

The Rev. P. J. Lochman, present rector of St. Joseph's at Oconto, Wisconsin, is a native of Green Bay, where he was born in 1857. Here he passed the earlier days of his life, receiving his primary education in the Cathedral school of that city. He entered Calvary College in 1872, where he took the classical course, graduating with the class of 1876. He then took a theological course in St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He was ordained to the priesthood in June, 1881, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Krautbauer, who almost immediately appointed him as pastor of St. Rose congregation at Clintonville, Wisconsin, where he remained for two years. He was the first resident priest given to that congregation, and while there built a school and a parsonage. He also erected a church at Tigerton, and completed the first Catholic church built at Antigo. From Clintonville he was transferred to Freedom, Wisconsin, where he remained for over eight years. There also he built a parsonage, repaired the school house and made other notable improvements. While maintaining this pastorate he succeeded in converting a number of Oneida Indians, whom he assisted in building a church on the Indian reservation. On November 3, 1891, he assumed the duties of his pastorate at Oconto.

St. Peter's Church, Oconto, Wis.

A NUMBER of French Canadians established a settlement in the vicinity of Oconto, Oconto County, Wisconsin, in or about the year 1844. With these people for a nucleus, they being nearly all Catholics, the Rev. Father Bonduel formed a congregation at the time of his first visit to them in the year 1852. This church was dedicated in honor of St. Peter, by which name the parish is still known. Two years later, another priest, whose name is not forthcoming, took up the work which Father Bonduel had carried on up to that time, visiting the people at Oconto and neighboring Missions until 1857. From that year until March, 1857, the Rev. B. Smedding held services in this parish twice every month, preceding which time, however, the Rev. Father Perrodin paid visits to Oconto, where in 1856 the land for a cemetery had been donated to the congregation by Peter Picard for that purpose, as well as for the site of a church. This church was erected in June, 1857, and has the distinction of being the first public building erected in Oconto County. It still stands a monument to the zeal and energy of the early settlers of this section, although its exterior appearance has been much changed by improvements which have been made from time to time. As successor to Father Smedding came the Rev. A.

St. Peter's Church, Oconto, Wis.

Mignault, who remained at Oconto from September, 1860, to July, 1862. Then followed successively the Rev. Fathers E. Van Steenwick from 1862 to March, 1863; Bonaventura De Goey, O. S. F., from March, 1863, to January, 1864; Egbert Spierings until the time of his death, which occurred at Oconto in August, 1868; G. A. Spierings from August to September, 1868; A. Mazaud from September, 1868, to August, 1869; P. Pernin from August, 1869, to December, 1869; M. Schwebach from December, 1869, to April, 1870; A. Vermare, April, 1870, to November, 1883, and F. Vaillant, the present pastor, who took charge of the congregation in December, 1883. The parish of St. Peter's now comprises some twelve hundred souls. The parochial school connected with it was built in 1886, although it was not opened for the reception of scholars until spring of the following year. There are now two hundred and eighty pupils in regular attendance, who are in charge of Sisters of St. Joseph, from St. Louis, Mo. Of Catholic societies in St. Peter's congregation, there are a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin; Guard of Honor of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, erected canonically August, 1894; Holy Rosary Confraternity, erected canonically October, 1893; St. Aloysius Sodality; Young Ladies' Sodality, and Holy Angels' Sodality for little girls, and Infant Jesus Sodality for little boys.

The Rev. F. Vaillant was born in Trevoux Ain, near Lyons, France, on October 23, 1854, and was ordained to the priesthood on June 15, 1878. After ordination he was appointed maitre de chapelle in the Cathedral of

Rev. F. Vaillant.

Belley, Ain. In September, 1880, he came to America, his first appointment being as pastor at Rosiere in the Diocese of Green Bay, of which he took charge December, 1880. He was appointed to his present charge at Oconto, December, 1883.

St. Mary's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

It was during the month of September, 1850, that the Right Rev. John Martin Henni, Bishop of Milwaukee, concluded to send a German priest, or at least one who could speak both English and German, to the rapidly growing City of Oshkosh. The continued growth in population of that place certainly demanded such a change, although the conditions of the Diocese were such at that period that it was not until the early part of June, 1885, that he was enabled to carry out the original plan. On the 9th of June, in that year, the Rev. Franciscus Fusseder was sent by the Bishop to Oshkosh, there to attend to the spiritual requirements of the Irish and German Catholics. The task proved an arduous one, testing the physical capacities of the Rev. Father to their full extent; for aside from his immediate charge in Oshkosh he had also to visit the Catholics at the missions located throughout portions of Winnebago, Outagamie, Waupaca and Waushara Counties. Upon arriving at Oshkosh, Father Fusseder found a little church awaiting him, and also a parsonage, which, however, was but partially completed. This small defect was quickly remedied by the Germans of the congregation, and within a short time of his advent, the little church was also enlarged and adapted to the requirements of the rapidly increasing congregation. Among the first additions made to the church property by the reverend pastor, was a piece of land that was arranged for cemetery purposes. After a year of fruitful service among these people, Father Fusseder found that his congregation had reached such proportions that other provision would have to be made for their comfort and convenience. So from the second Sunday in the month of June, 1856, it was arranged with the consent of the Ordinary, to hold separate services, and from that time, though with the best of understanding towards each other, the Irish and German Catholics worshiped apart. In August of the same year, the Germans took further steps towards the organization of a separate church, by the selection and purchase of several lots on Merritt street, in the Fourth Ward, for which $450 was paid. A building committee was then appointed, plans were adopted, contracts let, and on January 18, 1858, at one o'clock in the afternoon, the first nail was driven in the building which was subsequently to be dedicated in honor of the Immaculate Conception. This building was completed and solemnly dedicated on August 15, 1858, by the Right Rev. Bishop John Martin Henni, in the presence of the Very Rev. Michael Heiss, rector of St. Francis Seminary at that time, the Rev. Fathers Max De Becke, Nicolaus Pfeiffer from Little Chute; B. Smedding from Green Bay; Stephen Stehle, Stevens Point; L. Doel, Fond du Lac, and the reverend pastor, Father Fusseder. This congregation was attended by Father Fusseder, who, however, remained as pastor of St. Peter's at Oshkosh until April, 1859, at which time he was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Keenan, who also took charge of both congregations. The Germans, however, were desirous of having a pastor of their own, and so in 1865, they built a pastoral residence, of which the Rev. Anton Leitner was the first occupant, he being appointed to the charge in July, 1866. During Father Leitner's pastorate, several improvements and additions were made to the church property. The structure itself was enlarged, and a bell purchased, the same being in use to the present day. He also established the first set of parochial books, so that since the beginning of his incumbency the parish has a continuous record. Father Leitner was popular with the members of his congregation, and during his residence at Oshkosh did a great deal towards advancing the interests of the people who had been placed under his care. He left in November, 1869, his successor being the Rev. W. F. Boden, who remained until June of the following year, when he was followed by the Rev. J. J. Rhode, who assumed charge in September. Under the administration of this pastor, the ardent desire of the congregation, for the establishment of a Parish School, was satisfied, one being established and placed in charge of a lay teacher, during the year 1871. A short time after, however, the school was given over to Franciscan Sisters, from La Crosse. Father Rhode left Oshkosh in August, 1874, being succeeded almost immediately by the Rev. John Zawitowski, who remained until April, 1877. Then came the Rev. A. N. Buschle until September, 1878, when he was followed by the Rev. John Jaster, who remained until August, 1881. In September of that year the Rev. R. Scholter, present pastor of the congregation, took charge of St. Mary's. During that year the old church was repaired, and the interior frescoed and decorated throughout. The congregation, also, which then numbered about one hundred and twenty-seven families, began so rapidly to increase that but a very short time had elapsed since his coming when it became evident that a larger church would be necessary. This certainly was the opinion of the Right Rev. Bishop Krautbauer, who urged strongly the immediate erection of a new edifice, emphasizing his request with the promise that if a suitable structure for cathedral purposes was erected, he would himself remove to Oshkosh. With such an incentive to urge them on, the pastor and congregation made great efforts towards the erection of this building, and to-day, as an evidence of their successful zeal in that direction, the beautiful structure of St. Mary's, a model of Gothic architecture, now stands. The good Bishop, however, was unable to fulfill his promise, and as a result of his death, which occurred prior to the completion of the church, a severe blow fell upon the people of the parish, from which they are not liable to recover for many years to come. The members of the church are still persistently doing their best to help matters along, and although the congregation is still in debt, the church and appurtenant buildings and grounds are in most excellent condition. The school also has improved, and is prosperous, having a regular average attendance of some two hundred and twenty-five scholars. The congregation was incorporated on July 3, 1883. Regarding the history of the present church of St. Mary's, it may be well to say that the corner-stone was laid on October 3, 1886, by the Right Rev. Bishop Katzer, present Archbishop of Milwaukee. Two years later the entire building was put under roof, and by January 1, 1889, the basement of the new structure was occupied by the congregation, all services being held there regularly. Thus the interior finishing and furnishing was continued from time to time, until September 11, 1892, when the structure was solemnly blessed and dedicated by the Right Rev. S. G. Messmer, D. D., and Pontifical High Mass celebrated by him. He was assisted by the Very Rev. Andrew Seubert, of Menasha, and the Revs. James O'Malley of St. Peter's, Oshkosh, Quirinus, Zielinski, of Menasha, John Kaster, of Shawano, Pater Joannes, O. M. C., of Appleton, and Rud. Ollig, St. Vincent's, Oshkosh. On this occasion, also, the Rev. William Blum preached in German, and the Right Rev. Bishop in English. Among those present in the sanctuary during the services were the Revs. J. D. Schwartzmeyer, of Cooperstown, and R. Scholter, rector of St. Mary's. The present officers of the parish incorporation are: George Henkel, Jr., secretary, and John Schmit, treasurer. Mr. Henkel succeeded himself and Mr. Schmit, to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Mr. Joseph Mies, who had been treasurer of the organization for a number of years. The present congregation of St. Mary's consists of about two hundred and forty families, two hundred of whom are Germans and the rest Polish. The parochial school has an attendance of two hundred and twenty-five children, and is conducted by one male teacher, Mr. Otto Rauch, and Sisters of St. Agnes, from Fond du Lac. Of societies in the congregation there are the following: St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, founded November 1, 1867; St. Aloysius Benevolent Society, organized January 7, 1872; Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for young ladies, organized February 8, 1883; Christian Mothers' Society, organized August 15, 1887; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, branch No. 54, organized May 11, 1886. During the incumbency of the present pastor, St. Mary's Hospital was founded, in March, 1891. This is in charge of Sisters of the Sorrowful Mother, of Marshfield, Wisconsin, of which order Sister Francisca is the foundress and Mother Superior.

St. Mary's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

Interior of St. Mary's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

Rev. R. Scholter.

The Rev. Roman Scholter, rector and dean of St. Mary's, was born on April 28, 1847, in the City of Rottweil, on the Neckar, Wuertemberg, Germany. He received his primary education in the parochial schools of his native town, after which he took a full collegiate course at the same place and then for some time assisted his father in the superintendence of his extensive milling business. He came to the United States and Wisconsin in 1867, and after teaching school for a term, entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he remained until 1874. Here he completed a thorough course in philosophy and theology. He was appointed Professor of Music of the Catholic Normal School and Pio Nono College in the year 1872. He then entered St. Mary's University at Baltimore, Maryland, in September, 1874, where he completed his studies for the priesthood, and was ordained on August 10, 1875, by the Right Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, in the Cathedral at Green Bay, Wisconsin. His first appointment was as pastor of the congregation at Seymour, Outagamie County, with West Freedom, Black Creek and Angelica as missions. He labored hard and zealously in the interests of those congregations, leaving them much improved, when he was transferred to the pastorate at Center, in Outagamie County, in 1878. Here he paid off the debts of the congregation and bought land for a site for a parochial school. In March, 1879, he was appointed pastor of St. Patrick's Church at Maple Grove in Manitowoc County. Here, too, he paid off the accumulated debts of the congregation, improved and beautified the church, and reorganized the parochial school. He left this parish on September 17, 1881, to assume his present charge, as rector of St. Mary's.

St. Peter's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

THE parish of St. Peter's at Oshkosh, Winnebago County, Wisconsin, was established about the year 1851. Since that time the pastors who have ministered to the spiritual wants of that congregation have been the Rev. Fathers Fusseder, Colton, Thomas Keenan, G. Riordan, Herman, Gleeson, Cornelius and the present pastor, the Rev. James O'Malley. The congregation of St. Peter's is now quite a large one, numbering fully eighteen hundred souls. The parochial school connected with St. Peter's is conducted by five Sisters of St. Dominic and has an attendance of two hundred and thirty-five scholars. Several different Catholic organizations, parochial or otherwise, are represented in this congregation, among them being an Altar Society, Young Ladies' Sodality, two branches of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and a Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters.

St. Peter's Church, Oshkosh, Wis.

Father James O'Malley, the present pastor of St. Peter's congregation, was born at Westport, County Mayo, Ireland, about fifty-seven years ago, and came to the Territory of Wisconsin, November 12, 1845, being at that time about six years of age. He concluded his studies for the priesthood at the Seminary of Our Lady of Angels, Niagara County, N. Y., May 28, 1871, and was ordained priest June 3 following, by the Rt. Rev. Joseph Melcher, first Bishop of Green Bay. Father O'Malley's first appointment was as pastor at Montello, Marquette County, Wisconsin, to which duties he was assigned on July 10, 1871. Here he remained until August 8, 1874, when he was placed in charge of St. Peter's congregation at Oshkosh, where he has remained ever since. Father O'Malley was one of the chief organizers of the Catholic Temperance Union which was established at Watertown, June 18, 1872. In this cause he has ever proved a sincere and consistent worker, and has never missed an annual session of the organization since its inception. He has been president of the Union during several different terms.

Rev. James O'Malley.

St. Mary's Church, Peshtigo, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary's at Peshtigo, Marinette County, Wisconsin, was established about fifty years ago. Prior to that time the Catholics residing in and around that locality received spiritual attendance from traveling missionaries, who came from both north and south, holding services there about once a month. The first resident pastor appointed to the charge of this congregation was the Rev. Father Fernin, who began the erection of the church at Peshtigo, but failed to witness its completion, owing to a disastrous fire in 1871, which destroyed the partially completed building as well as the parochial residence. Not to be deterred, however, this zealous pastor immediately began the erection of the present edifice, a modest sized and comfortable frame building, which was completed during his pastorate. His successor was the Rev. Father Mousson, who in turn was followed by the Rev. Fathers De Paradis, Buschle, John Seubert, who built a parochial residence, Father Reuter and A. B. Rinkes. The latter pastor established a parochial school at Peshtigo, erecting a building for that purpose, which unfortunately, owing to circumstances existing at that time, was shortly after closed. Father Rinkes died in Peshtigo on the 8th day of February, 1888, mourned by the entire community, and is buried in the cemetery in that place. The next pastor of St. Mary's was the Rev. A. O'Connor, who was followed by the Rev. A. P. Rogers, who remained until 1895, when the Rev. John Bernard Scheyer, the present rector, assumed the charge.

Rev. J. B. Scheyer.

In the way of interior furnishings St. Mary's is equipped with three handsome altars and a commodious vestry which serves as a chapel during the summer months.

The oldest member of St. Mary's parish and congregation, one who has resided continuously there since the organization of the same, and who has witnessed all of the many changes which have transpired in that locality for over half a century, is Mrs. Emilie Brouette.

St. Mary's Church, Peshtigo, Wis.

There is a little mission at Porterfield, Marinette County, Wisconsin, which is attended by the pastor from Peshtigo. The congregation, which is composed of Irish, French and German families, of whom there are some forty-four, is attended once a month on Sundays and once on week days. There is a nice frame church at Porterfield which was erected in 1893, finished in 1896, and blessed and dedicated under the patronage of St. Joseph, on the 25th of November of the latter year, by the Right Rev. S. G. Messmer, Bishop of Green Bay.

The Rev. John Bernard Scheyer, present rector of St. Mary's congregation, was born in Bavaria, in which country he was also partially educated. Having nearly completed his theological course, Father Scheyer came to the United States, entering the Catholic Seminary in Cincinnati during the month of September, 1894. On December 8 of the following year he was ordained to the priesthood, receiving his appointment almost immediately to the pastorate at Peshtigo.

St. Joseph's Church, Phlox, Wis.

ON October 25, 1897, the Catholic congregation of St. Joseph at Phlox was given a resident pastor in the person of the Rev. L. Ruessmann, who took up his residence in the new parsonage at that place on that date. For some years previous to that time, Father Ruessmann, as well as his predecessors, had resided at Aniwa, from whence Phlox was attended as a mission. Under the new arrangement Aniwa now becomes a mission and is attended as such from Phlox.

Although the year 1876 may properly be classed as pertaining to more modern times in the history of Wisconsin, even then the population had, to but very little extent, covered the vast area of forest lands lying at the head of those rivers which converge toward Lake Superior, Green Bay, Lake Winnebago and the Mississippi River. It is in fact of only quite recent years that the railroads have penetrated that section, for it seems but a short time since the Lake Shore System had its terminus at Clintonville, and the Northwestern at Menominee, Michigan. Beyond these points the advancement of civilization was slow, and the number of settlers extremely limited. In order to open up this vast territory, however, the Government made liberal concessions, donating free homesteads to those hardy spirits who were willing to put up with the almost countless difficulties it was necessary to overcome in establishing a satisfactory home on the frontier. Notable among the earlier pioneers of this section who were the means of locating and establishing several new counties in this undeveloped portion of the State, were Messrs. Frank Deleglise and Joseph St. Louis. The former, penetrating that region from Wausau where he had previously been established, made his way to a point several miles northeast, where is at present the city of Antigo. The year following Mr. St. Louis established a colony at Phlox, which is about the same distance from Wausau, but a few miles southeast of Antigo. Mr. St. Louis was a devout Catholic, and it is largely owing to his zealous efforts in behalf of the Church that the Catholic colony in Langlade County was established at so early a date. Once started, improvement rapidly followed upon improvement, the hardy settlers associated with the undertaking clearing and settling the land for many miles around. They also cut a roadway through the heavy timber lands, to a point named Seven Mile Wood, making the matter of ingress and egress for those who came to inspect the property much easier, and at the same time practical for the conveyance of large loads. Not satisfied with what he had already done, Mr. St. Louis carried his investigations for many miles beyond the furthest settler, cutting his way through the heavy growth of timber, and locating sites desirable for agriculture or other purposes. In 1877 matters had progressed so favorably that this little settlement had increased to twelve families, all of whom were Catholics. In the following spring a number of these people endeavored to reach Little Chute, a distance of eighty miles, for the purpose of attending Mass, but the roads were in such an execrable condition that the attempt proved unsuccessful, and they were compelled to return. A year from that date, the Rev. Father St. Louis, being on a visit to Little Chute, undertook a visit to the settlement at Phlox, where he administrated to the spiritual wants of the people. A year later he repeated the visit, although his experience in making the journey on that, as well as on the former occasion, was far from pleasant. Later, while Father St. Louis was stationed at Menasha, he occasionally attended Phlox as a mission from that place. During the year 1880, five acres of land were donated at Phlox for church purposes, and cleared during the same fall. The Catholic families in this settlement now numbered about twenty-four, all of whom, though earnestly interested in the progress of church affairs, were very poor. However, they brought together sufficient means for the erection of a log church, 34x50 feet. In 1881 the frame of this building was raised, a portion being finished and used during the winter of 1881 and 1882. At about that same time, an Altar Society, with a membership of twenty-five, was established. In 1882 Father St. Louis became resident pastor at Phlox, attending Antigo as a mission from that place. During the first year of his incumbency, he established a church library consisting of one hundred and thirty volumes, and also completed the building within and without. The next year the congregation had increased to twenty-eight families, and a school-house two stories in height, and occupying an area of 26x27 feet was erected. Five families were added to the congregation in 1884, and the year following it was increased to thirty-seven. During this year a parsonage 16x24 feet was built, and an eleven-hundred-pound bell and a small organ were purchased for the church. The year 1886 is made notable from the fact that the congregation purchased Stations of the Cross, and other furnishings for the interior of the church, built a two-story addition, 20x31 feet, to the school-house, the second floor of which was partitioned off and finished as a residence for the teachers. During the same year, a steeple was also added to the church. In 1887 a parochial school paper, a monthly publication, was established at Phlox, being conducted as such for a short time, when it was issued once a week. This paper remained in existence for several years. In 1889 a stone basement was built under the church, and a clock built for the tower. This period was also made notable by a successful mission which was held by Franciscan Fathers. In 1890 preparations were made for the enlargement of the church, the stone basement for which was built. In the following year, this addition, twenty-eight feet square, was completed, as well as a parochial hall. In 1892 the entire church structure was veneered and plastered at an expense of $2,200, and a large furnace was placed in the basement. The congregation at that time numbered fifty-four families. There are connected with St. Joseph's at the present time, a Young Ladies' Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, an Altar Society and a branch of the Third Order of St. Francis.

St. Boniface's Church, Aniwa, St. Joseph's Church, Phlox, Wis.

The members of St. Boniface's congregation at Aniwa, Langlade County, Wisconsin, who are Germans from Bohemia and Steyermark, Austria, began to settle in that vicinity in 1885. At that time their spiritual wants were supplied by the pastors of the Catholic congregation at Antigo, services being held in the log house owned and occupied by Louis Kirschbaum. In 1890 these people began building a church in the newly incorporated village of Aniwa, the structure being completed and ready for occupancy in the following year. At this time, the Rev. W. De Haan took charge of the parish as resident pastor, having Phlox, Tigerton and Norrie as missions. Father De Haan was succeeded by the Rev. F. Vollebregt, who assumed the duties of this pastorate in June, 1895. He remained until January, 1897, when he was transferred to another field of labor and the Rev. L. Ruessmann was appointed to the charge. The congregation is at the present time composed of some forty-eight families.

Another account of the early history of Phlox includes among the names of the early settlers in that town Moses St. Louis, Frank St. Louis, John Bergeon, Aibert Menting, Paschal Langlois, Louis Mongeon and Henry St. Louis, all of whom came from Little Chute. This account further states that in 1873 the Rev. Father Masschelein, of Keshena, Shawano County, was called to visit a sick person in Phlox, and while there celebrated High Mass in the little log house of Henry St. Louis. The distance from Keshena to Phlox at that time was thirty miles, the journey being accomplished over Indian trails. This account also states that in the spring of 1880 the Rev. Father Manasses St. Louis, brother of Moses, Frank and Henry of that name, came from Chicago, where he lived in a convent of the Servites of Mary, to administer religious comfort to the settlers who had been afflicted with the epidemic of diphtheria. At that time, he remained for a period of four weeks saying Mass and administering the Sacraments in the house of John James. Father Ph. St. Louis returned to Phlox in 1888, began the erection of a church in honor of St. Joseph. At this time, there were twenty-seven families belonging to the congregation and during this period, there being no parochial residence, he lived with his father, Ephraim St. Louis. Father St. Louis closed his missionary labors at Phlox, September 12, 1889, being succeeded by the Rev. W. De Haan. This pastor took up his residence at Aniwa, from which place he visited Phlox, as did also his successor, Father Vollebregt. In the meantime, more Catholic families locating at Phlox, the need of a resident pastor became so apparent that Father Vollebregt had the school moved and remodeled into a parsonage, taking up his residence there until January, 1897. At the present time the congregation at Phlox is composed of people of French, Hollandish and German descent. The present trustees of the parish are Messrs. William Hendricks and George Jansen, who have held that position for several years.

Within the past few months the present pastor abandoned his residence at this place and established the resident pastorate at Phlox, from which parish Aniwa is now attended as a mission.

The German Mission of St. Anthony at Tigerton, Shawano County, is also attended by the resident pastor from Phlox. The first Catholic settlers in Tigerton were John McCormick, who came from Kaukauna, Michael Brahan from New London, John Maslann, M. Schumacher, John McDevitt and John Way. Divine services were first held at the home of M. Schumacher by the Rev. Father Richard of Wausau in 1881; then Father St. Louis came from Phlox, and after him the Rev. Peter Lochman from Clintonville in 1882. From that time until 1893, the pastors from Clintonville attended this mission, but in the latter year it was associated with the parish at Aniwa, and is now attended from Phlox. Father Lochman was succeeded as pastor of this congregation by the Rev. Fathers John Seubert, A. Belle and B. Hugenroth. In 1881 Father Richard made preparation for the erection of a church, which was completed in 1884, its area being 20x40 feet. The congregation now numbers thirty families, who attend services regularly at St. Anthony's on the first Sunday of each month.

The Rev. F. L. Ruessmann, pastor of St. Joseph's Church at Phlox, was born at Elspe, Province of Westphalia, Prussia. He acquired his earlier education at the local parochial school, and later at the local preparatory school for higher grades, and then at the Gymnasium at Paderborn. Having completed the latter studies he came to America, where he devoted some months to acquiring a knowledge of the English language. He then for one year was a student at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, after which, in the fall of 1885, he went to Rome, where he remained for five years as a student of philosophy and theology in the college of the Propaganda. Completing these courses, he was ordained to the priesthood on November 1, 1889, leaving Italy for the United States during the summer of the following year. Since again returning to this country he has labored as a missionary in various fields, being now pastor of the congregation of St. Joseph's at Phlox.

St. Ladislaus' Church, Pike Lake, Wis.

THE Polish congregation of St. Ladislaus at Pike Lake, Marathon County, Wisconsin, was organized on March 15, 1886, by the Rev. Father Grabowski. He was succeeded by the Rev. Fathers John Mosurynski, of Amherst Junction, Victor Lebjecki, A. Paston, Albert Pelzar of Wausau, Peter Podlecki, who assumed the pastorate for four years, and Father Romuald Magott, who came to Pike Lake pastorate in November, 1895, and has charge of same at the present time. The number of members in the congregation is estimated at seven hundred and ninety. No school is connected with this parish at the present time.

Rev. R. Magott.

The Rev. Romuald Magott was born in Wierusow, Poland, on the 26th of November, 1829, and was ordained to the priesthood at Warsaw in 1852. He came to America in 1884, locating at first in Texas, where he, however, stayed but a short time. He then removed to Wisconsin, where he became attached to the diocese of Green Bay. The new church at Pike Lake, which is fast reaching its completion, under the direction of Father Magott, has an area of 50x122 feet, and is adorned with a tower and cross.

St. Methodius' Church, Pilot Knob, Wis.

IN 1884 a small frame church, having a seating capacity for about one hundred persons, was erected at Pilot Knob, Adams County, Wisconsin, where for nine years past a mission had been conducted by the resident pastor from Briggsville, Wisconsin, who held divine services there on the first Sunday in every month. The first pastor to assume these duties was the Rev. Father Abb, who continued to visit Pilot Knob until 1896, during which year the Rev. Stephen Kasperski assumed the pastorate. When he came to Pilot Knob, the place was not only without a parsonage, but the church stood badly in need of vestments as well as other articles required by the pastor in the observance of his sacred duties, The congregation being unable to contribute enough to furnish these things, as well as to build a residence, Father Kasperski was compelled to seek pecuniary assistance from other sources. He obtained donations from the Catholics of neighboring Polish congregations, and also from those in Milwaukee, Chicago, Illinois, Detroit, Michigan, and Buffalo, New York. With the means thus obtained at his disposal he built quite a large and comfortable parsonage, and furnished the church with the necessary vestments and utensils. Father Kasperski remained in charge of this congregation till the beginning of August, 1897. In September of the same year, the Rev. Peter Kurzejka, a graduate of the Salesianum, at St. Francis, Wisconsin, took charge of the parish, where divine services are now held once a month. At present there are twenty-six Bohemian and Polish families in regular attendance at the church.

At Friendship, also in Adams County, Wisconsin, is located St. Leo's Catholic congregation. In 1884, by permission of the Ordinary of the diocese, the Rev. John Schwartzmeyer, then pastor at Briggsville, Wisconsin, erected a handsome frame church, towards which many of the business men of the place, though non-Catholics, contributed generously. The church has a seating capacity for about two hundred persons, is adorned by a handsome and imposing high altar, and furnished with a few vestments and other paraphernalia necessary for the proper observance of the Mass. For about ten years, Friendship was a mission attached to Briggsville, Wisconsin. At first the Rev. John Schwartzmeyer conducted services there, he being succeeded by the Rev. Charles Beyerle, of Grand Rapids (deceased); then, for nine years, the Rev. Father Abb, of Briggsville, visited the mission once a month. In 1896 the congregation was affiliated with that of St. Methodius', at Pilot Knob, and attended by the Rev. Stephen Kasperski from the latter place. As successor to the last-named pastor, was appointed the Rev. Peter Kurzejka, present rector at Pilot Knob, who attends St. Leo's once a month. The congregation at Friendship consists of seventeen families, of Irish, Bohemian, Polish and German nationality. In spite of the limited membership, however, the congregation is entirely free from debt.

In 1896 a congregation of forty families was organized at Plover, Portage County, by the former Polish members of St. Peter's Church at Stevens Point. Here, the erection of a large frame structure, 40x60 feet, exclusive of the sanctuary (20x18 feet), was begun during the same year under the personal direction of Father Kasperski. This building is not yet completed, but arrangements have been made this year so that the work is now to all intents and purposes finished. In addition to the church, there will be a sacristy and an imposing tower some seventy feet in height. A large bell, weighing five hundred pounds, was also purchased for this tower, the same being in place and rung for the first time on Easter Sunday. Two-thirds of the cost of the bell has already been covered by donations made by members of the congregation. Other gifts, such as a pulpit, a large crucifix, a fine confessional, a set of stations, vestments, pictures, etc., were also made by liberal members of the congregation, who received much and gratifying assistance from liberal-minded Catholics and non-Catholics living in the vicinity; especially is this true of the members of the Sacred Heart Church at Polonia, Wisconsin. In spite of this, there is a debt of several hundred dollars resting upon the property, which, however, will undoubtedly be lifted in the near future. The liberal and numerous donations of the people of this place towards the erection and completion of the church, their prompt offerings towards the support of the pastor, as well as their regular attendance at divine services, speaks more fully than could words of their great Christian zeal and charity which has been handed down to them as a blessing and benediction from a long and unvarying line of Christian ancestors. In this place the number of parishioners increases gradually, there being at the present time about fifty-five families in all. The congregation at Plover is at the present time attended as a mission by Father Kurzejka from Pilot Knob, who conducts services there on the first and third Sunday of each month, and on some of the festivals.

Rev. P. Kurzejka.

On February 7, 1898, with the permission of the Ordinary of the diocese, the Catholics living in the neighborhood of Plainfield, Waushara County, Wisconsin, organized a congregation, the Board of Directors and Building Committee appointed by which, consisted of the Rev. Peter Kurzejka, from Pilot Knob, Wisconsin, as vice-president, Nicholas Fondel, of Oasis, as secretary, Martin Pronke, of Almond, Wisconsin, as treasurer, and John Soutowski, of Oasis, and Julian Prokopowicz, of Levala, Wisconsin, as consultors. At this meeting it was also decided to at once build a church in the village of Plainfield, the same to occupy an area of 32x60 feet. The contract for the erection of this structure was let on May 16, an entire block of eight lots having in the meantime been secured for a site for the edifice, $275 being paid for the same. The cost of the church, complete, will be $1,000. At this place, also, business men, though non-Catholics, have contributed and subscribed quite generously toward the undertaking. At the present time there are about thirty-five Catholic families connected with this mission, composed largely of people of German, Polish and Irish nationality.

The Rev. Peter Kurzejka, rector of St. Methodius' congregation of Pilot Knob, is a Pole by birth, having been born June 28, 1869, in Wissek, Province of Posen, Germany. At the age of eleven years, he came with his parents to America, settling in Cleveland and then in Berea, Ohio, where they remained for one year. From there, they removed to Wausau, Wisconsin, where for six years following his entire time was devoted to daily labor in a sash and door factory at that place. All of his spare moments, however, were devoted to study, and for seven months of the period mentioned he was also a student at the Wausau Business College, at which institution he took a course in book-keeping. When nineteen years of age, he had the satisfaction of commencing a regular course of study for the priesthood, the great and at all times overpowering ambition of his earlier life. Of this particular period he says: "Although I felt myself called to this holy state at an early age, still, owing to the want of pecuniary means, I was obliged to wait until some favorable opportunity presented itself. The long-expected opportunity of being sent to a seminary came at last, and God sent me one who was to assist and help me along as a true father who has the interest of his child deeply at heart. The person to whom I refer is the Rev. Theodore J. Richard, of Marinette, at that time the worthy, zealous and much-beloved pastor of St. Mary's at Wausau. Through his kind intervention with the Ordinary of Green Bay diocese, the present Most Rev. Archbishop of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, it was arranged that my parents were not compelled to carry the whole burden of defraying the expenses of my education."

On October 19, 1889, Father Kurzejka entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he acquired a thorough course in the classics, philosophy and theology, and here, after a prolonged and zealous effort covering a period of nine years, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 20, 1897, by the Most Rev. Archbishop F. X. Katzer, of Milwaukee, the diocese of Green Bay being allotted as his future field of labor in the ministry. Of the obstacles met with in obtaining this end, the reverend father says:

"When I think of the many difficulties, hardships and trials with which I met before the completion of my studies, and, on the other hand, of the manner in which I was assisted by my poor parents, my good and lasting friends, and also my relatives in Milwaukee, I cannot help saying that truly the hand of God was ever with me, and I may cry out with St. Paul and say, 'By the grace of God, I am what I am.'" One week subsequent to ordination, Father Kurzejka celebrated his first Mass at Marinette, Wisconsin, where he acted as temporary assistant to the Rev. Theodore J. Richard for four weeks. He was then appointed to the parish at Montello as temporary pastor during the absence of the Rev. John Schwartzmeyer, where he remained for a period of seven weeks. He then, in September, 1897, became rector at St. Methodius' at Pilot Knob, with the missions of St. Leo's at Friendship, Adams County, Wisconsin, and St. Bronislawa's at Plover, Portage County, Wisconsin.

Holy Trinity Church, Pine Grove, Wis.

HOLY TRINITY congregation at Pine Grove, Brown County, Wisconsin, was established in June, 1880. The first pastor to make regular visits to this place was the Rev. Peter Chowaniec, he being followed in succession by the Rev. Fathers Victor Zarenczny, Leopoldus Garus, Joannes Gratza, Romualdus Magott, J. Starostzick, A. Lopatto, and the present incumbent, the Rev. T. Malkowski. At the time that the congregation was organized the members began the erection of a new church at New Denmark, the congregations at that place and Pine Grove combining in one, thus making the present membership for Holy Trinity Church eighty-eight families, eighty-one of whom are Polish and seven German. All of these people are farmers.

Holy Trinity Church, Pine Grove, Wis.

Rev. T. Malkowski.

Father Malkowski, the latter part of whose education was acquired at the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, was ordained to the priesthood in Chicago on the 19th of December, 1891. He first came to the diocese of Green Bay about three years ago.

Church of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Polonia, Wis.

SOME time during the year 1855 there came to the northeastern part of Portage County, Wis., six Polish families, who bought land from the Fox River Company and settled there. These people, who are closely identified with the establishment of the Sacred Heart of Jesus congregation, were Jacob Werechowski, Michael Kozyczkowski, Adam Klesmit, Joseph Szulfer, Joseph Daczyk and John Zynda. They were drawn to this comparatively wild region from the fact that the Rev. John Polak, an emigrant priest of Polish nationality, was at that time rector of the combined Irish, French and German parish at Stevens Point. Soon after their arrival, there followed other families of German Catholics, who, together with the Poles, built at a place now known as Poland Corner, in the town of Sharon, a small church, which was dedicated to St. Martin. For the next eight years—that is, until 1863—Father Polak paid occasional visits to these people, saying Mass in the little church and otherwise attending to their spiritual wants. In 1863 the Polish contingent had increased to forty-four families, and as the church had become altogether too small for the accommodation of the entire congregation, they concluded to form a parish of their own. The undertaking was thoroughly approved by Bishop Henni, who in the following year sent the Rev. Bonaventura Buczynski to organize the congregation and superintend the erection of a church. These people, though poor, were very liberal, and before the end of the year St. Joseph's church stood complete, on a site not far removed from that of St. Martin's. From this time the population of Poland Corner began to increase rapidly, so that it soon assumed the proportions of a fair-sized town. At about this time, and quite unfortunately for the welfare of the parish, a bad element became paramount in its midst, so much so, in fact, that Father Buczynski, after a manful and prolonged struggle, gave up the fight and returned to Milwaukee. His successor, the Rev. T. Wenglikowski, who assumed the pastorate in 1867, also labored assiduously but in vain. So after three years of unsuccessful effort, he resigned, and then St. Joseph's Church was, from 1870 till the close of 1872, without a pastor. Early in the year 1873, the Rev. Joseph Dombrowski, present rector of the Polish Seminary at Detroit, assumed the charge, and a prolonged and determined fight was made, to subdue the evil. For five years this war was waged; then the Church triumphed, the greater portion of the congregation petitioning Bishop Melcher of Green Bay for permission to remove St. Joseph's church to a more suitable location and away from its unpleasant surroundings. So the building was moved a mile and a half further to the east, towards Polonia, Mr. McAleer donating twenty acres of land for a site. Here a new frame church, 100x40x30 feet, and a parsonage were soon erected. In 1879 the latter building was totally destroyed by fire, but was at once replaced. Again in 1880 this congregation was overwhelmed with disaster, both church and parsonage being destroyed this time. With the money obtained from the insurance companies and numerous generous contributions, some $5,000 in all, Father Dombrowski immediately set about repairing this great loss. A new parsonage and handsome church edifice, the latter entirely of stone, were erected in 1881, and when completed an annex to the former which had been used for church purposes until the church was finished was arranged for a school, which was placed in charge of Felician Sisters, who had come from Krakow, Poland, some time before. The erection of a Convent and Orphan's Home was also begun about this time. In 1882, owing to increasing ill-health, Father Dombrowski resigned and was succeeded by the Rev. Ladislaw Grabowski, who came from Brazil, South America. He continued the labors of his predecessor, reseating the church throughout and adding many other desirable furnishings to the interior. In 1889, the Rev. Stanislaus Jeka, O. S. F., became pastor of the Sacred Heart. He also did much for the parish, completing the steeples on the church and laying the foundation for a large and stately school house. In 1891, the Rev. Thomas Grenbowski was appointed as rector of the parish. He completed the school house, put a new roof on the church, purchased a $2,500 pipe organ, renewed the side altars, erected new Stations and made numerous other improvements. It is a notable fact that, in spite of so many drawbacks and such a constant demand upon its treasury, this parish is entirely out of debt, and contemplates making numerous other advantageous changes in the property in the near future. At the present time the congregation of the Sacred Heart numbers four thousand souls, making one of the most important organizations in the diocese of Green Bay. The parochial school at Polonia is in a flourishing condition and has an enrollment of three hundred scholars. Of Catholic societies to which members of the Sacred Heart belong, there are the Sodality of the Holy Rosary, four hundred and twenty-five members; Society of the Virgin Mary, for young ladies, three hundred and fifty members, and the Society of the Guardian Angel, for boys. There have also been established two subordinate schools on the parish limits, which are for the use of children living at a considerable distance from the principal building.

Church of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Polonia, Wis.

Rev. Thos. Grenbowski.

There is also a station at Alban, Portage County, which is quite regularly attended by the resident pastor at Polonia.

The Rev. Thomas Grenbowski, present rector of the Sacred Heart, was born in Glogow, Galicia, Poland, on the 28th of December, 1861. He was ordained to the priesthood July 17, 1886, and came to America about two years later. Since 1891, he has occupied his present position.

St. Francis Xavier's Church, Portage, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Francis Xavier, which consists of sixty-five German families, was established about twenty years ago. But very little change has occurred in the affairs of this parish or in the size of the congregation since that time, as it is at the present but little, if any, larger than when first organized. Since September, 1896, however, a valuable addition has been made in the establishment of a parochial school, which has been in active operation since that time. This is conducted by the Franciscan Sisters of Alverno, Wis., and has a regular attendance of sixty children. Since its organization, the church has been attended, successively, by the Rev. Fathers Panzer, Jasper, Privoznick, Schwartzmeyer, Seeber, Bastian and the present incumbent, the Rev. Father Pesch. The congregation has the credit of having given to the religious Order of Dominican Sisters of Racine two of its children: Sisters Regis and Laurentia; and to the clergy of Green Bay one priest, a cousin to the above named, Rev. H. Ehr, who said his first Mass in this church on July 1, 1897.

St. Francis Xavier's Church, Portage, Wis.

The Rev. George Joseph Hubert Pesch was born July 18, 1862, at Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany, frequented the gymnasium at Malmedy and spent his early years among the French-speaking German population on the Belgian frontier. He studied rhetoric and philosophy for four years at St. Trond, Belgium, with Msgr. Dr. Schroeder as professor, and theology for four years in All-Hallows Missionary College, Dublin, Ireland, where he was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1885, by the Right Rev. Woodlock, Bishop of Ardagh, Ireland. He landed in New York on September 4, 1885, and was given his first appointment as assistant at St. Boniface's Church, Quincy, Illinois, where he remained until July 1, 1890. He was then pastor of St. Aloysius Church at Litchfield, Illinois, until July 1, 1894, and of St. Patrick's at Bloomfield and missions to January 1, 1896. On account of failing health, superinduced by overwork, he then changed both climate and diocese, selecting as the latter that of Green Bay, where he could make better use of the different languages he so fluently speaks, among which German, English and French are the most prominent. His first appointment in this new field was as assistant at Freedom, Outagamie County, where he took special charge of the Oneida Indian settlement, until June 8, 1896, at which time he was appointed to the English-speaking congregation at Briggsville in Marquette County. Since September 1, 1896, he has been pastor of the German Catholic Church at Portage. Once since coming to the United States, Father Pesch has again visited the scenes of his earlier experiences in Europe. The occasion was in 1892, when he traveled extensively through Ireland, Scotland, France, Germany, Italy and Spain.

Rev. G. Pesch.

St. Mary's Church, Portage, Wis.

THE first church edifice in Portage, indeed in Central Wisconsin, was erected in 1833 by Peter Pauquette, the famous interpreter and Indian trader, in what is now the city of Portage, at a point near the present junction of Adams with Conant streets.

As early as 1831 Catholic missionaries came among the Indians in the vicinity of Fort Winnebago. The first priest of whose labors in this region any authentic record is given was the Rev. Samuel E. Mazzuchelli, a member of the Dominican Order, who was born in Milan, Italy. Mazzuchelli came to America while a mere boy, and was ordained to the priesthood at Cincinnati in 1829. "Pauquette's Church," as it was known to early settlers, was built for the use of Father Mazzuchelli, Pauquette's wife having espoused the Catholic faith. The structure was made of logs and was never fully completed. It was occupied only by Father Mazzuchelli at random intervals, and when some other "adventurous spirit, clothed with the authority of the Church, found his way to the portage."

St. Mary's Church, Sisters' House and Parsonage, Portage, Wis.

Pauquette was killed in 1836 by an Indian named Manzemoneka, with whom he had had a quarrel, and his remains were interred under the rude building which he had erected as a place of worship three years before. The church was destroyed by fire in 1840,[1] and the exact spot where the remains of Pauquette repose can not now be located.

On the occasions of Father Mazzuchelli's first visits to this region religious services were conducted on the prairies between the Baraboo and Wisconsin Rivers, the white women of French extraction who resided in the vicinity, assisted by some of the Winnebago maidens, having erected arbors and appropriately decorated and festooned them in honor of his coming.

Mazzuchelli left the portage in 1835, and made his way by canoe to the Mississippi, not expecting to find a priest or parish before arriving at St. Louis, a distance of 600 miles.

By the Rock Island treaty, however, the whites had been permitted to settle in the "Dubuque Lead Mines," early in 1833, and here Mazzuchelli found a flourishing village, a large proportion of whose inhabitants were Irish Catholics, who had gone thither from the mines around Galena and Mineral Point. These people were without a priest, and implored him to remain with them. This parish, at that time, was under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of St. Louis, while Father Mazzuchelli was a member of the diocese governed by the Bishop of Detroit. In response to earnest petitions sent to both Bishops, however, arrangements were perfected by which he was allowed to remain. He immediately set to work to erect a house of worship, and in July following laid the corner stone of a large granite church which afterward became the Cathedral of the Diocese of Dubuque, a See being erected there a short time subsequent. Mazzuchelli afterwards built churches at Galena, Ill., Mineral Point, Shullsburg, Potosi and various other places in Wisconsin and at Burlington, Davenport and Iowa City, in the State of Iowa.

Mazzuchelli became famous as an architect, as well as a minister of the Gospel and founder of churches, and was employed by the First Iowa Legislature to draw the plans for the new State Capitol, which cost $120,000, and at other points he was employed to supervise the erection of public buildings.

(1) Almost ten years elapsed after the burning of the old log church at Portage before anything like regularity was attained in the appointment of Catholic services. In the meantime Thomas Christopher, Patrick Lennon, Charles Moore, M. R. Keegan, James Collins, John Sweeney, Mrs. Ward and others who were adherents to the Roman Catholic faith had become permanent settlers and were desirous that the parish should be reorganized. A missionary priest, the Rev. Father Smith, was the first to preach to this small band. He was succeeded by Father Hobbs, who conducted services in an unoccupied house in the vicinity of the old fort. Late in 1850 Rev. Louis Godhardt, a Hollander, came as a missionary and held meetings at the home of Mrs. Ward, in the old town south of the canal. Early in 1851 a small frame church edifice was erected by five members of this reorganized parish, which has since been known as St. Mary's.

In 1841 he visited the historic city of his nativity, where he came into possession of a rich family legacy. With this money he returned and purchased Sinsinawa Mound, then the property of the late Hon. George W. Jones, Wisconsin's first territorial governor and Iowa's first representative in the United States Senate. His first work here was to erect a church. Later, upon an elevation more than five hundred feet above the surrounding country, he erected a college building of vast proportions. This school was incorporated with university privileges by special act of the State Legislature. The entire property was afterward transferred to the Catholic Church. At Benton, twelve miles from the college, he erected a church and located a female academy which was placed under control of the Order of the Sisters of St. Dominic. Father Mazzuchelli died at Benton, Lafayette County, Wisconsin, February 23, 1864, and his remains were interred in the cemetery at that place.

Father Godhardt was succeeded as pastor of this congregation by the Rev. James Roche, who remained as rector of St. Mary's for five years. At the end of that time he was succeeded by the Rev. J. Doyle, who continued the pastorate for a period of seven years. Father

Old Church Erected in Portage about 1831.

Doyle purchased a church from the Baptists at Portage, and that building, afterwards enlarged, is the one in which the congregation of St. Mary's at present worship. Following Father Doyle came the Rev. P. J. O'Niell, who remained but ten months, when he was succeeded by the Rev. F. Pettit, who remained in charge for two and one half years. Then came, successively, the Rev. Thomas Keenan, for thirteen years; the Rev. Joseph Keenan, for eight months; the Rev. John Brady, for two years; the Rev. J. A. Geissler, two and one half years; the Rev. G. W. Brady, for thirteen years—during the last year of Father Brady's pastorate, Father A. P. Desmond was his assistant—and then the present rector, the Rev. John D. Cummane.

The congregation of St. Mary's now consists of two hundred and seventy-five families, and the parochial school in this parish has a regular attendance of two hundred scholars, who are in charge of Sisters of St. Dominic, which Order has been located at Portage since 1866. The present school building was erected in 1880. A Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters was organized in this congregation November 7, 1892, with a membership of one hundred and twenty-five. Of this John C. Britt is chief ranger; B. J. McMahon, past chief ranger; H. J. Shaughnessy, vice chief ranger; A. J. Murphy, recording secretary; P. J. Lennon, financial secretary; M. J. Howard, J. E. O'Keefe and T. McMahon, trustees. The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin are also represented by Branch No. 27; H. Wiedecker, president; Jacob Clemens, vice-president; M. J. Walsh, financial secretary; Peter McMahon, recording secretary; it has fifty-eight members. Of other Catholic Societies connected with this congregation, there is that of the Sacred Heart with a membership of three hundred and thirty; Miss S. Walters, president; and St. Mary's Altar Society, two hundred members; Miss Susie Dowdell, secretary; there is also a literary society, of which Mrs. H. L. Dougherty is president.

Rev. John D. Cummane.

The Rev. John D. Cummane, pastor of St. Mary's congregation at Portage, Wisconsin, was born in Limerick County, Ireland, on January 10, 1858. He was educated at Limerick and Maynooth, and ordained to the priesthood in the former city on June 29, 1882. He celebrated his first Mass on July 4th of the same year. On August 26, 1882, he removed to Nova Scotia, remaining there until 1895, when he came to Oshkosh as assistant at St. Peter's. He was appointed rector of St. Augustine's congregation at Chilton, September 1, 1896, and of St. Mary's at Portage on April 22, 1897.

St. Thomas' Church, Poygan, Wis.

FOR a number of years previous to the year 1873, the Catholics of Poygan, Winnebago County, Wisconsin, were attended by the resident priests at Oshkosh. After that, however, they had their own resident pastor, the first being the St. Thomas' Church, Poygan, Wis.

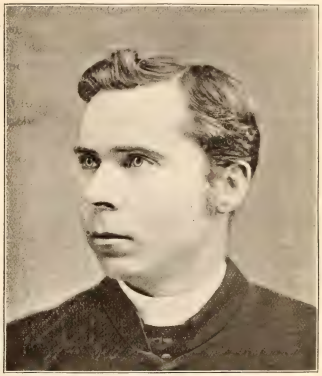
Rev. Arthur O'Connor. He was succeeded in turn by the Revs. H. J. Anen, B. Beldi, P. M. Honeyman, Lorenz Spitzlberger, Charles J. Gallagher and the present rector, Father M. Kelleher. The congregation now consists of some sixty families, or about three hundred people.

Two missions are attended from Poygan—St. Mary's at Winneconne, numbering thirty families, and St. Joseph's at Omro, twenty-five families.



Rev. M. Kelleher.

The Rev. M. Kelleher, pastor of St. Thomas' congregation, was born in County Kerry, Ireland, and was educated at Maynooth College, Ireland. In addition to his charge at Poygan, Wisconsin, Father Kelleher also attends missions at Omro and Winneconne.

Holy Martyrs of Gorcum Church, Preble, Wis.

THE congregation of the Holy Martyrs of Gorcum at Preble, Brown County, Wisconsin, was organized by the Rev. Father Van Grotel in 1869. He also built the parochial school at Preble, and remained as first pastor of the congregation at that place, from 1869 to 1876. His successor, the Rev. Edmund Gontyn, remained at Preble until 1879, when he was succeeded by the Rev. M. G. Smits. In 1882 Father Smits was succeeded by the Rev. T. J. Knegtel, who maintained the pastorate from October 28th of that year to 1890. This pastor built a brick church at Preble in 1883. The next appointed to this charge was the Rev. Matthew Bongers, the present incumbent, who came to Preble on February 6, 1890. He has been very energetic in behalf of the parish, and has done much towards improving the property. Under his administration the interior furnishings and decorations of the church have been renewed and added to, while he has also built quite an addition to the parsonage.

One of the first settlers to locate in the vicinity of Preble at an early day was Peter Faenger. He was born at Brohl on the Rhine, Germany. He came to America in 1844, and died on December 31, 1887, at Preble, his remains being laid to rest in the cemetery at that place. As long ago as 1860 Mass was said in his little house, the Catholics in that vicinity numbering some thirty-seven families in all, of Flemish, Hollandish and German immigrants, attending there. Most of these people came to Preble during the years 1856 and 1857, and some years later they built a small log church 35x45 feet in dimensions, the site selected being on the land of Peter Faenger, who donated ten acres for that purpose. This church was at first attended from Bay Settlement. In 1869 Father Van Grotel built a priest house in Preble, from which time the congregation increased, and in 1896 numbered fully one hundred families. The road leading directly to this church, and which is one of the main thoroughfares in that section, is called the Faenger Road, being named after the original settler, while the church is generally referred to as the Faenger Church.

Interior of Holy Martyrs of Gorcum Church, Preble, Wis.

The Rev. Matthew Bongers, present rector of Holy Martyrs of Gorcum Church, at Preble, is a native of Holland, in which country he was born December 27, 1832, the place of his nativity being Arnhem in the Province of Gelderland. After acquiring an ordinary common school education, he took a classical and philosophical course under the Jesuit Fathers at the Seminary in Culenborg, after which he studied theology at the Seminary Ryzenburg in the Archdiocese of Utrecht. He received minor orders in 1859 at the hands of Archbishop J. Zwyzen. He was ordained sub-deacon by the Right Rev. Bishop Ignatius Schaepman, and deacon by the same Bishop at St. Cathrina Church at Utrecht on February 24, 1861. During the month of May following he accompanied Bishop J. F. A. Kistemaker to the West Indies, and was ordained to the priesthood on June 25th of the same year at St. Joseph's Church, Curacao, by the same Bishop. After ordination he was appointed private secretary to the Bishop, and besides fulfilling those duties had charge of the Sisters of Charity, and also attended to the lepers for one year. Following this, he labored earnestly as a missionary in six of the islands belonging to the Netherlands, continuing his duties among these missions until 1885. During this period he established two new parishes and built for each a church, school and pastoral residence, the islands of Eustatius and Aruba being the several locations where this most successful undertaking was accomplished. While a resident of that country, he also published three works in the native language on the education of children, entitled "Virtue and Duty of Parents," "Confession," and "A Complete Prayer Book." At about this time failing health compelled the reverend Missionary to leave the tropics, but he still receives a pension from the home government of Holland in recognition of his extraordinary efforts and the good work done by him in behalf of the Church. Having recovered somewhat, he next came to America, ostensibly to visit his sisters, Mesdames A. L. de France, R. Campscheur, and F. Boerboom, of Oconto, Wisconsin, and to pay a tribute to the memory of his father, who was buried in the cemetery at that place on June 25, 1881, arriving at that place on June 5, 1885. On the 1st of September following, owing to the ill health of the Rev. Father Brown, he was appointed assistant pastor of St. Patrick's Church at Fort Howard, Wisconsin, and when in December the good rector passed away, he received the appointment as pastor of that congregation. In October, 1886, he was transferred to Green Bay to take charge of St. Willibrord Church, of which he remained pastor for over three years. During this period he established a free school in connection with the parish, at which there was an average attendance of two hundred children. Thus he remained in active duty at Green Bay until February 6, 1890, when he was appointed to his present pastorate. Father Bongers has the distinction of being the first priest in the Diocese of Green Bay to establish the free school system, the period of this enterprise being the year 1886.

Rev. M. Bongers.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Princeton, Wis.

THE Polish congregation of St. John the Baptist, the oldest congregation at Princeton, Green Lake County, Wis., had for its first pastor the Rev. Father Specht, who remained from February until September, 1875. Then followed in succession the Revs. Januarius Czarnowski, September, 1875, to July, 1877; Adam Bukowski, July to September, 1877; John Faurtowski, September, 1877, to December, 1879; A. Rogozinski, who built the parsonage, from December, 1879, to June, 1884; E. Zlowikowski, June, 1884, to September, 1886; V. Zarenczny, who built the church, April, 1887, to January, 1892; Richard Frank, from January, 1892, until the time of his death, October, 21, 1892. He built the old church over into a dwelling for the school Sisters. The next pastors were the Revs. J. B. Froehlich, November, 1892, to December 10, 1892; V. Lebiecki, December 15, 1892, to January, 1894; A. Lopatto, January, 1894, to February, 1896, and the Rev. L. Starostzick, who remained until the succession of the present pastor, the Rev. Q. Zielinski, to the charge. Father Zielinski was born on June 3, 1844, in Poland, was ordained in France, in 1868, and came to the United States in 1882. Since then, he has been stationed at Milwaukee, Beaver Dam, Menasha and Stevens Point.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Princeton, Wis.

Rev. Q. Zielinski.

The congregation now numbers one hundred and eighty families. There is a parochial school connected with the parish of St. John, which is conducted by two Sisters of St. Francis and has an enrollment of one hundred and twenty scholars. Of Catholic organizations to which members of this congregation belong, there are, the Society of St. Isadore, whose officers are Messrs. W. Reginek, John Lontkowski, and Ant. Klappa; Society of the Holy Rosary, officers, Mmes. Mariana Hoppa, Johanna Kurkowska, and Theoph. Kostkowska; Society of St. Stanislaus Kostka, officers, J. Mackowski, T. Waszkowski and John Guderski, and the Society of St. Rose of Lima, of which the Misses Rose Francikowska, Anast. Piasecka and Martha Lontkowska are the officers.

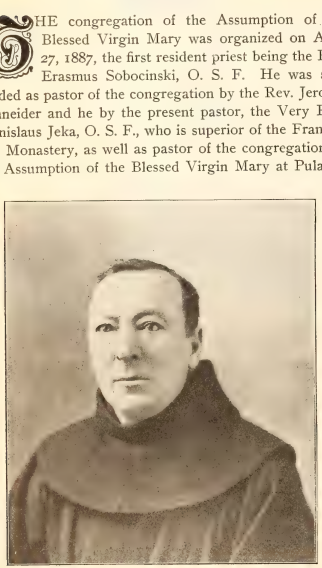
The Rev. L. Starostzick was born on October 6, 1853, at Kieferstaedtel (Sosnicowice), in Silesia, Prussia. He began his studies in the Gymnasium of Gleiwitz, in 1866, read philosophy and comparative science of languages in the Universities of Leipzig and Breslau, from 1874 to 1884; theology at the Universities of Cracow and Breslau, from 1890 to 1894, and at St. Marie's Seminarium, Cincinnati, Ohio, until his ordination to the priesthood, on June 19, 1894.

Church of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Pulaski, Wis.

THE congregation of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary was organized on April 27, 1887, the first resident priest being the Rev. Erasmus Sobocinski, O. S. F. He was succeeded as pastor of the congregation by the Rev. Jerome Schneider and he by the present pastor, the Very Rev. Stanislaus Jeka, O. S. F., who is superior of the Franciscan Monastery, as well as pastor of the congregation of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary at Pulaski.



Rev. Stanislaus Jeka.

The monastery of Pulaski was founded on the date given above. The Rev. Father Jeka is the present superior and rector, and has two assistant priests, the Revs. Francis Manel and Anthony Wisniewski, O. S. F., three clerics and two brothers. The congregation of the Blessed Virgin Mary now consists of about two hundred and fifty families. There are two schools, one parochial and one public school, in the parish, both of which are conducted by lay teachers. Connected with the congregation, there is also the Confraternity of the Holy Rosary, which has a membership of forty-five men and one hundred and twenty-four women.

The Very Rev. Stanislaus Jeka was born on May 10, 1844, in Prussia. After acquiring an ordinary education at the schools of his native country, he, on Sept. 12, 1868, entered the Order of St. Francis of Assissi. On September 21, 1873, he was ordained to the priesthood. Then, from 1875 to 1878, he was in France, and from 1878 until 1888, in Rome. In 1888 he came to the United States and was appointed rector of the Sacred Heart parish at Polonia, Portage County, where he remained until the end of 1891. From 1892 to 1895 he was rector of the congregation at Hofa Park and from 1895 until 1897 superior of the Franciscan Monastery, rector of Pulaski, as previously stated, and rector of the congregation of Hofa Park.

Church of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Reedsville, Wis.

THE Church of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary at Reedsville, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, was built by a settlement of Catholic Bohemians at that place in 1866. These people, consisting of twenty-five families, were earnest and zealous Catholics, and one of the first things they did after establishing themselves and providing what was absolutely necessary for the comfort of their families, was to build a little log church on the location where the present cemetery is situated. After its organization this congregation was attended by the Rev. Jos. Maly, who, while resident pastor at Francis Creek, visited the mission. Then for one year the Rev. G. Mazanek of Cooperstown attended to their spiritual wants, but at the end of that time Father Maly again assumed the charge, maintaining the same until 1876.

The first resident pastor at Reedsville was a Pole, who also spoke the Bohemian language, the Rev. Julius Stroelke. He built the first parsonage at this place, a small and unpretentious house, which, however, served its purpose for some considerable time. When he left Reedsville in 1877, Father Maly, then pastor at Kellnersville, again attended the mission. On October 6, 1878, the Rev. T. Spunar was appointed pastor of the congregation and its out-missions. During his administration St. Anna's Altar Society was founded with a membership of forty. A new bell was also bought and blessed by the Right Rev. Bishop F. X. Krautbauer, on November 12, 1878. By this time the congregation had assumed such proportions that it was deemed advisable to erect a new church. The feelings of the congregation being unanimous in regard to that matter, work on the building was at once begun, and on the 9th of June, 1881, the corner-stone of a new brick church was blessed by the Bishop. The handsome main altar in this church was presented to the congregation by St. Anna's Society. Father Spunar left Reedsville March 21, 1882, and was succeeded as pastor by the Rev. John Videnka.

While Father Videnka was a resident of Reedsville, a St. Joseph's Benevolent Society was founded, and a side altar purchased for the church. The pastor died on May 29, 1885, while still in charge and was buried in the graveyard at Reedsville.

On July 16, 1885, the Rev. William Kraemer was sent by the Right Rev. Bishop of the Diocese, to take charge of the pastorate. Among other improvements made by this pastor to the property in general, were the erection of a Sisters' dwelling and changing the old church into a school. The latter undertaking completed, school was opened on the 30th of September, 1886, being placed at that time in charge of Sisters from the Convent at Silver Lake. During this same year a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin was established in the congregation. On April 10, 1889, a branch of the Third Order of St. Francis was also organized with forty members. Thus from time to time an increased interest was made manifest in the church, as well as numerous improvements and additions which were occasionally put upon the property. In 1891 the old priests' house was sold and removed, and a new large, comfortable and nice looking dwelling built. Four years later the school-house was torn down and replaced by a large and well arranged building. The parish was now in a most satisfactory condition, and, although a considerable amount of money had been spent in the erection of buildings, and constant improvements made upon them for a number of years, all of this had been effected without the necessity of incurring any debt whatsoever. At about this time the Rev. William Kraemer resigned the charge to accept the pastorate at Ahnapee (now Algoma), and he was succeeded on October 1, 1896, by the Rev. Adalbert Cipin, the present rector of the parish. The congregation at present consists of seventy-four Bohemian families.

Church of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary and Parsonage, Reedsville, Wis.

The Rev. Adalbert Cipin was born in Bohemia, on the 13th of April, 1848, and was educated in Budweis, South Bohemia, where he was ordained to the priesthood on July 11, 1873. On the 17th of August following he came to the United States, and after remaining at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, for about five weeks, was sent by the Right Rev. Bishop Melcher, as first resident pastor, to St. Joseph's congregation at Carlton and its three missions. While maintaining that pastorate, he established St. Wenceslaus Bohemian Benevolent Society and St. Cecilia's Church Choir, each having a membership of eighteen. He also carved the main altar in the old church of St. Lawrence at Stangelville and the side altar in St. Joseph's at Carlton. On the 19th of October, 1878, he was sent by the Right Rev. Bishop Krautbauer to Ahnapee, Wisconsin. After working there and at the mission of St. Mary's for a period of sixteen years, during which time he repaired and embellished the church, built a Sisters' residence and brick school-house at the former, and finished the church at the latter place, and having spent all of his present means—about $3,000—for the church and school, reaping nothing but ingratitude from the congregation, he left. He was thereafter transferred by Bishop Messmer to the pastorate of St. Joseph's congregation at Kellnersville, on August 6, 1894, where he remained until October 1, 1896. During that period the church at Kellnersville, as well as those at the two missions, St. Augustin's and St. Wenceslaus', attached to that parish, were repaired. In addition to this, the choirs were reorganized, the debt existing on St. Joseph's Church paid, the parsonage at Kellnersville renovated, and the parochial school at St. Augustin's, which had been unused for a period of two years, again established and brought into active operation. On October 1, 1896, Father Cipin was again transferred, by the order of the Right Rev. Bishop, to the charge of St. Mary's congregation in Reedsville, and missions at Brillion and Kasson.

St. Mary's congregation at Reedsville has now a paying membership of about seventy families. The school connected with this parish is conducted by Sisters from the Convent at Silver Lake, Wisconsin, and has a total enrollment of one hundred and ten, and an average attendance of ninety pupils.

Of Catholic organizations connected with the congregation, there are: A branch of the Third Order of St. Francis, forty members; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, twenty-six members; Holy Rosary Society, dedicated to St. Anna, fifty members; St. Cecilia's Choir and Singing School, which is under the direction of the reverend pastor, and St. Joseph's Society, which has a membership of eighteen.

The congregation of the Holy Trinity at Kasson, Wisconsin, was organized in the year 1875, and at the same time a number of German Catholic families living in that vicinity built a small frame church, which was for some time subsequently attended by the resident pastor from Reedsville. This mission may be said to have prospered from the start, and soon under the benign administration of its successive pastors consisted of a congregation of about eighty families. In 1878 the mission was attended from Clark's Mills by the Rev. Clement Lau, and in the following year again by priests residing in Reedsville. During the pastorate of the Rev. W. Kraemer the church was enlarged and a steeple added to it. Since the erection of a new mission church in Brillion, the congregation has become somewhat reduced in numbers, there being now but thirty members (good people all), twenty-six of whom are of German and four of Irish nationality. In connection with this congregation there is a Holy Rosary Society, of twenty-seven members, which was organized in 1882, and a St. Cecilia Choir, of eleven members, which was established in 1896.

Soon after the completion of the Milwaukee and Lake Shore Railroad, a village grew up about three miles south of Kasson, to which the name of Brillion was given. The Catholics living in the immediate vicinity of this place soon came to the conclusion that it was advisable as well as necessary to have a church of their own, and to that end established a congregation and erected a frame structure which was dedicated and blessed by the Right Rev. Bishop F. X. Krautbauer, on November 9, 1881, there being also present at that time the Rev. Julius Rhode of Kaukauna.

The first pastor to administer to the spiritual wants of the mission was the Rev. Tobias Spunar of Reedsville. The next move on the part of the congregation was to establish a parochial school, and for that purpose the Rev. William Kraemer took up a collection, to which the members of Kasson congregation contributed liberally. This school is now attended by about seventy children from both missions, the total enrollment during the year 1896 being ninety-nine. Since the very commencement the school has been in a most healthful and progressive condition, a state of affairs largely owing to the thoughtful consideration given to it by the Sisters of Silver Lake, in whose charge it has always been. Among numerous improvements made from time to time upon the church interior is a beautiful gothic altar, a gift of the congregation, the gilding on which was contributed by the present pastor.

Rev. A. Cipin.

The congregation of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin now consists of forty-four paying and twenty non-paying members, six of Irish birth or descent. Of societies in the congregation there is a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, having about thirty members; a Society of Christian Mothers, with twenty-five members, and a Church Choir.

St. Mary's Church, Rhinelander, Wis.

PREVIOUS to the year 1888, St. Mary's was occasionally visited by Fathers John Seubert and P. Lochman of Clintonville, and N. Buschle and W. Takken (Dean) of Antigo. During these visits divine services were held in private houses, there being no church, although towards the end of the period mentioned one was in course of construction. This church was of frame, 60x48 feet, having a spacious sacristy, which served at that time as a parsonage, but is now used as a sacristy and winter chapel. The building was completed in 1888 by the Rev. N. July, who became the first resident pastor. At this time the congregation of St. Mary numbered but fifty families, between whom and the missions at Tomahawk, Parrish, Harrison, Monico, Eagle River and Minocqua, Father July divided his time. In 1889 a new parish was formed, of which Tomahawk became the headquarters. Of this parish the Rev. Charles Hoogstoel was appointed rector, with Parrish, Harrison and Minocqua as missions. Eagle River and Monico, remained as before and were attended from Rhinelander. In 1892 Father July built a commodious parsonage at a cost of $3,000, and furnished it throughout with the most desirable and modern improvements. Continued ill-health prevailing, Father July resigned in February, 1894, and was succeeded by the Rev. A. A. Gagnon, a Canadian priest, who remained, however, but a short time, being transferred to Rosiere on July 26 of the following year. He was succeeded as pastor of St. Mary's by the Rev. Father Van Roosmalen, who built an addition of thirty feet to the church, added a tower, and also renovated the building throughout at a cost of $3,400. On June 30, 1896, Father Van Roosmalen went to Sturgeon Bay, being succeeded at Rhinelander by the Rev. B. Hugenroth, at that time at Clintonville. The congregation of St. Mary's, which now numbers some two hundred families, is of a somewhat polyglot character, consisting, as it does, of a mixture of Irish, French, German, Polish and Bohemian nationalities. There is at present no educational institution in connection with the congregation, but it is hoped that better times will, before long, warrant the erection of a Catholic school.

St. Mary's Church and Parsonage, Rhinelander, Wis.

The Hospital of St. Mary's, at Rhinelander, which is in charge of twelve Sisters of the Dolorous Mother, was erected in 1895.

Of Catholic organizations connected with St. Mary's parish there are the following: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, forty-eight members: James G. Dunn, president; Patrick Gleason, vice-president; James Gleason, financial secretary; Adam Schliessmann, recording secretary, and C. Crusoe, treasurer. Catholic Order of Foresters, sixty members: John Didier, chief-ranger; Adam Schliessmann, vice-chief-ranger; John Beck, financial secretary; William T. Clifford, recording secretary; Felix Dolan, treasurer. Sacred Heart Society, one hundred and twenty members, and the Ancient Order of Hibernians, twenty members; Patrick Gleason, president; J. E. Bonnie, first vice-president; P. Ryan, second vice-president; James Gleason, financial secretary; William Dunn, corresponding secretary, and Felix Dolan, treasurer.

The Rev. B. Hugenroth, present rector of St. Mary's congregation, Rhinelander, Wisconsin, was born at Westbevern, near Münster, Westphalia, Germany, on September 23, 1856. He received his primary education in the parochial schools of his native land, which, according to compulsory law, he frequented for seven years.

Rev. B. Hugenroth.

Being now too old to enter the Gymnasium, he, with the consent of his parents, left for America on February 15, 1880. Here he entered St. Vincent's College, Philadelphia, on March 31, 1880. He then went to St. Lawrence College, Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin, where he completed his classical education and whence he was adopted for the Diocese of Green Bay by the Right Rev. F. X. Krautbauer in the year 1882. He next returned to Louvain to complete his studies in philosophy and theology at the American College.

Whilst at Louvain he received minor orders and subdeaconship. In 1886, with the consent of the Right Rev. F. X. Katzer, then Bishop of Green Bay, he went to the University of Innsbruck, Tyrol, Austria, where he was ordained to the priesthood January 23, 1887, and celebrated his first Holy Mass in the Franciscan church at that place on February 2d following.

In 1887 he returned to Green Bay and was at once sent to the Upper Peninsula missions in Door County. Here his work comprised the missions of Jacksonport, Bailey's Harbor, Egg Harbor, Sister Bay and Washington Island, together with Sevastopol. For nearly five years and a half, he labored in these missions, building a new church at Egg Harbor, constructing a new parsonage at Sevastopol, erecting and carving with his own hands the main and side altars in SS. Peter and Paul's Church, at Sevastopol, and superintending the building of St. Aloysius Institute, which stands as a lasting testimony of his lordship's love for poor missions and for Christian education. On December 28, 1892, he was transferred from the Upper Peninsula missions to Clintonville and missions, holding the first services at Clintonville in January, 1893. His new charge comprised the missions of Clintonville, with a Catholic school; Bear Creek, with a Catholic school —both schools being taught by Franciscan Sisters of Silver Lake, Wisconsin—Leopolis, Marion, Tigerton, Norrie and Aniwa. In 1895 Bishop Messmer sent a priest to Aniwa, with Phlox, Norrie and Tigerton as missions, also a resident priest for Bear Creek alone, Clintonville and Marion still belonging to Father Hugenroth. During the three years in Clintonville and missions, Father Hugenroth, with his people, built the new St. Rose's Church at Clintonville, at a cost of $12,000; a church tower at Tigerton, and commenced St. Boniface Church at Aniwa. The building of the new St. Rose's Church at Clintonville was commenced under the most favorable circumstances, which became very adverse before the structure was completed. For this the hard times, which prevailed in 1893, were largely the cause. The building, however, was completed, although a standing debt of $5,900 remains to be paid. Through the energy of Father B. Schmitz, Father Hugenroth's successor, and the good will of St. Rose's congregation, this debt has been reduced to $3,700. In July, 1897, Father Hugenroth was appointed rector of St. Mary's congregation at Rhinelander, Wisconsin, his present charge. He is now nearly forty-one years of age.

St. Hubert's Church, Rosiere, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Hubert's was organized somewhere about the year 1866. For ten years prior to that time it was served as a mission by pastors residing in adjacent localities, and also received occasional visits from priests who happened to be passing in that direction. The first pastor, however, to attend the congregation, and of whom any information is given as such, was the Rev.

St. Hubert's Church, Rosiere, Wis.

Father Vermare. His successors were the Rev. Fathers Contaigne, Vaillant, Roger, Jouaux, Gagnon, the latter's pastorate ending with his life, on January 6, 1896, and the present pastor, the Rev. S. C. Mickers.

The first church built at Rosiere was totally destroyed by fire in 1871, but was immediately rebuilt by the Rev. Father Contaigne, who was at that time in charge of the pastorate. The congregation of St. Hubert's now numbers some six hundred and sixty souls, nearly all Belgians. In the way of Catholic organizations, there are connected with St. Hubert's, a Dames of the Altar Society, with eighty members; League of St. Joseph, one hundred and five members, and Sodality of the Children of Mary, thirty-six members.

The little congregation of St. Michael's, in Door County, Wisconsin, Belgian, which was organized in 1881, is attender as a mission from St. Hubert's. The number of families attending St. Michael's, is thiry. They are given an opportunity to attend Mass, which is regularly celebrated on two Sundays in every month.

The Rev. S. C. Mickers was born in Holland, on January 30, 1854, made his religious vows in the Order of St. Norbert in 1875, was ordained to the priesthood in 1879, and, after having been assistant parish priest some twelve years, was called back by his abbot to be appointed master of novices and professor of moral theology in the monastery, from 1893 to 1896, when he left the old country to become a missionary priest. He became rector of St. Hubert's at Rosiere in 1896.

Rev. S. C. Mickers.

St. John the Baptist's Church, St. John, Wis.

ST. JOHN the Baptist is the name of the church which was built and dedicated in 1862. At that time the congregation consisted of eighteen families, all of whom were German. The church was a crude though comfortable structure, being built of logs, and the furnishings were, as may be supposed, well in keeping with the general condition of the structure. This little community, which was located at St. John's in Calumet County, was at first attended by the pastors at Hollandtown. The first of these to thus administer to the spiritual wants of these people, was the Rev. Father Luytelaar, who continued to do so from 1861 to 1864. He was succeeded in these duties by the Rev. B. DeGoey, who continued to visit St. John's until 1869. From the beginning of the latter year until 1870 the pastor serving this congregation was the Rev. Clement Duerr, who was resident pastor at Buchanan. He was the last of the visiting pastors, as in 1870 the Rev. Anthony Leitner was appointed as resident pastor. He remained at St. John's for a couple of years, during which time he managed to build the present church, a nice and spacious structure, in every way more suitable than its predecessor. From 1872 until 1874 the Rev. Father Lezno administered the pastorate, and from 1874 to 1875 the Rev. John Guenterscheid. Following him came the Rev. J. Jaster, who was succeeded in 1879 by the Rev. Charles Buschle. He was followed in 1879 by Father I. G. Ritter, who administered the duties of the pastorate until his death in 1896, when the Rev. John Westkamp, present rector of the parish, was appointed.

St. John the Baptist's Church, St. John, Wis.

The congregation of St. John now consists of eighty-three families. There are three Catholic organizations in the parish, all of which are very active and thoroughly well represented. One of these, a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, has a membership of thirty-five. The Altar Society for Married Women, Mmes. Annie Jacobs and Gertrude Pscherra officers, has sixty-three members. A St. Mary's Sodality for Young Ladies, of which Miss Anna Fisch is president, has a membership of forty-three. The educational interests in this parish are subserved by two parochial schools, which are in charge of school Sisters of St. Agnes from Fond du Lac. The number of children now in attendance at these schools averages nearly eighty.

The Rev. John Westkamp, present rector of St. John the Baptist congregation, is a native of Westphalia, Germany, where he was born in 1836. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1861.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Sevastopol, Wis.

AS early as the year 1883 the Catholic population of the town of Sevastopol, Door County, Wisconsin, especially those of the northern part of the township living remotest from the church at Sturgeon Bay, to which parish they belonged at that time, began to consider the advisability of forming a congregation of their own, and of building a church edifice in order to be better enabled to follow up their religious duties. At the request, therefore, of a number of these people, the Rev. E. Blum, at that time resident pastor of the Sturgeon Bay parish, called a meeting in the spring of the following year at the house of Mr. John Hocks, when preliminary steps were taken towards the erection of a new church. This arrangement was completed with the consent of some sixty families, who thus formed the new congregation of SS. Peter and Paul. In the fall of 1884 Father Blum, having been transferred to another parish, the Rev. Father Pellegrin became his successor, and it was under his administration and personal direction that the congregation at Sevastopol was incorporated under the State laws of Wisconsin. Of this incorporation Messrs. John Meyer and Joseph Neusse were respectively elected treasurer and secretary. To further facilitate matters connected with the erection of the church, a building committee was also appointed which consisted of Messrs. Dominic Kemp, Michael Donovan and John Hocks, under whose direction active work was begun on the building during the summer of 1885. In the fall of that year the church was completed, blessed and placed as a mission in charge of Father Pellegrin. Thus for some time following the congregation was visited regularly on the third Sunday of each month. In September, 1887, the Rev. Alphons Broens was appointed rector of Sturgeon Bay, who continued to visit Sevastopol until early in the spring of 1889, when the Rev. B. Hugenroth was appointed pastor of the missions on the peninsula, among them being Sevastopol. At the suggestion of Father Hugenroth the people of this congregation built a parsonage in 1889. The residence being completed, Father Hugenroth removed from Jacksonport to Sevastopol, and thus also became the first resident pastor at that place, and from there he attended the five missions of Jacksonport, Bailey's Harbor, Egg Harbor and Sister Bay, located on the peninsula in Door county. The apparent difficulty in the administration of all these distant small communities, especially in regard to the most necessary spiritual work, the instruction of the children living so far apart from their churches, indicated to Father Hugenroth the great benefit which might be done by some institute for the particular purpose of giving a short course of preparation for the reception of the Holy Sacraments to those who would be otherwise neglected and lost. Encouraged by many, he presented this idea to the Right Rev. Bishop Messmer, who not only sanctioned the furtherance of the project but furnished the means for building the present magnificent school, which stands near to the church edifice and is known as St. Aloysius Institute. This building was completed in 1892 and blessed by the Right Rev. Bishop on the 29th of November of that year. This institute and two beautiful gothic altars, built by Father Hugenroth and donated by him to the congregation, are certainly a standing monument of this priest's zealous work. In December, 1892, Father Hugenroth was transferred from Sevastopol to another charge, Bishop Messmer appointing the Rev. F. X. Steinbrecher as his successor. He was soon, however, called to other fields of labor, his place being taken by the Rev. J. Hennes, who was again succeeded by the Rev. A, Broens. Failing health, however, soon compelled him to give up this charge, which was transferred to the Rev. Father Kroll, resident pastor at Bailey's Harbor, who visited Sevastopol once a month until November, 1885. On the 9th day of that month the Rev. George Brunner assumed the pastorate, he being succeeded by Father C. Ulrich, who is still in charge of the congregation of SS. Peter and Paul's, which is now composed of five hundred and ten souls. The parochial school is in charge of the School Sisters of St. Francis, from the Bay Settlement, and has a regular attendance of seventy scholars.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Sevastopol, Wis.

Rev. C. Ulrich.

On the 9th day of August, 1897, the missions of Jacksonport, Bailey's Harbor and Sister Bay were attached to the parish of Sevastopol to be administered from that place.

The Rev. Constantine Ulrich was born on the 19th of January, 1845, in Luzern, Switzerland, and after acquiring the necessary education was ordained to the priesthood in Feldkirch Vorarlberg, on April 11, 1871. for the diocese of Rochester. He arrived in America the 14th day of November, 1871, and entered the diocese of Green Bay in April, 1893, becoming rector of the pastorate at Luxemburg, Wisconsin, where he remained until August 30, 1896, when he was transferred to his present rectorate.

St. John's Church, Seymour, Wis.

THE village of Seymour is situated in the town of the same name in the County of Outagamie, State of Wisconsin. This village originated at the time when the Green Bay and Winona Railway was built, as before that the country was inhabited only by a few farmers, who on account of the great distance they had to travel to their nearest market place, Appleton, eked out a rather primitive as well as precarious existence. Nor was it their temporal condition which suffered alone from this state of affairs, as, being careless of the one, they were equally so of the other, and hence their spiritual condition suffered as well.

It was quite an undertaking for the people of that section to go to church in those days, as the nearest place of worship to them was then located at Little Chute. The settlement, therefore, became a neglected spot, which condition was more firmly established through the indifference of the people about going to the neighboring settlements to attend to their religious duties, and the inability of the pastors of the neighboring parishes to come to them. It was not, therefore, until the year 1873, after several Catholic families had established their homes in the town of Seymour, and the construction of the railway had brought a number of Catholic artisans into that vicinity, that the Catholic citizens came together and arranged for the erection of a frame church. At a meeting, a committee of six prominent Catholics was appointed, to whom was delegated full power to collect the necessary means and supervise the erection of the church. Work was at once begun on this building, which was finally completed during the year 1874, and dedicated under the patronage of St. John the Baptist, by the Rev. Father Walsh, of Green Bay, who was delegated to perform that service by the administrator of the diocese, the Rev. Edward Daems. From the time of dedication until December of the same year, St. John's congregation was regularly visited by the Rev. Father Beyerle, then stationed at Duck Creek. Father Beyerle died at Milwaukee in the summer of 1897, being at the time pastor of the Catholic congregation at Grand Rapids. So poor was this community that they were unable to fulfill their obligations to the pastor, so that he was compelled to discontinue his visits to Seymour, and the little mission was thus left without a priest for several months. Another effort to establish regular services at Seymour was made in the summer of 1875, by Father Buschle, at that time pastor of Centre, who for six months attended the congregation as a mission. Once more the congregation was unable to fulfill its engagements, and so for a second time was left without a priest. In the following December, Father Scholter was sent to Seymour, his mission being to celebrate services there on two Sundays in the month, provided that the congregation would make an effort and show a disposition to carry out their obligations. This they managed to do, and the Right Rev. Bishop Krautbauer, becoming satisfied with the exertions made by these people and their evidently good intentions, nominated Father Scholter as resident pastor of the congregation, giving him also that of Black Creek as a mission. At the time of his coming, there was no residence provided for the priest, so Father Scholter built a new sacristy 24x16 feet, which at the same time served as a home for him. A good omen at this time was a desire on the part of the congregation of St. John's to establish a Catholic parochial school, and at a special meeting called for that purpose, it was unanimously resolved to begin work on one at once. As a result of this, a building with basement, two stories and attic was erected, and on the first of September, 1876, was ready for occupancy. This school was immediately put in charge of the Ursuline Sisters of Green Bay, who conducted it from the start with so much care, circumspection and solicitude, that within a few weeks they had a regular average attendance of not less than eighty scholars. In order to meet all of these expenses, however, and to make in addition suitable provision for the care and sustenance of the Sisters, Father Scholter was compelled to go outside of his immediate congregation to solicit aid in this undertaking. In this he was quite successful, obtaining altogether the sum of $692.67. He now made an additional improvement to the property by erecting a small chapel in the new school house for the Sisters, which he dedicated to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Thus affairs passed quietly and satisfactorily along until the Ursulines were called back to the mother house at St. Louis, for which place, deeply regretted, they left Seymour on the 20th of June, 1877. The school was then placed in charge of Sisters Macaria, Synthiches and the candidate Mary Hass, of Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee, who came to Seymour in October, 1877. In the interim, however, the public schools at Seymour had been reopened, and to these many of the children had already begun to go, so that the Sisters had great difficulty in gathering around them an attendance of forty pupils. At length, overcome by the many and unexpected difficulties which seemed constantly to assail the enterprise, the Right Rev. Bishop sold the school building to Mother Caroline for the sum of $1,700. With the sale of this building the pastor was obliged to seek a new residence, and he therefore built an addition to the sacristy 16x24 feet, which cost $307.53, and was arranged as a residence for him. On May 5, 1878, a mission was held in Seymour by the Rev. Father Steil, assistant pastor at St. John's Church in Green Bay. This mission was markedly successful, many luke-warm Catholics in the vicinity being brought to the consciousness of their condition, while many who had fallen away entirely from the church were reconciled to God.

St. John's Church, Seymour, Wis.

On June 22 of the same year, Father Scholter was transferred from Seymour to Centre,. being succeeded as rector of St. John's by the Rev. A. Koetz, who took charge of the congregation on July 12, and remained until the time of his death (he was killed in a runaway), on the 16th of May, 1880. Father Koetz was succeeded by the Rev. N. Schoell, who remained at Seymour until August 7, 1884, when he was appointed rector of the Catholic congregation at New London. Father Schoell's successor was the Rev. Father Pescinski, during whose administration the Sisters left Seymour and the school was closed. The parish was then left vacant for a period until the coming of the Rev. Father Kristan, who in turn was succeeded by the Rev. Fathers Gessel and Bourgmeyer. Under the administration of Father Gessel, the Sisters' residence was bought back by the congregation and is used at the present time as a parsonage. The means on this occasion were furnished by a Sodality in Bavaria, although local institutions and individuals were not backward in rendering assistance, Bishop Messmer individually donating over $200. It was during this pastor's residence at Seymour that the congregation divided, the greater part organizing a parish by itself in the so-called Bavarian Settlement. Everything was done by Father Bourgmeyer to prevent this arrangement going into effect, but all of his efforts proved unavailing, the Right Rev. Bishop finally giving his permission for the separation and organization of a new parish, which is called Isaar or St. Sebastian's. Father Bourgmeyer worked hard at Seymour, especially to secure for his successor a suitable living. After the transfer of Father Bourgmeyer to Custer, the pastorate of Seymour remained vacant for a considerable time, during which the Rev. Father St. Louis administered to the congregation from Green Bay. The next pastor of St. John's was the Rev. Joseph Hemmer, who assumed the charge on the 16th of January, 1895, having in connection with the home parish the missions of Black Creek and Isaar. On March 9, 1896, Bishop Messmer incorporated the congregation of the mother parish under the title of St. John's congregation, of Seymour, Outagamie County, Wisconsin. The documents perfecting these arrangements were duly signed by the Right Rev. Bishop and Secretary N. F. Kitzinger in the presence of F. R. Dittmer, notary public. On September 2, 1896, the Rev. Joseph Bastian, formerly pastor of St. Francis' congregation at Portage City, was appointed rector of St. John's and of the missions attached, and is still maintaining that position. At the present time there are three Catholic societies connected with this parish, the Benevolent Legion of Brooklyn, whose purpose is for mutual life insurance, a Rosary Society for Married Ladies, and a society for the young ladies.

The outlook for Seymour is now more promising, although its growth is necessarily slow. According to the latest parochial report sent to the Right Rev. Bishop in 1896, the congregation now numbers some seventy families, seventeen of whom are English, eight French, forty-one German, one Bohemian, one Hollandish and one of Polish nationality. The estimated value of the parish property at this time is three thousand dollars. In connection with this brief history, it will certainly not prove amiss to mention some of those who have been actively and zealously interested in the promotion of St. John's congregation and the general welfare of the parish. Among such are Alois Gehling, Nicholas Kitzinger, Alois Lotter, Conrad Dilger, John Hughes, Joseph Hutchison, William Hutchison, William McDonald, Louis Metzner and Frank Huettl.

The mission at Black Creek, Outagamie County, which is attended from Seymour, is situated about nine miles west, on the Green Bay and Winona Railway. At this place there is a little frame church dedicated to the Dolorous Mother of God, which is supported by a congregation of about fifty-five families. There are Sodalities of the Sacred Heart and Blessed Virgin Mary in this congregation, both being in an active and flourishing condition. The church property belonging to this mission has an estimated value of $2,000.

St. Sebastian's congregation at Isaar is another mission which is attended from St. John's, and was established by sixty-three Catholic families who withdrew from the mother church for that purpose. The church at this place is a neat-looking brick-veneer structure and is situated in the town of Seymour. This property is valued at $2,000, while the entire indebtedness of the parish does not in all exceed $100.

The Rev. Joseph Bastian, present rector of St. John's and out-missions, was born September 6, 1860, at Kirweiler, Canton Buxweiler, Alsace. After acquiring an ordinary education, he completed his classical studies at the Gymnasium at Buxweiler Bitch (Lothringen) and Zillesheim. His theological and philosophical studies he acquired at the Priests' Seminary at Strassburg, and he was ordained at that same institution. He was then for some time engaged as a professor at Alsace, from whence he was afterwards sent with others to the diocese of Freiburg, Baden, to assist in the spiritual work there. In 1892 he came to America, the Right Rev. Otto Zardetti coming with him to St. Cloud, Minnesota, from whence he took charge of St. Nicholas congregation (Stearns County), with the missions Pearl Lake, St. Anna and Eden Valley. When the Right Rev. Father Zardetti became Archbishop of Bucharest, Father Bastian joined the Diocese of Green Bay, being given in charge of the congregation of the Precious Blood, at New London, where he remained for two months. In May, 1895, he was transferred to St. Francis Xavier's at Portage, where he erected a parochial school. In September, 1896, he became rector of the congregation at Seymour, where he is still located.

Rev. Joseph Bastian.

Sacred Heart Church, Shawano, Wis.

SHAWANO, the county seat of Shawano County, is situated near the eastern banks of the Wolf River, about forty miles northwest of Green Bay, and about sixteen miles north of Clintonville, Waupaca County, which was formerly a railroad terminus. Thirty-seven or thirty-eight years ago the population of this place consisted of about one thousand people.

One of the first among those to settle at Shawano, was Mr. Joseph Maurer, a Catholic, who came there from Rhenish Prussia, in 1850. For a number of years the few Catholics residing in the county had to travel a long distance over rough and often almost impassable ways to Keshena, in the Menominee Indian Reservation, where they attended the celebration of the Holy Mass, and received the Sacraments. In 1862 the Right Rev. John Martin Henni, afterwards Archbishop of Milwaukee, to which diocese Shawano County then belonged, celebrated the Holy Mass at the house of Mr. Ostroph, on Green Bay street, Shawano. He also, at the same time, baptized a child of Mr. Ostroph's, the first, as far as is known, to receive that Sacrament in Shawano. Somewhat later, the Rev. P. Antoine, of the Capuchin Order, who was then stationed at Keshena, also baptized a number at Shawano. In 1863 the Rev. P. Mignault visited the little settlement, saying Mass at various private houses, and administering generally to the spiritual wants of the people. From the statement of an Indian at Keshena, it appears that he labored in the mission for only one year. As to the length of his stay in that vicinity, nothing definite can be given, the records of Keshena, covering a period extending from 1855 to 1864, having been lost. It is of record, however, that his successor, the Rev. Father Mazeaud administered to these people from June 2, 1864, to May 14, 1865. After a lapse of a few months the Capuchin Fathers of Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin, took charge of these missions, maintaining the same from March, 1866, to January, 1870. The first of these to assume the active duties of the charge was the Rev. P. Cajetanus Krauthahn, who remained from March, 1866, to October, 1867. He was then followed by the Rev. P. Solanus, from October, 1867, to July, 1868. Father C. Krauthahn resumed the administration July, 1868, and administered the same until January, 1869, when he was succeeded by the Rev. P. Fidelis, who remained until 1870. The Capuchin Fathers were succeeded by the Rev. C. R. Vermare, then resident pastor at Oconto, who maintained the charge from 1870 to September, 1871. From that date, with the exception of a brief visit made by the Very Rev. Edward Daems, Vicar-General of Green Bay, during February, 1872, to the reservation, the Indians as well as their white neighbors were without a pastor until September, 1872. At that time the Rev. John Chebul, missionary among the Chippewa Indians of Northern Wisconsin, made a short visit to Keshena and Shawano. Then, for another year, the people were without a pastor, until the Rev. Charles Beyerle, from Duck Creek, came and administered the Holy Sacraments at Keshena. Father Chebul continued to visit these missions at rather uncertain intervals, until May, 1874. It is also of record that during the month of August and September in that year the Rev. Father C. Beyerle resided at Keshena, so that the Catholics at Shawano also had the benefit of his administration during the same time. From then, however, until July, 1875, the people were again left to their own devices. In that year, the late Rev. Amandus Masschelein was sent to Keshena by the Right Rev. F. X. Krautbauer, Bishop of Green Bay, where he remained in charge of the reservation and surrounding country from July, 1875, to September, 1880. It was during his administration that the first separate records were kept of the mission at Shawano, and the several white stations in the vicinity of that place.

Sacred Heart Church, Shawano, Wis.

After repeated requests made by the Right Rev. Bishop of Green Bay, the Franciscan Fathers of the Province of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, at that time assumed spiritual charge of the Menominee Indian Reservation. Since the 1st of September, 1880, Shawano was visited regularly every second and fourth Sunday of the month by Fathers from the Reservation. Among those thus administering to the spiritual wants of the congregation, was the Rev. Father Zephyrin Engelhardt, who performed the duties of pastor from September, 1880, to August, 1882, on which date he was appointed Superior at Keshena, which position he maintained until April 17, 1885.

He was succeeded as pastor of Shawano by the Rev. Father Blasius Krake, O. S. F., who remained for one year. Father Krake's experience as a missionary worker exemplified to a marked degree the untoward and disheartening conditions which, in so many instances, seemed to be the perfectly natural environment of the earlier settlements. Nor was it so much the lack of means as the callous indifference of the people to the friendly and tireless advances made by the missionaries, whose unselfish purpose was to improve and better their spiritual condition. In this particular instance, Father Krake experienced a state of affairs which might well have dismayed one even as loyal to the purpose of his calling as he. This will more readily be appreciated after a perusal of what follows.

Father Krake was succeeded by the Rev. Father Hugo Fessler, from 1883 to 1885. Towards the end of July, 1885, Father Fessler was transferred to the pastorate at Chillicothe, Missouri. The next pastor was the Rev. Father Norbert, of Teutopolis, Illinois. Another change made at this time was in the transfer of Father Zephyrin Engelhardt, to Superior City, his duties being assumed by the Rev. Oderic Derenthal, from that place. On July 5, 1887, the Rev. Father Norbert was sent to Harbor Springs, Michigan, his position as pastor of Shawano being assumed by the Rev. Pius Niermann, under whose administration the parish remained until the arrival of the Rev. F. X. Steinbrecher, July 19, 1888. Since that date, there has been no connection between Keshena and Shawano in the management of the latter parish.

On August 30, 1890, Father Steinbrecher was appointed private secretary of the Bishop of Green Bay, and in his place the Rev. J. Kaster, present incumbent, was appointed to the pastorate at Shawano. These duties he actively assumed on September 19th following.

The first attempt at forming a congregation and building a church at Shawano was made in the year 1863, at which time, however, the project was unsuccessful. There is, however, on record a document which states that, "by the grace of God, and the permission of the Right Rev. John Martin Henni, of Milwaukee, a station was established at Shawano by the Rev. A. Mignault, at which place divine services were to be held once every month, under the patronage of St. John Nepomucene." On the 11th of December, 1863, a Building Committee, consisting of Messrs. Joseph Maurer, M. Ostroph and John Wiley, was appointed to look after and regulate the affairs of the parish. For three and one-half years following that time, no further attempt was made towards the erection of the church, but the question was renewed and brought to a more successful issue on August 22, 1867. At that time Father Cajetanus Krauthahn was pastor of the Catholic church at Keshena and Shawano, and it was under his direction that the Board of Trustees were elected, and the subscription list circulated, which was signed for liberal amounts by Catholics and Protestants alike. In spite of every effort, however, of the pastor, and the unqualified and earnest desire of the people, this church was not completed for nearly three years. This building was first dedicated under the patronage of St. Odelia, but was afterwards (January 12, 1881) transferred by the Bishop to the protection of the Sacred Heart of

Rev. Joseph Kaster.

Jesus. It is recorded that the Rev. Father Fidelis, a Capuchin Father from Calvary, Wisconsin, was the first priest to celebrate the Holy Mass in this building.

Under the judicious administration of its pastors, the little congregation prospered and grew, until in January, 1889, it was decided to be both necessary and advisable to build a more spacious and substantial structure. Plans were, therefore, immediately drawn, and on April 1st, of the same year, the new building was under way. The corner-stone of the church was laid on May 8, 1889, by the Right Rev. F. X. Katzer, of Green Bay, who also returned and dedicated the building on July 31st. This neat little structure, which makes a very presentable appearance, is of brick veneer, and occupies an area of 40x90 feet. During the spring of 1895, the interior of the church was completely renovated, the walls and ceiling being handsomely frescoed, besides which other valuable additions and improvements were made to the furnishings.

The first record of a Society formed in Shawano dates back to 1867, at which time a Roman Catholic Mite Society was established. This organization accomplished much good, the decorations of the church interior, as well as a number of the vestments, having been purchased from funds procured by it. On June 10, 1881, the men of the congregation organized the St. Joseph's Benevolent Society. In October of the same year, the Bishop also granted permission for the organization of the Confraternity of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and the Apostleship of Prayer. Two months later, through the influence of the Sisters of St. Joseph, a Young Ladies' Sodality of the Immaculate Conception was organized. Other Societies organized from time to time are the Sodality for Boys, established December 8, 1889, under the patronage of St. Aloysius; Branch 132, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, 1892, and a Christian Mothers' Society, organized May, 1894.

The parochial school connected with the congregation of the Sacred Heart, is conducted by Sisters of St. Joseph, from the Convent at South St. Louis, Missouri. These Sisters arrived at Shawano October 28, 1881, having come at the request of the Rev. Provincial, Vincent Halbfas, O. S. F. The school was opened on November 7, following, the number of scholars at that time being limited to thirty-seven. There are now five Sisters in charge, and the attendance has increased to one hundred and twenty scholars. The congregation of the Sacred Heart at the present time numbers in the neighborhood of sixty-five families.

The Rev. John Kaster, pastor of Sacred Heart congregation at Shawano, and its attendant missions, is a native of Wisconsin, and was born on January 6, 1864, at Green Bay. He is the youngest of three brothers, and receivevd his elementary education at the Catholic parish school of his city. At the age of thirteen, he commenced taking lessons in Latin from his pastor, the Rev. F. X. Katzer, and finally entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, in 1879. On April 3, 1888, he was ordained to the priesthood by his first instructor, then the Right Rev. F. X. Katzer, in the Cathedral at Green Bay. His first mission was among the Catholic families living in Waushara and Marquette Counties, where he labored from June 6, 1888, to September 19, 1890, on the latter date being transferred to Shawano, where he has remained until the present time.

Gresham, Leopolis, Waukechon, Gillet and Cecil were stations of what was formerly called the Keshena mission. These settlements were started, as far as known, during the 'seventies, although some few settlers may have come before that period. The missionaries, then, who were sent to Keshena mission, visited also the Catholics in those five settlements. That this could not be done very frequently before the year 1880, is evident from the history of the Keshena mission as given in extenso elsewhere. The first one who made regular visits to these places once a month was the Rev. Blasius Krake, O. S. F., who had charge of these stations from 1882 until 1888; he also attended Shawano for a period of one year (1882 to 1883), succeeding the Rev. Zephyrin Engelhardt as pastor of the parish there.

Up to 1883 the Catholics in the above-named five settlements had no befitting place where the Divine Mysteries could be celebrated, so that services were held in the private houses of the settlers. Soon after the arrival of Father Krake, a change for the better became quite apparent. He made the farmers understand how necessary it was to have a chapel, or little church, for divine services, and did not cease to urge them on to activity until he had the satisfaction of seeing three little chapels erected, one each at Gresham, Leopolis and Waukechon. At Gillet and Cecil, however, the Catholics were still too few to be able to follow the good example of their more fortunate fellows. But the erection of the chapels at Leopolis and Waukechon was not accomplished without difficulty, a great amount of stubbornness and reluctance on the part of the settlers having to be overcome by Father Krake, and it was entirely owing to the zeal, forbearance and patience of that zealous worker that the undertaking was not entirely abandoned. These two settlements are Bohemian, and the religious sentiments prevailing there at that time were almost anything but Catholic. How little there was of friendliness for the missionary, may be readily surmised from the following fact, which actually occurred during the pastorate of Father Masschelein (1875 and '80). As usual, the good pastor had come to Waukechon on one of his regular visits, for the purpose of celebrating Mass and administering the Sacraments.

The farmer with whom he stayed had furnished the priest some hay and oats for his horse. For these accommodations Father Masschelein was at that moment unable to pay, and, incredible as it may seem, the farmer unhesitatingly confiscated the reverend gentleman's horse to satisfy his claim. Father Krake was also made painfully aware of the indifference and apathy of these people, in his most ordinary associations with them. Some sect has a meeting house near Leopolis, and "there they preach the Word of God, too," he was bluntly told by some of the Catholics. It needed a great deal of self-denial on the part of the Father, in fact, not to forsake these stray sheep altogether, and to his lasting credit, be it said, his labors were not in vain. Gradually a better spirit made itself felt, though very slowly, it is true, and the people became worthy and zealous supporters of their pastor and the church.

The settlers at Gresham, good old Bavarian Catholics, grounded in their faith with hearts that beat warm for their church and religion, found no difficulty in following the advice of their pastor. It is really wonderful what these hard-working people have accomplished within six years from the time the first of them settled at Gresham (about 1877 or '78). Besides clearing their land, all densely grown with various kinds of timber, and raising their crop, they prepared the necessary lumber and put up a neat little frame church 40x24 feet —large enough for the few families at Gresham in 1883 —and furnished it to the best of their ability, and as far as their means would allow. They really have brought sacrifices for their Lord and God. They also platted and cleared a graveyard. Before the year just mentioned, two children, who had died at Gresham, were interred at Keshena, but, if memory does not err, were afterwards taken back to Gresham and buried there.

Divine services were held at Gresham before the year 1884 in the house of Frank Rindel. On New Year's Day of that year, the first Holy Mass was celebrated in the new church. Frank Rindel, one of the very first settlers of Gresham, if not the very first, has during his lifetime always exhibited an extraordinary fervor for his faith, and he was ever the leading spirit at the devotions held by the people on Sundays and holydays, when the pastor was unavoidably absent.

Soon after the completion of the church at Gresham, Father Krake started a ladies' society for the purpose mentioned in the Menomonee missions. At that time there were of members belonging to this society some twenty-five, which number, however, has been largely augmented (now forty families) since that time. It was also Father Krake who first established separate church records at the stations mentioned, compiling the different statements and incidents pertaining to each as far back as the year 1880. He, furthermore, procured bells for the chapels at Leopolis and Waukechon, the same, through his efforts, being donated by the Rev. Father Hessoun, of St. Louis, Missouri, who has ever evinced a profound interest in the welfare of this Bohemian congregation. Gresham was also provided with a little bell, donated to the congregation by one of the settlers. Another bell was procured by Father Krake for the parish school at Shawano, half of the amount required being paid by a brother of Father Krake, a priest of the Diocese of Philadelphia. The chapels of Leopolis and Waukechon are log buildings plastered inside, their dimensions being 24x40 feet and 30x20 feet, respectively. The houses where Mass was first said in the other missions besides Gresham, there being then no church at either, were those of Mr. Kasda, at Leopolis, John Nemec, at Waukechon, John Warrington, at Cecil, and Mr. Finnegan, at Gillet.

Gresham, a mission attended by the resident pastor of Sacred Heart Church at Shawano, is located about thirteen miles from that parish and ten in a northwesterly direction from Keshena.

In 1891 a school house was built, 40x24 feet in dimensions, and the work of educating the children begun. The first teacher to take charge of this school was Miss E. Lenz, she being succeeded by the Misses Margaret Doyle, Mary Schemme and Mary Hagen. In the spring of 1896, an addition of twenty-four feet with a seventy-four foot tower, was built onto the church, the same being blessed by the Right Rev. S. G. Messmer on the Feast of St. Boniface, June 5 of that year.

Of Catholic societies connected with this parish, there are the following: St. Ann's Society for Married Ladies, affiliated with the Christian Mothers' Society of Shawano, and the Apostleship of Prayer Society. The number of scholars at the present time attending St. Francis Solanus parochial school is forty-five.

Leopolis lies about thirteen miles west of the mother parish, and is a little village of about one hundred inhabitants. The congregation consists at the present time of forty-five families, twelve of whom are German, thirty-two Bohemian and one French.

In 1889 this mission was transferred to the charge of Clintonville. Four years later, that is in 1893, it was again transferred to Shawano. There is a small church at that place, 24x35 feet, its location being on a hill overlooking the town. The people here are quite enthusiastic in the interests of their religion, and measures are already being taken for the erection of a more substantial and extensive church structure in the near future. The labor involved in attending to the needs of this congregation is especially arduous, owing to its long distance from Shawano and the extremely bad condition of the roads during the greater portion of the year. A couple of Catholic societies have recently been organized at Leopolis, one being a Bohemian Benevolent Society, which was established last June, and the other a League of the Sacred Heart, which has one hundred members.

Waukechon, which is also attached to Shawano, lies about six miles to the southwest of that place. There are forty families in this parish, all of whom are Bohe-mian. In September, 1896, the Right Rev. Bishop gave to this mission its own pastor in the person of the Rev. R. Lakomy, whose residence is at Shawano. Services are held at St. Wenzel's twice each month.

Of Catholic organizations, the Society of Christian Mothers was organized in 1896, and in June, 1897, a Branch of the Catholic Bohemian Benevolent Society was organized by the chaplain of the Order, the Rev. F. Kolar. The congregation at Waukechon is at the present time in a satisfactory condition, as evidenced in the numerous improvements which are cheerfully made to the property when any such are requested or deemed advisable. Not a little of the success of these people, however, is owing to the kindliness exhibited and good advice given to them by the Very Rev. Mgr. James Hessoun, of St. Louis, Missouri, to whom his countrymen are under obligations for a bell, stations of the Way of the Cross, and a library. They also owe a debt of gratitude to the resident priests of Kewaunee and Manitowoc Counties, who, until a Bohemian priest was sent to the mission, were always ready to devote whatever time they had to spare to the interests and well-being of this settlement.

Church of the Sacred Heart, Sherwood, Wis.

BETWEEN the years 1858 and 1860 services were held in Sherwood, Calumet County, Wisconsin, at rather long intervals by the resident priests from Manitowoc. Subsequently, that is during 1860 and 1861, regular services were held at the house of Mr. Peter Stuhser, in the parish of Woodville, by Father Spierings of Hollandtown. In 1866 a little log church was built in the town of Harrison and dedicated under the patronage of St. Anthony. During November, 1871, a new brick church was completed in Sherwood and dedicated to St. Stephen. This was done during the administration of the Rev. Anselm Leitner, who was then attending the congregation from St. John's. The building is now used altogether for school purposes. Up to the year 1875 the church at Sherwood had been attended by the following pastors: Rev. C. Schraudenbach, 1866 to 1869; Rev. P. Carl, O. M. C., 1869; Rev. P. Cajetan, 1869; Rev. P. Andolscheck, 1869 to 1870; Rev. A. Lezno, 1870 to 1874; Rev. Paul Moser, 1873 to 1874; Rev. Father Guenterscheid, 1874 to 1875. From 1875 to 1881 inclusive, occasional services were held by different pastors as follows: The Rev. J. A. Abb, 1875 to 1877; Rev. George Hormisch, 1877 to 1878; Rev. Jul. Hellweger, 1878 to 1879; Rev. Ferdinand Allgayer, 1879; Rev. Patrick Vincenz, O. M. C., 1879; Rev. Michael Schoell, 1879 to 1880; Rev. August Gardthaus, 1880 to 1881. On September 1, 1882, the Rev. C. J. Alten, now a Jesuit, was assigned to the missions at Stockbridge and Harrison, whose congregations numbered respectively seventy and twenty-five families. He built a parsonage at the former place, from whence he also attended the church at Sherwood for two years. The Rev. Peter Ensdorf, O. M .C., succeeded Father Alten, who left in 1888, when he was followed by the Rev. J. Reiser, who continued as pastor until September, 1893. During the month of May, 1886, the foundation for the new church of the Sacred Heart of Jesus was laid, and in October of the same year the building was blessed by the Right Rev. F. X. Katzer, assisted by the Very Rev, N. Kersten, V. G., Rev. A. Seubert of Menasha, Rev. Ignatz Ritter of Woodville, Rev. Edward Lorigan of Chilton, Rev. G. Noever of Sacred Heart Church, School, Parsonage and Sisters' House, Sherwood, Wis.

Chilton, Rev. J. Voorjan of Jericho, Rev. Arthur O'Connor of Askeaton, Rev. C. De Louw of Hollandtown, Rev. A. Lex of Stevens Point, Rev. M. Schoell of Buchanan, and the Rev. Clemens J. Alten, pastor of the congregation. This church was of brick throughout, occupied an area of 36x75 feet, and cost complete $4,000. In 1894 the original church, school house and parsonage were sold and removed. In spite of numerous and material drawbacks experienced through the earlier stages of its history, the congregation of the Sacred Heart which at present consists of ninety families, is in a satisfactory and fairly prosperous condition. The new school, too, which was established in 1894 under the direction of Franciscan Sisters from the Convent at Alverno, Wisconsin, has a regular attendance of one hundred and twenty scholars. In addition to the improvements already mentioned, a new residence costing $800 was recently completed for the Sisters, new desks have been placed in the school house and numerous additions made to the equipment of both school and parsonage. The principal Catholic societies with which the members of this congregation are associated are the Married Ladies' and Young Ladies' Sodalities, whose combined memberships amount to fifty.

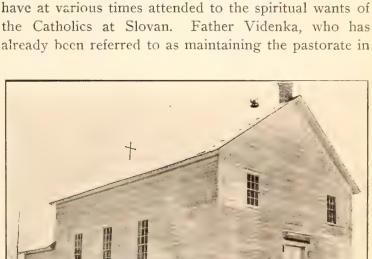
Rev. C. Krieger.

The very satisfactory condition of affairs which at the present time exists in this parish may in all fairness be said to have resulted from the energetic and zealous efforts of the Rev. L. Spitzlberger, who assumed the charge, as pastor, on October 22, 1893.

The Rev. C. Krieger, the present rector of the Sacred Heart congregation at Sherwood, was born August 11, 1862, at Trenton, New Jersey, and ordained to the priesthood at Evansville, Indiana, on December 19, 1886.

Holy Trinity Church, Slovan, Wis.

THE Bohemian and Irish Catholic congregation at Slovan, Kewaunee County, Wisconsin, was organized about the year 1856 or 1857 by a number of Bohemian, Irish and a few German Catholics who came to that locality and settled at that time. These people began at once to take an active interest in the spiritual condition of the settlement, and in 1858 their efforts were rewarded, and assumed a tangible form when John Stika donated one acre of ground to be plotted and arranged for a Catholic cemetery. Some time later, when the Catholic population had sustained a visible increase, August Repley, a German Catholic, presented five acres of land to the Catholic congregation upon which to erect the necessary buildings. During this time, occasional services were held in this settlement by the Rev. J. Maly, who came there as often as his numerous other duties would permit. In this condition matters continued until 1865, during which year the congregation began to erect a church. This building, a rough log structure, 40x40 and 20 feet high, was completed during the following year. A few years later it became necessary to enlarge the structure and an addition 40x12 feet was built on. A presbytery was also added to the church in 1876 during the administration of the Rev. J. E. Videnka, at that time resident pastor of Luxemburg. Since then the building has been sided over and its exterior appearance much improved, but the interior furnishings, always crude, are but little better at the present time than they were in the days of that zealous and saintly priest Father Kristan, during whose pastorate a 736-pound bell, purchased by the congregation, was blessed by the Very Rev. F. X. Katzer, at that time Vicar-General of the Diocese of Green Bay. The congregation of Holy Trinity at the present time consists of about eighty-two families, fifty-seven of whom are Bohemians and twenty-five Irish. In 1881 or '82, Alasca was given to Slovan as a mission and attended from there by the resident pastor at regular stated intervals. Eleven priests altogether, not, however, including those belonging to the "Belgian" settlement, have at various times attended to the spiritual wants of the Catholics at Slovan. Father Videnka, who has already been referred to as maintaining the pastorate in



Holy Trinity Church, Slovan, Wis.

1876, attended to the duties there until 1881. During that period he had for his assistant the Rev. J. Pellegrin. Father Videnka was succeeded as pastor by the Rev. A. Kristan, who twice served in that capacity, the first time from July, 1881, to October, 1882, and then again from November, 1889, to the time of his death, which occurred at Slovan on March 9, 1890. Following the termination of Father Kristan's first pastorate, there was a vacancy until August, 1884, when the Rev. Ignatius Leitner took charge of the congregation. He was succeeded in June, 1885, by the Rev. J. Maly, who remained at Slovan until November, 1887; then the Rev. A. Cipin, resident pastor at Ahnapee, and the Rev. Father Privoznik occupied the period between November, 1887, and June, 1888. In June, 1889, Father Kozelka succeeded the latter priest, remaining at Slovan as resident pastor until July of the same year. Then there was a vacancy, during which the Holy Trinity parish was attended by the Rev. Joseph Kirpal from Kewaunee, from February, 1890, to November, 1891. Since the latter date the Catholics at Slovan have maintained their own resident pastor, the Rev. Francis Kolar having charge from November, 1891, to April, 1896, Father Windish from October, 1896, to June, 1897, and at present the Rev. Wenceslas Koerner, who assumed the charge on September 11, 1897.

It may truthfully be said that the general conditions surrounding this parish are not exactly what they should be. In the vicinity occupying an area for six miles around this place there are not less than sixty Bohemian families, formerly indifferent Catholics, who have been led into a state of gross indifference and religious torpor through the influence brought to bear upon them by a number of anti-religious Bohemian newspapers and other bad influences. Every effort has been made to induce these people to return to their former allegiance, and it is hoped that they will again be brought into the Catholic fold.

The Rev. Wenceslas Koerner was born in Trebon, Bohemia, on August 31, 1859. His earlier education was obtained at the educational institutions of his native country, after which he completed a course in the classics and philosophy at the college in Budweis. He then remained for three years at the priests' seminary. At the request of the Most Rev. P. Feehan, through the Rev. William Choka, he came to America and entered the seminary of St. Francis near Milwaukee, where after four months' studies he was ordained priest by the Most Rev. P. Feehan for the Diocese of Chicago. This was on February 16, 1883; two days later he celebrated his first Mass in St. Procopius Church, where he remained as assistant for a year and three months. At a later date, realizing the sad condition of the Bohemian congregation in Detroit, who had been without a priest for a period of eight years, he took charge of that parish, remaining there actively engaged in the duties of his calling for five years and three months. During his residence among these people, he made a number of noticeable improvements to the church property, among them being the renovation of the main edifice at an out-lay of four thousand dollars, the erection of the present substantial and roomy school building, costing six thousand dollars, of which over three thousand dollars was paid. Having brought this parish into a most satisfactory and promising condition, he next went to Kellnersville, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, assuming charge of the Catholic congregation at that place. Here during a residence of three years he also effected many changes and improvements. Under his administration two missions were added to the charge,

Rev. W. Koerner.

the interior of St. Joseph's Church at Kellnersville was renovated throughout and decorated, a free school was established, the school building at the Mission of Kossuth completed and dedicated, and a school started in charge of Sisters of St. Francis, with an attendance of over forty children. At the same time, at the request of the Rt. Rev. F. X. Katzer, he attended many missions established in the Bohemian settlements which were scattered throughout the diocese. After that he went to Muscoda, Wisconsin, which place, after a three months' residence, he left to go to Cleveland, Ohio, where he assumed temporary charge of St. Procopius congregation. He remained in active service in Cleveland for nearly three years, during which time he purchased two school lots for twelve hundred dollars, stations for the church, for which one thousand dollars was paid and built an addition to the Sisters' residence. In spite of the expense involved in these numerous undertakings, upon his departure from Cleveland there was still a fund of over five thousand dollars left in the treasury to apply on the new church.

After a few months' vacation, Father Koerner then took charge of the Catholic congregation at Streator, Illinois, but soon resigned that pastorate to assume the duties of his present charge.

St. Joseph's Church, Stevens Point, Wis.

PRIOR to the year 1836, Brown County, Wisconsin, constituted what is now comprised in Brown, Portage and Columbia Counties. In that year, however, Portage County was set apart from Brown. Ten years later Columbia County was created, the county seat of the former being Portage City, then known as Fort Winnebago. The first white man to visit this region was Louis Du Bay, an old Indian fur-trader, who came there in 1790. He was born in Montreal, Canada, and was engaged in the fur trade during the major portion of his active life. His trading post was established some twelve miles from Stevens Point, where his son, John Du Bay, was still living in 1881. During the Black Hawk war in 1832, John Du Bay was commissioned lieutenant colonel by the Governor, and took an active part in the settlement of those disturbances. He was a native of Wisconsin, having been born at Green Bay July 10, 1810. Thirty years later he was the owner of a fur-trading post at Fort Winnebago, which he actively maintained until 1851. At that time a Franciscan, the Rev. Father Godhardt, was rector of St. Bartholomew's Church at Fort Winnebago. This saintly priest labored as a pioneer missionary of the Upper Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, his territory extending from Berlin to St. Marie, and from there to Montello and thence to Kingston and Portage City. From that place his apostolic labors extended to Grand Rapids and finally to Stevens Point. In all of that region he planted the true faith, laboring assiduously and devotedly in the Master's cause. At Stevens Point he became acquainted with George Stevens, the first American settler in that locality, who came there in 1839, and it is probably owing to the great respect he felt and expressed for the founder of the settlement that he named his first church there St. Stephen's. This structure stands next to the present Catholic cemetery, at the city's extreme eastern limit. The present St. Stephen's Church was erected on Clark street, in the year 1863. At that time, Engelbert Stenger and Alexander and Charles Krembs were the only German Catholics residing at Stevens Point, the former having come there in 1856, and the two latter in 1858. However, in 1873 a number of Catholics from Treves—Kreis Trier—arrived there, among the principal ones of the colony being Mathias Adams, Nicolas Bungert and Louis Wollenschlaeger. In the following year there came also John Theiler from St. Peters, Hungary, who was the founder of the present German Catholic Church of St. Joseph at Stevens Point. It was he who induced a large number of his countrymen to come to America, among them being residents of St. Peter, St. Andrew, St. John and St. Joseph, in Wieselburg and Moenchhof, each of those places sending its contingent to swell this German Catholic congregation. Among later arrivals from Hungary were Martin Neuberger, Albert Zinniel, John Ruppelt and Stephen Roth, who came in 1875, and Martin Gabler, John Huber, Josef and Martin Rischel, Ignace Kolby and John Hautzinger, who came in 1880. Until the latter year the original St. Stephen's Church had accommodated the Catholics of all nationalities, but so rapidly had the congregation increased and so mixed in nationality were its members, that the Rev. Nicolas July advised the Germans to form a congregation of their own. This was done and the erection of a new church begun in 1884. In the interim, and prior to the completion of the parsonage, the Rev. Fathers H. J. Abb and A. Dambacher attended the new congregation from St. Stephen's. On August 15, 1888, the Rev. Joseph Mayerhoefer assumed the duties as rector of the new parish, and took up his residence in the new parsonage. He remained until April 1890, when he was succeeded by the Rev. F. X. Stemper, who labored ably and successfully until 1893. During his administration the present three-story brick school house was erected, and opened under the management of Sisters of St. Francis from the convent at Alverno. There are now in attendance at this school not less than one hundred and seventy-five scholars. Father Stemper's successor, the Rev. J. Westkamp, also did considerable for the parish, enlarging the parsonage and organizing the societies of the Apostleship of Prayer, June 5, 1893, St. Anne, for Married Ladies, the Immaculate Conception for Young Ladies, a Branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, and St. Joseph's Benevolent Society for Men.

St. Joseph's Church, School and Parsonage, Stevens Point, Wis.

On August 15, 1896, the Rev. J. A. Holzknecht began his ministry at St. Joseph's Church, during his pastorate establishing the Third Order of St. Francis. Since March 20, 1897, the Rev. L. Starostzick has maintained the rectorate of St. Joseph's congregation.

St. Peter's Polish Church, Stevens Point, Wis.

THIS congregation was established in the year 1876 by the Rev. A. Bukowski, who continued as pastor until 1877. The second resident pastor of St. Peter's was the Rev. J. Czarnowski, who was succeeded in the year 1878 by the Rev. J. Walun. He remained until 1881, when Father F. Slovikowski was appointed to the pastorate. He was replaced in 1884 by the Rev. A. Lex. The successor to Father Lex was the Rev. L. Grabowski, who was pastor from 1888 till 1891, when he was succeeded by the Rev. F. Wozny. The Rev. Q. Zielinski maintained the charge from May 1, 1894, to November 15, 1896. It was on October 18 of the latter year, that the church and parsonage were totally destroyed by fire. The present rector is the Rev. Lucas J. Pescinski. There are now about four hundred families in the congregation. There is also a parochial school in connection with St. Peter's, which is in charge of Sisters of St. Francis, from St. Joseph's Convent, Milwaukee, and has a regular enrollment of about three hundred scholars.

Among the Catholic societies actively represented in this congregation are those of the Holy Rosary, Sacred Heart of Jesus, St. Rose of Lima, Sodality for Young Ladies, St. Peter's Benevolent Society, St. Stanislaus' Catholic Union, and St. Stephen's Catholic Association of Polish Americans.

The Rev. Lucas J. Pescinski, who assumed this charge on December 3, 1896, was born October 10, 1859, in Biezum, Poland, and came to the United States in 1870. His earlier education was obtained in the Orphan Asylum at St. Francis, Milwaukee, and he was enrolled as a student in the Seminary of St. Francis in 1874. He was ordained priest June 24, 1884. His first appointment was as rector of the Seymour missions, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Krautbauer, on July 25th of the same year. The missions at that time attended from Seymour were Black Creek, West Freedom and Hofa Park. From November 28, 1886, to April 15, 1895, he was rector of St. Casimir's Polish Church, at Hull, Portage County, Wisconsin.

In 1888, under the supervision of the Rev. L. Pescinski, a parochial school, together with Sisters' residence, was built at Casimir, at a cost of $3,500; also a district school was united with the parochial school, one

St. Peter's Church and Parsonage, Stevens Point, Wis.

Sister being engaged and paid by the district at an annual salary of $200, from 1889 to 1895.

During his pastorate at Stevens Point, he also attended the Polish mission at Wausau, Wisconsin, the Poles having separated from the German congregation at that place. At this time, he also purchased six lots at Wausau, and laid the foundation and built the basement of the present St. Michael's Church at that place. On April 15, 1895, he was appointed rector of St. John the Baptist Polish Church, at Menasha, Wisconsin. On December 23, 1896, he took charge of St. Peter's Polish congregation at Stevens Point, as successor to the Rev. Father Zielinski.

The new church of St. Peter's was built by contract for the sum of $15,150. The dimensions of this building are 63x135 feet, including the tower, the specifications drawn by the architect calling for a foundation and basement of stone and solid brick walls. The style of architecture adopted is the Gothic. The stained windows in this structure represent an outlay of $700, all of them having been provided by individual donation. The members of the Benevolent Society connected with this congregation have also expressed their intention of furnishing a high altar, which will not cost less than $1,000. The two remaining altars will be furnished by John Bukolt and the ladies of the Holy Rosary Society. The carpeting of the sanctuary and other portions of the edifice has been taken in charge by the Young

Rev. L. J. Pescinski.

Ladies' Sodality, who will also purchase a statue of St. Rose of Lima. Among those who have been noticeably prominent in their efforts to carry forward this work by liberal donations and other assistance, are the reverend pastor, Father L. J. Pescinski, Michael Napiontek, Martin Kieliszewski, Joseph Gelinski, John Okray, Andrew Krol (he donated bell and window), Laurence Krol, Anton Kirsling, Theophil Krutza, Jacob Mania, John Schyppy, John Kuchnowski, John Bukolt, John Kaczmarek, Hedwig Pizenska, Julianna Michalska and Julianna Waisbrot.

The corner-stone of the new church was laid and blessed July 11, 1897, by the Very Rev. J. J. Fox, Vicar-General of Green Bay. Others present on this occasion were the Rev. L. J. Pescinski, rector of St. Peter's Church, the Rev. W. J. Rice, of St. Stephen's English Catholic Church, the Rev. L. Starostzick, of St. Joseph's German Catholic Church, of Stevens Point, the Rev. Francis Jachimiak, of St. Bartholomew's Polish Catholic Church, Mill Creek, the Rev. Father Kasperski, of Pilot Knob and Plover, the Rev. Father Lebieski, administrator of Sacred Heart Polish Catholic Church at Sharon, and the Rev. J. A. Bourgmeyer, of St. Mary's English Church, also at Sharon.

The committee having the erection of this structure in charge, were Messrs. Joseph Glinski, Joseph Friday, August Kostka and Anton Kierchling. The present trustees of the congregation are the Rt. Rev. S. G. Messmer, president; Vicar-General J. J. Fox, director; the Rev. L. J. Pescinski, vice-president; Michael Friday, secretary; John Biesek, treasurer; Francis Lasecki and Adam, musical consultors.

St. Stephen's Church, Stevens Point, Wis.

AS far as it is possible to learn, Mass was celebrated for the first time at Stevens Point by Father Godthart, a German priest, in 1853, in a school house on Clark street. In the years which followed, Father Godfrey of St. Marie, Green Lake County, attended to the spiritual wants of the people. He was a man of indomitable energy, making this tedious journey of not less than sixty miles, between St. Marie and the Point, every sixty or ninety days. During these visits he would celebrate Mass in the homes of Mrs. James Bennett or Mr. Brabant, until, at a later date, the Catholics rented a shop which was used by them as a church for some considerable period. When the tide of immigration set in about 1856, the Catholics also bestirred themselves with a view to building a church of their own. With this purpose in view, William Collins, Patrick McCraith and William Leonard started out to collect a fund for the purchase of a site and the necessary materials. The site was finally located on the corner of Clark and Cross streets, on which the erection of a church was immediately begun. Father McGee was the first resident priest at Stevens Point, coming to that place some time during 1856. He, however, remained but a short time, being succeeded by the Rev. James Stehle, who performed the duties of that office from September, 1857, until September, 1858, being succeeded on the latter date by his brother, the Rev. Nicholas Stehle, who remained until 1860. On July 20, 1860, Father John Polack, the son of a Polish nobleman, became the pastor. Failing health, however, compelled him to resign in March, 1862, and two months later he died at the Sisters Hospital in Milwaukee. During his pastorate Bishop Henni visited St. Stephen's, celebrating the first confirmation services ever held at Stevens Point.

Father N. Hens was the next pastor, officiating during the year 1863. Then came the Rev. L. Lux, who in turn was succeeded by the Rev. M. Schwebach. On January 12, 1866, James Pollard and wife deeded to Bishop Henni two lots on the corner of Clark and Pine streets. To this spot Father Schwebach removed the parsonage and on it also erected the present church. The Rev. William Mahoney was pastor of St. Stephen's from November, 1869, until October, 1870. He was a man of brilliant attainments and an eloquent orator. From April, 1871, until July, 1873, the Rev. Louis Cornelis maintained the pastorate. He was a native of Belgium, and had been for some years previous to this appointment a professor at the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee. He was a very earnest and conscientious worker in behalf of education, and as a result of this one of his first great undertakings on becoming pastor of St. Stephen's was the establishment of a parochial school. He soon succeeded in collecting nearly $2,000, with which he erected a substantial and satisfactory school building. Father Cornelis finally removed to Minnesota, where he died. The school completed, Father Tanguay, who succeeded to the pastorate in July, 1873, at once placed it in charge of Sisters of Notre Dame. In September, 1874, Father N. July began a long and useful pastorate. Two years later Father Bogacki raised $800 for the erection of St. Peter's, thus separating the Poles from the congregation of St. Stephen's. Some nine years later Father July organized the Hungarians belonging to his congregation and established St. Joseph's Church on Center avenue. He also during his pastorate built the Catholic church at Custer and attended the congregations at Lanark, Knowlton, Sharon and Buena Vista. Besides, he established many of the churches along the line of the Wisconsin Central railroad, in the diocese of La Crosse. In addition to this he enlarged the church and built the present commodious parsonage. After thirteen years of faithful service, Father July resigned in December, 1887, and removed to Rhinelander. The next pastor was the Rev. C. J. Alten, who took possession in January, 1888. He remained until September, 1889, when he resigned to join the Jesuit Fathers with whom he had studied for a number of years in Europe. The Rev. E. P. Lorigan was pastor from September, 1889, until November, 1890. He was a native of Ireland, but studied for the priesthood in America. He is at present pastor of Lanark, Wis., where he is doing a great amount of good among the people. His successor was the Rev. M. J. O'Brien, who officiated from November, 1890, until May, 1893. Father O'Brien did much good at Stevens Point, clearing off the church debt, besides building an excellent new residence for the Sisters. He proved a most popular pastor and his departure to Fort Howard, to which living he had been appointed, was greatly deplored.

St. Stephen's Church and School, Stevens Point, Wis.

Rev. W. J. Rice.

The Rev. W. J. Rice, present pastor of St. Stephen's congregation, was born in Wrightstown, Brown County, Wis., on January 18, 1855. After receiving the ordinary school education, he entered the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, in January, 1872, and was ordained priest there on June 27, 1880. His first appointment was as pastor of the congregation at Kilbourn City, after which he served successively at Maple Grove and De Pere. On May 31, 1893, he became pastor of St. Stephen's congregation at Stevens Point, where he has been eminently successful in all of his undertakings. The congregation now consists of about one thousand members and the school connected with it has an attendance of one hundred and eighty-six scholars.

St. Patrick's Church, Stiles, Wis.

THE Catholics living at and around Stiles were visited as a mission in the early days by priests from Oconto and Duck Creek, among them being the Rev. A. Vermare and Father Schwebach from the former, and the Rev. E. F. Van Hootegem from the latter place. It is also of record that the first church was devised and constructed during the administration of Father Schwebach. It was on or about January 1, 1885, that the parish of St. Patrick's was really established, at which time also the Rev. Charles Hoogstoel became the first resident pastor of the congregation. During his residence at Stiles Father Hoogstoel made numerous improvements to the church property, besides building a comfortable parsonage. He was succeeded by the Rev. E. E. Leccia, who built an addition to the church. Father Leccia was succeeded by the Rev. Father Vanier, who besides his parochial duties at Stiles attended to the out-missions at Gillet and Oconto Falls. The congregation of St. Patrick's numbers forty families.

St. Patrick's Church, Stiles, Wis.

The congregation of St. Anthony's at Oconto Falls is attended from Stiles. The mission, which is at the present time composed of some sixty Irish, German, French, Hollandish, Belgian and Swiss families, was established by the Rev. Father Vanier on January 1, 1896. There is a nice church at this mission built of brick veneer, which cost $3,500. This building was dedicated on December 27, 1896, the Right Rev. S. G. Messmer, D. D., Bishop of Green Bay, conducting the services. The mission is visited regularly twice each month.

Rev. C. Vanier.

Another mission attended from Stiles is that of St. John the Baptist at Gillet. This mission was established about 1872 or 1873, and at present consists of sixteen families of Irish and German descent. Services are held here also twice each month.

The Rev. C. Vanier,[1] rector of St. Patrick's at Stiles, was born in 1865 at Paris, France, and is the son of Etienne and Melanie (Vivier) Vanier. His family was originally from Burgundy, settling in Paris in 1702. His father, a traveling salesman, was killed in a railroad accident in 1866. His mother continued to reside in Paris and in 1873 was married to J. Muller, a well-known composer of that city, by whom she had two children, George, an officer in the French army, and Jeanne, who is a student in the Conservatory of Music at Paris. The subject of this sketch was also reared in that city, his earlier education being acquired in the college of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, conducted by the Maristes Brothers. Later he entered the college of the Immaculate Conception, conducted by the Jesuit Fathers, from which institution he graduated in 1882. He then pursued the study of theology in the Seminary of the Holy Ghost, and after completing his course there came to the United States, arriving in New York City during the month of August, 1887. For two years following he remained there, being engaged as a teacher, and on August 25, 1889, was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Laughlin at Brooklyn. In September of the same year he removed West to Delwich, Uniontown, Door county, Wisconsin, remaining there as pastor of Our Lady of the Snow until October 20, 1893, when he was transferred to the parish at Florence, Wisconsin, where he remained as pastor of the church of the Immaculate Conception until October 8, 1895, on which date he was appointed to the pastorate of St. Patrick's at Stiles.

(1) Now rector of the Catholic congregation at Coleman, Wisconsin.

Rev. Victor Bally.

The Rev. Victor Bally, present rector of St. Peter's, was born on the 17th of March 1850, in Colmar, Alsace. After having completed a commercial course in the Imperial Lyceum of Colmar, he took a course in Latin at the Scholasticat of the Fathers of the Holy Ghost in Brittany, France.

In 1868 he entered the French army and served as a volunteer until after the Franco-Prussian war, of which he stood all the hardships, after having spent one year previously in Algeria. In 1872 he resumed his philosophical studies, and five years later those in theology. Having some time previously met Father F. X. Leroy, then Vicar-General of the Diocese of Natchez, he was received as a student for that diocese, arriving at that place on May 22, 1877. On September 8, following, he was ordained priest by Bishop W. H. Elder, and from that day until September 20, 1896, worked as a missionary in Mississippi. Finally, owing to increased ill health, and the absolute necessity of seeking a cooler climate, he removed to the diocese of Green Bay, where for some months following he was associated with Father Fitzmaurice. Latterly he was appointed to his present charge, St. Mary's of the Seven Dolors Church, Stockbridge, Wis.

FOR a number of years prior to 1882, the Catholics residing at Stockbridge, Calumet County, Wisconsin, were attended as a mission from Chilton and Harrison, Wisconsin. On the 1st of November of that year, however, the congregation received its first resident pastor in the person of the St. Mary's of the Seven Dolors Church and Parsonage, Stockbridge, Wis.

Rev. C. A. Alten, who remained with them until January, 1888, when he was transferred to the pastorate at Stevens Point. In July, 1888, the Rev. John Hummel assumed the pastorate, maintaining the same until November, 1890. During his administration the little parish prospered to a considerable extent, enlarging the church, which was also generally improved. The next pastor was the Rev. F. Deuermeyer, who remained at Stockbridge from November, 1890, until March, 1894. Then the Rev. James Schemmer assumed the pastorate, he being succeeded in August, 1896, by the Rev. N. July. In addition to a very comfortable and commodious church, there is also a handsome pastoral residence now at Stockbridge. The congregation at the present time numbers about five hundred souls. In the way of Catholic organizations in this congregation, there are a Christian Mothers' Society, Young Ladies' Sodality, Altar Society and St. Joseph's Society.

Rev. N. July.

The little church dedicated to St. Elizabeth, which was established in the town of Stockbridge, Calumet County, nearly twenty years ago, is attended as a mission from St. Mary's every Sunday. The congregation consists of thirty-five families, all of whom are German. There is also a parochial school in connection with St. Elizabeth's parish, which is in charge of a lay teacher, and has an attendance of about thirty scholars.

The Rev. N. July was born in Green Bay, Wisconsin, May 4, 1847. He entered St. Francis Seminary near Milwaukee, when of a proper age, and after completing a thorough course in the necessary studies, was ordained to the priesthood on June 10, 1870. He was then appointed pastor of St. Francis Church in De Pere, Wisconsin, on the 29th of the same month, from which position he was transferred to St. Stephen's Church at Stevens Point, on August 15, 1874. Here he remained until January, 1888, when he was appointed to the charge of the congregation of St. Mary's at Rhinelander, Wisconsin, leaving there on August 15, 1896, to assume his present pastorate at Stockbridge.

St. Joseph's Church, Sturgeon Bay, Wis.

THE parish of St. Joseph at Sturgeon Bay, Door County, Wis., was established in 1865, and during the following year a church was built. The pastor who first ministered to the spiritual wants of the Catholics at this place was the Rev. George Adelaar. Then came successively the Revs. Engelbert Blume, G. J. Pellegrin and Alphonse Broens, the latter, during his pastorate, building a new church and school. The Rev. William Van Roosmalen, the present pastor, was appointed to that position in 1896. There are five hundred and twenty members in the congregation. The Holy Angels School, established at Sturgeon Bay, is in charge of Sisters of St. Dominic, from Racine, Wis., and has an enrollment of one hundred and six. There are represented in the congregation of St. Joseph the following Catholic societies: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, John Beyer, president; Peter Simon, secretary, and William Burhard, treasurer. Catholic Order of Foresters, T. Sampson, chief ranger; Peter Simon, secretary and William Burhard, treasurer.

St. Joseph's Church, Sturgeon Bay, Wis.

The Rev. William Francis Van Roosmalen, pastor of St. Joseph's, is a native of Holland, and was born February 13, 1857, in Hertogenbosch. He attended the schools of his native town and later the Gymnasium at Gemert, whence after two years he proceeded to Bruges, Belgium, where for four years he read in the classical course; the main object of his going there, however, was to become more familiar with the French language. On completing these studies he returned to Holland and from there, shortly after, emigrated to the United States. He arrived in New York December 1, 1881, and at once proceeded to Notre Dame, Indiana, where he studied philosophy under the Rev. Father Fitt, until June 16, 1883. During this time he also acted as professor of the Latin and French languages in the University. On September 7, 1883, he moved to Milwaukee, completing his course in theology at the Seminary of St. Francis. On June 24, 1886, he was ordained to the priesthood by the late Archbishop Michael Heiss, and was soon after appointed pastor of the Holy Cross Church in Mishicot, Manitowoc County, Wis., of which he remained in charge for three years and five months. On February 12, 1890, he was appointed by Bishop Katzer to St. Wilibrord's Church at Green Bay, where he remained until transferred to his present charge.

Church of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Tish Mills, Wis.

THE congregation of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary at Tish Mills, was established in 1860, the first pastor appointed to this congregation being the Rev. Joseph Maly. He was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers August Lang, A. Cipin, Joseph Kirpal, A. Vychodil, E. Kabat, F. Schimonek, F. Windish and the present incumbent, the Rev. Frank Kolar. A number of these pastors were non-residents of Tish Mills, as previous to the year 1893 the parish was a mission belonging to Carlton and attended from there. Since that time, however, it has become independent and self-supporting and has maintained its own pastorate. This congregation now consists of one hundred and forty-two families, one hundred and forty of whom are Bohemian and two German. There is associated with this congregation a St. Wenceslaus Society, which was organized in 1877 and is a branch of the Bohemian Roman Catholic Central Union of Wisconsin, of which the Rev. Frank Kolar is state chaplain. It has a membership of seventy-five. The officers of St. Wenceslaus Society are: Messrs. Marshalek, president; George Sladky, secretary, and F. W. Stangel, treasurer. There is also a Society of the Holy Rosary, organized in 1884 and with a present membership of fifty-two.

The Rev. Frank Kolar was born at Chrudim, Bohemia, in 1865. He acquired his collegiate education at his native city and later spent three years at the Theological Seminary at Prague. He then came to the United States, completing his studies for the priesthood at the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he was ordained on March 3, 1889. He was then assigned to the congregation at St. Paul, Minn., where he remained for five months, when he was requested to take temporary charge of St. John's Church at Milwaukee. Here he remained for two years. He then spent a short vacation in Europe and on his return was appointed to the pastorate at Slovan, Wisconsin, where he remained from October 15, 1891, until April 15, 1896, when he was appointed to his present pastorate at Tish Mills.

Church of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Tish Mills, Wis.

St. Mary's Church, Tomahawk, Wis.

ORIGINALLY a mission, St. Mary's congregation at Tomahawk, Wis., was attended from 1888 until November 1, 1889, by the Rev. Father July, at that time resident priest at Rhinelander. Services were held at stated intervals in a small church, erected in December, 1888. On May 23, 1892, the corner-stone of a new and more appropriate edifice was laid by the Rt. Rev. S. G. Messmer, of Green Bay. The site for the new church was donated to the parish by the Hon. W. H. Bradley, the only conditions being that suitable and substantial buildings should be erected thereon. The present church occupies an area of 50x115 feet and has a height, from floor to ceiling, of 32 feet. It is comfortably and substantially furnished throughout. In addition to the church, is the parsonage, a one and a half story frame building, 36x40 feet, with a one story addition 18x22 feet, which was built at the same time. The total value of the church property at Tomahawk is now estimated at $15,000, of which amount $4,000 remains unpaid. This remarkable work of improvement and rapid accumulation is largely, in fact, almost entirely owing to the devoted and persistent labors of St. Mary's present pastor, the Rev. Father Hoogstoel, who, in spite of ill health, has worked continuously and tirelessly for the advancement and good of his people.

St. Mary's Church and Parsonage, Tomahawk, Wis.

Rev. Chas. Hoogstoel.

The congregation at present consists of about one hundred families. Another successful undertaking of the church at this point was the erection of a hospital by Sisters of the Sorrowful Mother, who came there on October 1, 1893. With the aid of Father Hoogstoel and his devoted parishioners, this building was completed and dedicated to the Sacred Heart in the spring of 1894.

Of Catholic societies represented in this parish there is the Altar Society, with fifty members, of which Mrs. Leboeuf is treasurer and Mrs. Thomas Sayers, secretary. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, twenty-three members: Edward Houlehan, president; N. Leboeuf, vice-pres.; H. Venne, secretary, and Benjamin Gahan, treasurer. League of the Sacred Heart, one hundred and eighty-five members: promotors, Mrs. James McBride, Mrs. Kellaher, Mrs. H. A. Venne, Mrs. Dawsan, Mrs. McCarthy, Mrs. Talbot and Mrs. Doyle. Catholic Order of Foresters, St. Mary's Court, forty-five members: H. A. Venne, chief ranger; O. Hauer, secretary; M. Nick, treasurer. St. Joseph's Union, one hundred and five members: Mrs. H. A. Venne, treasurer. Confraternity of the Holy Face, twenty-five members, and Young Ladies' Sodality, fifteen members.

The Rev. Charles Hoogstoel was born in Flanders, Belgium, December 1, 1856. There he pursued his studies for the priesthood, taking courses in philosophy at the College of St. Troud, and theology in the American College at Louvain. He came to America in 1884, arriving at Green Bay in November of that year. His first appointment was to the mission at Stiles, Wisconsin, where he built a residence, enlarged the church and furnished the whole interior. He also built the church of St. Charles at Maple Valley, St. John's Church at Gillet, and St. John the Baptist's Church at Coleman, besides attending to out missions at Beaver, Ellis Junction, Wausaukee and Pembine.

Sacred Heart Church, Two Rivers, Wis.

THE Polish Church at Two Rivers, Wisconsin, which is dedicated to the Sacred Heart, was founded on May 10, 1889. The first pastor to attend the congregation of the Sacred Heart was the Rev. F. Luerycki, who was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers Chechocki, Bozniacki, Garus and the present rector, the Rev. Peter Podlecki. The congregation now consists of three hundred and seventy-three members. There is neither a school nor anything in the way of Catholic organizations connected with this congregation.

St. Luke's Church, Two Rivers, Wis.

THE organization of the parish of St. Luke occurred, to all intents and purposes, in 1851, when lots 1, 2 and 3, block 51, in the town of Two Rivers, were donated by Robert M. Eberts and wife, of Detroit, Michigan, to the Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni, of Milwaukee, for the erection of a church and parish house. The first resident missionary at Two Rivers was the Rev. Joseph Brunner, who remained from 1851 to 1853. He, however, was preceded by Father H. J. Nuyteord S. Crucis, who made occasional visits from Manitowoc Rapids, where he was then stationed. During Father Brunner's pastorate the first church, a small frame structure, was built. In 1856 the Rev. W. de Jonge came to Two Rivers, and from 1857 to 1858, Father Peter Ménard was pastor. Then followed the Rev. J. C. Perrodin, 1858 to 1860; Rev. S. Sanner, 1860 to 1861; Rev. M. Peiffer, 1861 to 1863; Rev. E. Van Steenwyk, 1863 to 1864; Rev. Bonaventura de Goey, O. S. F., 1864 to May 24, 1865. In the meantime also the Revs. N. and James Stehle made occasional visits. The Rev. N. Hens became pastor of St. Luke's in 1866, and was succeeded the following year by Father Jacob Gauché, who remained until 1870. Then Father J. J. Zawistowski assumed the charge, remaining until 1873, when Father Gauché again took up his residence there. From 1877 to 1879 the Rev. A. Bogacki officiated as rector, and from 1879 to 1882 the Rev. George J. Veith filled the position, and from the latter date until 1890 the Rev. Mathias Welbes had charge of the congregation. During his administration the school building erected in 1877 was enlarged. From 1891 to 1893 the Rev. Joseph A. Geissler was pastor. During this period a new church was built, decorated and furnished at a cost of $25,000. The next incumbent, and successor to Father Geissler, was the Rev. John Q. Drees, who maintained the pastorate from January 20, 1893, until the time of his death, on March 16, 1897. Among other improvements made by Father Drees is a handsome and convenient parsonage erected at a cost of over $4,000. The congregation of St. Luke numbers three hundred and seventy families, of which two hundred and thirty are German, ninety French, nineteen Bohemian, twenty Polish and six Irish. There are some fifteen hundred souls in all. The parochial school is graded, having four departments and a kindergarten, and has an average attendance of two hundred and seventy-five children, who are in charge of five Sisters of St. Agnes, of Fond du Lac. Of Catholic organizations in the parish there are: St. Joseph's Society, founded in 1872, membership, sixty; John Pulger, president; John Weber, secretary; Peter Gagnon, treasurer. Family Protective Society: Frank Moseler, president; Peter Muller, secretary; Anton Samz, treasurer. Catholic Knights, eighty-two members: Peter Gagnon, president; Albert Pilon, secretary; John Schmitt, treasurer. St. Peter's Society: Michael Lafond, treasurer. Altar Society and Sodality for Young Ladies.

St. Luke's Church, Two Rivers, Wis.

Rev. Jos. A. Geissler.

Father Drees was born July 6, 1853, in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, where he was also educated and finally ordained on August 24, 1876. Having worked in the ministry in the diocese of Luxemburg for seven years, he came to America and Green Bay, where he was appointed pastor at Humboldt, Brown County, remaining there for five months. He next went to Luxemburg, Kewaunee County. While there he effected many notable improvements, among them being the erection of three new and handsome altars, an addition to the school building and a Sisters' house, besides paying off all debts accumulated on the new church. Father Drees left Luxemburg for the pastorate at Two Rivers in January, 1893. Here, too, he accomplished much in the way of general improvements. In 1895 a new parsonage was built under his direction, and the old church was remodeled and arranged as a hall which is used for kindergarten purposes as well as for meetings and reunions of the numerous Catholic societies to which the members of the congregation belong. Regretted by all who knew him, his life's work well and faithfully accomplished, all that remains of Father Drees lies buried in the cemetery at Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Rev. John Drees.
(DECEASED.)

The pastor of this progressive congregation, the Rev. Joseph Augustine Geissler, was born in Patterson, N. J., April 4, 1854. At this place he also received his earlier education, after which, in 1870, he proceeded to Belgium, where he took the classical and theological courses completing his studies at Louvain, in the American College, in 1879. He was ordained at Mechlin in the same year, and returning at once to his native town, commenced his pastoral duties in 1881. Having the permission of his Ordinary, the Rt. Rev. W. Wigger, Bishop of Newark, N. J., he proceeded to the diocese of Green Bay, taking charge of the parish of Freedom, Outagamie County, Wisconsin, where he remained for six months. On the death of the priest at Portage he was appointed to that charge. A year later he accepted the pastorate of St. John's at Green Bay, remaining for two years and a half. He next was engaged in establishing two parishes out of four missions in Portage County, and was for four years and a half stationed at Stockton, where he built the parsonage, and a church in another mission named Lanark. He then removed to Two Rivers, Manitowoc County, where during a residence of less than two years he built St. Luke's Church, costing $24,000. From Two Rivers Father Geissler was appointed to the rectorate at South Kaukauna, from which after four years' labor he was reappointed rector of St. Luke's Church at Two Rivers, Wisconsin, assuming charge on January 12, 1897.

St. Mary's Church, Wausau, Wis.

THE origin of St. Mary's congregation at Wausau reaches back as far as the year 1851, at which period the spiritual wants of Catholics residing in that locality were first administered to by visiting priests. At the time mentioned there were some fifteen Catholic families living in and around Wausau, all of whom had been long debarred the privileges of spiritual aid. But though far on the borders of what was then recognized as the civilized West, and consequently remote from everything pertaining to the comfort and safety afforded by the larger settlements, the missionary fathers, though beset with hardships and privation, sought out this distant spot, bearing many a draught of spiritual consolation with them, thus adding one more to the almost innumerable list of works wrought by them in behalf of Christian charity.

First among these devoted Fathers came the Rev. L. Dale, who visited Wausau in the fall of 1851, at which time he held divine service in the house of W. D. McIndoe. Again in 1852-3 Father F. X. Etschmann, of Madison, made a couple of visits to Wausau, after which, however, the people were unattended until October, 1857, when the Rev. James Stehle, then resident pastor at Stevens Point, celebrated Mass in C. Single's hall, every second month. He was succeeded, in 1858, by his brother, Father N. Stehle, who also conducted services at similar periods in W. D. McIndoe's storehouse until the summer of 1860, when the Rev. J. Polack took charge of the mission. During the incumbency of Father Polack an effort was made to secure permanent quarters, resulting in the purchase of a church site, on July 20, 1861. The Rev. G. Lux succeeded to the pastorate in the fall of 1863, but remained only a short time, the Rev. M. Schwebach assuming the duties of visiting pastor the following year. Services now became more frequent, being held in the engine house once every month. In 1866 the mission was placed in charge of the Rev. Ch. Hengen, at that time resident priest at Marathon City. He remained until 1869, holding regular monthly services during that period in the house of L.

St. Mary's Church, Wausau, Wis.

Genet. It was during Father Hengen's pastorate that the congregation, now increased to thirty families, took steps towards the erection of a church, the corner-stone of which was laid in July, 1867. During October, 1869, Father John Zawistowski became the first resident priest of St. Mary's parish, which, however, once more became a mission of Stevens Point in February of the following year. The charge was then visited by the Rev. L. Cornelis, who celebrated Mass for the first time in the new church in March, 1871. In January, 1872, the Rev. L. Spitzlberger of Marathon City commenced holding regular monthly services, continuing to do so until 1874, when on the petition of the congregation, now increased to forty families, a resident pastor was again given to the parish, the Rev. W. Gundelack assuming the duties as such in August of that year. Again the effort proved a failure, although Father Gundelack remained long enough to complete the parsonage which had already been begun by his predecessor. Once more the parish became a mission of Stevens Point, being visited occasionally from that place by the Rev. N. July until March 22, 1875, when the Rev. Theodore Richard assumed the resident pastorate. From this time the affairs of the parish became more prosperous, many noticeable improvements and additions being made to the church property. Among other things, land was bought for a cemetery, a thousand pound bell was blessed by the Rt. Rev. Krautbauer in honor of St. Joseph, on August 27, 1876, and in 1883 the erection of a school house was begun, completed and the building blessed. On September 14, 1890, the corner-stone for a new church was laid by the Rt. Rev. F. X. Katzer, and July 17, 1892, the same was blessed by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer. The new church is a grand structure, Gothic in style and of solid brick. It has a seating capacity of six hundred, and cost in the neighborhood of $25,000. Father Richard left Wausau on August 15, 1894, and was succeeded by the present pastor, the Rev. Peter L. Gasper. During his residence at Wausau Father Gasper has accomplished much towards furthering the interests and condition of the parish. It was through his energetic efforts that a Christian Mothers' Confraternity was founded, the same being organized and one hundred and fifty mothers invested with their medals by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer on December 8, 1894. He also devised means by which an indebtedness of $12,000, drawing 6 per cent. interest, was liquidated, 4 per cent. bonds being issued by the congregation in lieu thereof. The congregation now consists of some three hundred and fifty families, and the parochial school, established November 4, 1883, has an enrollment of three hundred scholars.

Of Catholic societies represented in this parish there are five, each of which has a large and active membership. They are as follows: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, organized October 5, 1885; eighty-nine members; Martin Hahn, president; Charles Frydeslund, vice-president; Joseph Muckerheide, secretary; Joseph Ripezinske, treasurer; trustees, Emil Meyer, Henry Goebel and Chas. Weisbrod. St. Joseph's Sick Relief Society, organized February 8, 1891; forty members; Henry Goebel, president; Joseph Boss, vice-president; Emil Meyer, secretary; Fred M. Deutsch, financial secretary; John Theisen, treasurer; Joseph Ripczinske, Wenzel Hirsch and Raphael Dalnodar, trustees. Catholic Foresters, organized April 26, 1890; one hundred members; Anthony Fox, chief ranger; Isaias Lacerte, vice-chief ranger; W. J. Farrell, secretary; Charles Mayer, financial secretary, and George Jalley, treasurer. Christian Mothers' Confraternity, organized December 8, 1894; one hundred and fifty members; Mrs. B. Conlin, president; Mrs. Henry Goebel, secretary, and Mrs. George Jalley, treasurer. Sacret Heart League, membership six hundred.

The Rev. Peter L. Gasper, pastor of the Immaculate Conception of Wausau, Marathon County, Wis., is a native of Prussia, born May 16, 1850, in Schoenecken, Kreis Pruem, Reg. Bez. Treves, a son of Peter and Catherine (Lochen) Gasper, also natives of Prussia. They were the parents of six children, namely: Henry, still living in Prussia; Margaret, wife of Michael Linden of Chicago; Peter L., and three deceased. The father, who was a locksmith by trade, died in 1851, the mother in 1859.

Rev. Peter L. Gasper.

The subject of this sketch received his elementary education at the parochial schools of his native land, afterward learning the trade of locksmith with his elder brothers. In 1869 he came to the United States and for about a year worked at his trade at Pittsburg, Pa., at the end of which time he entered St. Vincent's college, Westmoreland County, Pa., where he commenced studying for the priesthood. In that institution he remained until 1878, at which time he went to St. Francis Seminary near Milwaukee, Wis., where he completed his studies and was ordained priest in 1880 by the late Rt. Rev. Bishop Heiss. Father Gasper's first charge was as assistant priest in the cathedral of Green Bay, Wis., where he remained seven months, then for a time was assistant priest to Rev. Father Gaelweiller at Chilton, Calumet County, after which he was transferred to West Brothertown, same county, remaining there two years, during which time he erected a new church building. In 1893 he was again transferred, this time to Lebanon township, Waupaca County, his stay there covering six years, during which time he attended as well to the spiritual welfare of the Catholics of Northport, Manawa and Weyauwega, also making numerous improvements in the church edifices in those localities. In 1889 he was transferred to New London, where he erected the handsome and commodious church of the Most Precious Blood, the corner-stone of which was laid June 24, 1890, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Katzer of Green Bay, and consecrated to the worship of God, February 12, 1891. It is a large and imposing edifice of solid brick, 126 x 52 feet, with a bell tower 140 feet high, and having a seating capacity for six hundred people. During his administration in New London, Father Gasper also erected a fine church at Hortonville, the building of which was commenced in 1893, and dedicated with imposing ceremonies by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer, June 18, 1893. In August, 1894, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer, of Green Bay, transferred him to the city of Wausau, Marathon County, Wis., appointing him rector of St. Mary's Church in that city, the congregation of which numbered some three hundred and fifty families. There was also a large parochial school connected with St. Mary's which was conducted by six Sisters of the Order of Notre Dame, of Milwaukee, and had a regular attendance of about three hundred scholars. In January, 1895, Father Gasper was also appointed by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Messmer of Green Bay dean for the counties of Lincoln, Marathon, Portage and Wood, as far as they are situated within the limits of the diocese of Green Bay. As rector of St. Mary's congregation he has an extensive and important field to cover, which, however, will prosper if the Lord favors him in the future as He has in the past.

St. Michael's Church, Wausau, Wis.

THE Polish Catholics forming the congregation of St. Michael's at Wausau, Marathon County, Wisconsin, at one time were members of St. Mary's, also of that city. In September, 1887, however, with the approval of the Right Rev. Bishop Katzer, Father L. Pescinski of Hull, Portage County, Wisconsin, organized a Polish parish at Wausau. From that time the congregation was attended part of the time by Father Pescinski and sometimes by the Rev. A. Gara of Poniatowski. In 1888 these people began the erection of a church, occupying the basement as soon as completed for divine services, which were held under the direction of the Rev. Victor Lebecki. The church, a substantial frame building, was finished and dedicated by Bishop Katzer. The first pastor was the Rev. Constantine Marszatowicz, who remained for two months, when he was compelled to resign. Soon after the Rev. Adelbert Pelezav took charge of the congregation, remaining at Wausau from August, 1890, until the beginning of 1891, when he died, and according to his last wishes, was buried in the German Catholic cemetery at that place. His successor was the Rev. V. Lebecki, who remained until May, 1892. After three months' vacancy the congregation again received a pastor in the person of the Rev. L. Garus, who assumed the pastorate on August 18, 1892. He resigned on April 5, 1894, and was succeeded after a four months' vacancy by the Rev. Theophil Malkowski. On December 26, 1894, St. Stephen's day, St. Michael's Church was totally destroyed by fire. This was a severe blow to the congregation, the debts on the old building having not as yet been fully paid. For a short time, then, being unable to at once begin the erection of a new building, the Polish Catholics at Wausau attended services at St. Mary's, Father Malkowski making a tour of the entire surrounding country during that time with the view to gaining assistance towards the erection of the new church. As a result of his efforts in this direction a new brick-veneered structure was erected on the site of the former building and was dedicated on the third of October, 1895, by Bishop Messmer. The dimensions of this structure are 100x45 feet, and its total cost, complete, was $6,134.68. The Rev. L. Garus, the present incumbent of St. Michael's, took charge of the parish on February 4, 1897. The congregation at the present time consists of sixty-five families or about four hundred and fifty souls. There is but one Catholic organization in this parish, that being the Holy Rosary Confraternity.

St. Michael's Church, Wausau, Wis.

The Rev. Leo. Garus, present rector of St. Michael's, was born on the 15th of November, 1833, at Beuthen, Upper Silesia in the District of Oppeln, kingdom of Prussia. Having obtained a rudimentary education at the parochial schools of his native place he took a classical course in the Gymnasium of Gleiwitz and subsequently read philosophy and theology at Paris, under the personal supervision and direction of the Lazarist Fathers, and was ordained to the priesthood in that city on July 26, 1866. He came to America January 1, 1886, and since August 18 of that year has worked as priest in the Diocese of Green Bay.

Rev. Leo. Garus.

The little station at Norrie, Marathon County, was regularly attended by the pastor from Aniwa until October 25, 1897, when it was transferred to the charge of the Catholic pastor at Wausau.

St. Augustine's Church, Wausaukee, Wis.

THIS congregation was established August 22, 1889, by the Rev. J. A. Selbach, who soon after his arrival built a small frame church, 32x60 feet, which was dedicated in the following year under the patronage of St. Augustine. Father Selbach ministered at Wausaukee for two years after which the mission was attended for a short period by the Rev. Charles Hoogstoel, at that time resident priest at Stiles. From 1892 until October 15, 1895, Father P. Pele, of Coleman, had charge of the congregation, and subsequently the Rev. P. S. Dagnault, present resident pastor, assumed the duties. The church is now incorporated, the present trustees being Martin

St. Augustine's Church, Wausaukee, Wis.

McDonough and Amest Christ. The congregation consists of one hundred and twenty-five families. In connection with this church there is an Altar Society, of which Mrs. John Hoff is president, and Mrs. C. Clark secretary, and a Guard of Honor Society, with Mrs. T. Pluff as president and Mrs. H. Shallow, secretary and treasurer.

The mission of St. Elizabeth at Amberg, Marinette County, Wisconsin, consists of fifteen Irish and seven Belgian families, who are attended by the resident pastor from Wausaukee, was established in 1892. The services at this mission are held regularly once each month.

Two stations are also attended by the pastor from Wausaukee, those at Dunbar and Ellis Junction. At the former place, there are twenty-three Catholic families, sixteen of whom are French and seven Irish. The name of the town at Ellis Junction is Crivitz, where a church 40x80 is shortly to be built. The congregation here consists now of fifty-five families, eight of whom are Irish, five German, seven French and thirty-five Polish. A large addition has lately been made to the Polish contingent at Crivitz, many of whom have buildings in the course of erection on land purchased by them.

Rev. P. S. Dagnault.

The Rev. P. S. Dagnault, present pastor of St. Augustine's congregation, is a native of St. Francis parish, Montmagny County, Canada, Province of Quebec. He was ordained by the Rt. Rev. F. L. Lafleche, present Bishop of Three Rivers, Canada. Shortly after ordination he came to the United States where he has for the last twenty-three years successfully exercised his ministry in the Dioceses of Newark, New Jersey, St. Paul, Minnesota, Denver, Colorado, and Green Bay, Wisconsin.

St. Michael's Church, Whitelaw, Wis.

THE Catholic parish at Whitelaw, Manitowoc County, Wisconsin, was established in the spring of 1872. At this time the people forming the congregation of St. Michael's had, for the purpose of so doing, withdrawn from the church of the Immaculate Conception, at Clark's Mills. At this particular time the Clark's Mills people were attended as a congregation by the Rev. Andrew Seubert, resident pastor at Maple Grove. In the month of November, 1873, the church, which had been in course of erection during the summer months, was completed. This building was dedicated to St. Michael on February 2, 1874, by the Very Rev. Father Daems, Administrator of the Diocese. Not until 1876 was any regular service held in this church, the only attendance available being that offered, at regular intervals, by pastors located in adjacent parishes. In 1876 a regular pastor was appointed to the congregation in the person of the Rev. Godfrey Noever, for some time previous stationed at Rapids, Wisconsin, the congregation at which place has been recently divided among those of neighboring churches. The next pastor of St. Michael's was the Rev. J. Rhode, who, in 1881, attended it as a mission from Clark's Mills. In 1883 he took up his abode in Whitelaw, becoming at that time first resident pastor of the parish. This really pleasing condition of affairs was entirely owing to the earnestness and zealousness exhibited by the congregation, which has thus become strong enough to be independent, and maintain its own resident pastor. On August 20, 1896, the Rev. Joseph Hemmer was appointed to the charge.

St. Michael's Church, Whitelaw, Wis.

The congregation of St. Michael's now consists of ninety-one families. In the way of Catholic organizations in this parish there is a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, established July 11, 1894, with a present membership of twenty-eight. The officers of this organization are: Frank Baum, president; Michael Wellner, secretary, and George Whitmann, treasurer. There are, also, three Sodalities, one for married ladies, with fifty-nine members, one for boys, with seven, and one for girls, with thirty-nine members.

A small parochial school was first established at Whitelaw during the pastorate of Father Rhode, in the year 1881. For five years following, this school was taught by lay teachers, but after that time it was placed in charge of Sisters of St. Francis, from Silver Lake Convent. The attendance at this school, which is supported by a graduate family tax, has gradually increased, the average number of scholars now being about sixty-five.

Rev. Jos. Mack.

There has also recently been organized St. Stephen's D. R. K. Unterstuetzungs-Verein, with a membership of fifty men; St. Anna's Christian Mothers' Society, and Young Ladies' Altar Society. The above societies have been united to the Association of Perpetual Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament.

The present pastor, the Rev. Joseph Mack, is a native of Württemberg, Germany. He came to America in 1881, and was ordained December 4, 1885. He was transferred from Francis Creek to Whitelaw, Wisconsin, on December 15, 1897.

St. Paul's Church, Wrightstown, Wis.

THE first frame mission church was built at Wrightstown, Brown County, Wisconsin, in in 1868, the Revs. A. Verberk and Elzear De Wilt, then pastors of Little Chute, visiting the mission, the latter continuing to do so until February, 1872, when the Rev. C. De Louw became the resident pastor. He remained until June, 1873, when Father L. Adelaar took charge of the parish. He left in July, 1874. Father C. De Louw came again and remained at Wrightstown until October, 1875, the next pastor being the Rev. A. Verberk, who came during December of the same year. For the month of March, 1876, Father A. Buschle was pastor, being succeeded in April by the Rev. Elzear De Wilt. Finding the congregation small and of limited means, this energetic and zealous priest applied for the incorporation of the parish and erection of a parsonage. He also, in 1886, applied his personal means towards the erection of a brick church, which when completed was regarded as a handsome and most substantial structure. Under Father De Wilt's administration, a parochial school was established in June of the same year. This is, as it always has been, in charge of Sisters of St. Dominic from Racine, for whom a comfortable and substantial brick residence was built in 1889. There are at present over a thousand members in the congregation of St. Paul's, composed of French, Germans, Irish, Belgians and Hollanders. The school enrollment numbers one hundred and forty. The Catholic organizations connected with St. Paul's are as follows: Altar Society, officers, Mmes. Hughes Freeman, J. Kettenhofen and G. McCabe; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Catholic Order of Foresters and Young Ladies' Sodality, Miss Mary Mueller being president of the latter.

St. Paul's Church, Wrightstown, Wis.

The Rev. Elzear De Wilt was born at Uden, North Brabant, in the Netherlands, July 8, 1827. He obtained his earlier education at the College of Uden, where he remained from the age of 12 until 18 years of age. The next three years were spent with the Canons of the Holy Cross, also at Uden. He then entered the Franciscan Convent at Bruges, Belgium, and was ordained priest at Tournay, in the spring of 1852. He then for eight years taught philosophy and theology in the convents of his native land, and for a similar period conducted missions throughout Belgium, Holland and France. He was then for two years pastor of a church at Flint, in Wales, and afterwards resided for a period in Antwerp and Brussels. In 1868 he came to America and at once joined the Diocese of Green Bay, which had but just been erected. He then served as pastor of the Duck Creek Congregation for one year, at Little Chute for five years, Montello for two years and has been resident pastor of St. Paul's at Wrightstown for the past twenty years.

Rev. Elzear De Wilt.

History of the Catholic Church in Wisconsin.

PART VII.

The Diocese of La Crosse and City of La Crosse.

CHAPTER I.

Papal Brief for the Erection of the See of La Crosse. Pope Pius XIV.

BE it known to Future Times: 1. The office of the Supreme Apostlate bestowed by God on our Humble person demands that We zealously work for what ever will serve the Catholic cause and eternal salvation of souls. As soon, therefore, as We understand that the erection of new dioceses all over the Catholic world will benefit the spiritual governments and security of the faithful, Our full intention is given to what We deem the most opportune and wholesome means towards establishing new Episcopal Sees. Now, the Holy Fathers assembled at the Second Plenary Council of the United States of North America, held in Baltimore during the month of October, 1866, have informed Us that the interests of the Catholic Religion would be greatly furthered by the erection of a new Episcopal See in the city of La Crosse. Having laid the matter before Our venerable brothers, the Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church belonging to the Congregation for the Propagation of Faith, and having seriously considered it with them, We have decided to found, without further delay, the proposed new See.

2. Now, therefore, by the advice of the aforesaid Cardinals and in the fullness of Our Apostolic authority, do We erect and establish, by these letters, a new Episcopal See in the city of La Crosse, to be governed by its own Bishop. The diocese of this See, henceforth to be called La Crosse, shall be limited in the East by the Wisconsin River, in the West by the Mississippi, in the South by the Wisconsin, where it empties into the Mississippi, and in the North by Lake Superior and the part of Michigan stretching from Lake Superior to Lake Kahakihaken.[1] Further, We grant and bestow upon said Church of La Crosse all the honors, rights, privileges which other Episcopal Sees have and enjoy.

3. Such is Our will and command. We also decree that these, Our present letters, shall forever be in force, valid and effective, and obtain their full and entire effects, etc.[2]

Given at St. Peter's in Rome, under the Fisherman's ring,[3] the 3d day of March, 1868, in the 22d year of Our Pontificate.

1. This lake is at present called Lac Vieux Desert, and is located in the northeast corner of Vilas County, Wisconsin, near State Line village.

(2) Here follows a series of legal clauses usual on all such pontifical documents.

3. Referring to the seal attached, which represents St. Peter fishing on a lake.

Diocese of La Crosse.

IN 1868 Pope Pius IX. of blessed memory erected the Diocese of La Crosse, by document dated March 3d of that year. The first Bishop appointed to the new See was the Right Rev. Michael Heiss, who was consecrated on September 6, 1868, and solemnly installed on the 29th of the same month. When Bishop Heiss arrived at La Crosse, he found a field rich in possibilities, yet in the crude and uncultivated condition towards which so vast a territory must necessarily tend when far from the guiding and controlling influence of a central power. Of Catholics there were many and of churches not a few, but the former, scattered far and near, were from sheer lack of concentrated effort made unable to obtain to a full extent those religious privileges which could under other and more favorable circumstances have been easily obtained. But the priests who had attended to the spiritual wants of the various communities and settlements throughout that region had been untiringly zealous in the cause of the religion that they preached, leaving many marked evidences of the sincerity as well as the success of their labors in the ardent and earnest desire of the settlers for better and more permanent ecclesiastical advantages. In this condition, then, anxious for the preferment of that faith in which from earliest youth their moral as well as spiritual instincts had been trained; desirous above all things for the building up and extending of these principles so firmly and irrevocably inculcated, but wanting sadly in methods by means of which to bring about this result, these people waited anxiously for the time when, with an episcopacy of their own, they might look forward to, aye, feel assured of a full and lasting fruition of their most cherished hopes.

Bishop Kilian Caspar Flasch.

At the time of its erection, as now, the Diocese of La Crosse, which is, geographically speaking, the largest in Wisconsin, comprised that portion of territory which lies north and west of the Wisconsin River. The limits of the Diocese more particularly described are as follows: North—Lake Superior and part of the state of Michigan which is between that lake and Lake Kattakittaken; South—Wisconsin River, Mississippi River. East—The Wisconsin River, commencing at Lake Kattakittaken. West—The Mississippi River and State of Minnesota. This comprises in all an area of 2,800 square miles.

Upon his arrival at La Crosse, Bishop Heiss found but one Catholic Church in the whole city, that being a moderate-sized, ordinarily constructed frame building in which a congregation of five different nationalities and numerically far in excess of its seating capacity was compelled to worship. This was St. Mary's. He also discovered that there were over a thousand Catholic Indians located in the northern part of the Diocese needing the ministrations of priests familiar with the Chippewa dialect, and to this end a number of Franciscan fathers were called upon to attend Missions in that section. In all probability, no man could have been found with better qualifications for the development and advancement of the interests of the Catholic Church in this fertile and promising territory than Bishop Heiss, whose great love for the work, strength of purpose and many other eminent personal qualifications, made him an altogether desirable acquisition to the devoted and tireless spirits who had made this the field of their endeavor for years preceding. During the twelve years in which Bishop Heiss administered the Diocese of La Crosse, the strengthening and extension of spiritual influences was markedly apparent, while the general financial condition of the Diocese was also much improved. This most satisfactory condition of affairs may readily be gleaned from the fact that during the period referred to—that is, from 1869 to 1881—the number of officiating priests in the Diocese was increased from 15 to 59, churches from 47 to 101, and parish schools from 2 to 24. Among the more prominent improvements made, which are directly traceable to the energy, zeal and tireless devotion of Bishop Heiss, were the establishment of the Franciscan Sisters at La Crosse and the erection of the St. Rose de Viterbo's Convent; St. Joseph's Cathedral Church; St. Wenceslaus Church; St. Michael's Orphan Asylum and the Bishop's residence with adjacent public oratory, on the corner of South Eleventh and Ferry Streets. Nor was this work of progress by any means confined to the episcopal city of La Crosse, for we find that during the same period the Sacred Heart of Jesus

Bishop James Schwebach.

Bishop's Residence, La Crosse, Wis.

College was started by the Jesuit Fathers of the German Mission, at Prairie du Chien, where also St. Mary's Institute was erected and placed in charge of School Sisters of Notre Dame from Milwaukee. The parochial school system also attained a rapid and healthy growth during this administration, a majority of the schools established being conducted by Franciscan Sisters from the La Crosse Convent, and the School Sisters of Notre Dame, Milwaukee. It was also during the residence of Bishop Heiss at La Crosse, that the first Diocesan Synod was held in the Sacred Heart College at Prairie du Chien, on July 25-26, 1871.

After the Bishop's promotion to the Archbishopric of Milwaukee, a successor was consecrated in the person of the Right Rev. Kilian Caspar Flasch, who assumed the duties of the Episcopate on August 24, 1881. He died on August 3, 1891, after a long and painful illness, universally regretted. The remains of this saintly prelate lie in a vault beneath the altar of the new Catholic Cemetery Chapel, which was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary of the Seven Dolors, on November 1, 1891.

Bishop Flasch was born at Retzstadt, Bavaria, in the Diocese of Wuerzburg, on July 9, 1831, and came to America with his parents in 1847. Soon after arriving he entered the College at Notre Dame, Indiana, which he left to become a student in the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, at its opening in 1856. After pursuing a solid course of divinity studies in that celebrated institution, he was ordained to the priesthood on December 16, 1859, and at once assigned to Mission work. His first appointment was to Laketown, where he remained for ten months, being then recalled to St. Francis, where he became master of discipline and professor, which office he filled until failing health compelled him to resign. After a brief rest he was again assigned to active duty in the ministry, being placed in charge of St. Mary's congregation at Elm Grove. In 1875 he again returned to St. Francis to fill the chair of moral theology, and in 1879 succeeded the Very Rev. Father Wapelhorst as rector of the Seminary. When Bishop Heiss was made Coadjutor of Milwaukee, this learned and experienced priest was elected to the Bishopric of La Crosse, being consecrated by his predecessor.

Rev. John N. Rapp, Bishop's Secretary.

Under the direction of Bishop Flasch the interests of the Church and its adherents expanded and grew to an altogether satisfactory degree. A man of great wisdom and prudence, he administered the duties of his office with a deliberate precision which brooked neither hesitancy nor delay. Thus, year by year, the prosperity of the Church became more satisfactorily evident in the increased number of priests, churches, schools and Missions accumulated in the Diocese. Of the many notable as well as valuable improvements made in church property during the period extending from 1881 to 1891, we find that in La Crosse the Church of the Holy Cross, St. Nicholas Church, St. James Church, St. Francis Hospital and St. Ann's Orphan Asylum were built. Besides these there were erected in different parts of the Diocese seven new Catholic Hospitals, all of which were placed in charge of Sisters belonging to one or another of the numerous religious Orders now represented or established in the State. Altogether there were in the Diocese in 1891 one hundred and two priests, nineteen of whom were regular and eighty-three secular, one hundred and sixty-two churches and sixty parochial schools.

In 1883 Bishop Flasch paid his official visit "ad limina" to Rome, where he remained during the entire winter. In November of the following year he attended the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore. On August 24-25, 1887, he presided at the Second Diocesan Synod, for the Diocese of La Crosse, which was held at the Sacred Heart College of the Jesuit Fathers in Prairie du Chien, Wis. It was at this place that the Jesuits opened the Sacred Heart Novitiate and Scholasticate during the following year. On November 4, 1889, Bishop Flasch consecrated St. Joseph's Cathedral Church and its principal "altare fixum." The second Catholic State Convention was held in the city of La Crosse May 19-21, 1891. As regards the regular clergy in the Diocese many new priests were received at that time, so that, in addition to the Jesuit and Franciscan Fathers already established, there were now others of the Order of the Holy Ghost from Pittsburg, Pa., who were placed in charge of Notre Dame parish, at Chippewa Falls, and some Mission stations.

After the death of Bishop Flasch, the very Rev. James Schwebach, who had held the position of Vicar-General of the Diocese of La Crosse since 1882, was made Administrator, continuing as such until February 25, 1892, at which time he was consecrated third Bishop of the Diocese. The official papers appointing him to that position were signed by the late Cardinal Simeoni at Rome November 30, 1891. Shortly after the Pontifical document of His Holiness Pope Leo XIII., signed by Cardinal Ledochowski, and dated December 14, 1891, was received. The consecration took place at St. Joseph's Cathedral, La Crosse, on the Feast of the Holy Apostle Mathias, the Most Rev. Archbishop Frederic Xavier Katzer, D. D., of Milwaukee, acting as consecrator.

The Right Rev. James Schwebach was born at Platen, parish of Bettborn, Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, August 15, 1847, where he obtained his elementary education. There he had private teachers for two years. He next entered the College at Diekirch, came to America in the spring of 1864, and at once entered the famous Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he completed a five years' course in philosophy and theology, his two predecessors in the See of La Crosse being among his professors. Being still too young for ordination, he was called by Bishop Heiss to La Crosse, where he was ordained a deacon on July 24, 1869. He then officiated in St. Mary's Church in that city, preaching in English, German and French, and instructing the school children in the Christian doctrine. On June 16, 1870, the Feast of "Corpus Christi," he was ordained to the priesthood, for the diocese of La Crosse, by the Right Rev. T. L. Grace, at St. Paul, Minn. Soon after his ordination, he was appointed by Bishop Heiss to the rectorship of St. Mary's. Here he labored well and faithfully for nearly a quarter of a century, when he was raised to the Episcopate. During his pastorate at St. Mary's, Bishop Schwebach had, besides attending to the spiritual wants of a large congregation, found time to arrange for and superintend the erection of a new church, a parochial school building and a pastoral residence. He also built the church of St. James at North La Crosse. In 1894 Bishop Schwebach paid a visit to

Catholic Cemetery Chapel, La Crosse, Wis.

His Holiness the Pope, being absent from April 1 until August 3 of that year. During that period the Very Rev. Vicar-General Paul Geyer, of Chippewa Falls, was Acting Administrator of the Diocese. The Catholic population of the Diocese of La Crosse at present amounts to nearly, if not fully, 80,000 souls, which is about 10,000 more than were reported in 1891. The present condition of the diocese as to the number of clergy, churches, schools, etc., is as follows:

La Crosse Diocese: Bishop, one; secular priests, one hundred and one; priests of religious orders, twenty-three; total, one hundred and twenty-four; ecclesiastical students, twelve; churches in the city of La Crosse, seven; churches with resident priests, ninety-four; missions with churches, one hundred and sixteen; stations, thirty-three; chapels, twenty-five; seminary of religious order, one; academies for young ladies, two; pupils, one hundred and fifty-one; high schools, six; parishes with parochial schools, sixty-seven; pupils, nine thousand seven hundred and forty-four; orphan asylums, two; orphans, one hundred and eighty-one; industrial school, one; inmates, thirty-one; total of young people under Catholic care, nine thousand eight hundred and forty-one; hospitals, eight; patients during the year, two thousand eight hundred and fifty-one; Catholic population (including twenty-one hundred Indians), eighty thousand one hundred.

St. Joseph's Cathedral, La Crosse, Wis.

NEARLY half a century of time has elapsed since that portion of the State which now marks Wisconsin's western border line first echoed to the teachings of the Word. It was during the year 1855 that the Rev. Father Tappert first entered La Crosse, a struggling little settlement located barely within the pale of civilization, and where dangers the most imminent were the daily companions of those whose hardihood, as well as desire for accumulation, had brought them there. The place had been settled but a few years when Father Tappert, in the interests of that sacred cause which ever marches side by side with Progress and with Peace took up his residence among them. And here for some considerable period he labored, sowing the seed from which was to spring forth an abundant harvest of churchly triumphs. Here, too, in the year of his arrival did he hold the first services in a small and unpretentious building. The parish of La Crosse was established in April, 1863, and the corner-stone of the present church was laid in 1869.

The great work thus started and established by Father Tappert was carried on towards its final and altogether successful issue by Fathers F. X. Etschmann and C. J. Schraudenbach, who, for a considerable period, worked earnestly and zealously in the cause. These in turn were followed by Fathers Marco, Kampschroer, Rev. G. Sluyter.

F. X. Pfaller and the Benedictine Fathers, L. Lay, P. Geyer and Jos. B. Wiedmann, who did valiant service in strengthening and promoting the work.

St. Joseph's Cathedral School, La Crosse, Wis.

Of the efforts thus involved, those of the Rev. Kampschroer were particularly efficacious. He came to La Crosse in 1869, and it was through his unbounded enterprise that the structure now known as St. Joseph's

St. Joseph's Cathedral, La Crosse, Wis.

Church was erected. Another equally noted in his endeavors to further the interests of religion was Father J. B. Wiedmann, who built the tower on this church in 1883. The year following he raised sufficient funds to purchase a tower clock and bells, as well as to build a parochial school.

In 1887 owing to its rapid increase the congregation was divided, those living in North La Crosse forming St. John's parish, whilst those residing to the south formed that of Trinity. The parochial school at La Crosse, known as St. Joseph's, is under the management of the Franciscan Sisters and has a regular attendance of two hundred and seventy-five pupils.

Of Catholic societies in St. Joseph's parish the following can be mentioned: St. Joseph's Society, of which J. Fries is president, Charles Fries, secretary, and Wm. Imhoff, treasurer; St. Boniface Society, E. Hackner, president, J. J. Roth, secretary, and Henry Ritter, treasurer; Catholic Knights, J. Malin, president, B. Volz, secretary, and Christ. Miller, treasurer; Catholic Foresters, M. Hayes, president, P. Bott, secretary, and Lawrence Gautsch, treasurer; Casino Society, G. Hagmann, president, Chas. Nielke, secretary, and Gust. Keller, treasurer; also the Young Men's Society, Altar Society and Young Ladies' Sodality.

The present rector of St. Joseph's is the Rev. G. Sluyter, who was born in Cleve, Rhenish Prussia, February 20, 1860. He studied for the ministry at St. Francis, Wisconsin, and was ordained June 24, 1885.

Holy Cross Church, La Crosse, Wis.

Holy Cross Church, La Crosse, Wis.

THE Polish congregation of the church of the Holy Cross was established and the building dedicated on September 13, 1885, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop K. Flasch, who was assisted by the Rev. Fathers Schwebach, Wiedmann, Obermüller, Fitzpatrick, Blaschke, Byzewski, and Harrier. The first resident pastor of this parish was the Rev. John A. Blaschke, rector of the Bohemian St. Wenceslaus Church, who continued in charge until October, 1897. He was followed by Father R. L. Guzowski, of Pine Creek and Independence, who remained for about a year. Then followed the Rev. Louis Kaluza, from January 1888, to September of the same year; Rev. Stanislaus Baranowski, from January to June, 1889; Rev. Joseph Horbarzewski, June, 1889, to March, 1891; Rev. John Prucha, April, 1891, to July, 1892, and the Rev. Joseph Miller, from July to August, 1892, when the present pastor, Father Anselm Kroll, was appointed to the pastorate.

There are about eighty-five families in the congregation. The parochial school connected with this church has an attendance of ninety-six pupils, and is conducted by Sisters Margareth and Bernadette, the former having taught there continuously since 1885. Of Catholic societies organized at different times in the parish, there are the Holy Cross Society for Men, Rosary Society for Married Ladies, Children of Mary Society for Young Ladies, St. Casimir's Society for Young Men, and the Holy Childhood Society.

Rev. A. Kroll.

The pastor, Father Anselm Kroll, was born in Prussian Poland, in which country his earlier studies were pursued. He came to America in 1886, completed his theological course and was ordained priest January 25, 1890. His first pastorate was at North Creek near Arcadia, where he remained until 1892. He then moved to La Crosse. St. John's Church at Fairchild, Wis., is also attended by Father Kroll. This congregation consists of thirty-eight families, nearly all of whom are Polish.

St. James' Church, La Crosse, Wis.

THE congregation of St. James' at La Crosse was established prior to the year 1887, the new church in that parish being completed and dedicated in honor of its patron saint, by the Right Rev. Bishop Flasch, on January 9th of that year. The congregation was first attended by its founder, the Very Rev. James Schwebach, Vicar-General of the Diocese, who attended it from St. Mary's. He was succeeded as rector by the Rev. P. J. Lavin, who conducted the pastorate from the latter part of August, 1887, until March 14, 1888, during which period he resided in the parish. Father Lavin was succeeded by the present incumbent, the Rev. Ambrose Murphy, who assumed the active duties of his appointment on March 14, 1888. Father Murphy has made numerous and valuable improvements to the parish property, among other things having had the church brick veneered and a similar class of building erected for a pastoral residence. This building is located directly opposite to the church. The congregation, which consists of about two hundred and fifty families, is regarded as both enterprising and prosperous. This opinion was naturally obtained from the present condition of its affairs, which shows that, in spite of the backward times, the fact that while the church alone cost fully $15,000 still but $2,700 remains as an outstanding debt against the entire property. There is also a flourishing parochial school connected with this congregation, which at one time was in charge of four teachers; lack of means, however, compelled a reduction in the expenses and as a result there are but three teachers in charge at the present time. This number, however, will be increased just as soon as the condition of affairs will warrant the addition being made. Of Catholic organizations in connection with St. James' there are an Altar Society, Young Ladies' Sodality, a Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters, Branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and the Sacred Heart League,

Among those of the laity who will be lastingly remembered for the zealous interest which they have taken in the growth and prosperity of this congregation, are Arthur Maguire, an old soldier, and Margaret

St. James' Church, La Crosse, Wis.

Kennedy, the former donating four lots to the parish as sites for the church and parsonage, while the latter made personal gifts during life, and a final bequest amounting to $2,000.

The Rev. Ambrose Murphy was born September 2, 1862, at Belledune, New Brunswick, He came with his people to Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, on August 5, 1866, and attended the school there until the month of September, 1877, when he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee. In September, 1880, he went to Floreffe, Belgium, where he completed his classical course, and in October, 1882, entered the University of Innsbruck, Austria, where he studied philosophy and theology. He received minor orders January 10, 1886; sub-deaconship July 18, deaconship July 25, and was ordained to the priesthood on October 28th of the same year. Three days later he said his first Mass, after which he entered the Catholic University of Paris, where he continued his studies for some time. He returned to Chippewa Falls on Pentecost Sunday, 1887, and was appointed assistant to Father Goldsmith, attending various outside missions until called to La Crosse on January 19, 1888, when he was appointed assistant to

Rev. A. Murphy.

Father Lavin, but resided at the Bishop's house. He was appointed to his present pastorate March 14, 1888. Father Murphy is a member of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Catholic Order of Foresters, and Catholic Knights of Wisconsin. Father Murphy has just been appointed director of the League of the Sacred Heart for the Diocese of La Crosse.

St. John's Church, La Crosse, Wis.

THE congregation of St. John's was first organized by Father E. Wilms, former assistant priest at the Cathedral, with eighty families. At the outset Mass was said in the schoolhouse, on the corner of Avon and St. James streets, where services were regularly held for some time following. In 1890 Father Wilms was succeeded by the Rev. J. W. Ritz, formerly of Medford, Taylor County, Wis., under whose administration the affairs of the congregation began to show a marked improvement. Lots were secured in a desireable locality, and at a meeting held in May, 1890, it was decided to build a church. This structure, covering an area of 48x122 feet, was completed and dedicated during March, 1894. The interior of the church is finished in a comfortable and substantial manner, furnishing ample accommodations for the hundred and twelve families which at the present time comprise the congregation. There is also a parochial school in connection with St. John's, which is in charge of two Franciscan Sisters of the Perpetual Adoration. The number of scholars enrolled is one hundred and thirty-two. There are also six Catholic societies in the parish, the membership of which are as follows:

St. John's Church, La Crosse, Wis.

St. Ann's Society, fifty-six; St. John's Aid Society, seventy-four; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, thirty; St. Aloy's Society, thirty-two; Young Ladies' Society, twenty-eight, and Childhood of Jesus Society, twenty-eight.

The Rev. J. W. Ritz, present incumbent of the pastorate of St. John's, was born in Bamberg, Bavaria, August, 1859. His education was wholly obtained in his native country, and after graduating in classics and theology he was ordained to the priesthood at Luxemburg, May 19, 1883. In the same year he came to America, and was at once assigned to the pastorate at Medford, in Taylor County. Here, although attending the congregations of six missions, he found time to build a new church and establish a parochial school. Besides this he was instrumental in building other churches, and infusing new life into many of the congregations to which he ministered. In August, 1890, he repaired to La Crosse, where he had been appointed pastor of St. John's Church. Here his ministrations have also been successful, his devotion to the work assigned gaining for him the absolute confidence of his superiors and congregation.

Rev. J. W. Ritz.

St. Mary's Church, La Crosse, Wis.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH, or according to its full title, the Church of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was the first structure of its kind erected in the city and county of La Crosse, Wis. This was some period prior to the incorporation of La Crosse as a city. It was on the 24th day of August, 1855, that the Rev. William Tappert, first resident pastor at La Crosse, arrived there, holding divine services for the first time on that date. No church having been erected up to that time, services were held in private buildings and later on in the old court house. Previous to the coming of Father Tappert, the Rev. Father Galtier, of Prairie du Chien, had visited the place occasionally and administered to the religious wants of the few Catholics then living on the "Prairie de La Crosse."

Father Tappert commenced at once to erect a church and in spite of poverty and other adverse circumstances he finished it in 1856 on the 24th day of August. The building was of frame, some 60x35 feet in dimensions, and situated on the northeast corner of Seventh street and Cameron avenue. It was called St. Mary's and intended for all the Catholics of the county of La Crosse. What is now the city of La Crosse had then about twenty-five Catholic families.

As early as 1856 a Catholic school was opened in a building contiguous to the church. This school, started with a small number and taught by the Sisters of Notre Dame, has been kept up ever since. In 1863 the number of Catholics having largely increased, the congregation of St. Mary's was divided; St. Mary's congregation retaining all of the English and French speaking and St. Joseph's all the German and Bohemian speaking families. The latter congregation bought several lots on the southwest corner of Sixth and Main streets and at once began the erection of a two-story brick building for school purposes, in which school was taught for both congregations.

St. Mary's Church, La Crosse, Wis.

Father Tappert was followed by the Rev. F. X. Etschmann in the pastorate of St. Mary's Church. The Rev. F. X. Etschmann was also a very zealous, pious and hard-working priest, who, like his predecessor, not only attended the Catholics of the city and county of La Crosse, but of at least six other counties in Wisconsin and Minnesota. The two congregations of La Crosse still worshiped in the same building. Father Etschmann was succeeded in 1863 by the Rev. Charles Schraudenbach, who remained until 1863. From that time until 1868 the Rev. M. Marco was pastor of the congregation.

In 1868 the Rt. Rev. Michael Heiss was appointed first bishop of La Crosse and took up his residence in the same wooden building attached to the old residence at St. Mary's, where he continued to reside until the year 1876. From 1868 to the spring of 1869 a number of professors from St. Francis Seminary, especially the Rev. Joseph Moder, assisted by the Rev. Father Nicholas, attended to the two congregations. In May, 1869, the Rev. P. M. Abbelen came from Chippewa Falls and took charge of St. Mary's congregation and the Rev. H. Kampschroer from Eau Claire, a very zealous and energetic priest, became pastor of St. Joseph's. Under the latter's pastorate the large and beautiful St. Joseph's Church was built and dedicated.

The Rev. Father Abbelen could remain at St. Mary's for only a short time on account of failing health. Father Kampschroer, therefore, who resided with the Bishop, also attended to St. Mary's congregation until the ordination of the Rev. James Schwebach. Father Schwebach came to La Cross in March, 1869, at the age of 21, as sub-deacon and took charge of the school of St. Mary's congregation as spiritual instructor. In this capacity he won the affection of all the children and members of the whole parish, who would not listen to his removal after he was ordained priest and appointed pastor of Prairie du Chien. Father Schwebach took charge of St. Mary's in the summer of 1870. The church edifice at that time had become old and dilapidated and there was a debt of $1,500 upon the property besides. The members of the congregation were mostly poor, and after a few years' determined struggle the debt was paid and in 1872 three more lots were purchased, and the erection of a beautiful two-story school house, of brick and stone, was begun on the corner opposite the church. This school was opened on September 1st of the same year by the Sisters of St. Francis, of La Crosse. Early in the spring of 1874 work was begun on the new church, to take the place of the old building, which had become entirely inadequate for the purpose. The new church was completed as far as it is now in 1875 and was solemnly dedicated by Bishop Heiss on the 7th day of October in that year. The church retained the old familiar name, "St. Mary's." It is built of brick in the Roman style, occupies an area 45x115 feet, cost $16,000, and is one of the neatest buildings for public worship in the city. In 1886 St. Mary's parish was again divided; this time for the formation of the St. James' parish in North La Crosse. This division took away from St. Mary's all the French speaking Catholics with a few exceptions, so that the congregation retained only about one hundred families. In 1888 the congregation erected a large and commodious priest's house of brick and stone, at a cost of $6,000. This placed them in possession of all of the buildings necessary for parochial purposes, each one of the number being solidly and substantially constructed of brick. During all this time the spiritual interests of the people had in no way been neglected, and the congregation which had been for many years one of the very poorest of the whole diocese has become one of the most flourishing and successful, its people being whole-souled, generous and affectionate—good practical Catholics. On the 1st day of January, 1892, the Very Rev. Father Schwebach gave into the charge of his successor an intelligent congregation of eight hundred souls.

Rev. Wm. White.

The Rev. William White, present pastor of St. Mary's Church, was born in Addison County, Vermont, October 9, 1850, and is a son of Owen and Elizabeth (McDonough) White. His parents were from Ireland, and on emigrating to the United States, settled in Vermont, the possibilities of the Western frontier not then being developed. In 1853, however, they came to Wisconsin, and settled in Sauk County, near the little town of Sandusky. There were nine children in the family, only four of whom are now living. Two of the sons entered the priesthood, one of whom died in 1877. The other, Matthew, was a graduate of Milton College, Wisconsin, after which he for a time practiced law in Milwaukee. Convinced, however, that the ministry was his true calling, he abandoned his profession and entered the Seminary at St. Francis, where he was ordained priest in 1870.

Father William White received his elementary education in the public schools of Sauk County, and at the age of sixteen engaged in teaching, devoting himself to the profession for four years. At the age of 21, he entered the State University at Madison, graduating from that institution in 1873. Soon after this he decided to fit himself for the priesthood, and went to Niagara Falls, New York, where he began a four years' course of study in philosophy and theology in the Seminary of Our Lady of Angels. These were years of close application and diligent and earnest study, the fitting end of which was his ordination as priest, the late Bishop Ryan, of Buffalo, officiating. The first parish of which he had charge was at Ettrick, Trempealeau County, Wisconsin. He entered upon his duties there in July, 1877, remaining in charge until February 1st, 1880. During his pastorate there he built a church and regularly visited the outmissions of Trempealeau and Roaring Creek. In February, 1880, he was sent to Hammond, St. Croix County, Wisconsin, to which the mission of Wilson was attached. At Hammond he had charge of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, which prospered and grew in numbers under his care. These parishes numbered, when he left them, about one thousand souls. In January, 1892, he was appointed to succeed Bishop Schwebach at St. Mary's Church, La Crosse.

Holy Trinity Church, La Crosse, Wis.

THE German congregation of Holy Trinity in the city of La Crosse, Wisconsin, was originally composed of a number of German families belonging to St. Joseph's Cathedral Congregation, from which they separated in 1887. This departure was the result of a meeting held during May of that year, at which it was decided to organize a congregation from those German Catholic families living in the southern part of the city. It was also decided at that time to purchase six lots, upon which to erect a church and school-house. Under the direction then, of the Rev. J. B. Wiedmann, who had presided over their former deliberations, Mr. Nic. Gilles, the treasurer, and James Arenz, secretary of the organization, a building 24x64 feet was erected. This building was completed in the fall of the same year, at which time it was dedicated in honor of St. Nicholas, by the Right Rev. Bishop Kilian Flasch. For a short period following its dedication, the congregation was attended by the Rev. F. X.

Holy Trinity Church, La Crosse, Wis.

Willms, assistant at the Cathedral. In January, 1888, however, the Rev. Louis Kaluza became his successor, dividing his time between St. Nicolas' and the Polish congregation of Holy Cross. In spite of many difficulties arising in the arrangement of parish boundaries and other matters pretaining to their completion, the interests of the congregation progressed and prospered in a most satisfactory manner. The people, in fact, were very alert to the interest of their church, and though many among them were poor each one strove to contribute as much as his means would permit towards the improvement and beautifying of the property. Among those thus making liberal donations were the Schwartz brothers, who gave the Stations of the Cross, a Monstrance and a Shrine for the sacristy, and Nic. Birnbaum, Sr., who did much valuable work, without accepting anything in the way of compensation.

In July, 1885, the Rev. Peter Alfes became the first resident rector of Holy Trinity. He was born at Schoenau, diocese of Paderborn, Germany, on the 29th day of June, 1849. He came to America on August 28, 1884, and four years later, having completed the necessary studies, was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee. Under his administration the new boundary lines of the parish were drawn, but unfortunately proved unsatisfactory. It was about the time of his coming, also, that the Sisters donated to the congregation a house, which was moved from near St. Joseph's Church on to the new church property, where it was used as a temporary parsonage. A collection was also taken up at St. Joseph's for the benefit of the young and struggling congregation.

After three years of vigorous service in behalf of these people, Father Alfes resigned the charge in 1891, to assume that of St. Boniface Congregation at Waumandee. He died at Medford, March 14, 1894, and is buried in the cemetery at that place. A memorial window in Holy Trinity Church perpetuates the memory of Father Alfes among the people for whom he labored so unselfishly for many years.

Interior of Holy Trinity Church, La Crosse, Wis.

In May, 1891, the Rev. A. J. Joerres was appointed pastor of Holy Trinity. He came from Cologne, Germany, to this country, October 1, 1881, and was ordained to the priesthood on June 29, 1885, at St. Francis. At the present time he is rector of the congregation at Menomonie, Wisconsin. During his residence at La Crosse, the question of a new church had been mooted by the congregation, but of this nothing came, owing to the difficulties still experienced in regard to the boundary lines of the parish. However, under the administration of Father Joerres' successor, the Rev. Paul Geyer, Vicar-General of the diocese, a new church was built and dedicated December 4, 1892. To his efforts is also due the final settlement in regard to the boundary lines, which were at his request definitely fixed by Bishop Schwebach. Father Geyer was succeeded by the Rev. Hermann Joseph Untraut. At this time the congregation was not in very good financial condition—over $10,000 laid as a heavy burden on the people. Father Untraut took an active interest in embellishing the church, in which effort he was laudably sustained by many members of his congregation. It was under his administration that the interior of the church was greatly improved and handsomely decorated. Among other donations to this laudable enterprise were two handsome altars, a pulpit and three lamps. In 1894 Father Untraut erected a new parsonage at a cost of $2,800, and the following year a benefactor donated the sum of $1,250 towards the decoration of the church. The same party in the year 1896 gave $1,100 to be applied to the purchase of three altars. These were blest on the feast of Holy Trinity, by Bishop Schwebach, who afterwards celebrated the first Pontificial Mass on the high altar. Of other liberal donations made were the Stations of the Cross, in bas-relief, by a widow lady, Mrs. Mary Koller, and an electric light plant, by the Young Men's St. Aloysius Society and the Young Ladies' St. Rose's Sodality.

Under Father Untraut's administration the interests of the Catholic societies and organizations were greatly promoted, the statutes of the Holy Trinity Society were revised, and others promulgated for the Order of the Knights of St. George, St. Anna Ladies' and St. Rose Young Ladies' Societies. The St. Leo Casino was also erected, as well as the Young Men's St. Aloysius Society, and a Branch of the Family Protective Association was organized in 1896. At the present time the congregation of Holy Trinity consists of one hundred and ninety families, and the school, which is in charge of Franciscan Sisters of the Perpetual Adoration, is attended by one hundred and seventy children.

Rev. H. J. Untraut.

The Rev. Hermann Joseph Untraut was born at Meckenbeuren, diocese of Rottenburg, Germany, on July 28, 1854. He studied at the Mehrerau, near Bregenz, Austria, and at Eichstaett, Bavaria. In June, 1882, he came to the United States and was ordained to the priesthood on September 25, following, at St. Francis Seminary. After ordination he was for five years rector of the parish at Edson, Chippewa County, where he erected a school-house and parsonage. He was also for a time at Arcadia, Trempealeau County, where, in spite of the unfortunate financial condition of the congregation, he also succeeded in establishing a school and building a parsonage. After five years' pastorate at Arcadia he was transferred to that of Holy Trinity Congregation at La Crosse.

St. Wenceslas' Church, La Crosse, Wis.

THIS parish was founded in the year 1873, by the Rev. Leo Suchy, O. S. F., who was a native of Hrachovteinitz, Bohemia, where he was born July 20, 1841. He was ordained to the priesthood at Prague, Bohemia, in 1867, removing to this country soon after. Having organized the parish, he remained as its pastor until September, 1875, when he was transferred to St. John's Congregation at Milwaukee, where he died in 1894. The second pastor appointed to St. Wenceslas' was the Rev. G. J. Weidlich, who remained from December, 1875, until April of the following year. His successor was the Rev. Fidelis Bannwarth, who remained until November, 1877, when he died suddenly from a stroke of apoplexy. In the following month the charge was assumed by the Rev. Alois Heller, who remained until the April following. The next pastor was the Rev. August Lang, who remained until October, 1881. He died in 1885 in New York. His successor was the Rev. John A. Blaschke, who was succeeded by the Rev. John Prucha, he remaining from August, 1888, until May, 1892, when he was transferred to Union Center. Then the Rev. Joseph Mueller took charge, being transferred to Bloomer in February, 1894, at which time Father Blaschke again became pastor of the congregation. The families at present belonging to St. Wenceslas' number one hundred and seventy. Three Franciscan Sisters of the Perpetual Adoration, of La Crosse, have charge of the parochial school belonging to this parish, the attendance at which is estimated at one hundred and sixty scholars. Of Catholic organizations connected with St. Wenceslas', there are: Holy Rosary Society; Society of the Infant Jesus of Prague; Branch of the Bohemian Central Association of St. Wenceslas', and still another Branch of the Wisconsin Central Association; a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin; Catholic Bohemian Workmen; St. John's Society; Uniformed Knights of St. George; St. Stanislaus' Society, for young men; St. Agnes' Young Ladies' Sodality; St. Anne's Ladies' Society, and St. Mary's Society.

St. Wenceslas' Church, La Crosse, Wis.

Rev. John A. Blaschke.

The Rev. John Aloysius Blaschke, present pastor of St. Wenceslas' Bohemian congregation, at La Crosse, Wisconsin, was born January 15, 1844, at Dittersbach, near Landskron, Bohemia. After acquiring his rudimentary education at the Gymnasium at Koeniggraetz, Bohemia, he pursued a course of theology at that place. He came to the United States July 10, 1877, and was ordained to the priesthood in Chicago on the 17th of the following month. Father Blaschke has the distinction of being the pioneer priest of Nebraska, where he remained and faithfully ministered to the spiritual wants of the Bohemian and German Catholics located there, until October 1, 1881. His headquarters while in that State were at Olean, in Colfax County, from which point he branched out, organizing congregations and building churches in almost every direction. On October 1, 1881, he was enlisted among the clergy of La Crosse Diocese, his first charge being that of St. Wenceslas' Bohemian Catholic congregation, at La Crosse City, where he worked faithfully until January 15, 1888. He was then transferred to Bloomer Mission, in Chippewa County, but on the special request of the Right Rev. Bishop Schwebach, resumed his position as pastor of St. Wenceslas', as successor to the Rev. Joseph Mueller.

The Diocese of La Crosse—State of Wisconsin.

CHAPTER II.

Our Lady of Perpetual Help Church, Arcadia, Wis.

THE congregation of Our Lady of Perpetual Help was first established in Meyers' Valley, two miles south of the village of Arcadia, by the Rev. Father Joerger, then pastor at Fountain City, Wisconsin, in 1864. Services were at that time held in the house of Mr. Nicholas Meyers. From 1864 to 1865, the congregation was occasionally attended from La Crosse. During 1866, and until 1868, the pastors residing at Pine Creek ministered to the spiritual wants of these people. It was during this period that one of these, Father Florentine, built the first church in Meyers' Valley. From 1868 until 1870 the church was also attended from the same place by Father Theodore. After that the congregation was attended as a mission in turn by the Revs. L. Lay of Waumandee, from 1870 to 1875; A. Mendl of Glencoe, Buffalo County, from 1875 to 1876; P. Schmidt, Glencoe, from 1876 to 1880; J. Baur, Glencoe, 1880 to 1881; N. Flammang of Glencoe, 1881 to 1882, and the Revs. W. Hackner from Glencoe and L. Lay of Waumandee, from 1882 to 1883. The Rev. B. Klein, also from Glencoe, built the first church in Arcadia, and from the date of its completion the Meyers' Valley building was no longer used. From 1885 to 1888 the Arcadia people were attended by the Rev. A. Weckes from Glencoe, and from April 1, 1888, to June 9, 1888, by the Rev. H. J. Untraut, from Glencoe. On June 9, 1888, the Rev. H. J. Untraut removed to Arcadia. From this date Arcadia became the parish, and Glencoe the mission. During his pastorate Father Untraut also established a parochial school in connection with the church of Our Lady of Perpetual Help. From September, 1893, until 1896 the Rev. A. Birsner was pastor and since the latter year the Rev. J. B. Hauck. Among other improvements made by Father Birsner during his administration was a new, substantial school-house. The congregation at Arcadia now consists of about ninety families, and the school, which has a regular attendance of one hundred and twenty-three pupils, is conducted by three Sisters and one Candidate from the convent of Notre Dame, Milwaukee. In the congregation of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, the following Catholic Societies are represented: Apostleship of Prayer, one hundred and eighteen members; St. Ann's Society of Christian Mothers, eighty-eight members; Mrs. Thomas Barry, president; Association of the Holy Childhood, one hundred and forty members; Holy Souls Society, one hundred and eighty-two members; St. Joseph's Men's Society, twenty-three members; Mr. Joseph Bischof, president.

Our Lady of Perpetual Help Church, Arcadia, Wis.

St. Joseph's congregation at Glencoe, Buffalo County, is a mission attended by the pastor of Our Lady of Perpetual Help at Arcadia. This congregation was first established in 1857, by the Rev. Father Tappert of La Crosse, from which place it was attended twice a year. After its organization services were held in the house of Cornelius Gleason, until the following year, when a small church was erected. This was in use until 1868, when the present structure was built by the Rev. L. Spitzlberger. Services are now held on every second Sunday. The church had a regular pastor from 1875 to June 9, 1888, since which time it has been attended from Arcadia. St. Ann's Ladies' Society is the only Catholic organization connected with this congregation.

The Rev. J. B. Hauck, present pastor of the congregation at Arcadia, is a native of Cresco, Iowa, and was born in 1868. After attending the public schools at his native place, there being no Catholic school there at that time, he in 1882 entered the Sacred Heart College at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, a novitiate of the Jesuits, and graduated from there in 1888. He then went to Europe, where he remained until 1893 as a student at the University of Innsbruck, Tyrol, Austria. In the year 1893, however, having then returned to the United States, Father Hauck was assigned to the charge of the Catholic congregation at Phillips, Wisconsin. He continued his ministerial duties with gratifying success until the time of the terrible conflagration which destroyed the entire settlement on July 27, 1894. This, of course, ended his connection with the pastorate, and in the following year (1895), he was assigned to the assistant pastorate of St. Mary's congregation at St. Mary's, Monroe County, Wisconsin, which, unfortunately, owing to failing health he was soon after compelled to resign. Having somewhat recovered, he was assigned as assistant at St. Joseph's Cathedral, La Crosse, and since July 5, 1896, has been resident pastor at Arcadia.

Rev. J. B. Hauck.

Early History of the Ashland Church, Ashland, Wis.

ASHLAND is situated very near the old Jesuit Mission of 1665-71, called "Mission du Saint Esprit" (Mission of the Holy Ghost). We learn from the Jesuit Relations of 1667, that Father Claude Allouez, S. J., established his mission at the head of Chequamegon or Ashland Bay. He called it "La Baie de Chagouamigong," from the Indian name Shagawamikong, which they apply to a long point of land, starting from the east shore of said bay and running westward towards Houghton Point, separating Ashland Bay from Lake Superior. It is now an island, as the lake has broken through the barrier, or narrow strip of land, near its junction with the mainland, making of the former narrow peninsula an island.

The narrow point of land some ten miles east of Ashland is first spoken of by Radisson in the account of his fourth voyage, in 1659-60. The Indians resided there for some months during the summer, it providing an excellent point at which to secure their winter supply of fish. These fishing grounds are still proving of considerable value to a number of white men who live along the margin of the lake. A lighthouse is built on the western extremity of Chequamegon Point, as it is now called. In the ancient Relation, the name Chagouamigong is applied to the Bay and to the whole Bayfield Peninsula, i. e., that tract of land situated between Ashland Bay and Lake Superior.

Father Allouez arrived at this settlement on the 1st of October, 1665. He took up his "ordinary" abode between two large Indian villages at the head of Chequamegon Bay. One of these villages, the larger one, was inhabited chiefly by Ottawas who had fled to the western extremity of the lake in order to escape the victorious Iroquois. This Ottawa village was situated about one and a half miles from the mouth of Fish Creek, on the eastern bank of said creek, and about half way between Ashland and Ashland Junction. The place is but a short distance west of the present city. Father Chrysostom Verwyst, O. S. F., through whose writings and personal courtesies we are under obligations for a large amount of valuable information, investigated the site of the ancient Ottawa village eight or nine years ago, at which time he noticed particularly the young growth of timber on that side of the creek, as well as the struggling growth of sward between the trees, whereas, on the opposite bank, he found the regular virginal forest. The ground in this section is of a rich loam, deposited by the annual overflowing of the creek, and is well adapted to the raising of corn, which, we are told, was done there by the Ottawas, who were cultivators of the soil to some considerable extent. This village, as previously stated, was the larger of the two between which Father Allouez had taken up his abode. In Charlevoix's history of New France, an Indian village is marked on the confines of Fish Creek, although, by some unaccountable mistake, the location is placed on the western side of the stream, whereas, it should have been placed on the eastern bank. On the margin of the map upon which this site is diagrammed, is the following note in French: "Ici etait un bourg considerable" (here was a considerable village).

On the opposite side of the mission, and on the western bank of Chequamegon Bay, was the other village which was occupied by the Hurons, who dwelt there in numbers amounting to about five hundred souls, between the years 1661 and 1671. During the latter year, they left this place and went to live at St. Ignace, near Mackinac Island, Michigan. Between these two Indian villages was the "ordinary" abode of the missionary, where he had erected a temporary chapel of birch bark, which afterwards was probably replaced by one made of logs. For some time prior to this, however, it is certain that he resided for a while at the Ottawa village, which he was finally compelled to leave, owing to the brutal and insulting behavior of the people. As we have it on his authority that this abode was about three-fourths of a league from said village, we may safely conclude that he ordinarily resided somewhere near the northwest boundary of the bay, and near to the place where the village of Nash is now situated. He also resided for some time among the Hurons, and for a month with the Chippewas at Fond du Lac, Minnesota, about fifteen miles west of Duluth. In fact, he was roaming about considerably among the Indians, and most probably was, also, at La Pointe Island and the many Indian hamlets strung along the western shore of Chequamegon Bay. He even extended his visits as far as Nipigon, on the north shore of Lake Superior, to which place he went in 1667, to visit some scattering Christians there.

Father Allouez labored with great zeal in his mission of the Holy Ghost from October 1, 1665, to 1669, when he went to Green Bay and founded the mission of St. Francis Xavier, at the head of those waters. In 1671 the mission of St. Francis Xavier was removed to where De Pere now stands, whence its name from the French appellation, "Rapide des Peres." In 1667 Father Allouez went from the mission of the Holy Ghost to Quebec, returning somewhat later with Father Louis Nicholas, S. J., who, however, left in 1668, during which year Father Marquette came to reside at Sault Ste. Marie. As previously stated, Father Allouez stayed still another winter at the head of the bay, and then went, first to Quebec and afterwards to Green Bay, where he arrived on the evening of September 2, 1669. On the following day, which was the feast of St. Francis Xavier, he celebrated Mass there, and dedicated the mission in honor of that great saint.

In 1669 Father James Marquette was sent to Chequamegon Bay and continued the mission begun by Father Allouez. He arrived there on the 19th of September, and found the Indians residing in five clearings or villages, busy gathering their winter supply of corn. He was well received, and labored there until the early part of 1671, at which time he was obliged to leave, together with his people, to avoid the depredations of the Sioux, who had threatened to destroy them in order to avenge the cruelty perpetrated upon five of their people, who had been killed and devoured by the Hurons and Ottawas at their village. During his residence of some three and a half years at the Bay Settlement, Father Allouez baptized five hundred Indians, adults and children included.

As we are informed by the Relations, these saintly Jesuit missionaries did not confine their labors to one village or tribe, but accompanied them upon their hunting and fishing expeditions, and visited their various hamlets upon the shores of the bay. Hence, we may safely conclude that these "Evangelizers of peace, evangelizers of good things," trod the soil where Ashland is now located, though the principal villages were located on the opposite side of the bay where now are situated Washburn, Houghton, Bayfield, and Buffalo Bay Settlement.

The next missionary in the Lake Superior country was the Rev. Frederic Baraga, who afterwards became first Bishop of Marquette, Michigan. He came to La Pointe in 1835, and labored there zealously with great success until 1843, when he went to reside at L'Anse, Michigan. He never said Mass in Ashland, from the very fact that in those days that place had not come into existence, but, as Bishop of Marquette, he paid occasional visits to La Pointe, Superior, Fond du Lac, and the Bad River Reservation, in order that he might administer the Holy Sacrament of Confirmation. The first priest to say Mass in Ashland was the Rev. Bernard July, who for many years was pastor of Stevens Point, from which place he visited the various stations on the Wisconsin Central Railway, at the time when that road was being built. He also said Mass at Medford, Phillips, Fifield, and many other places in that locality. This must have been twenty years ago. After him, Father A. Thomas Schüttelhofer attended Ashland from Medford, continuing to do so until 1878. He began the erection of the first Catholic Church in Ashland, the same being completed at a later date by the Franciscan Fathers.

St. Agnes' Church, Ashland, Wis.

THERE can be found a bit of unrivaled interest connected with the tact, growth and perseverance of the Catholic Church and parochial school in the city of Ashland; a noted display of characteristic energy, persistence and true work of the Catholic population of that place in the erection and growth of St. Agnes' congregation.

The beginning of a Catholic parish at Ashland dates nearly as far back as the beginning of the city. The Rev. J. Chebul, at that time missionary at Bayfield, and now in the diocese of Marquette, Michigan, and his successors, the Rev. H. Quigley, D. D., and the Rev. F. Pfaller ministering occasionally to the spiritual wants of the few Catholics of Ashland, saying Mass in private houses and in the hall over Bardon and Kellogg's store. About the year 1874 the erection of a frame church building 22x40 feet, was begun, on two lots on Third avenue east, donated by Dr. Edwin Ellis, a pioneer of Ashland. The building, standing yet, is occupied by Mr. Bernard Hoppenyan as an undertaking establishment. At this time the work on this building was necessarily slow, for, while the people were intensely anxious to have a structure of their own in which to conduct their religious services, sufficient means were not available, and, as a consequence, the services were continued to be held in the private houses of the different members of the congregation. In the winter of 1878, the Rev. A. T. Schüttelhofer attended this parish from Medford, Wisconsin, there being no stationary priest at Bayfield at that time. During his pastorate a fair was held and funds raised to pay the old debt accumulated, and to place windows in the side of the building. In the fall of 1878 the mission at Bayfield was given in charge of the Franciscan Fathers, together with the adjacent missions of Ashland, Odanah and La Pointe. In the summer of 1879 the church was plastered and provided with pews, and in the year following a steeple was added to the structure and a bell procured, the first bell in the city. All this occurred during the administration of Father Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., who had charge of the congregation for two years, during which time he endured many hardships, difficulties and privations. In the meanwhile, the growth of the Catholic congregation keeping pace with that of the city, the church accommodations becoming too small, an addition 22x30 feet had to be built during the summer of 1882, under the direction of that zealous priest, the Rev. Eustace Vollmer, O. S. F., now stationed at Superior. Scarcely had this new addition been completed when the rapid increase in members of the Catholic population made it necessary for the congregation to secure the present church and school property. The original church, with its additions, had become too small, so that steps were immediately taken to build a large and substantial structure, 60x135 feet, of Lake Superior stone, the first and only up-to-date church built of that material in the city. The parish was now becoming so large and of such importance as to require more direct attention than that which had been heretofore furnished from Bayfield by the Rev. Paulinus Tolksdorf, O. S. F., pastor of the congregation, at that time was capable of giving, and the Rev. Maximilian Klein, O. S. F., was therefore sent as an assistant to him. Later the declining health of Father Paulinus demanded a change of climate, so the parish was placed in charge of St. Agnes' Church and School, Ashland, Wis.

Father Maximilian Klein. In 1886 Father Maximilian Klein began operations for the erection of the present church, and also for that of a residence for the Franciscan Fathers, and since that time the sons of St. Francis of Assissi have made their home in that city. The lateness of the season prevented Father Maximilian Klein from finishing the church the same year, but in the following spring operations were resumed and the building brought under roof. As soon as this was done, the commodious basement was finished, and from November, 1887, used for church purposes. During the early summer of 1888 the main building was completed, being solemnly blessed by the Right Rev. Kilian C. Flasch, Bishop of La Crosse, on the 22d day of July of that year. During the fall of 1888 the present pastor of St. Agnes' church, the Rev. Fabian Rechtiene, O. S. F., was appointed to continue the work, for which his predecessors had laid a good and solid foundation for him to build upon, looking after the spiritual needs of his congregation. Under his careful administration, the parish grew in strength and numbers, and many valuable outside improvements were made to the church property, the parishioners possessing and manifesting much zealous interest in its behalf. Among such improvements were a handsome pulpit, costing over $500, altar rail and two new confessionals, all of which were artistically finished, corresponding to the Gothic style of architecture observed in the structure. In May, 1892, a beautiful high altar costing $1,500 was placed in the spacious sanctuary and solemnly blessed. This was a donation from the Altar Society connected with this parish, to which most married ladies of the congregation belong. All that is now needed to make St. Agnes' one of the finest and most imposing structures on Lake Superior is a steeple, which it is hoped and anticipated will be built in the near future.

The congregation of St. Agnes consists of a number of different nationalities, the greater part of whom speak and understand the English language. The total membership at the present time is over six hundred families.

Of Catholic organizations in the parish, there are the following: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch No. 20, organized in 1885, one hundred and three members: President, J. P. Murphy; Vice-President, William Stenz; Recording Secretary, Adam Stenz; Financial Secretary, Edward Stahl; Treasurer, J. Manch; this society meets on every second and fourth Sunday in the month in St. Agnes' Hall. Ancient Order of Hibernians, Division No. 1, organized July, 1891, ninety members: President, J. P. Murphy; Vice-President, D. F. O'Keefe; Recording Secretary, J. W. Mahoney; Treasurer, W. B. Brown; meetings are held in St. Agnes' Hall on every first and third Thursday in the month. Catholic Order of Foresters, St. Agnes' Court, organized June, 1893, one hundred and sixteen members: Chief Ranger, C. M. Fitzgerald; Vice Chief Ranger, J. P. Fitzgerald; Past Chief Ranger, George Stenz; Recording Secretary, Henry Lafreniere; Financial Secretary, William J. Coan; meetings in St. Agnes' Hall every second and fourth Tuesday of the month. Society of St. Michael, for Polish people, organized September, 1891, thirty members: President, Albert Ash; Vice-President, Joseph Pufall; Secretary, Alexander Mrotek; Treasurer, Frank Zasada. Society of the Third Order of St. Francis, ninety-five members: Meets every second Sunday in the month. Society of Christian Mothers and Altar Society for Married Ladies, one hundred and sixty members: President, Mrs. B. Hoppenyan; Vice-President, Mrs. H. Crowley; Secretary, Mrs. J. H. Welsh; Treasurer, Mrs. T. Martin; this Society meets on the third Sunday in each month. Young Ladies' Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, eighty members: President, Miss Nellie Kane; Vice-President, Miss Nellie Brown; Secretary, Miss Anna Young; Treasurer, Miss Linda Rice; meetings are held every fourth Sunday in the month. Society of the Sacred Heart of Jesus for Boys and Girls having received their First Holy Communion: President, Daniel McDonald; Vice-President, Sandy McDonald; Secretary, Miss Eugene Shea; Treasurer, Father Fabian.

Rev. Fabian Rechtiene.

To furnish a somewhat more correct idea of the continuous and prosperous growth of St. Agnes' parish, the following may prove of interest: During the year 1882, prior to which time the records of this congregation were kept in connection with those of the church at Bayfield, the accompanying statistics are given for the parish of St. Agnes: Baptisms, twenty-five; marriages, six; in 1895 the number of baptisms in this parish had increased to two hundred and twenty-five, while of marriages recorded there were twenty-eight.

The Catholic parochial school connected with St. Agnes' Church dates back to the year 1881, at which time the congregation, under the Rev. Casimir Vogt,

O. S. F., had bought four lots and erected thereon a frame school building. At first the parochial school was placed in charge of School Sisters from Joliet, Illinois, who, however, were after one term succeeded by the Franciscan Sisters of Perpetual Adoration, of La Crosse, under whose skillful management it has been conducted up to the present time. The result of Father Paulinus', O. S. F., self-sacrificing and untiring labors was that, while his church grew and prospered, so likewise did his school, which at first consisted of several departments and had an attendance of one hundred and forty pupils. This number was soon duly increased so that another room in addition to the two already in use became necessary, and for that purpose a small building near by was fitted up and occupied. This addition was afterwards sold and removed from the property, and the original building was since adapted to residence purposes, and as such occupied by the Sisters, but was later used by the primary grade of St. Agnes' School. In 1888 the regular attendance numbered about one hundred and eighty pupils, and the accommodations having become inadequate, a new frame building was erected. Thus the school interests prospered and progressed, until in 1893 the seven classes numbered about four hundred and fifty pupils, with many more who were liable at some future date to come under its domination. It now having become evident that a new school was absolutely necessary, a meeting consisting of the secretary, Martin Schrank; treasurer, Bernard Hoppenyan, and the four consultors, Donald A. Kennedy, Patrick Keenan, Jeremiah Sullivan and Charles Brisley, with the zealous pastor, Father Fabian, at the head, was held for the purpose of discussing the now familiar school problem. After a long and serious consideration of the subject, and with the consent and approval of the Right Rev. James Schwebach, Bishop of La Crosse, it was decided to erect a handsome and substantial building, which is at present the pride of the Catholic clergy and laity of Northern Wisconsin. Five lots, costing $6,000, were purchased for the purpose, and on July 18, 1894, the Ashlanders had the pleasure of witnessing the first steps taken toward the erection of their own ideal school. The new building was completed and ready for occupancy by September, 1895. The structure is built of brick, the foundation and trimmings being of Lake Superior brown stone. Its dimensions are 100x62 feet, the height of the walls are fifty-three feet, and the height from the ground to the top of the cupola is one hundred and sixteen feet. The front of the building is adorned by a handsome life-size statue of the Guardian Angel. The cost of the building complete was $31,000. On May 5, 1895, the occasion of a visit by the Right Rev. Bishop Schwebach to Ashland, this building was solemnly blessed and dedicated. The building is a model of convenience, being supplied with all the newest and approved modern appliances for lighting, heating and ventilation. The first and second floors are each divided off into four airy and well-lighted apartments. The third floor constitutes the commodious hall with a fully equipped stage. This hall and the four apartments in the basement are arranged for the special use of the various societies belonging to the congregation and for the benefit of St. Agnes' Church and School. There are eight grades in this school and nine departments, all of the branches usual to common and high school education being taught. The present attendance, according to the school register, numbers six hundred and twenty-five pupils.

The Rev. Fabian Rechtiene, O. S. F., who was born November 15, 1853, acquired his classical education at St. Joseph's College, Teutopolis, Illinois; received the habit of St. Francis in the same town on December 8, 1870; studied philosophy at Quincy, Illinois; theology at St. Louis, Missouri, and was ordained to the priesthood in the latter State, June 22, 1879, by the Right Rev. Patrick John Ryan, now Archbishop of Philadelphia.

Indian Missions of Lac du Flambeau Reservation, Vilas County, Wis., served from Ashland.

The Odanah Indian Mission, Ashland, Wis.

THE Odanah Indian Mission consists of about one hundred and five Indian half-breeds, besides some white Catholic families. The entire Indian population numbers about five hundred and fifty souls, including the children at the Sisters' Indian Boarding School. The first priest to visit these people with any regularity was the Rev. Angelus Van Paemel, a very pious and zealous Belgian priest, who traveled through that section of the country between the years 1857 and 1860. Bishop Baraga also visited Odanah, saying Mass there during the time that it was under the direct charge of the Rev. John Chebul, a Slavonian. This pastor had charge of the mission from 1860 to 1873, during which time he caused the erection of a small frame church, which was in continuous use for a period of about thirty years. This building is at present used as an Indian council house, and services are, for the time being, held in the Sisters' chapel, pending the completion of arrangements for a new and commodious church structure. It is greatly to be hoped that the erection of this new building will not be much longer delayed, as the chapel is only capable of supplying seating capacity for about one-half of the congregation.

When Father Chebul resigned charge of this mission, it was attended from Bayfield by the Rev. Francis Pfaller, who continued in charge for two years. It then came under the administration of the Rev. Chrysostom Verwyst, who assumed the duties in June, 1878, and continued to administer them until November of the same year, when he was transferred to Superior, Wisconsin. From 1878 to 1884 the mission was attended by the Rev. John Gafron, O. S. F., now in the Franciscan Monastery at St. Louis, Missouri. At the conclusion of his pastorate, Father Verwyst again took charge, continuing to serve this mission until 1893, when, for the second time, Father Gafron was appointed. After attending these people for nearly three years, he was succeeded by the Rev. Servatius Altmicks, O. S. F., now deceased, who remained for but a short time. Again, and for the third time, Father Verwyst took charge of the mission, this time remaining as pastor for three years. He was succeeded by the Rev. Bartholomew Feldman, O. S. F., who has been in charge for about a year.

There is also a Protestant Indian mission (Presbyterian) at Odanah, with a small church attached. The minister in charge of this is the Rev. Henry Blatchford, who is now verging on eighty-seven years of age. It is also occasionally visited by a white minister from Ashland.

There are still numerous indications of paganism among the Indians of the Bad River Reservation, some of whom maintain a place of worship or dancing house, where they hold Sioux and Medicine dances, which are religious performances and expressions of their belief. The church now, it is pleasant to remark, has made steady inroads upon all such outlandish beliefs, and through the unwearying and zealous efforts of the pastors who have visited the Reservations for a number of years, the Catholic congregation now outnumbers the pagan and Protestant combined. The Catholic school established on this Reservation is conducted by Franciscan Sisters from the Convent at La Crosse, Wisconsin. The number of regular boarders attending this institution, boys and girls together, is estimated at from eighty to ninety, besides which, however, there are quite a number of day scholars. This is what is known as a contract school.

Lac du Flambeau Mission.

THIS mission has two small frame churches, which were built by Father Verwyst. They are located about four miles apart, one, St. Anthony de Padua, being in the old Indian village of Flambeau (Wasswaganing), and is attended entirely by Indians, the other, St. Joseph's, is at the new village near Stearns and Herrick's saw-mill, the congregation attending it being composed of both Indians and whites. The mission of Lac du Flambeau was first visited by the Rev. Father Chebul about thirty-five years ago. On this occasion, and it is the only time that he was ever known to visit that place, he baptized a number of Indians. His successor, the Rev. John Gafron, O. S. F., also called at the place but once, the date of the occurrence being some fourteen or fifteen years ago. After him, Father Verwyst again took charge of the mission, maintaining the same for four years. Here his labors proved, for a considerable period, a most ungrateful task, the people, hardened in their pagan beliefs, being totally averse to any attempts to inculcate the principles of Christianity into their midst. To them the rights surrounding their paganish beliefs, the fanatical furor aroused by those wild and abandoned dances which pertain to their peculiar style of worship, all seemed to carry a greater force of conviction to their untutored minds than the simple and unostentatious manner in which truths of the Christian religion are conveyed to the human heart. It was against the undisputed teachings and beliefs of centuries that the Missionary Fathers were called to labor, and that, too, among a people who had been taught to defend their religion as they did their homes, entirely by force of arms. Argument with such people was, of course, an unknown factor, and, therefore, entirely out of the question, the only practical means of convincing them being to live among them, in such a manner as to demonstrate, as far as possible by one's very life, the truths of the teachings it was desired to impress upon them.

After Father Verwyst had labored with these people for a period of four years, Father Gafron again took charge of the mission, during which time he baptized a number of the Indians, mostly women. At the end of three years he was again followed by Father Verwyst, who remained for a similar period. The mission then fell to the charge of the Rev. Father Buschkühler, O. S. F., who, since taking charge, has baptized quite a number of the Indians, both adults and children. There is also a large Indian boarding school on this reservation, which was built at a cost of $50,000, and is in charge of about fifteen people. The attendance at his school numbers about ninety boarders of both sexes, the majority of whom are Catholics.

The little settlement at Lac du Flambeau consists of from forty to fifty families, about one-half of whom are Indian half-breeds.

Though, as previously stated, the task of converting these people seemed herculean and almost impossible, the labors of the several pastors attending them have resulted most satisfactorily, so that, at the present time, the cause of Christianty may be said to have obtained a firm foothold in their midst.

Lac Courtes Oreilles Mission.

THE mission on the Lac Courtes Oreilles Reservation is located about sixteen miles from Harvard, seat of Sawyer County, Wisconsin. This mission was first visited by Father Chebul about the year 1865. Thirteen years later Father Verwyst also said Mass at that place. From 1878 it was visited but few times, always on foot, from Bayfield, Wisconsin, which was about one hundred miles distant. These visits were made by the Rev. Fathers Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., and John Gafron, O. S. F., who baptized a great number of the pagans, both adults and children. At such times Mass was said in the house of Charles Oshoge, a "good" Indian, who is still alive.

About the year 1885 Father Vogt began the erection of the present church at this mission, on the completion of which Fathers Verwyst and Odorick Derenthal, O. S. F., now in Keshena, also labored. The building, which was completed some years ago, is neat in appearance, and is well furnished interiorly, having a nice altar and several handsome statues. The mission at the present time consists of some fifty Indian families, or about two hundred and fifty souls. There is a contract day school at this place which has an enrollment of some sixty scholars, from forty to fifty of whom are regular in attendance. This school is in charge of four Franciscan Sisters, of the convent at Greenfield Park, Milwaukee. The conduct of this mission, which also belongs to the La Pointe Agency, has been similar to that of those already mentioned, as regards its pastoral attendance, it being attended from 1882 to 1884 by the Rev. Odorick Derenthal, O. S. F., then by the Rev. Casimir Vogt, Father Verwyst three years, the Rev. Sylvester Buschkühler and at present by Father Verwyst. A number of the residents on this Reservation still adhere to their pagan beliefs, although the work of the church, since the organization of the mission, has been eminently satisfactory.

Pakwewang, or "Post," is another small Indian mission located on Lac Courtes Oreilles Reservation, and consists of about twenty families, or eighty souls. It is about twenty miles distant from the other mission, and has always been visited by the same Fathers who attend there. The church at this place, which is a large and commodious building, was partially erected by the Rev. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., and completed during the pastorate of the Rev. Sylvester Buschkühler, O. S. F. Many of the Indians here still adhere firmly to their pagan fallacies, although, as a rule, they seem well disposed toward Christianity, and are in every way friendly to the pastors who visit them.

A small church was also built by the Protestants at Pakwewang, about fourteen years ago, but is no longer in use, as all of the Indians who have embraced Christianity are followers of the Catholic faith.

Round Lake Mission.

ROUND LAKE, or, as it is called in the Indian language, Ga-Wawiegamag, is a small Indian village on the same Reservation with the Lac Courtes Oreilles, and is about eight miles distant from the mission bearing that name. At this settlement there are a few Catholic Indians, who are occasionally visited by the pastors ministering to the others.

There is no church, at present, at Round Lake, and the residents there are, for the most part, still pagans.

Bellils Falls Mission.

BELLILS FALLS is another small Indian mission of about a dozen half-breed Indian families. There is a beautiful little frame church at this place, which was built by the Rev. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., from money principally collected from the lumbering camps in that region. Mr. Charles Belle Isle is the patron of this settlement, a Canadian Frenchman, who came to Bellils Falls about sixty years ago, and is now almost ninety years of age. He has been married twice, both wives being Indians, and his children and grandchildren form the mission, which is located outside the Reservation, and on the Chippewa River, in Sawyer County.

The missions at Lac Courtes Oreilles, Pakwewang, Bellils Falls, and Flambeau Farm, were visited by Bishop Flasch, of La Crosse diocese, in 1883, on which occasion he conferred the Sacrament of Confirmation. The Right Rev. Schwebach also conferred the same Sacrament at these missions about four years ago.

Flambeau Farm Station.

THE Station at Flambeau Farm, the Indian name for which is Wasswagain-Sibing, is composed of Canadian-French and Indians. The first pastor to visit this mission was the Rev. Father Coffey, the exact date of which visitation is not given, but which, it is supposed, occurred between the years 1854 and 1860. Subsequently, it was attended from Chippewa Falls by the Rev. Fathers Smedding, Abbelen, now chaplain of the Notre Dame Convent of Milwaukee, and Charles F. X. Goldsmith. The Indian portion of this settlement numbered about twelve families, who were, and are still, attended by the Franciscan Fathers. The first of these who visited the place, from Bayfield, Wisconsin, were the Rev. Fathers Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., and John Gafron, O. S. F., who endured untold hardships, miseries and privations during the many years devoted by them to mission labors among the natives of that section. For it must be remembered that in the early days the means for transportation were of the most limited character, journeys for the greater part being made on foot, through almost impenetrable growths of timber, and rough and dangerous ways, which tested the patience and endurance of the hardiest. Neither were these visits limited to that portion of the year when the weather would naturally offer more favorable conditions for such an undertaking. But the journeys were ofttimes made between these places, a distance of about one hundred and fifty miles, on snowshoes, when the air was biting and the surroundings as dreary as every untoward condition could possibly make them.

At a later date Flambeau Farm, as well as other missions adjacent, were attended from Superior by the Revs. Casimir Vogt and Odorick Derenthal, O. S. F. For the past few years they have been regularly attended from Ashland by Father Verwyst, and the Rev. Sylvester Buschkühler. Just at the present time the former has sole charge of the missions, but it is anticipated that in the near future they will be placed under the administration of the Rev. Bartholomew Feldmann, O. S. F., who is at present engaged in acquiring a thorough knowledge of the Chippewa language.

There is a large frame church at Flambeau Farm, with a house attached, both of which were built during the administration of Father Vogt. The mission is not located on the Reservation, but at a point on the Chippewa River about thirty-five miles from Chippewa Falls, in Chippewa County.

Mud Lake Mission.

THIS is also a small Indian settlement in Chippewa County, and is located about ten miles from Flambeau Farm. It consists of about fifteen Indian and five white families. At present the missionary priest visiting the settlement says Mass at the house of Charles Corbine, a Chippewa half-breed, who was a Union soldier during the Rebellion, and has always been a devout and earnest Catholic.

The mission of Mud Lake has been attended at intervals during the last ten years by Fathers Casimir Vogt, John Gafron, C. Verwyst and Sylvester Buschkühler. The pastors of this settlement are much gratified with the evident progress and improvement made in Catholic affairs among the people, and the deep interest taken by them in everything pertaining to the advancement of the church. A slight evidence of this feeling may be noticed in a neat little church, 24x40 feet, which was built at the mission during the past year.

Gordon Mission.

THE little mission at Gordon, or, as the Indians call it, Waiakamig, is composed of fifteen Indian and a few white families. There is also a neat frame church at this place, which was built by the Rev. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., about ten years ago, and dedicated to the Lady of the Angels. The mission was first attended by Father Verwyst in October, 1878, and was visited several times a year from that date until 1883, by Fathers Vogt and Gafron, from Bayfield, from which place it is about eighty miles.

Anton Gaudin, which latter name anglicized means Gordon, is the patron of the mission. He also is a Chippewa half-breed, and a good practical Catholic, through whose efforts the church was built. Father Odorick Derenthal was the next to attend this mission, visiting the place for two years, when Father Vogt again took charge of it, for a period of six years. After him, Father Verwyst again maintained the pastorate for a couple of years, then he was succeeded by the Rev. Sylvester Buschkühler, who remained from 1892 to 1896. At the present time Father Verwyst is again in charge. As in the case of the missions immediately preceding this one, this little community, which is in Douglas County, is outside of the Reservation.

Solon Springs Mission.

THERE is a little mission at Solon Springs, Wagwisskeg, formerly known as White Birch. It is located in Douglas County, outside of the Reservation, and is about eight miles from the Gordon Settlement. This community consists of about fifteen half-breed and eight white families. The little log church at Solon Springs is attended by the same priests who visit Gordon. Catholic interests at this mission are in quite a satisfactory condition, and it is highly probable that within a short time a new church will take the place of the little log building now there.

Trade Lake Mission.

THIS is a small Indian mission located in Burnett County, Wisconsin. It is not a settlement, but, rather, a station, which is visited by the good Indians of that section, who live scattered over a large tract of country, and are attended by a missionary twice each year. On these occasions they congregate at the lake, living in tents for two or three days, or as long as the pastor remains with them. They are very sincere in their efforts to obtain religious instruction, and receive the Holy Sacraments whenever the missionary priest comes to visit them.

The church here is a small frame structure, which stands near the home of George Holms, about ten miles from Grantsburg. The country round about this place is quite thickly settled by Swedes, who have for a number of years past been converging in considerable numbers toward that part of the country.

The mission of Trade Lake, which is located in what is known as the St. Croix River country, was first established and visited by the Revs. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., and John Gafron, O. S. F., who came there from Bayfield, a distance of almost two hundred miles. It was subsequently attended by the Revs. Odorick Derenthal, O. S. F., C. Verwyst and Sylvester Baschkühler, but will be transferred, with other missions, to the charge of the Rev. Bartholomew Feldmann, in the near future.

Mouth of Yellow River Mission.

THIS is a small Indian settlement in Burnett County, some thirty miles from Grantsburg, where a log church was built by the Rev. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F. It was also attended from Bayfield by the same Fathers who visited Trade Lake. At the present time it is attended from Ashland. There are twelve Indian Catholic families living at this place.

In addition to the missions already mentioned, there is one at Hayward, county seat of Sawyer County. Here there are located twenty-five white families, who are attended one Sunday each month by a visiting pastor from Ashland. There is a neat little church at this place, which was built by Father Casimir Vogt about the year 1883.

There is another mission at Cable, where the six families residing are visited four times a year by the same pastor.

Another little mission is at Spring Brook, Sawyer County, composed of a few Indian and white families. There is also one at Minong, in Washburn County, where about eight white families reside. Services are celebrated at this place in a log house, which was erected by those people for church purposes. The attendant pastor comes there from Ashland once every two months. The majority of these settlers are Canadian French.

The mission at Bashaw, also in Washburn County, consists of four or five Indian families.

There is also a mission at Yellow Lake, Burnett County, where ten white families are living, and one at Balsam Lake, in the same County, where a few Indian families reside. Besides these, there is the Jordon settlement, in Sawyer County, comprising seven white families, and Superior Junction, where a few Catholics of mixed nationalities are living.

Still another of the numerous missions attended from Ashland by the Franciscan Fathers, is one at Mellen, which is at present in charge of the Rev. Father Damian Koziolek, O. S. F. Mellen is a small town at the junction of the Hurley branch of the Wisconsin Central Railway. This town is intersected by Bad River, a rather insignificant stream, but which furnishes enough water-power for running a tannery, which was started there something over a year ago. This establishment, when complete, will be one of the largest of its kind in the country, giving occupation to several hundred men. The buildings connected with this concern are numerous, and as the majority of the people obtaining employment in the tannery are Catholics, there is every indication that the congregation at Mellen will rapidly increase in strength and numbers.

The congregation at Mellen was established somewhere about the year 1885 or 1886, by the Rev. Father Chrysostom Verwyst, who for some considerable period visited the Catholic settlers in that section a few times each year.

The Catholic church at Mellen, a frame building 60x28 feet, which is not yet completed, was begun in July, 1896, Mr. L. E. Winterhalter, present postmaster and general merchant at that place, and his partner, Mr. A. Markee, being head promoters of the idea.

The congregation, which a year ago numbered not to exceed ten families, now consists of about thirty-five, most of whom are Irish and German, although there are a few Canadians and Italians. There is an Altar Society for Married Ladies connected with this congregation, which is dedicated to St. Anna. Services are held at Mellen, regularly, once each month, but it is confidently expected, with the rapid growth and particularly bright prospects of the place, that these will be of more frequent occurrence in the near future.

High Bridge, also in Ashland County, is another small mission attended from Ashland once each month by the Rev. Father Koziolek. There is no church at this place at present, although it is the desire and intention of both priest and people to begin the erection of a small structure within a short time. The ground for such a building has already been donated by Mr. J. J. McGeehan, and quite a little money is available with which to begin the work. The people comprising this congregation are nearly all farmers who have settled around and about High Bridge Station, which is also located on the Wisconsin Central Railway.

The number of families is at present estimated at from thirty to forty, and is divided pretty evenly between people of Canadian and Bohemian birth. Heretofore, services have been held at High Bridge, in the district school building, on one Saturday in each month.

The mission at Drummond, Bayfield County, Wisconsin, is attended four times a year by a Father from Ashland. The population at this place is not a settled one, so that it is difficult to estimate the number of Catholics belonging to the congregation, as sometimes there are as many as thirty families, while at others the number is reduced to ten, or even less.

Another mission at Mason, also in Bayfield County, has a little frame church, and is attended from four to six times a year from Ashland or Bayfield. There are seventeen Irish and French Catholic families in this little settlement, some of whom are converts.

There is a small station at Cranberry, Douglas County, which receives attendance eight times a year by a priest from Bayfield. The congregation at this place consists of from ten to twenty families, of Irish, French and German nationality. There is no church at present at this place.

The station at Portwing, Bayfield County, is attended twelve times a year by the priest from Bayfield. The congregation numbers about eighteen families, composed of settlers and mill hands, most of whom are Irish.

The little mission at Orienta, Bayfield County, Wisconsin, consisting of five families, is attended six times a year by a priest from Bayfield.

The mission at Sanburn, Ashland County, Wisconsin, consists of thirty families, most of whom are farmers of German or French nationality. There is a church at this place, in which, though still incomplete, services are held on every fourth Sunday by one of the priests from Ashland.

Grantsburg is also visited from Ashland about twice a year. There is no church at this place, but services are held at the house of Mr. Burns, the general attendance numbering about six families.

Church of Our Holy Redeemer, Athens, Wis.

THE congregation of Our Holy Redeemer, at Athens, Marathon County, Wisconsin, was established in July, 1896. Prior to that time, the Catholics in this vicinity were attended at stated periods by pastors living in adjacent parishes. Thus, the first to come there, in 1882, was the Rev. Ignatius Lager, whose successors were the Rev. Fathers J. Ritz, Joerres, C. P. Weikmann, and A. W. Gara, the latter being succeeded by the present and first resident pastor, the Rev. Anthony Muehlenkamp. The congregation now consists of four hundred and fifty members. Of Catholic organizations connected with this parish, there are the Catholic Order of Foresters: F. A. Strupp, chief ranger; A. M. Munes, vice-chief ranger; Frank Stroemer, past chief ranger; Joseph Braun, recording secretary; F. N. Blecha, financial secretary, and Charles Greiner, treasurer. Confraternity of Christian Mothers, of which Mrs. Charles Kiehl is president; Mrs. F. E. Blecha, treasurer, and Mrs. George Sutter and Mrs. Joseph Braun, directors.

Church of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Auburndale, Wis.

THIS congregation was founded at Auburndale, Wood County, Wisconsin, in 1878. Two years later a church was built at that place, services until its completion being held in the private residence of Mr. St. Thomas, by Father Schuettelhofer of Marshfield, then visiting pastor, under whose direction the church at Auburndale was built. The first resident pastor appointed to this congregation was the Rev. N. Kils, who remained for one year and a half, when it again became a mission to Marshfield, of which parish the Rev. Ignatius Schaller was then pastor. In August, 1886, the Rev. Joseph Joch assumed the charge, working very successfully among the people of Auburndale. Carefully and judiciously he administered the affairs of these people, whose financial condition at that particular time seemed none of the brightest. There being no suitable parochial dwelling, they secured for Father Joch an unpretentious little building, in which he made his home for a considerable period. Some years later a larger and more pretentious dwelling was procured, the old one being arranged for a school. In 1887 Father Joch erected a quite commodious school building, which when furnished cost considerably over $2,000. This school was directed by three Sisters from the Convent at Greenfield Park, Milwaukee, until 1892, but is at the present time in charge of a lay teacher. The regular attendance now numbers about eighty scholars. During his residence at Auburndale, Father Joch enriched the parish by the purchase of several new vestments, a new ostensorium, ciborium and other handsome decorations for the interior of the church. His successor, the Rev.

Church of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Auburndale, Wis.

Rev. John Brudermanns.

Peter Schnitzler, remained but a very short time, being compelled to discontinue his labors owing to a long and trying illness. In 1892 the Rev. August Douven was assigned to the charge, where he worked very successfully for four years. In August, 1896, upon his transfer to another parish, the present rector, the Rev. John Brudermanns, assumed the charge. Soon after Father Brudermanns' arrival at Auburndale, work was begun on the present parsonage, which is now completed.

The congregation of the Church of the Nativity consists of about ninety-five families. There are two Catholic organizations in this congregation: A Mothers' Society, of which Mrs. J. Lusk is president, Mrs. A. Hauks, secretary, and Mrs. Baltus, treasurer; and a Young Ladies' Society, of which Miss Mary Baltus is president and Miss Frances Syms, treasurer. The present trustees of the church are Messrs. Wenz, Treml and John Markee.

The congregation of St. Kilian's and church at Sherry were organized and built about the year 1882, the same being attached to Junction City, of which parish the Rev. August Kroulsky was then pastor. In 1888 the mission was transferred to Auburndale, of which congregation the Rev. J. Joch was pastor. The school at Sherry was built either in 1889 or 1890. Following Father Joch, the Rev. A. Douven had charge of St. Kilian's, which he visited from 1892 until 1896, when the present pastor at Auburndale, the Rev. John Brudermanns, assumed the pastorate.

The Rev. John Brudermanns was born in Germany, and came to this country in August, 1892. He completed his studies for the priesthood at the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, and was ordained on the 21st of June, 1896.

St. Joseph's Church, Baraboo, Wis.

ON the banks of the Baraboo River—banks which up to a few years ago were dotted at irregular distances with the circular, bird-shaped or beast-shaped tumuli of the Mound Builders, but which are fast becoming obliterated by the growth and spread of the city—stands St. Joseph's Church.

An almost forgotten race have those Mound Builders become, with nothing but a few evidences of a peculiar craft to tell of their having been a factor in God's universal plan. And as to where they begun, where ended; whether of nomadic or other tendencies, or what, perchance, their characteristics or customs, none for a surety know. That they lived, however, is a fact beyond dispute, for even Time's all leveling hand has spared some proofs of their crude and not uninteresting arts. But even these evidences are fast disappearing before the boundless sweep of advancing civilization, so that for posterity there will be but little left beyond what is to be found among the archives of the nation.

St. Joseph's Church, Baraboo, Wis.

The few Catholics who lived in or about Baraboo, preceding the war, were attended by priests from Sauk City or elsewhere until 1859, when a little red brick church, owned by the Congregationalists, was purchased. This building was used until 1874, when it was sold and the present St. Joseph's Church erected. This structure, though fully adequate as an evidence of Catholic zeal at that time, is far from being up to date, either as regards appointments or appearance, and it is devoutly to be hoped that it will shortly be replaced with a church comporting in every respect with the dignity of so large and influential a parish. With regret we feel also compelled to mention the fact that this large city parish has as yet no Catholic school.

St. Mary's of the Pines Mission.

The parish of Baraboo was founded in 1859, although Mass had been offered in houses by visiting priests from Sauk City for many years. Since that time the resident pastors have been: The Revs. Joseph Schreiner, 1859 to 1869; Matt. White, 1869 to 1871; Wm. J. Coughlin, 1871 to 1873; A. Verberk, 1873 to 1874; Aloy Laquiel, 1874 to 1876; Charles Gunkel, 1876 to 1878; A. Michel, 1878 to 1880; P. J. Lavin, 1880 to 1887. Since then the Very Rev. J. T. Durward, Dean, has been the resident pastor. The congregation of St. Joseph's consists of about eight hundred members. The only Catholic order represented in this parish is that of the Catholic Knights, of which there are quite a number.

Aside from St. Joseph's, and attended from Baraboo, is a sweet little mission church, hidden away in the woods,—as God's best gifts often are,—among the hills of Caledonia, Columbia County. It was built on the family home, "Durward's Glen," and here "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" have an opportunity once a month to receive the sacraments. This little church is dedicated to St. Mary of the Pines.

The present incumbent of St. Joseph's Church, Baraboo, is Dean Durward. He is a son of the celebrated B. I. Durward, for a long time professor in the St. Francis Seminary, and who, besides donating numerous costly altar pieces to different churches throughout the state, has given several volumes of choice verse to the world. The Dean was born in Milwaukee in 1847. In 1853, his parents becoming Catholics, he was baptized by Archbishop Henni, giving up the name of Emerson, by which he had been known, and assuming that of John. For some time he served Mass for Father Urbanek in the Convent Chapel of the School Sisters, and there received that impetus which resulted in an overpowering desire to attain the priesthood. Completing his studies at St. Francis, he was finally ordained by Archbishop Henni, with the class of 1870. His first pastorate was at Tomah, Wis., where he remained for fourteen years. This position was by no means a sinecure, especially for one so young in the service, for instead of but one charge, he had seven to attend. He had also to contend with an amount of Christian torpidity but little to be expected, and which led him, when expatiating upon this peculiarity, to often refer to them as "the seven sleepers of Ephesus." Thus, Sparta, Wilton, Ridgeville, Black River Falls, Pine Hill, Roaring Creek, Indian Creek and Remington were visited, and while under his charge the churches of Wilton and Black River Falls were erected, several of the others enlarged and a Catholic school built at Tomah.

Rev. J. T. Durward.

In 1874 Dean Durward obtained permission from Bishop Heiss to join the first American Pilgrimage to Lourdes and Rome. As the unction of the priesthood had been the first great ambition of his life fulfilled, so the second was accomplished in kissing the hand of Pius IX. From 1884 to 1887 he was pastor of Seneca, Crawford County, but in the latter year was appointed to his present charge. In 1889 he again visited Europe, this time with the first American Pilgrimage to Palestine, and extending his journey so as to realize the third great desire of his heart, in venerating those spots so dear to the Christian, and with which a personal acquaintance is so vital to the devotion of a priest.

Aside from his priestly duties, Dean Durward has found time to enter the field of letters, being the author of "Sonnets of Holy Land," written during his journey there. He is also author of "A Primer for Converts," and is at present engaged with a large work on Palestine.

Christ Church, Bayfield, Wis.

THE present church of the Bayfield English and Indian congregation was erected in 1860 by the Rev. Johannes Chebul. He remained with these people from 1860 to 1874, when the Rev. Francis Xavier Pfaller became pastor of the congregation, and he remained until 1875. The next pastor was the Rev. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., who had charge of this people from 1878 to 1884. His successor was the Rev. J. Gafron, O. S. F., from 1884 to 1891. In the latter year, the Rev. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., took charge of this parish and has administrated it to the present day. The congregation at the present time consists of about one hundred and seventy-six families. Of educational institutions connected with Christ Church, there is a boarding school with an enrollment of forty-three scholars, the Bayfield day school, having a regular attendance of one hundred scholars, and the Redcliff or Buffalo day school, with an attendance of fifty. These schools are all taught by the Sisters of the Order of St. Francis, from the Convent at Joliet, Illinois. Of Catholic organizations connected with this congregation there are the following: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: officers, Charles Rudd, John Engeldinger and Otto Hofele. St. Joseph's Temperance Society: officers, Mike Brisette, John Gordon and William Neveux. St. Joseph's Society, Redcliff: officers, Anton Buffalo, George Gurnoe. White Ladies' Society: officers, Mmes. Nelson La Bonté, Emma Jones, and Miss Dora Stahl. Chippewa Ladies' Society: officers, Angela Gordon, Susan Morrin and Maggie Gordon.

Christ Church, Bayfield, Wis.

The first Catholic church erected at La Pointe, in Ashland County, was built by Father Marquette, S. J., and dedicated by him to the Holy Ghost. The present church, which is located on

Rev. Casimir Vogt.

Madalene Island, was erected in 1835, by some twenty-five Catholic families residing there at that time, and under the direction of the Rev. Father Baraga, who had come there as a missionary during that year.

Father Baraga administered to the spiritual wants of this people from that year until 1845, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Otho Skolla, O. S. F., who remained until the latter part of 1853. His successors were the Rev. Fathers Timothy Carié, from 1854 to 1855; August Eugene Benoit, from 1855 to 1858; Angelus Van Paemel, in 1859; Johannes Chebul, from 1860 to 1874; Francis Xavier Pfaller, 1875; Johannes Gafron, O. S. F., from 1878 to 1879; Servatius Altmicks, O. S. F., from 1879 to 1880; Eustace Vollmer, O. S. F., from 1880 to 1883; Johannes Gafron, O. S. F., again in 1884; Chrysostom Verwyst, O. S. F., from 1884 to 1887; Johannes Gafron, O. S. F., from 1887 to 1891; Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., from 1891 to 1893; Servatius Altmicks O. S. F., from 1893 to 1896, and from that time until the present, the Rev. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., has been in charge.

The original church at La Pointe was founded in the year 1665, making it the oldest building of its kind in the State of Wisconsin. This, it will be remembered, was dedicated by Father Marquette to the Holy Ghost, but when the new church was built by Father Baraga, in 1835, it was placed under the patronage of St. Joseph, and remains as such until the present day.

The Rev. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., was born at Wurzen, Prussia, in 1846. He was educated at the College and the University of Breslau, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1870. After ordination, he served as chaplain at Neumarkt until 1875. Then he joined the Order of St. Francis, making his home at Teutopolis, Illinois. In 1878 he was appointed missionary to the Chippewa Indians on Lake Superior, residing at Bayfield from that year until 1884. From 1884 until 1891, he was stationed at Superior, and in charge of Indian missions in Wisconsin and Minnesota. From 1891 until the present time, he has been located at Bayfield.

Church of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Big River, Wis.

IN 1861 the Rev. James Stehle came for the first time to Big River, then Oak Grove, from Hudson, St. Croix County, where he was stationed as parish priest, and he sang high Mass and preached in the house of Mr. Peter Fassbinder, for the first time on All Saints day. The congregation consisted at that time of eleven German families and five single men. Of these are still remaining the families of John Gillig, Jacob Baker, John Shommer and the descendants of Peter Fassbinder and Louis Dauser. The same year the little congregation began to build a log church, completing the same in the spring of 1862. The cemetery was about half a mile north from the church on the property of Mr. James Boles, who also owns the land on which the church was erected. The Rev. James Stehle continued visiting Big River until 1865, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Father Seif, who remained about one year. His successor was the Rev. Father Verwyst, now a Franciscan Father and famous Indian missionary. In the year 1866 a new church building was decided upon, although some controversy arose among the congregation as to its location. This was finally settled by the German element undertaking the work, the spot selected for a site being about half a mile from that of the old one. The same year three acres of ground were purchased for church, cemetery and parish house purposes, from Mr. A. F. Carrol, and one hundred cords of stone were hauled to the grounds by members of the congregation. But the idea of a stone church was latterly abandoned and a frame building was completed in 1873. Meanwhile, the Rev. Father Verwyst resigned the pastorate at Oak Grove and was followed by Father Steinberg, who took charge of that congregation in the spring of 1872. He remained at Oak Grove until April, 1873. His successor was the Rev. Father Gunkel, who came in October, 1873. The following year the parish house and a stable were built and finished. Father Gunkel also collected a considerable amount towards the purchase of the present church bell, and built the high altar almost entirely at his own expense. His successor was the Rev. Father Hanses, who came in October, 1876. Under his direction an addition to the church containing a sanctuary and two sacristies were built at a cost of $800. Later on a building for parish, school and Sisters' dwelling was erected and in 1881 the school was opened by Sisters from La Crosse with an attendance of about eighty children. The Rev. Father Hanses was succeeded in September, 1884, by the Rev. Father Guzowski. Soon after the present church was built the congregation underwent a great change, many well-to-do Catholic German families coming from Pennsylvania and settling in Trimbelle and Diamond Bluff, which lies south of the Trimbelle road. In consequence of this the church and school-house no longer held a central location, but were rather in the northwest portion of the settlement. As this was too far for many of the children to go their parents proposed to build and support a Catholic parish school in their midst. To this the Rev. Father Guzowski acquiesced, and with the permission of the Rt. Rev. Bishop Flasch, a nice school and Sisters' house were built in Huppert's settlement. Father Guzowski left the parish in July, 1885, and was succeeded by the Rev. Father Kilian Beyer, a nephew of Right Rev. Bishop Flasch. He purchased the side altar for the church and was otherwise of much benefit to the congregation. Much regretted and loved by the people, he left this parish to take charge, as spiritual advisor, of the Sisters of Perpetual Adoration at La Crosse, in May, 1888. His successor was the Rev. Father Schoelch, who made many most necessary improvements to the parish-house. He was succeeded in the spring of 1892 by the Rev. Father Weckes, who remained but a few months, and was followed by the Rev. Father Miller, October, 1892. During his pastorate, the Bohemians became separated from the congregation of Big River, and built a nice little church in Czerma township of River Falls, called so after their home in Bohemia. This congregation from the beginning prospered so that they were able in the spring of 1897 to build a sanctuary to their church, in Gothic style, with cross arches and a spacious sacristy. Czerma is now attended on week days only. Owing to continued illness, Father Miller was compelled to resign, being succeeded as pastor at Big River by the Rev. Father Kaluza of Plum City, who assumed the duties in September, 1895.

Church of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Big River, Wis.

The history of Prescott Mission attached to Big River is about the same as that of the mother church. The present church of Prescott was built twenty-five years ago, chiefly by the zeal and material help of the late Mr. Finner, whose only living son, Mr. Joseph Finner, still lives in Prescott. Schwalen's settlement in St. Croix County, about five miles from River Falls and fifteen from Big River, has always been attended on a week day from Big River.

There are, in connection with the Big River congregation, an Altar Society, St. Joseph's Benevolent Society for Men and a Sodality for the Children of Mary, the latter being recently organized.

The Rev. Louis Kaluza was born on January 11, 1850, at Beuthen, Upper Silesia. His father, a descendant of a Polish family in Silesia, was an officer of the Prussian government and army. As such he took an active part in the campaigns of 1848, 1866 and 1870. His mother was Louisa Hulda Schubert, who came of a German family. Louis Kaluza's earlier education was obtained at the Gymnasia at Oppeln, Gleiwitz and Breslau, in Silesia; then in Flensburg, in Schleswig-Holstein, to which place his father was transferred by the Prussian government. When the Franco-Prussian war broke out, in 1870, young Kaluza enlisted as a volunteer in the first Schleswig Infantry Regiment, No. 84, and took an active part in the campaign in France. His father intending him to remain in the service, he afterwards passed his examination, but desiring to follow a priestly calling entered the Society of Jesus in the beginning of February, 1872. After serving his novitiate in Muenster, Westphalia and Exaesen in Limburg, Holland, he studied rhetoric, philosophy and theology in Wynandrade, Blyenbeck, Holland, and Ditton Hall, Lancashire, England, with the exception of two years, which he spent as prefect in the College of Maria Schein, Bohemia, Austria. He was ordained to the priesthood in September, 1882, at Ditton Hall, Lancashire, England, and finished his education at Portico, Lancashire, in 1884. In August, 1884, he was sent by his Superior to Prairie du Chien, Grant County, Wisconsin, to take charge of the Bohemian settlement there and in Eastman. From this work he was compelled to withdraw, owing to the effects of a painful disease, and for some time thereafter worked as secular priest in La Crosse, and later at Menomonie, Dunn County. He was, also for a short time, in Muscoda and Lancaster, in Grant County. Then again he took up the religious life of the Society of Jesus, being stationed first at Florissant, Mo., but his health failing once more, he established the congregation at Plum City and took up his residence at Big River, Pierce County, Wisconsin, in 1895.

Rev. Louis Kaluza.

St. Paul's Church, Bloomer, Wis.

MANY years prior to its settlement as a parish, the Catholic congregation of St. Paul's, at Bloomer, Chippewa County, Wisconsin, had been in existence as a mission, being attended from St. Peter's, Tilden, Chippewa County, Wisconsin. The priests who visited the mission during that period were the Revs. George Keller, Godfrey Neser and

St. Paul's Church, Bloomer, Wis.

Albert Mendl. In 1884, however, the parish was established, Bloomer receiving its resident pastor in the person of the Rev. E. A. Hanses, who built a parsonage, and established a parochial school, which was conducted in the church. Father Hanses remained at Bloomer from October, 1884, to June, 1888, his successor being the Rev. Father Blaschke (1888 to February, 1894), who made a marked improvement to the parish in the erection of a substantial school house. In course of time Father Blaschke was transferred to another parish, his successor being the Rev. Joseph J. Miller (February, 1894, to December, 1894), who in turn was followed by the Rev. Father Schoelch (December, 1894, to December, 1897), on whose transfer to Holy Rosary congregation, at Medford, the pastorate of St. Paul's was given to the Rev. Adolph Miller, formerly of Colby parish, Wisconsin, who assumed the duties November 29, 1897. The congregation of St. Paul's now consists of one hundred families, and the school connected with the parish, which is in charge of

Rev. Michael Schoelch.

Franciscan Sisters of Christian Charity, from the Convent of Alverno, has an attendance of about one hundred and forty children. There is a St. Paul's Benevolent Society and a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin connected with this congregation, the latter having been in existence several years prior to the establishment of Bloomer as a parish. The present officers of this organization are: Joseph Faschingbaur, president; L. Kranzfelder, vice-president; H. D. Loehnis, secretary, and M. Steighen, treasurer. St. Paul's Benevolent Society was founded in 1889, its present officers being: John Wolf, president; H. D. Loehnis, vice-president; M. Steighen, secretary, and Joseph Faschingbaur, treasurer.

There is also a mission connected with this parish at Brush Prairie, which was established and dedicated to St. Catherine. The congregation comprising this mission numbers some twenty-five families, all of whom are German. Regular services are held at Brush Prairie on every third Sunday in the month.

The Rev. Michael Schoelch,[1] until recently pastor of this congregation, was born at Baden-Baden, Germany, September 19, 1862. He came to the United States when twenty years of age, and, after completing the necessary studies, was ordained to the priesthood at St. Francis' Seminary, near Milwaukee, in June, 1886. He said his first Mass at St. Charles Borromeo's Church, Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, on the 29th of the same month, after which he was appointed to the pastorate at Cumberland. Later he was transferred successively to Rice Lake, Big River, Edson, Boyd and Bloomer, from whence he was recently transferred to Medford.

St. Joseph's Church, Boyd, Wis.

FOR a number of years the congregation of the Sacred Heart of Jesus at Edson, Wis., was attended by Father Goldsmith of Chippewa Falls, who continued making regular visits to that parish until March, 1883, when Father H. Untraut moved to Edson and became the resident pastor. Under his administration the church was enlarged and a new parsonage and school-house built. On April 13, 1888, he was succeeded by the Rev. W. Weckes, who in turn found a successor in the Rev. M. Schoelch, who, taking charge in February, 1892, remained until 1894. During this latter period the school building was totally destroyed by fire. Upon leaving this pastorate, Father Schoelch moved to Boyd, a mission established by the Rev. W. Weckes in 1890. Here Father Schoelch completed a church and also built a school-house. The mother church at Edson then became a mission and is now regularly attended by the resident priest at Boyd. The present pastor is the Rev. C. Nau, who built the parsonage and has made several material improvements in the church and church grounds. There are now about four hundred members in the congregation.

St. Joseph's Church and School, Boyd, Wis.

There are two parochial schools connected with the charge; one, at Boyd, having an enrollment of one hundred and fifteen scholars, the other, at Edson, of seventy-five. Both schools are superintended by Franciscan Sisters of Christian Charity from Alverno.

Rev. C. Nau.

Of Catholic societies at Boyd, there are three: the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Nic. Schumacher, president; Francis X. Kleiner, secretary, and Theodore Butscher, treasurer; the Married Ladies' Society and Young Ladies' Society.

The pastor, the Rev. C. Nau, was born August 12, 1862, at Rossdorf, Germany. He came to this country at the age of nineteen, when he at once entered the Seminary at St. Francis. He was ordained at La Crosse by the Rt. Rev. K. Flasch, June 24, 1887. He then served for a time as assistant priest at Marshfield, was pastor at Hewitt for a year and a half, and also pastor at Mosinee for nearly five years.

St. Anthony de Padua's Church, Cazenovia, Wis.

THE first Catholic settlers in Cazenovia, Richland County, Wisconsin, were John Bernaman and Frederick Veitelhoff, who arrived there in 1851. Three years later one Peter Jax came there, and two years after him Theodore Moll, Arnold Bauer and John Hansemann. William Duren, Joseph Dreesen, Joseph Escher and Lambert Hansen arrived there in 1857.

(1) A biographical sketch of his successor, the Rev. Adolph Miller, will be found in connection with the history of his former parish at Colby.

The first Mass said at Cazenovia of which any record has been made was celebrated by the Rev. Father M. Gartner in 1857, in the house of John Bernaman. The first child is said to have been baptized in that vicinity by the Rev. Nicholas Stehlé in the year 1855. The first church was erected in 1864 at Cazenovia, and was a frame building 26x36 feet. At that time the congregation consisted of just sixteen members. Two years subsequent to that date, a parsonage was also built. From 1858 until 1861 the mission at Cazenovia was attended by the Rev. Father Weinhart, from 1861 to 1863 by Father Stehlé, and from 1863 to 1867 by the Rev. Father Bernhard. During the year 1868 Father Bernhard was appointed as resident pastor of the parish, remaining as such until 1872, when the pastorate was transferred to the Rev. Father Beau, who was followed by Father Metzler, and he in 1883 by Father Grosse, who is still in charge of the congregation. The second church, a veneered structure 84x40 feet, was built at Cazenovia in 1884, and a new parsonage in the following year. Additions were made to the latter building during the years 1888 and 1889.

The parochial school in connection with the public school, which is in charge of School Sisters from La Crosse, was established in 1867. The latest statistics inform us that this parish consists of seventy Catholic families, or four hundred and thirty-nine souls. Of these families sixty are German, eight English, and two French. The school has an attendance of about one hundred and twenty pupils.

The mission of St. Bridget's at Westford, in Richland County, Wisconsin, was established in the year 1858, at which time the erection of the church was begun. Owing to the smallness of the community, however, as well as other contingencies pertaining to the earlier days throughout the Northwest, this building was not completed until 1863. Four years prior to the establishment of this congregation the first Catholic settlers took up their abode in the vicinity of Westford. Among those coming there during the year 1854 were: Messrs. Donaghoe, Sweeny, John Keane, and Carpenter. The following year Thomas McGlynn arrived at Westford, as also did Thomas Roach. The Rev. Father Montague, who at that time was established at Lyndon Station, was the first pastor to attend this mission. His successor was the Rev. Nicholas Stehle, and he was followed by the successive pastors at Cazenovia. The congregation consists of forty-six members, all Irish excepting one French family. The frame church was erected by the Rev. Father Metzler, and is 36x72 feet.

About the year 1850 the western part of Sauk County was an unbroken wilderness, its few white inhabitants consisting mainly of trappers. Four years later Jonas Tower, a wealthy iron manufacturer from New York, first made his appearance in the vicinity of what is now known as Ironton. Finding iron ore there in considerable quantities, he induced a number of his former employes, many of whom were Irish Catholics, to come West. Prominent among these were Francis Kernan, Henry Martin, Thomas Finnegan and Joseph Byrne, all of whom settled in or about the village of Ironton.

In the fall of 1858 the Rev. Peter Montague, a Catholic priest, at that time residing at Lyndon Station, Juneau County, made his first appearance at the home of Mr. Martin, a log hut on the left bank of the Baraboo River, and northwest of the little village, where he performed the functions of a Catholic Missionary for the first time in the new settlement. Several additions were now rapidly made to the little community, among the new arrivals being: Lawrence and Dennis Bray, Patrick Lambert, Jeremiah Doyle and Dennis Clossy. In 1860 Mr. Tower created new interests in the settlement by donating a village lot to his Catholic employes for the purpose of erecting a church thereon. Funds, however, were very scarce, and it was only after the most strenuous efforts on the part of these people that they were enabled to lay the foundation for and erect a rude structure 22x40 feet in dimensions. Later the Rev. Father Beau made an addition to the church, so that it is now 22x60 feet. It was during the fall of this same year that the first Mass was offered in the new church by Father Montague. For several years following the completion of this building but little, if any, progress was made in the interest of the church, although the people were zealous and properly attentive to their duties. In 1876, however, the building was reseated with new and more comfortable pews, and a sacristy added to the structure, with a permanent altar therein. In 1886 the extreme depression of the iron industry caused the exodus of many of the earlier residents of the town and necessarily affected, to a considerable degree, the interests and condition of church affairs at Ironton. Thus matters may be said to have remained in a dormant condition until 1895, when a considerable revival of interest was experienced. The cemetery in connection with this mission was purchased and platted in 1868.

St. Anthony De Padua's Church, Cazenovia, Wis.

The congregation of St. Michael's is now composed of some sixty families or three hundred and twenty souls, of Irish, French, German and Polish birth or descent, and that of St. Bridget's of about forty-six families. The entire charge, comprised of St. Anthony de Padua's and the two missions, consists of one hundred and seventy-six families, and twenty single persons, or one thousand and thirteen souls.

The value of the entire church property at these three places is in the neighborhood of $15,000, $10,000 of which is invested in the mother parish.

The Rev. Herman Grosse was born on April 24, 1842, in Prussian Saxony, diocese of Paderborn. He was ordained to the priesthood at Milwaukee, in the year 1866, after which he went to Missouri, where he remained until 1871. He was then pastor at St. Mary's, Monroe County, Wisconsin, until 1878 and in Sauk City until 1883. Since the latter date he has been rector of St. Anthony's at Cazenovia.

St. Charles Borromeo's Church, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Charles Borromeo's, at Chippewa Falls, Chippewa County, Wisconsin, was established in 1884, the first pastor appointed to that charge being the Rev. Theodore Hegemann, who afterwards became a member of the Society of Jesus. He was succeeded in this pastorate by the Very Rev. Paul Geyer, the present rector. The congregation of St. Charles now numbers fully two hundred and twenty-five families, while the parochial school connected with the parish, which is in charge of four Sisters of Notre Dame, has a regular average attendance of two hundred pupils.

Rev. Paul Geyer.

St. Charles Borromeo's Church and School, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

Rev. Theodore Hegemann.

Of Catholic organizations connected with St. Charles' there are: The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: Mr. A. Nunke, president; Mr. John Hassemer, secretary, and Mr. A. Nolte, treasurer. The Catholic Order of Foresters. St. Leo's Aid Society: Mr. A. Nolte, president; Mr. John Zimmermann, secretary. Ladies' Altar Society: Mrs. John Zimmermann, president; Mrs. John Grisch, secretary; and the Young Ladies' Sodality.

The Rev. Paul Geyer, rector of St. Charles Borromeo at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, was born January 25, 1848, at Roeckenhofen, near Greding, Mittlefranken, Bavaria. He acquired his entire education at Eichstaett, at which place he was also presented to Archbishop Heiss, who was then on his official visit ad limina to Rome. It was at this meeting that the Archbishop induced him to become a priest of his diocese, and after having said his first Mass (August 11, 1872) at his native place, he came to America, where he has been actively engaged in parochial work ever since.

Holy Ghost Church, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

THE parish of the Holy Ghost, at Chippewa Falls, was organized on April 20, 1886, the Rev. E. M. Sturm being appointed resident pastor at that time. He remained until 1890, when he was successively followed by the Revs. A. Foppe, 1890 to 1891; A. Douven, 1891 to 1892; E. Schmitz, 1892 to 1893; A. Hopdegard, 1893 to 1895, and the present incumbent, the Rev. C. F. Schmit, who assumed charge in October, 1895. The congregation of the Holy Ghost now consists of one hundred and thirty-two families, or some seven hundred and twenty communicants. There are three schools in connection with this parish, in which there are seven grades. These schools are in charge of three Sisters of Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee. The regular attendance is estimated at one hundred and twelve. There is one society connected with this congregation, that of the Sacred Heart, which has a membership of two hundred and thirty. This congregation is for a greater part composed of people of French birth or extraction.

The church of the Holy Angels, located at Brackett, Eau Claire County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission by the Rev. Christopher F. Schmit, resident pastor of the Holy Ghost congregation at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin. The congregation was established in 1875 by the Rev. Father Koke, of Eau Claire, and was attended from that parish for some considerable period subsequently. There are twenty-two families in this congregation, all of whom are of German nationality. This mission is regarded as one of the best in the diocese, the people connected with it taking unusual interest and pride in its belongings. The edifice is furnished with a handsome altar, and the vestments are of a character that would do credit to a place of much greater pretentions. There is quite a little talk regarding the erection of a new and more appropriate edifice at Brackett in the near future. Services are now held at this mission on every third Sunday in the month.

The mission of St. Bridget's, at Springfield Prairie, in the town of Seymour, Eau Claire County, Wisconsin, is also attended by Father Schmit. The mission was established in 1874 and a church built during that time under the administration of the Rev. Father Collins, of Eau Claire. The congregation is composed of forty-five families of Irish, German and French nationality, the former, however, predominating. Services are held at St. Bridget's on the first Wednesday after the first Sunday in each month. It is the opinion of the reverend pastor that, with a little more unanimity among the members of this congregation, a new and handsome church edifice would soon take the place of the present structure. There is little doubt, however, that their good common sense will soon bring them to a realization of the utter want of any real cause for such a condition of affairs, thus enabling them to come to an understanding which will result to their mutual benefit and the general good of the parish.

Holy Ghost Church, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

St. Rose of Lima, at Cadott, is another mission of the Holy Ghost, and comprises at the present time a membership of seventy-five families, the majority of whom are French. This congregation was organized by the Rev. Theodore Hegemann in 1883. There is a possibility that this mission will, ere long, grow into a flourishing and substantial parish, as the country round about is most desirable for all kinds of agricultural pursuits, and needs only the presence of a number of industrious and intelligent Catholic farmers to bring about this much-desired result.

There is a mission of French settlers, comprising some twenty-six families in all, at Drywood, Chippewa County, which is also attended by the pastor from Chippewa Falls. There is a partially completed church structure at this place, in which services are held once a month during the summer. To all appearances, this mission has already obtained its maximum of prosperity, and it is hardly likely to increase in size.

Rev. C. F. Schmit.

The Rev. Christopher F. Schmit was born on February 9, 1871, at St. Donadus, Jackson County, Iowa. Having obtained his ordinary education at the parochial school at that place, he entered the college at Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin, where he took a course in the classics. He then entered Grande Seminaire at Montreal, where he studied philosophy for two years, after which he took a theological course at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, completing the same in 1895. On the 16th of June, in that year, he was ordained to the priesthood at La Crosse.

Notre Dame Church, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

NOTRE Dame Parish, of Chippewa Falls, can take its place among the oldest Catholic centers of Wisconsin. Early writers tell us that over two hundred years ago the illustrious missionary and explorer, Father Hennepin, visited the Indians at the falls of Chippewa for the purpose of administering to their spiritual wants.

The first white settler in what is now the city of Chippewa Falls was Jean Brunet, a Frenchman from Prairie du Chien. He reached the present site of the city in 1832, and four years later built a sawmill. A number of his compatriots were induced to join the enterprise, and thus a settlement of French Canadian lumbermen was founded. From this nucleus the flourishing congregation of Notre Dame has developed. Traveling missionaries at rare intervals visited the sturdy pioneers at the Falls, and after the year 1854 these visits to the growing community were made about once a year. On those occasions religious services were held in private dwellings, and later in a little frame building ordinarily used as a school house and for other public gatherings.

The erection of a building, to be known as St. Mary's Church, was begun in the summer of 1856. It was a frame structure, about 25x50 feet, situated on the brow of a hill overlooking the Chippewa River. During the following winter the unfinished building was blown down by a windstorm, but the damage was repaired in the summer of 1857. St. Mary's of the Falls was the first church edifice in the Chippewa Valley, and the point on which it stood has ever since been called Catholic Hill. A few months after its completion, a priest from St. Paul said Mass for the first time in a church in Chippewa Falls. Although the congregation was numerically small, there were present on that occasion representatives of America, Ireland, Scotland, France, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, Poland, and half-breed and Western Indians.

Notre Dame Church, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

The first resident priest at Chippewa Falls was the Rev. Father Mignault, who took charge of the parish in the spring of 1858, and remained about one year. He was succeeded by the Rev. Father Smedding, a good and holy man, who was pastor of St. Mary's until 1868. Father Smedding built the first priest's house in Chippewa Falls, and in 1860 opened a parochial school in a small frame building. At this period the mission comprised all the territory as far north as Lake Superior. The congregation was composed of many nationalities, and on Sundays Father Smedding always preached in French, English and German. His successor was the Rev. P. M. Abbelen, now of Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee, who, on account of ill health, was recalled by the Bishop in less than a year. After the departure of Father Abbelen, Father Koke, whose remains are interred in Hope Cemetery, Chippewa Falls, officiated as pastor until May, 1869. This year was made memorable in the history of the parish by the arrival of the Rev. C. F. X. Goldsmith, who became one of the best known priests in the State. From his advent into the parish, Catholic interests made wonderful progress. In 1870 he began the erection of the imposing stone edifice known as Notre Dame Church. The old pioneer St. Mary's, after having been used for a while as a school and for other purposes, was finally demolished. For several years the Catholics of Chippewa Falls, as well as those of the surrounding country, worshiped at Notre Dame; but in time the church became too small, and in 1885 the German members of the parish were organized as a separate congregation. They erected the church of St. Charles Borromeo, which was placed in charge of the Rev. Theodore Hegemann. The following year it was deemed necessary to build another church on the South Side, and on June 29, 1886, the corner-stone of Holy Ghost Church, South Chippewa, was laid. The Rev. E. Sturm was appointed pastor of the new church. From the little pioneer congregation of the forties, the Catholic population had increased until there were now three flourishing parishes, each possessing a substantial church, a rectory and a parochial school, in charge of the School Sisters of Notre Dame, from Milwaukee.

St. Joseph's Hospital, in charge of the Sisters of St. Francis, from Springfield, Illinois, is a prominent Catholic institution of Chippewa Falls. In 1884 the Sisters began their labors in a small frame building on Catholic Hill. This work of charity prospered. A more desirable locality was found in another part of the city, and in July, 1890, the corner-stone of the present commodious structure was laid.

November 6, 1887, was a memorable day for the zealous pastor and generous parishioners of Notre Dame Parish, for on that day Notre Dame Church was crowned with a distinction gained by but few churches in the Northwest. In the presence of a vast assemblage of all denominations it was solemnly consecrated by the Right Rev. Bishop Flasch, of La Crosse, assisted by the Right Rev. Bishop Katzer, of Green Bay, and a large number of the clergy.

The cares and burdens of twenty years had begun to weigh heavily on Father Goldsmith, and the dauntless courage that had braved every danger and faced every difficulty for the welfare of the parish, had been slowly undermined. Early hardships and the ravages of disease had accomplished their work, and the hand of death was upon him. November 24, 1890, at the age of forty-five, after a long and painful illness, he passed to his eternal reward. The universal sorrow called forth by this sad event gave ample proof of the place Father Goldsmith held in the hearts of the people of Chippewa Falls, and particularly among the members of his own congregation. In the words of a friend and co-laborer, by his death "the diocese of La Crosse lost one of its noblest, ablest and worthiest priests; the parish of Notre Dame its beloved pastor; the parishioners a kind and loving father; and the citizens of Chippewa Falls, one of the foremost men that ever lived in the Chippewa Valley."

On November 27th he was consigned to the tomb, deeply mourned by all, irrespective of religious belief. Four years later his remains were exhumed, and, with imposing religious ceremonies, deposited in their final resting place beneath the altar of the beautiful chapel erected to his memory.

After the death of Father Goldsmith, the parish was in charge of his worthy assistant, the Rev. A. Philip Kremer, until the spring of 1891. In April of that year, the Fathers of the Order of the Holy Ghost assumed control, and, under the efficient management of the pastor, the Rev. Eugene Phelan, C. S. Sp., Notre Dame continues to prosper.

Many substantial improvements have been made under Father Phelan's direction; among them the beautiful stained glass windows and large pipe organ placed in the church are worthy of note. A spacious addition has been made to the school building, thus providing three new class rooms and a hall for exhibition purposes.

Father Phelan's assistants are the Rev. Thomas Park, C. S. Sp., and the Rev. Emil Reibel, C. S. Sp., who aid him in parish work and in the care of outside missions.

The congregation is composed of English and French communicants, and on alternate Sundays the sermon is delivered in one of those languages.

The following societies are connected with the parish: Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Society of St. John the Baptist (French), Catholic Order of Foresters, Sodalities for both young and old, and two Reading Circles.

Notre Dame School.

GIVEN a brief sketch of Notre Dame Parish would be incomplete without some account of the growth and development of Notre Dame Parochial School. Prominently located on Catholic Hill, this institution is an exponent of the faith and generosity of the congregation which brought it to its present flourishing condition. Hundreds may to-day proudly sketch its rise and progress by the sacrifices they have made for the noble cause of Christian education. Local historians describe the nucleus of Notre Dame School as the old First Ward School and fix its date back in 1860. The pioneer priest, Father Smedding, shared the hardships and privations of his flock, and had but very little with which to carry out his plans, except the coöperation of willing hands and faithful hearts. He placed the newly opened Catholic school in charge of his housekeeper, who occupied the triple position of housekeeper, organist and teacher. Shortly afterward a schoolmaster was engaged, and, under the supervision of Father Smedding, the rudiments of education and Christian doctrine were taught in a vacant room wherever one could be found.

In the spring of 1868 the Rev. P. M. Abbelen rented a small building on the present site of Notre Dame Convent. It was subsequently moved across the street, and, with much piecing, patching and many additions, forms the imposing building that now adorns the brow of the beautiful pine-clad bluff. From 1871 until 1881, the city paid the salaries of the teachers. The buildings belonged to Notre Dame Parish. The pupils were nearly all Catholics, and when the lamented Father Goldsmith took charge of the school they fell under his supervision. Impressed by the importance of early training, this Apostolic man took deep interest in the welfare of the school. A careful selection of the best teachers soon brought the grade work to a high standing of excellence, and for years the results were most gratifying to the zealous pastor. In 1881 the school was reorganized as a parochial school, in charge of the School Sisters of Notre Dame from Milwaukee. The attendance continued to increase, and in 1885 the wing fronting on High street was built. The death of Father Goldsmith in 1890 left the direction of the school to his worthy successor, the Rev. Eugene Phelan, C. S. Sp.

Notre Dame School.

A practical educator as well as an energetic priest, Father Phelan has steadily continued the work of improvement. During the past year, by the erection of the northwest wing, the building has been provided with ample accommodations for the five hundred pupils in attendance. It affords a class room for each of the first eight grades, while the High School occupies a large assembly and recitation room, laboratory and auditorium for recitals and entertainments. A new physical and chemical apparatus also adds interest to the study of natural science. The course of study has been carefully planned to suit the needs of our time, and the thorough work done is acknowledged by all. Notre Dame School was placed on the accredited list of the University of Wisconsin December 22, 1894.

Biography of the Rev. C. F. X. Goldsmith.

FATHER GOLDSMITH, the subject of this sketch, was a native of the city of Rochester, New York, where he was born on Monday, the 22d of December, 1845. He was a son of John Baptiste and Mary Magdalene de Vigneulles Goldsmith, the former having been born in a small hamlet called Bundall, at the foot of the Harz Mountains, in the Palitinate or Rhenish Bavaria, and the latter in the hamlet of Vigneulles, called Haut et Bas (High and Low) Vigneulles, which lies on the border of the Province of Meuse, and about midway between the cities of Paris and Metz. These two, like many another of their fellow countrymen, found their way to this continent in the earlier portion of the present century, the mother coming in 1830, while the father arrived in New York during the year following. It was in that city that they first became acquainted, and they were married in September, 1834, at St. Patrick's Church, then the Cathedral, in Mott street. After their marriage, they remained in New York but a short time and then removed to Rome, New York, where it was their intention to permanently locate. Business affairs, however, made it necessary for them to soon after remove to the small but thriving village of Rochester, in which place they located during the spring of 1836. Here were born to them their five children: John B. Goldsmith, now a resident of Buffalo, New York; Catherine Rebholtz, of Troy, Ohio; Mary Louise Diel, of Syracuse, New York; the subject of this sketch, Father C. F. X. Goldsmith, and Maud C. Bergeron, who died at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, August 29, 1888.

A little while prior to the time that Father Goldsmith began his primary education, there was established in the parish of SS. Peter and Paul a small and unpretentious parochial school, to which he was sent by his parents during the summer of 1850. This school was conducted by members of the Order of Notre Dame. Some of the strongest characteristics of Father Goldsmith's early life were punctuality and obedience, both of which were, undoubtedly, owing to the admirable home training he had been previously subjected to.

Speaking of this, one of his biographers[1] has been led to remark that it was, perhaps, these two characteristics which, more than others, brought him under the approving eye of the pastor of SS. Peter and Paul's, the young, vigorous and talented Krautbauer, afterwards Bishop of Green Bay, Wisconsin, who was then but twenty-five years of age, and was filled with the spirit of upbuilding and of progress. "Even in his tender years," continues this writer, "the pastor recognized in this schoolboy a character of proper fitness for the priesthood, and through all the years afterwards he remained the staunch and faithful friend of Father Goldsmith. This conclusion of the pastor was soon acknowledged by the parents, and his education was continued thereafter with the intention and in view of his future candidacy for Holy Orders."

When but eight years of age (1853), young Goldsmith left the parish school and entered an academy in Rochester, which had been established there a short time previously by Father Krautbauer, and which was conducted, under his direction, by the Christian Brothers from Buffalo, New York. Here, under the strict discipline which was observed, the strong mental qualities of young Goldsmith began to show to advantage. Here he remained, advancing rapidly, and with much distinction, in his numerous studies, until 1858, when, through the interest and intervention of Father Krautbauer, he gained admission to the Provincial Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, taking up his residence there at the opening of the fall term in that year. Here he found the work required of the students equally exacting, and the standard of scholarship fully as high, as that at the academy in Rochester. At the time of his entering the Seminary, the rector was the Rev. Michael Heiss, afterward Archbishop of Milwaukee, a kind-hearted and capable man, under whose direction many of the clergy who are now earnestly and zealously hastening forward the work of the Church in Wisconsin were pupils.

After being at the Seminary for three years, young Goldsmith graduated in his classical course, and then at once began the study of philosophy and theology. During this period, he had the advantage of studying under the direction and advice of Bishop Flasch, as well as receiving much encouragement in his work from his former preceptor, Father Krautbauer, who had himself moved West, and was at that time acting as chaplain of the Convent of Notre Dame in Milwaukee. Under the advice of this reverend and valued friend, he, in 1864, when but nineteen years of age, withdrew from the Seminary and entered upon a course of study in the American College at Louvain, in Belgium, that historic seat of learning where so many of those ranking high in the favors of the Church had gone before him. At this place, he completed his final course, preparatory to entering upon his life's work, and here, as if anxious to emphasize the sincerity of his motives, he consecrated his life to the service of God and under the patronage of St. Francis Xavier.

(1) J. A. Anderson.

Among those who were fellow students, as well as warm and intimate friends, of Father Goldsmith during his period of residence at Louvain, were the Right Rev. James Schwebach, present Bishop of La Crosse, the Most Rev. Patrick Riordan, Bishop of San Francisco, California, the Most Rev. T. Jansen, Bishop of New Orleans, Louisiana, the Very Rev. Daniel Riordan, of Chicago, Illinois, the Right Rev. Bishop Bonacum, of Nebraska, and the Right Rev. Bishop J. H. Brondell, of Vancouver, British Columbia.

Father Goldsmith completed his studies at Louvain in the early summer of 1868, the properly earned degrees being conferred upon him by the University at the recommendation of the rector of the college. He was finally ordained to the priesthood on the 25th of July, 1868, in the grand old Cathedral at Malines, in Belgium, by Mgr. Charles Andrew Anthuis, Bishop of Constance, and Coadjutor to His Eminence, Cardinal Dechamps, who was originally Bishop of Malines and Primate of Belgium. Five days following his ordination, he went to Metz, and said his first Mass in that diocese on Sunday, August 2, in the little chapel at Vigneulles, in which, sixty years prior to that time, his mother had been baptized.

Rev. C. F. X. Goldsmith.

It was in the autumn of 1868, that, having spent a brief period in visiting with relatives and friends at Vigneulles, Father Goldsmith returned to this country, and after a brief visit to his old home in Rochester, was assigned for the time to the diocese of Milwaukee. During the winter of 1868-69, he was assistant at St. Mary's, in Milwaukee, and there, also, prepared for his future duties, which, it had been arranged, would take him among the missions in the diocese of La Crosse. To that See he removed in the early part of 1869, and, after a brief consultation with his Ordinary, he left there for his future field of labor among the Chippewa missions.

Upon his journey up, and the difficulties attending it, it is not necessary to enlarge at this time, it being undoubtedly sufficient to say that he arrived safely at his destination on the 25th of May, 1869. Here he found plenty of work in the renovation of his much dilapidated little dwelling, and the cleaning and refitting of the church, in which he celebrated his first Mass on May 27, 1869. One of the first tasks undertaken by the young pastor was to prepare a large class for confirmation, and in this he proved so successful that this Sacrament was conferred on June 27, following, by the Right Rev. Heiss, who came to Chippewa Falls for that purpose.

In his work among the missions, Father Goldsmith was ably assisted by Father Koke, who remained until September 1, when he went to St. Peter's Church in the same settlement, being sent there as first resident pastor of that congregation. At this time, the desire which was ever uppermost in the mind of Father Goldsmith was to erect a suitable church structure. Here, again, he called upon his old-time friend and counselor, Father Krautbauer, for advice, and it was, we are informed, to the joint labors of these two, that the plans for the present edifice were due. The walls of this structure were built entirely from the native quarry rock, a simple fact in itself, although revealing, in a slight degree, the distinct personality and progressive instinct of the youthful pastor, through whose suggestion the innovation was made. A great portion of the time at his disposal, aside from what was actually occupied in attending to his own immediate parish, was devoted by Father Goldsmith to a number of little missions which lay scattered throughout the river country. From these he also gained material aid for his new church, many of them contributing liberally to that undertaking. Of course, as with any enterprise, there were numerous and vexatious delays and annoyances, which retarded the progress and ready completion of the work, although, as a whole, the people appeared to be spontaneously unanimous in their desire that it should go forward to its completion as rapidly as possible. This was not only indicated by them in words, but more especially in the generous deeds and donations which became, as it were, part of their lives during that period. But in this, as in everything pertaining to the work, they but followed the lead of their pastor, who deemed no journey too lengthy or labor too arduous for him to undertake, in order that this grand design might be brought to its final completion.

The building is described by Mr. Anderson as of Roman style, cruciform, with a nave 138x56 feet, and with walls from Chippewa sandstone, thirty-six feet above the water table. The cut stone for this building was brought by team from Eau Claire. The first sod was broken for the foundation on May 20, 1870, after which the work went steadily forward, always excepting, of course, such unavoidable delays as are incident to the securing of proper material, especially as regards the timber used, which was hard to procure. The corner-stone of this building was laid on June 19, 1871, and the structure brought under roof on November 11 of the same year. The services observed at the laying of the corner-stone were most impressive and largely attended, a number of the church dignitaries and prominent clergy of the State being present, while the laity was represented in an assemblage of many thousands. Among the former were the Rev. F. X. Krautbauer and the Rev. Chrysostom Verwyst.

It, of course, will be impossible at this time to give a detailed account of the life and labors of Father Goldsmith, or to mention the many works of beneficence brought about by his determined methods and splendid courage. The first really arduous and difficult labor which he, in his zealousness, was prompted to undertake, was an exhaustive journey through the pinery camps of Northern Wisconsin, for the purpose of securing funds towards the erection of the church. This was made in company with Charles Longevin in December, 1869, at which time but a small portion of the territory mapped out for visitation was covered. This journey, however, extended as far as the Jump and Deer Tail camps, and proved one of unusual hardship, owing to the severity of the weather. Of this journey, he himself said: "The number of camps visited was thirty-five, in which were employed five hundred and forty-six men, two hundred and sixty of whom subscribed the sum of $1,150.00. Of this amount, however, but $675.00 was collected." In January, 1871, he made another visit into the logging regions, on which occasion he secured over $1,000.00. Still another journey was made by him through the same locality, in February and March, 1872, which proved to be the most successful of all. The entire result of these self-imposed wanderings up to this time shows that he visited forty-nine camps, from which he secured a total paid subscription of $2,321.00. A subsequent trip, which also was the last of this nature made by him, resulted in a visit of fifty-one camps, from which he obtained the additional sum of $1,923.00. Thus, step by step, the work on the church progressed, artistic as well as necessary improvements being added to the interior of the edifice, as rapidly as opportunity and means would permit. Many mementos of early friendships were also to be remarked upon the walls of the edifice, among which may be mentioned the painting of St. Charles, which is the work of Durward, of Milwaukee, and which was procured through the personal friendship existing between the pastor and the Durward family. A painting of the Assumption, a most striking production, is also another work from the brush of the same artist. The interior of the church was still further beautified in October, 1875, by the erection of the Stations, or Viæ Crucis of Pustet, which were solemnly blessed on All Saints' Day. These alone cost $2,225.00. The following year, also, gave evidence of the fact that there was no lagging in the interest shown by the Catholics of Chippewa Falls in the welfare of their parish, for it was during 1876 that the sum of $5,000.00 was paid on the church indebtedness, which cleared off entirely the first original mortgage given on the property.

Notre Dame schools, at that time called the First Ward School. The few scholars attending this institution were in charge of Dr. Lambert and Miss Skelly, who were occasionally assisted in their labors by a third party by the name of Schofield. This place, owing to its close proximity to the church, and the fact that the greater percentage of the scholars attending were the children of Catholic parents, soon became recognized as the "Catholic School." This school, to some extent, came under the domination of Father Goldsmith, and, although the expenses of its support were supplied by the city treasury, it is a well-known fact that its interests were personally supervised and its teachers selected by him. When the new church was completed, the little frame Old Residence and First St. Mary's Church.

Thus the life of Father Goldsmith was devoted in one continuous effort for the parish, not only in building up and adding to the material value of the church property, but in a hundred other ways. The formation and establishment of numerous Catholic Orders, which are ever recognized as a desirable feature in the congregation, the personal welfare and individual interest of each parishioner under his charge, and, above all, the establishment of a suitable institution for the welfare and education of the children. "They are God's dearest gift," said he, "and we must guard them well."

Much energy, then, was shown by him in the work of upbuilding the schools of this parish, which, therefore, was soon recognized as a most important factor. At the beginning of his pastorate, in 1869, there stood a little three-room frame building on the present site of the structure previously occupied by the Catholic congregation was turned into a school, as which it was used until 1881, when it was remodeled and made part of the present Notre Dame School. But Father Goldsmith had still more advanced ideas of what a school should be, and, as a result of his determination in this particular, a number of School Sisters from Notre Dame at Milwaukee were prevailed upon to go to Chippewa Falls and undertake the management of the school there. Thus, as previously remarked, his mind reached out in every direction in his desire to advance the interests of religion, as well as to benefit, encourage and improve the people who had been placed in his care.

And so, month after month, and year after year, this work of improvement went on; the population increased in numbers; the edifice acquired new and striking adornments; the material comforts of the congregation were increased; a surpliced choir was added to the valuable attractions of the service, while, above all, the striking personality and impressive moral power of the pastor made itself noticeably and lastingly felt. Then, too, the organization was strengthened by additional and active societies, to one or more of which a majority of the members belonged, while, under the direction of the good Sisters, the school was making marked and rapid progress.

What the end might have been under those beneficent surroundings, Heaven alone knows; but, as in many another instance of well-doing, the chastening rod has been known to fall with unexpected severity, so, too, here it fell with crushing force, when dread mortality set its seal upon this beloved pastor. Of his final sickness, a biographer has said: "The first impediment to his health ever known to himself was manifested in February, 1886, by a slight hemorrhage, and, as he feared a constitutional weakness of the lungs, he immediately consulted a physician at Milwaukee, who diagnosed and treated the ailment as throat trouble. Following a similar experience in June of the same year, he went to La Crosse, and there again was treated for throat trouble. Apparent beneficial results followed (which really must have been due to better general health), until the fall and winter of 1888, when renewed evidence of the supposed throat trouble appeared, and, after much persuasion, the pastor reluctantly departed for the South. Here, upon the shores of the Gulf, he remained until the middle of May, 1889, when he returned to old Chippewa. In 1890, some four years after his first attack, medical science (?), personified in various specialists, seemed baffled, and the pastor's resident physician (upon making his own diagnosis), discovered that the hemorrhages were from the stomach, not from the lungs. Dietary and other similar remedies were called into question, but what remained was simply waiting for the end. The weakening of his vital powers went constantly on during the autumn, and, with the failure of his bodily strength, came a change most remarkable and beautiful to behold and know. The dross and the alloy of his nature were burning out, leaving the pure gold of his better self—the heart and soul of Goldsmith—without the pride, the hauteur and the worldly mask he used to wear, and the residue was a grand and noble man. Finally came the sleep that has no awakening here; the Rest that is but the beginning of Life, and with welcome he greeted it, finding sweet repose in the goodness, the mercy and the providence of God." The same biographer, referring to his character, says: "His was a character which to know fully and intimately was to admire and to respect; to admire for its genius and native strength; to respect for its fearlessness and entire activity. Neither sloth nor indolence had any part in his whole make-up. Activity was the very food of his life. His was a noble mind, polished and strengthened by education, and with an instinct for the right which was rarely deceived or drawn aside. There was in his temperament, when roused by irritable surroundings, much of the same alloy that enters into all our natures. He had not the temper of a saint, and it must be regretfully remembered that many a near friend suffered from his infirmity of hasty and impetuous language, the remembrance of which, to the proud spirit of Goldsmith himself, was one of the sharpest thorns in his memory, for he dearly loved his friends, and if, like a sentinel in the dark, he mistook friend for foe, he never failed to fire, let the shot strike whom it might. To me it seems that all this came from pride, pardonable, perhaps, yet a native, inflexible pride, for it rent his spirit to the very core to be obliged to apologize even for mistakes of this kind. But without that pride and love of success and victory, where would have been the indomitable spirit of Goldsmith? Where the apparent regard for good and for glory which he made and left behind him? No, we must take him as he was, or, as Cardinal Manning says: 'In the very body in which it pleased God to put such a soul,' and when, in Christian charity, we do this, few are the faults and few the willful mistakes we charge against his memory."

Memorial Chapel.

Of him, also in eulogy, the Rev. Father P. M. Abbe-len said: "O, let the Chippewa Valley don its raiment of mourning! One of its fairest flowers has been plucked —one of its stateliest pines has fallen—one of its foremost public men has gone from amongst us—one of its noblest priests has departed. O, ye all here present, and the hundreds and thousands in your homes throughout this valley; young and old, rich and poor, members of his church and citizens of this city; Catholics and non-Catholics, you all have cause, with heavy hearts and tearful eyes, to mourn the death of Father Goldsmith. For who could not deplore the loss of one who was:

'A priest so worthy of his solemn dignity and power;

'A priest so richly endowed with splendid gifts and talents;

'A priest so full of noble works and aspirations.'

"All of his brethren in the priesthood readily admit that he excelled among us, that he was a peer among his equals. His talents were of a very superior order. From the beginning of his studies at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, he was one of the highest students. On account of his great talents, he was sent by his paternal friend, the warm-hearted late Bishop Krautbauer, of Green Bay, to the celebrated university at Louvain, in Belgium, where he completed a course of four years, and took even two degrees in Divinity. To his solid learning he added many a great accomplishment. His manners were refined, his address easy and elegant, and his familiarity with social forms made him welcome to every society. His generous disposition and warm impulses endeared him to all. Great was his taste for art and letters. In a word, he was a gentleman.

"If he was well fitted for society, if he moved in it more than most priests do, he did not allow society to spoil him. He neither fawned upon the rich, nor frowned upon the poor. He never disgraced his sacred character. Never has the least suspicion been whispered against his sacerdotal life and morals. If he had the faculty to make himself amiable and popular, especially with those outside of the church, he always used his social and political interests for the advancement of religion and beneficial public interests. If he had more than ordinary taste for art and letters, he used it for the beauty of the house of God and the improvements of his schools, for the promotion of Catholic science and literature.

"Even in his declining health, and much against the advice of his sincerest friends, he took upon himself the heavy burden of publishing a paper as sound and clear on every Catholic question, especially on the school question, as any paper in the land.

"Rest, then, now, dear friend, from thy labors—rest in the peace of God—rest in the eternal joys of thy Master—Rest; thy works follow thee, for thy crown is an eternal reward. But, at the same time, remain with us to keep thy memory green forever.

"Whosoever may take thy place in this church thou hast built—in those schools in which thou hast worked so hard—in this city which thou hast always loved so dearly—in the hearts of the people thou shalt abide forever."

Of him, also, a life-long friend, the late Rev. Father Joseph Dolé, in part said: "To-day, the day devoted to our national thanksgiving, it is but meet that you worthy children of a generous Father should pay him the tribute of your gratitude. You, his children, whom he has baptized, made children of God, in whose hands he has placed the keys of Heaven. Oh, in return, open for him, by your prayers, the portals of that glorious kingdom.

"Give drink to the thirsty. 'I thirst,' he says, 'thirst for the living waters. I long for your prayers.' Offer a chaplet for him; see, the rosary he loved so well is now twined round his folded hands.

"Clothe the naked. 'Give me my baptismal robe; wash away with your tears the dust that has gathered upon it. Who will give me a nuptial garment, that I may enter and partake of the royal banquet of angels and saints?' May your alms, deeds, your prayers, give you this mantle.

"He stands at the gates of Heaven; he cannot enter. Open, that this poor exile may enter his fatherland.

"Visit the sick. Go to the hospital of God, pass through this church, collect the falling tears, and carry them to the throne of God as an offering of expiation.

"Ransom the captive. This good pastor is detained in God's prison, purgatory, because he was your pastor. Refuse him not the sacrifice of the Mass, which he has so many times offered for you.

"Finally, bury the dead—the last work of mercy. Bury your beloved pastor, tenderly, reverently, in the land of the living, in the bosom of his God.

"Farewell, faithful, loving friend. Thanks for your friendship, your counsel, your words of encouragement, your sacrifices. Farewell, good pastor; go to receive the recompense of your labors in the realms of bliss; remember those many hundred children for whom you have opened the gates of Heaven. Farewell; go to the foot of the throne of God to meet those who will form your crown of glory for eternity—your faithful parishioners. Farewell. In following your counsel, your good example, we, too, will meet you near God, and thank you for the good you have done to all. Until then, we will pray for your soul, that soon you may hear the words, 'Come, good and faithful servant, enjoy the happiness of salvation for all eternity.'"

In a large vault, immediately beneath the altar steps, in a beautiful little memorial chapel, the plans for which were designed by him, and which, when completed, was, according to his request, dedicated in grateful thankfulness to Our Lady of the Holy Nativity and St. Blase, lies all that is mortal of the Rev. C. F. X. Goldsmith.

Church of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, Clayfield, Wis.

THE Catholic residents of Clayfield, Pierce County, Wisconsin, were visited as a mission by the Rev. V. Mignault in 1859. There was no church in the neighborhood at that time, consequently Mass was celebrated in the houses of different settlers and particularly that of Patrick Campbell. This condition of affairs prevailed until 1863, in which year the Rev. James Stehle took charge of the mission, celebrating Mass at the houses of John Devereaux and Patrick Stafford. Thus matters continued until during the latter part of that year, when he succeeded in raising sufficient funds to erect a log church 48x36 feet, upon five acres of land donated by Mr. Stafford for that purpose. Although now scarred and time worn, this building still remains, cherished by the people of that section as a memento of the zeal and energy displayed by the early Catholic settlers. The building still retains its original location, which is now quite near to the site of the present cemetery. Father Stehle was succeeded as pastor of this parish by the Rev. Sebastian Seif, who was in turn followed by the Revs. J. Gunkel and C. Verwyst, the latter having charge of the mission until 1868. During that year the Rt. Rev. Bishop M. Heiss appointed the Rev. C. J. Knauf, then of Red Wing, to assume this pastorate. Two years later, that is, in 1870, the Bishop administered the Sacrament of Confirmation in this church to a class of 54. The Rev. Father Knauf maintained his connection with this mission until 1871, when it was visited for a while by the Rev. J. R. Hermon. In 1872 the Rev. J. Lavene became first resident pastor of the church at Clayfield. Then the Rev. E. Hanses maintained charge until 1883, in which the Rev. J. R. Hermon again took charge. In 1884 the Rev. John Eisen, who had just been ordained to the priesthood, was appointed as second resident pastor of this parish. He built the new frame church, a structure 85x45 feet, and also a parsonage. He remained with this congregation for twelve years and was then succeeded by the Rev. J. B. Klein, in 1896. The Rev. J. R. Hermon is the present resident pastor. There are eighty-four families in this congregation. Of Catholic societies there is a Rosary Society, of which Mrs. Cath. Quinn is president, and a Temperance Society, of which the pastor is president, connected with this congregation.

Church of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, Clayfield, Wis.

The mission of St. Francis, at Ellsworth, Wisconsin, which is attended from Clayfield, was organized in the latter part of 1897, and is composed of families who formerly belonged to Clayfield, Big River and Prescott parishes. In the spring of 1898 a beautiful church was erected at a cost of $4,000, including the furniture. The church was blessed by the Rt. Rev. James Schwebach on May 22 of the same year.

St. Joseph's Church, Clevelandtown, Wis.

FROM 1861 until 1875 the Catholics residing at and contiguous to Humbird, now known as Clevelandtown, were visited by Missionary Fathers from Chippewa Falls, among them being Fathers Smedding, Goldsmith, Luchi, and Osugi, while from Eau Claire occasionally came Fathers Debesqu and Morday. In 1876 the Rev. L. Spitzlberger became pastor and after him the Rev. Adolph Bergman, who afterwards died in Oneida, New York State, in 1895. Then the Rev. Charles Gunkel was appointed to the pastorate, he being followed successively by the Rev. Fathers Volz, K. L. Guzowski, Aug. Babinski, Constantine Frydrychowicz, A. Havestadt, and the present incumbent, the Rev. James Hofer. The congregation of St. Joseph's now numbers about four hundred souls. The school at Clevelandtown is at present conducted by School Sisters of La Crosse, and has an attendance of about seventy-five pupils. Of societies in the congregation there is the Women and Virgin's Society, the officers of which are Mrs. Burkhardt, Mary Haffner, Maggie Gooder, and Justina Emer.

The Rev. James Hofer was born in Switzerland in 1849, came to America in 1884, to the diocese of La Crosse in 1894, since which time he has been pastor of St. Joseph's congregation.

The mission of St. Anthony at Augusta, in Eau

St. Joseph's Church, Clevelandtown, Wis.

Claire County, Wisconsin, is attended from Clevelandtown parish. This, though small, is one of the oldest congregations in the diocese, having, it is stated, been established in 1857. The congregation is composed of about twenty families, most of whom are Germans.

Another mission attended from Clevelandtown is that of the Immaculate Conception at Alma Center, in Jackson County. This mission was established by Father Volz in 1888, and consists of about thirty-five families. Services are held at St. Mary's once a month. There is an Altar Society connected with this congregation, in which a number of the members are actively interested.

Rev. James Hofer.

St. Kilian's Church, Colby, Wis.

THE parish of St. Kilian's at Colby, Clark County, Wisconsin, was organized July 15, 1886. The first resident pastor appointed to this congregation was the Rev. A. J. Joerres, who remained in charge until April 1, 1891. He was an active and energetic worker and succeeded during his pastorate in building a nice church, which was dedicated to St. Kilian on May 12, 1889, by the Rt. Rev. Kilian Flasch, Bishop of La Crosse. The church is a handsome structure and one that would be a credit to a much more pretentious place than is Colby. Father Joerres also bought a pastoral residence, moving the same to the church property. From this point he also attended the missions of Spencer, Dorchester, Town of Wein, Webers and Athens. His successor was the Rev. Carl Weikmann, who, after paying up the debt on the church, built a large brick structure for a parochial school. He remained until the end of April, 1895, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Father Capellan. The present rector, the Rev. Adolph Miller, assumed the duties of this pastorate on April 1, 1896, having charge of St. Kilian's together with the missions of Loyal and Milladore. The Catholic Congregation at Colby at the present time numbers over one hundred families, the most of whom are German. The present trustees of the congregation are Paul Firnstahl and William Happle. Before Colby was established as a parish, the Catholics in that vicinity were for several years attended by the resident pastors from Medford, among that number being the Rev. Ignatz Lager and the Rev. J. W. Ritz.

St. Kilian's Church, Colby, Wis.

Rev. A. Miller.

The St. Wenceslaus (Bohemian) Mission at Milladore was established by the Rev. J. A. Blaschke, now pastor of the Bohemian congregation in La Crosse, and was afterwards attended by the Rev. Father Joch, who came from Auburndale, his successors being the Rev. J. Miller, from Dorchester, and Father Blaschke, from La Crosse. Since April, 1896, the mission has been regularly attended by the resident pastor from Colby. The congregation now numbers some sixty families. The Catholic organizations in this place are the Bohemian Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, with a membership of twenty-four, and St. Ann's Altar Society. The trustees of this congregation are Messrs. John Votruba, J. Benesh and Mathew Konapp. The most attractive feature in this church, which was built during the year 1882, is the life-sized picture of St. Wenceslaus, the patron of the church, which was donated to the congregation by Anthony Romadka, of Milwaukee.

Another mission, St. Balthasar, at Loyal, consisting of sixty German and twelve Irish families, is also attended by Father Miller from Colby. Services are held at this place on every second Sunday. From all accounts, the Catholic community at Loyal is bound to establish itself as one of the most progressive and successful in the diocese. An excellent and commodious brick church was built at this place by the Rev. Father Daniel in 1892, and there is every prospect that the congregation will soon be given a resident pastor of their own. The mission was first established some years ago by the Rev. Father Volz from Neillsville. The trustees of St. Balthasar's congregation are Messrs. B. Christmann, John Biver and Andrew Braun.

The Rev. Adolph Miller, present rector of St. Kilian's parish at Colby and the missions attended from there, was born in Taromcritz, Moravia, Austria, on February 6, 1863. After acquiring an ordinary education and completing his studies in the classics and philosophy, he took a course in theology at Linz, Upper-Austria, and in Salzburg. He then came to the United States, and after completing his theological studies at St. Francis' Seminary, near Milwaukee, was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Marty of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, on July 6, 1890.

St. Mary's Church, Cumberland, Wis.

THE Catholic congregation of St. Mary's, at Cumberland, Barron County, Wisconsin, was organized by Father De Paradis, in 1883, and originally comprised people of English, French and Italian descent. In the year 1888 the Italians, who then numbered about sixty families, withdrew from St. Mary's and erected their own church at a distance of about two miles from Cumberland, in a place known as the Italian Settlement. St. Mary's Church, at the present time, comprises about thirty-four families, maintaining its own resident pastor since 1885, at which time the Rev. Father Keller was appointed to the charge. Three years after his location there, the church was completed and dedicated by the Right Rev. Bishop

St. Mary's Church, Cumberland, Wis.

Rev. G. Vadder.

Flasch, on the 24th of October, 1888. Services are conducted in this and in the Italian Church of St. Anthony's twice each month. A Branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin has been established here since 1884.

St. Joseph's English and French congregation at Shell Lake, Washburn County, was established at the same time as St. Mary's at Cumberland. The first pastor who was placed in charge of this mission was the Rev. Father Odorick, O. S. F., at that time resident priest at Superior, but after his pastorate it was subjected to the jurisdiction of the pastor of Cumberland (where it still remains). The church at Shell Lake was totally destroyed at the time of the terrible fire which devastated that section of the country some four years ago. But a new and more costly edifice has since been erected, which, when completed, will bear witness to the courage and spirit of sacrifice which characterize the members of that faithful congregation. This parish now numbers some ninety families, partly English and partly French, who try to content themselves with two Sunday services each month.

There is another mission at Spooner, Washburn County, Wisconsin, which is also attended from Cumberland, and where services are held on the same days as at Shell Lake, the distance separating these two missions being but seven miles. This congregation was organized by the Rev. Father Beika and placed under the patronage of St. Francis de Sales. The members comprise some twenty families, who are all equally divided between people of English and Canadian descent.

Still another mission is at Almena, in Barron County, Wisconsin, which was established by Father Limonci, a priest of the diocese of St. Paul, by whom the first Mass was celebrated on November 2, 1892. For some time following the organization of this mission, it was attended by Father Becker, from Rice Lake, under whose administration the building which now serves the purpose of a church was erected. At the termination of Father Becker's pastorate, the mission was transferred as a charge to Cumberland, and consequently can have public services on Sundays only once a month. The congregation at the present time numbers as many as eighty-six families, all of whom are of German origin. Besides these missions, there are two stations, one at Clear Lake and one at Clayton, both in Polk County, where services are conducted once every two months by the pastor of Cumberland. The number of Catholic families residing at these places is about twelve.

Rev. S. A. Leinfelder.

The Rev. Dr. Stephen A. Leinfelder, present pastor of St. Mary's at Cumberland, and the missions at Shell Lake, Spooner and Almena, was born March 21, 1872, at La Crosse, Wisconsin. He began his classical studies under the Jesuit Fathers at Prairie du Chien, at the age of fourteen years, but upon their college becoming a novitiate for the Order, he pursued his studies at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee. The death of his father, Joseph J. Leinfelder, which occurred in the fall of 1891, was an inducement for the young aspirant to the holy priesthood—to absent himself still further from his home for the sake of higher studies and training. Accordingly, he betook himself to Montreal, Province of Quebec, where he gained admission into the Grande Seminaire, and took up a four years' course in philosophy and theology. He returned to La Crosse with the degree of Bachelor of Theology, and was ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. James Schwebach, in St. Joseph's Cathedral, June 16, 1895. In the fall of the same year Father Leinfelder set out for Rome, with the intention of securing academical decrees, if possible. He attended lectures in philosophy and theology at the Minerva University until April 26, 1897, when he was declared Doctor of Sacred Theology; but, prior to his departure from Rome, which occurred in June, he was awarded the same degree in philosophy by the Faculty of the same University, June 4th, and had the satisfaction of seeing those two titles imposed upon him canonically before entering upon the career of a missionary priest in Wisconsin.

The pastor of St. Mary's, at Cumberland, and associate missions, who immediately preceded Father Leinfelder in that charge, was the Rev. Gerhard Vadder, now assistant at Holy Rosary parish, Medford. He was born on August 21, 1871, at Weseke, Westphalia, Prussia. He completed a classical course in his native country, where he also devoted a year to the study of philosophy. He then went to Rome, where he completed his philosophical and theological studies. Father Vadder came to the United States on August 23, 1895, and was ordained to the priesthood in La Crosse, Wisconsin, on July 12, 1896.

St. Louis' Church, Dorchester, Wis.

St. Louis' Church, Dorchester, Wis.

THE Congregation of St. Louis at Dorchester, Clark County, Wisconsin, is one of the latest additions to the rapidly increasing number of individual parishes in the diocese of La Crosse which are of sufficient importance and financial strength to maintain a resident pastor. The present rector of this congregation is the Rev. Henry Glaser, who, in addition to his duties at Dorchester, has charge of the Catholic congregation at Stetsonville, which has been attached to the former place as a mission.

St. Mary's Church, Durand, Wis.

THE parish of St. Mary's at Durand, Pepin County, Wis., was established in 1860 by the Rev. B. Smedding, at that time resident pastor at Chippewa Falls. The congregation was then attended in turn by the Rev. Fathers Chebul, D. L. Nicholas, John Meurs—who commenced the erection of a new church in Durand and Canton, known as the Bear Creek Valley Church—Fathers Florian, H. J. Wirtz,

St. Mary's Church, Durand, Wis.

George Keller, who built an addition to the church, and Edward Froehlich. In 1876 Father A. Mendl, who was appointed first resident pastor in Durand, built a new parsonage. He was succeeded by the Rev. N. Flammang, who remained until December 31, 1880, when the present pastor, Father Joseph Maria Baur, assumed the duties of that office, holding his first service on January 1, 1881.

The activity displayed by Father Baur, in the interests of the congregation and parish placed under his charge, is amply verified in the many valuable improvements and additions which have been made during his pastorate. Among these is a substantial brick church, 42x82 feet, which was built by him and dedicated by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Flasch of La Crosse, in 1885. He also purchased a 2,250-pound bell, which was blessed at that time. During the same year he built a new church in Plum City, a mission of Durand. In the early part of the year following he established St. Peter's Aid

Rev. J. M. Baur.

Society, and on August 31 the St. Aloysius school, which had already been founded, was blessed by Bishop Flasch. On November 9 the new church in Lima, another mission connected with this parish, was dedicated by the pastor, the patron being St. Mary of the Holy Rosary. On January 29, 1888, the Confraternity of the Sacred Heart of Jesus was canonically erected in Durand, and in 1891 a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin was also established. The congregation at Durand consists at present of about one hundred and fifteen families, while those at Lima and Canton are composed of one hundred and ten and seventy, respectively. The parochial school at Durand is in charge of three Franciscan Sisters from the Convent at Alverno, Wis., of whom Sister Henrietta is Superioress and Sisters Padua and Leo associates. The number of scholars attending is one hundred and ten. Of Catholic societies in the parish there are the St. Peter's Aid Society: Eng. Oestereicher, president; Jacob Breunig, vice-president; John Polzer, secretary, and Frank Bauer, treasurer. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: John Engeldinger, president; John Quixtner, vice-president; H. Mertes, secretary, and Frank Bauer, treasurer. Milwaukee Schutz-Gesellschaft: Frank Fischer, president, and M. Brunner, secretary and treasurer.

Lima, now the only mission attended from Durand, has an excellent brick church, and a congregation numbering about one hundred and twenty families. This mission was established in 1885 by the Rev. Joseph M. Baur, who built and blessed the church, under the sanction of the Rt. Rev. Bishop Flasch of La Crosse. A move is also being now made towards the erection of a parochial school and Sisters' dwelling. Mondovi, at one time a mission of Durand, is no longer so, having its own resident pastor.

The Rev. Joseph Maria Baur, present pastor of the congregation, was born in Pittsburg, Penn., November 26, 1854. He began studying for the priesthood at Mount Calvary, Wis., spent a considerable period at the St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, and took his final course at St. John's University, Minnesota. He was ordained priest by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Heiss, in St. Mary's Church, at Marathon City, Wis., on October 7, 1877, from which time he was placed in charge of the congregation at Sparta, Hammond and Arcadia. He was then appointed to the pastorate of St. Mary's at Durand, Wis., December, 1880.

Church of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, East Farmington, Wis.

THE congregation of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, at East Farmington, Polk County, Wisconsin, was established by the Rev. Stephen Duren in 1884. Prior to that time, it was a mission for a number of years, being attended as such at different periods by the Rev. Fathers H. J. Wirtz, Chrysostom Verwyst, B. De Goey, O. S. F. C., Albert Mendl, and George Keller. The membership of this congregation at the present time numbers some three hundred souls. There never has been a parochial school in connection with this congregation. Of active Catholic organizations in the parish at the present time, there are two, a Ladies' Altar Society, and the Sacred Heart of Jesus Society. The congregation is somewhat mixed in character, being composed of people of Irish, German and French birth or descent.

Church of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, East Farmington, Wis.

Sacred Heart Church, Eau Claire, Wis.

IN August, 1875, the Germans who had heretofore, in connection with the Irish Catholics, formed one congregation, withdrew and established one of their own. Of these there were at that time about sixty families, of whom the Rev. Paul Geyer was appointed first pastor. He proved an active, interested worker in behalf of this new congregation, and during his administration a nice new parsonage was erected, as well as a building, which, for the time being, served as a church as well as for school purposes and Sisters' residence. Father Geyer continued as pastor of the congregation of the Sacred Heart until May, 1877, when the Rev. Jos. Boehm was appointed. At this time the accumulated debts of the congregation amounted to $3,600, and the condition of affairs generally seemed anything but favorable to their liquidation in the near future. Between the years 1877 and 1880, however, Eau Claire experienced somewhat of a boom, people of diversified business interests coming in from all quarters and taking up their residence there. This beneficial change, as in other matters, also had its effect upon the church interests, the congregation increasing in number and becoming financially stronger. So apparent did this become that in 1880 Father Boehm thought it advisable to, and did begin, the erection of the $15,000 church structure, and also enlarged the school building and Sisters' residence. Father Boehm died May 23, 1893, leaving, in spite of all these undertakings, but $2,300 in accumulated indebtedness for his successor to defray. In October following the death of this pastor the Rev. John B. Metzler assumed the pastorate. Some three years prior to his coming, however, additional interest was centered in the affairs of the church at Eau Claire, by the establishment of a hospital at that point by the Sisters of St. Francis, who since that time have conducted it with great success and to the unbounded satisfaction of the people in that locality. The congregation of the Sacred Heart now consists of three hundred families and the parish school, which is conducted by nine Sisters of Notre Dame, has a regular attendance of three hundred and fifty scholars. There are two branches of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Nos. 8 and 160, besides an Altar Society and a Young Ladies' Society connected with the Sacred Heart Congregation.

Rev. John B. Metzler.

Sacred Heart Church, Eau Claire, Wis.

The Rev. John B. Metzler was born May 28, 1845, in Germany. After accomplishing his studies to that end, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 10, 1876, by Archbishop M. Heiss of Milwaukee. He first came to America in 1865.

St. Patrick's Church, Eau Claire, Wis.

IT was as long ago as December, 1865, that the Catholics living in the neighborhood of Eau Claire, Wisconsin, organized the congregation of St. Patrick. This arrangement was effected under the direction of the Rev. Henry Reinhart, whom the parish record discloses had charge of the congregation from the time of its organization until September, 1867. There have been a number who have filled the position of pastor of this congregation since the administration of Father Reinhart, the time of their succession and periods of their pastorates at Eau Claire being as follows: The Rev. Fathers Maximilian de Becke, from September, 1867, to September, 1868; Henry Kampschroer, September, 1868, to June, 1869; Joseph Moder, June, 1869, to September, 1871; A. Koke, February, 1873, to May 2, 1874; G. Keller, January, 1875, to March, 1875; Martin Connolly, March, 1875, to January, 1880; J. G. Collins, September, 1880, to February, 1889; Thomas Kelley, February, 1889, to October, 1891, and the present rector, the Rev. Arthur B. C. Dunne, who has had charge of the parish since the latter date. The congregation at the present time is estimated at three thousand souls. St. Patrick's parochial school, which is connected with this congregation, consists of six departments. These are in charge of seven teachers, the total average attendance of scholars being four hundred. Of Catholic organizations in St. Patrick's congregation there are the Temperance Cadets, Children of Mary Society, Young Ladies' Sodality, St. Patrick's Reading Circle, Ladies' Benevolent Society,

St. Patrick's Church, Eau Claire, Wis.

Ancient Order of Hibernians, Catholic Order of Foresters, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, and St. Ann's Court of Foresters.

The Rev. Arthur B. C. Dunne, present rector of St. Patrick's, was born in Prairie du Chien on June 2, 1866. There he attended the parochial school until 14 years of age, and in 1880 entered St. John's University, Minnesota. In 1881 he entered Sacred Heart College at Prairie du Chien, it being the first year the college was thrown open for instruction. From this institution he graduated in classics in 1885, and entered St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, in September of the same year, completing his philosophical and theological studies at the latter institution. He was ordained to the priesthood in La Crosse July 7, 1889. He was then asigned as assistant pastor to the Rev. T. A. Kelly of Rev. A. B. C. Dunne.

St. Patrick's Church at Eau Claire. On the death of the reverend pastor Father Dunne was appointed in his stead.

St. Henry's Church, Eau Galle, Wis.

THE parish of St. Henry's, at Eau Galle, Dunn County, Wis., was established in 1856, the Rev. John Phelan officiating as its first pastor Then succeeded in the order given the Revs. Smiting, L. Nicholas, John Meurs, H. J. Wirtz, G. Keller,

St. Henry's Church, Eau Galle, Wis.

Ed. Froehlich, A. Mendl, N. Flammang, J. M. Baur, W. Weckes, Bernard Klein, J. M. Baur and William Reding, the latter being the present resident pastor of the parish. The congregation consists of about four hundred and ninety-five souls. In connection with this congregation there are a number of societies, among them being St. Joseph's Society, of which Alois Wolf and M. Kelly are the officers; St. Henry's Ladies' Society; Mrs. John Rayburn, Jr., president, and M. Kelly, secretary; and the Sacred Heart Society and Sodality of the B. V. M.

Father William Reding, present incumbent of the pastorate, was born on February 19, 1867, at Medernach, Rev. Wm. Reding.

Luxemburg, and came to America the following September with his parents, who settled at New Trier, Minn. After completing his earlier education at the parochial schools, he studied classics under the Jesuits at Prairie du Chien, Wis., finally entering the Seminary at St. Francis, Milwaukee, where he completed his philosophical and theological course, and was ordained on June 24, 1893.

St. Patrick's Church, Elroy, Wis.

ST. Patrick's parish at Elroy, Juneau County, Wis., was established over twenty years ago. Of this parish the Rev. George Keller, a native of Alsace, was pastor from January, 1877, until September of the following year. He was succeeded by Father Joseph R. Hermon, who remained until June, 1884. The third pastor of this congregation was the Rev. P. A. de Paradis, D. D., of Rome, Italy, who was followed in December, 1888, by Father B. De Goey. In September, 1889, Father James S. Campbell, present pastor, assumed the duties. The first church was built at Elroy, in 1877, during the pastorate of Father Keller, and was a frame structure of 40x80 feet. The corner-stone was laid on Trinity Sunday, 1877, by the Right Rev. Bishop Heiss of La Crosse, who also dedicated the building on September 18 of the same year, under the patronage of the Holy Trinity. The congregation was incorporated in January, 1885, with Timothy J. Grimes and John Conway as lay trustees. In 1894 this building was taken down and a new brick structure, 50x109 feet, erected under the supervision and direction of Father Campbell. The building, including interior furnishings, cost $15,000. The present congregation, numbering six hundred and twenty-six, is composed entirely of Irish, in consequence of which the new edifice was dedicated to St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland.

St. Patrick's Church and Parsonage, Elroy, Wis.

Of societies connected with this congregation, there are the following: Ancient Order of Hibernians, organized July 26, 1886: P. D. Corrigan, president; J. J. Clune, vice-president; T. J. Grimes, recording secretary; B. C. Kilbane, financial secretary, and Owen Riley, treasurer. St. Patrick's Temperance Society: Rev. J. S. Campbell, president; Altar Society: Mrs. Clune, president; Mrs. Owen Riley, secretary. Children of Mary Society: Mayme Conway, president; B. E. Garrity, vice-president; Marie O. Boyle, secretary, and Elisa Kloupf, treasurer. Marquette Club: Hugh Conway, president; P. A. Clearyand, secretary, and B. C. Kilbane, treasurer.

The Rev. James S. Campbell, resident pastor of St. Patrick's, was born in Washington County, Wis., of Irish parents. After having graduated at Carroll College, Waukesha, Wis., in 1877, he entered St. Francis Seminary at Milwaukee, where, after completing a thorough philosophical and theological course, he was ordained in 1885. His first appointment after ordination was as pastor at Reedsburg, Sauk County, Wisconsin, where he remained for four years, when he was transferred to his present pastorate at Elroy, Juneau County, where he has been for eight years. The present pastoral residence and church at Elroy have been built under his administration at a cost of $23,000.

Rev. Jas. Campbell.

St. Patrick's Church, Erin Prairie.

THE first regular attendance was accorded Erin in the fall of 1857, Hudson having that year been erected into a parish with Erin as a mission. A log church had been begun at this place, but was never finished, as the priest, Father McGee, who began the work, left after a few months services and there was no further attendance for some time. In the fall of 1858 the Rev. Napoleon McNault became pastor of Hudson and attended Erin once a month, saying Mass in the houses of the different farmers. In the spring of 1860 a small frame church was built on the ground upon which the present elaborate structure stands, John Meath, deceased, donating two acres of land for church and cemetery purposes. In the summer of 1862 Father McNault left Hudson, and Erin was again without a pastor for six months, excepting for an occasional visit made by Father Coffee of Hastings, Minn. In the latter part of 1862 the Rev. James Stehle came to Hudson, and Erin was again attended from that place until February, 1864, when a resident priest, the Rev. John Conroy, was sent to minister to the people of that congregation, having for a parish all of that territory which now comprises those of Erin, New Richmond, Cylon, Stanton, Wilson and Hammond. Shortly after his coming he began the erection of a parsonage, the ground for which was given by Mr. John Meath. In the spring of 1866 was begun the erection of a new church 44x80 feet and 24 feet high. The structure was completed, all but the plastering, when it took fire and was completely destroyed in February, 1867. The loss was a total one, and in many instances would have had a seriously discouraging effect upon those most interested—the people themselves. But their faith was steadfast even in the face of such disasters and before the fire had fairly died out the frame for a new church was in readiness upon the ground and the contract for its erection let. Naturally, however, the work was slow, so that it was not until after the lapse of two years that the building was completed. In the furtherance and completion of this undertaking the congregation of St. Patrick's was greatly aided by the generous donation of $500 worth of lumber by the late S. A. Jewett of Jewett Mills. This brings the history of Erin Parish up to May 1869, when Father Conroy left and was succeeded in the following September by the Rev. H. Quigley, D. D. Father Quigley remained until July, 1872, and was succeeded by the late Rev. P. J. Lavin in the following October. Father Lavin remained seven years and is still kindly remembered by the people of Erin Prairie. He left in January, 1880, and was immediately followed by the Rev. M. Connolly, who was in turn succeeded by the Rev. Daniel Reddin on January 29, 1882, and who has continued to administer to the spiritual wants of this parish until the present time.

St. Patrick's Church, Erin Prairie, Wis.

In 1884, the Erin church being meager of space for the accommodation of so large a congregation, and a distant portion of its members desiring more convenient services, it was resolved to build a church at Cylon, eight miles distant on the newly built Wisconsin Central Railroad, the mission to be attached to Erin. Father Reddin undertook the task of organization and within six months from that time ground was broken and a beautiful frame structure 36x70 feet was ready for use. This building cost $3,500, the congregation attending it numbering twenty-five families. But these people were in earnest, and in less than two years from the time of the building's completion, the entire amount involved in its construction had been paid. Of societies in the congregation there are but three, the St. Patrick's Total Abstinence Society, of which Miss Mary Meath is secretary, and Ant. McAndrew, treasurer; and Altar Society and Holy Rosary Society. At present there is no parochial school at Erin, although all of the schools there, (seven in number), are conducted by Catholic teachers. Born in Ireland in 1845, Father Reddin came to this country with his parents at the age of eight years and settled with them in Manitowoc County, Wisconsin. After a number of years spent at home he entered St. Francis Seminary, Milwaukee, when, after the regular course, he was ordained priest by the Right Rev. Bishop Dwenger of Ft. Wayne, June 29, 1881. His first charge was as assistant to Father Schwebach (now Bishop of La Crosse) at St. Mary's Church in that city. In the latter part of September of the same year he went as assistant to the Rev. I. Schaller at Marshfield, Wis., and after three months' services there was appointed to his present charge. It may be added that Father Reddin, with the hearty good will of his people, made, during the summer of 1896, a number of most desirable improvements to the church property which cost over a thousand dollars. The cemetery, adjacent to the church, has also been beautified and greatly improved under his direction. The present congregation of St. Patrick's at Erin Prairie consists of one hundred and seventy-six families, or about one thousand souls, and that at Cylon, of forty families or two hundred souls.

Rev. Dan. Reddin.

St. Bridget's Church, Ettrick, Wis.

THE first resident pastor of the Catholic church at Ettrick, Trempealeau County, Wisconsin, was Father C. A. Gerst, who came there in 1869, and remained about one year. Father Gerst had no immediate successor, the church being attended for a time by a visiting priest, the Rev. Henry Kampschroer, who is now stationed at Watertown, Wisconsin. The second resident pastor appointed to Ettrick, was the Rev. Martin Connolly, who remained as such from January, 1871, until October, 1872, after which he went to California, and was succeeded by the Rev. James Twohy, who appears by the parish records to have remained about six months. During the interval which followed, the place was occasionally visited by Father Kampschroer until finally Father Twohy's successor, the Rev. Charles A. Gunkel, assumed the charge. After Father Gunkel came the Rev. N. Flammang, now deceased. The next resident pastor of St. Bridget's was the Rev. W. White, by whom the church was rebuilt, and who is now pastor of St. Mary's Church, La Crosse. After Father White, the Rev. P. A. De Paradis assumed the pastorate, staying a little over one month. The next incumbent was the Rev. J. B. H. Conroy, also deceased. His successor was the Rev. I. Harrier, who after a few months' residence at Ettrick returned to his native country, Germany. The next pastorate was of longer duration, being maintained by the Rev. J. J. Burns for a period of five years. Then came another lapse in the matter of regular attendance, the Rev. August A. Birsner assuming the charge in August, 1890. He remained for two years, during which time he with zealous interest worked in behalf of the congregation, whose spiritual condition was in consequence much benefited. The next pastor was the Rev. D. McElhinney, who remained for two years. The pastorate then remained vacant until July, 1896, when the Rev. F. A. Byrne, present rector of St. Bridget's, was assigned to the parish. When Father Byrne assumed this charge he found the property in a somewhat dilapidated condition. The place had been allowed to run down, in fact, and was badly in need of general repairs. Under his energetic administration, however, these repairs are now well under way, and it is confidently anticipated that by the coming fall the church and its attendant buildings will have assumed an altogether satisfactory condition. The undertaking has, however, proved a somewhat crucial test for Father Byrne, who is now acquiring his first experience as rector since ordination. He is, however, of a zealous and energetic temperament, enthusiastic in the work, and will doubtless make an enviable record for the parish during his administration.

St. Bridget's Church, Ettrick, Wis.

St. Bartholomew's Church, Trempealeau, Wis.

A reading club known as Mrs. Dorsey's Reading Circle was organized in St. Bridget's congregation on February 19, 1897, with forty members. The Altar Society has a membership of forty-five, and the Apostleship of Prayer, or League of the Sacred Heart, organized January 7, 1897, has one hundred and seventy-five members.

The pastor of Ettrick has charge of two out-missions, at Trempealeau and Roaring Creek. Trempealeau parish, which consists of thirty families, numbering one hundred and twenty-five souls, is situated seventeen miles southwest of Ettrick, and has a neat little church which has recently been refurnished. Among other things a beautiful little altar has been added to the interior, a marked improvement on the bark structure used by the priest who first offered Mass in that place about one hundred years ago. The Altar Society connected with St. Bartholomew congregation has a membership of twenty-four, and the Young Men's Literary Club, organized on January 27, 1897, is well attended.

Rev. F. A. Byrne.

St. Malachy's Church, located some twenty-three miles north of Ettrick, is another mission attended from St. Bridget's. The congregation at this place, consisting of about thirty families or one hundred and twenty souls, is in a particularly satisfactory condition. The church is in excellent shape, and well furnished, while the surroundings of the entire property bespeak a healthy condition in both mind and purse of the people. There is an Altar Society connected with St. Malachy's having a membership of thirty-six.

The Rev. F. A. Byrne was born and raised in the state of Iowa, where his family still lives. He began his ecclesiastical studies at Dubuque, Iowa, and was ordained for the diocese of La Crosse, at Kenrick Seminary, St. Louis, Missouri, on the 12th of June, 1896. Shortly after his ordination he came to his present mission, where he has been accorded a hearty welcome, and the material aid which is so necessary to the success of any congregation. The present church, which was built by the Rev. Father White, has now a membership of about fifty families, or some two hundred and nineteen souls.

St. Francis of Assissi Church, Fifield, Wis.

THIS congregation was founded in July, 1888. Prior to that time the people living in and around Fifield were attended by numerous priests, among them being the Rev. Fathers July and Schuettelhofer, who paid regular visits until 1884, and Fathers Paulus Tolksdorf and Chrysostom Verwyst, O. S. F., who continued the work until 1887. It was during the administration of the Rev. Father Weikmann, which extended from 1887 to 1890, that the parish was founded. After Father Weikmann came the Rev. Ignatius Schaller, who remained as pastor from March, 1891, until July, 1892. Then followed the Rev. Father Mendl, he being succeeded by the Rev. B. Klein, the present pastor, who has been in charge since August, 1893. The present church at Fifield was erected in 1888, at an expense of $4,500. The parsonage, built two years later, cost $1,500. The congregation of St. Francis of Assissi consists of sixty families, and connected with it there is an Altar Society, which has a membership of fifty.

The congregation of the Immaculate Conception at Butternut, Ashland County, Wisconsin, a mission to Fifield, has a membership of forty families. Services are held there once every week and on one Sunday in every month. The parochial school at this place is in charge of a lay teacher. Of societies in the congregation there are two: An Altar Society, with thirty members, and St. Franciscus Men's Society, with fifteen members.

The congregation of the Precious Blood at Glidden, Ashland County, Wisconsin, consists of about seventy-five families, all of whom are German. This church is also a mission of St. Francis of Assissi, and is attended from there one Sunday in each month, during the greater part of the year, with occasional services besides. A school-house was built here in September, 1896, and is conducted by a lay teacher. The Altar Society connected with this congregation has a membership of seventy, and St. Joseph's Men's Society, forty-five members.

St. Francis of Assissi Church, Fifield, and Immaculate Conception Mission, Butternut, Wis.

Rev. B. Klein.

The Rev. Bernard Klein was born February 26, 1859, at Abenberg, Bavaria. He studied for the priesthood at Eichstaett, Bavaria, and at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, being ordained priest at the latter place in 1881. He said his first Mass at Holy Trinity Church, Milwaukee, after which he attended the congregations at Fountain City, Glencoe, Arcadia and Clayfield.

Immaculate Conception Church, Fountain City, Wis.

THE congregation of the Immaculate Conception at Fountain City, Buffalo County, Wisconsin, was, it is believed, organized in the early '50's. It is known, however, that but one priest visited this place until 1856, he being the Rev. Father Tappert, who was at that time located at La Crosse. Father Tappert was succeeded by the Rev. Father Seif, who attended to the spiritual wants of these people until 1860, when Father F. X. Etschmann assumed charge. During 1860, he built a brick church, which was completed and dedicated by Bishop Henni October 9th of that year. The next pastor to assume the duties of this parish was the Rev. Father Schraudenbach, whose successor, the Rev. Father Kleiber, completed the parsonage in 1863 and became first resident pastor of the parish. Then followed in succession the Rev. Dr. Joerger and the Rev. L. Spitzlberger, the latter remaining from 1867 to 1876, during which period he built the first school house at Fountain City and bought a number of lots upon which to erect a church. The next pastor, the Rev. Father Schmidt, built an addition to the edifice in 1872. He was followed by the Rev. Father Koke, from 1872 to 1873, his successor, the Rev. Joseph Moder, continuing in charge until 1874. The Rev. Paul Geyer, who succeeded the Rev. Father Moder, built a brick school house at Fountain City, on which $3,000 was expended. Then followed the Rev. Fathers Schobel, Pfaller and Loserez, the latter from 1876 to 1878 (he died in June of the latter year and was buried in the cemetery at Fountain City). The next pastor was the Rev. Father Stehle, who left again in June, 1879. During the month following his departure, the Rev. Joseph Wiedmann celebrated his first Mass at the Immaculate Conception. For two years following, that is from 1879 to 1881, the Rev. J. Wicker was pastor at Fountain City, his immediate successor being the Rev. Ignatz Schaller. Then, for a brief period, the Rev. Father Obermüller, of La Crosse, attended the congregation, and after him came the Rev. Bernard Klein, who was there during the same year, 1882. His successor was the present incumbent, the Rev. Willibald Hackner.

The congregation of the Immaculate Conception was duly incorporated under the State Laws of Wisconsin in the fall of 1884. During the same year some additional lots were added to the church property, $500 being paid for the same. It was in 1884, also, that a very successful mission was held at Fountain City by the Jesuit Father F. X. Neubrand. In 1887 the free school system was introduced into this congregation, which fact greatly aided in advancing the interests of the parish. In 1891 a new brick parsonage of liberal dimensions was built and finished. During the year following, another mission was given at Fountain City by the Jesuit Fathers Porth and Simeon. Four years later, Fathers Porth and Neubrand held still another mission at that place. At present the congregation of the Immaculate Conception consists of about one hundred families, and the parochial school, which is under the immediate direction of the Franciscan Sisters, has an average attendance of sixty pupils. Of Catholics societies in this parish, there are an Altar Society for Married Ladies, seventy members; Young Ladies' Sodality, thirty members, and Family Protective Association, sixty-three members. Of the buildings in this parish, the church is brick with a frame tower, the school house is of brick and the parsonage also. On account of the rather limited dimensions of the present church edifice, it is hoped that the congregation will, in the near future, deem it advisable to build a larger and more appropriate structure.

Immaculate Conception Church and School, Fountain City, Wis.

St. Lawrence congregation, at Alma, Buffalo County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission by the resident pastor from Fountain City. The congregation at the present time consists of about forty families. Another mission attended by the same pastor is St. Ann's, Buffalo City, Wisconsin, which consists of ten families. A third mission, the Sacred Heart, is located at Nelson, Buffalo County, Wisconsin. At this place there are fifteen families.

The Rev. Willibald Hackner, present rector of the Immaculate Conception at Fountain City, was born in 1852 at Furth, Ober-Pfalz, Bavaria, Germany. He acquired his classical education at Augst, Germany, after which he came to the United States, where he arrived in May, 1874. He then almost immediately came West to Wisconsin and entered the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he pursued a course in philosophy and theology. He was ordained to the priesthood by Archbishop Henni June 24, 1878, and was at once appointed rector of St. Mary's congregation at St. Mary's Ridge, Monroe County, Wisconsin, where he remained until 1882. He was then transferred to Fountain City.

St. Carolo Borromeo (Italian) Church, Genoa, Wis.

THE Congregation of St. Carolo Borromeo at Genoa, Vernon County, Wisconsin, was until recently attended as a mission by the resident pastor from Rising Sun. More recently, however, owing to the marked improvement in its general surroundings, and at the urgent request of its rapidly increasing and noticeably zealous congregation, the mission of Genoa has become an independent parish, having for its resident priest the Rev. Comte M. Von Droste Huelshoff, who also attends the congregation of the Sacred Heart of Jesus at De Soto, also in Vernon County. A more extended notice of the Genoa congregation will be found attached to the history of Rising Sun.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Hammond, Wis.

THE congregation of the Immaculate Conception at Hammond, St. Croix County, Wisconsin, was established in 1876. From that time on the following resident pastors have had charge of this parish: The Rev. J. M. Wicker, Joseph M. Baur, W. White, J. L. Fitzpatrick, and the Rev. B. P. Connolly, the present incumbent. The congregation consists of about five hundred souls, almost all of whom are Irish or of Irish descent. Up to the present time this parish has not been able to maintain a school of its own. Of Catholic organizations in the congregation there are two, the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, of which Joseph Hawkins is president; D. Deneen, secretary; John McGovern, treasurer, and the Rev. B. P. Connolly, spiritual director, and a Ladies' Altar Society.

Church of the Immaculate Conception, Hammond, Wis.

The mission of St. Bridget's at Wilson, St. Croix County, consists of between sixty and seventy families, who are attended by the pastor from Hammond twice each month. This congregation was organized about twenty-seven years ago by the Rev. J. Neuer, then resident pastor at Eau Galle, Wisconsin. There is an Altar Society connected with St. Bridget's, to which most of the ladies of the parish belong.

The Rev. B. P. Connolly, present rector of Immaculate Conception Church, and St. Bridget's, was born in Ireland, thirty-nine years ago, and having completed a course in classics in the school there, he came to America in August, 1882. In the same year he entered St. Jerome's College, Berlin, Ontario, Canada, where he pursued the study of mental philosophy for one year. At the expiration of that time, he received a diploma entitling him to take up the study of theology, which he did on coming to the Seminary of St. Francis of Sales, near Milwaukee, in September, 1883. Here he remained until having received ordination to the priesthood on June 24, 1886, at the hands of the Most Rev. Archbishop Heiss, of Milwaukee. He received his first appointment on August 4th following from the Right Rev. Bishop K. C. Flasch, of the La Crosse Diocese, his Bishop, as assistant pastor at St. Patrick's Church, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, where he remained for ten months. On June 22, 1887, he was appointed pastor of St. Philip's Church, Crawford County, Wisconsin, having as such also charge of St. Patrick's mission in the same county. After three years and four months at this place, he was appointed pastor of St. Bridget's Parish, River Falls, Wisconsin, having St. Joseph's congregation, in El Paso, Pierce County, Wisconsin, as a mission. Of these two places he remained in charge from October 1, 1890, until November 6, 1896. During his pastorate at River Falls, Father Connolly purchased, or rather caused to have purchased, a new site, namely the first piece of land owned by the congregation for cemetery purposes.

Rev. B. P. Connolly.

During that time he had the new St. Bridget's Church—the present one—built, which is the finest edifice by far in that thrifty little town. On December 5, 1896, he was appointed pastor of the Immaculate Conception Parish at Hammond, St. Croix County, Wisconsin, having also charge of St. Bridget's congregation at Wilson, in the same county.

St. Michael's Church, Hewitt, Wis.

IN the early days, the Catholics from Hewitt and vicinity attended the church at Marshfield, where the Rev. Ignatius Schaller was pastor. In 1885 Hewitt became a mission of Marshfield, continuing as such until April, 1888, when the Rev. C. Nau, assistant pastor of the Rev. Ignatius Schaller at Marshfield, was made pastor there. In that same year Father C. Nau built the parsonage at Hewitt, removing there as first resident pastor in August, 1889. For some time following, an old store was used for church purposes, affairs, in fact, continuing in the same condition until March, 1889, when Father Nau was transferred to the pastorate at Mosinee, and Hewitt once more became a mission and was attended as before, from Marshfield. Towards the end of June, 1891, the Rev. Winand Daniels, at that time assistant priest at Marshfield, was appointed by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Flasch to the pastorate at Hewitt. Upon taking up his residence there, he at once began the erection of a church, and on Sunday, August 23, 1891, the corner-stone was laid by the Rev. P. Geyer, then pastor at Marshfield, in the presence of the Revs. Joseph Joch, pastor of Auburndale, P. Dickopf, assistant priest at Marshfield, and Father Daniels. On October 18 the new church bell was blessed by the Rev. P. Geyer and on the 27th the new church of St. Michael's was dedicated by the Rt. Rev. James Schwebach, administrator of the diocese of La Crosse. At this service there were present the Revs. P. Geyer, Father Joch, Schnitzler, Hegemann, Untraut, Dickopf, Birsner, and Lugowski. In 1892 the entire church was veneered. On July 23d of the following year, 1893, the Rev. A. Schauenberg, deacon, was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. James Schwebach, and three days later celebrated his first Mass in St. Michael's Church. In January, 1894, the interior of the church was frescoed. From March 21 to 28, 1897, the Capuchin Fathers gave the first Holy Mission for St. Michael's congregation. The church is now in excellent condition, the interior fixtures and furniture being substantial and handsome. The high altar, a quite artistic piece of work, was the gift of Mr. Michael Ruplinger of Hewitt. The communion-rail is the gift of Mr. Laurenz Schneider, and the pulpit a present from Mr. Balth. Christmann. An additional improvement to the parish during the present year (1898) is to be noted in the erection of a nice school house and Sisters residence, of which Sisters of Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee, will be in charge.

St. Michael's Church, Hewitt, Wis.

Rev. Winand Daniels.

The trustees of the Hewitt Church are: Mr. John Wolf, secretary, and Mr. Charles Schulhäuser.

Associated with Hewitt as missions there were at one time those of Rozellville, Marathon County, which was given to the Rev. C. Weber, as a pastorate, in January, 1893, and Loyal, Clark County, which severed its connection with this parish September, 1895. There still remains, however, the mission of Corpus Christi at Bakerville, Wood County, which has belonged to Hewitt since that place became a parish. Here there is a nice church, built in 1886, and a Catholic school, conducted by one lay teacher. The congregation numbers fully fifty families, mostly Germans. An addition of 20 feet was built on to the church at Bakerville during the past summer and a new altar added to the interior furnishings. The congregation at Hewitt is all German and consists of about ninety families. Of Catholic societies in this congregation there are the St. Elizabeth Altar Society, sixty-six members: President, Mrs. Mary Ruplinger; Secretary, Mrs. Anna Schieferl; Treasurer, Mrs. Ahl; and a Branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin. In the Bakerville congregation there are St. Ann's Altar Society, St. Mary's Young Ladies' Society and St. Aloysius' Society. The ornamental windows in the church were presented by Messrs. Ruplinger, John Wolf, Schneider Bros., Frank Leuschen, Aloys Hornick, Mrs. Barbara Daniels, Joseph Hastreiter, William Rapp, Mathias Strupp, and the societies of the congregation.

The Rev. Winand Daniels, present incumbent at Hewitt, was born in Giesenkirchen, Germany, February 23, 1866. For ten years following his birth his parents made their home in M. Gladbach, Rhineland, during which period he received his primary education at the public schools of his native country. When thirteen years of age he entered college in Holland, remaining there for nine years. At the end of that time he was admitted to the University at Innsbruck, Austria, where he studied theology. He then attended the Priests' Seminary at Mainz, completed his literary course in six months, and was ordained to the priesthood March 14, 1890, saying his first Mass on March 25 of the same year at M. Gladbach. Father Daniels came to America in July following and was appointed assistant priest to the Rev. Father Foppe at South Chippewa Falls. After six months he was appointed assistant priest of the Rev. P. Geyer at Marshfield, remaining with him until June, 1891, when he was appointed to his present charge as pastor of St. Michael's Church at Hewitt.

St. Patrick's Church, Hudson, Wis.

THE first Mass was celebrated at Hudson by the Rev. George Keller in January, 1855. Father Keller was stationed at St. Paul, and from 1855 to 1856 visited the Catholics of Hudson at various intervals, administering to the spiritual wants of the settlement, which at that time consisted of a few French and half-breed families. On these occasions he celebrated Mass in the house of Peter Bouchea. In the fall of 1856 Bishop Henni's attention was called to the Catholics living in this part of the State, and deeming it advisable to foster the evident interest taken by them in spiritual affairs, he sent the Rev. J. J. McGee to Hudson, as first permanent pastor. Here the Rev. Father had jurisdiction which extended over the greater part of St. Croix and Pierce Counties. He at once set about the erection of a suitable place of worship, and although the congregation, as stated, was exceedingly limited, succeeded in erecting a frame structure, 30 by 50 feet, on the corner of Second and St. Croix streets. The land upon which this church was built was donated by the first settler, Louis Massey, a half-breed. The building was soon completed and in the spring of 1857

St. Patrick's Church, School and Parsonage, Hudson, Wis.

Mass was celebrated for the first time and the church dedicated to God under the patronage of St. James. Having accomplished this very desirable work, Father McGee remained but a very short time, his successor, the Rev. Godfert, assuming the pastorate in September, 1857. Father Godfert remained for two years, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Dr. Mignault. In 1861 the Rev. Nicholas Stehle came to Hudson, and he was followed two years later by the Rev. Sebastian Seif. Five years later the Rev. Chrysostom Verwyst assumed charge of the parish, and during his pastorate attended the congregations at Clayfield, Oak Grove, River Falls, Prescott, Schwalen Settlement, East Farmington and Somerset. In spite of the arduous duties imposed upon him, Father Verwyst still found time to make many improvements to the church property at Hudson, among them, founding a Catholic school, which he placed under the direction of Mr. James Donohue. As might be supposed under such an energetic administration, the congregation rapidly increased in numbers, so that before long it became evident that it would be necessary to procure a more commodious structure. He therefore purchased the grounds occupied by the present church, on the corner of Fourth and St. Croix streets, and also secured a suitable area of land for cemetery purposes. A short time after this, Father Verwyst left for the southern part of the State, and was succeeded as pastor of St. Patrick's by the Rev. Peter Lavin, who, however, remained but six months, when the Rev. Martin Connelly assumed the charge and at once began the erection of the present brick church. Some years elapsed before the completion of this structure, but the work was finally accomplished, and the building dedicated by the Right Rev. M. Heiss, on October 23, 1874, under the patronage of St. Patrick.

Father Connelly was born in County Galway, Ireland, and received his education in the national schools and St. Bernard's Seminary at Lochrea. In 1865 he came to this country, and entered Notre Dame University at Notre Dame, Indiana, from which institution he graduated in 1867, taking the degree of A. B. The following year he entered St. Francis Seminary near Milwaukee, and was ordained to the priesthood at that institution by Bishop Henni, on December 17, 1870. After ordination he served in the parishes of Ettrick, Hudson, Eau Claire, Erin Prairie and River Falls, and then entered the diocese of St. Paul, where he remained for six years. He again returned to the diocese of La Crosse, and in 1889 left for California, where he became a Jesuit. Among the many improvements worked by Father Connelly, in these various parishes, were, the church at Hudson, a parish house at River Falls, in 1888, and the re-establishment of the parochial school at Eau Claire in 1876, at which time he introduced the Franciscan Sisters of Joliet. During his pastorate at Hudson, he was greatly interested in temperance work, organizing the Father Matthew's Society, and Cadets.

After the departure of Father Connelly, the Rev. Father Coleman performed the duties as temporary pastor, at Hudson, and, in 1876, the Rev. Thomas A. Kelly took charge of the parish. Father Kelly was born in the County Kilkenny, Ireland, on the 17th of April, 1851. At the age of fifteen he began his classical course at Waterford, Ireland, where he remained six years, and then came to America. Here he took a philosophical and theological course at St. John's Seminary, at Norfolk, Virginia, completing the same at St. Francis Seminary, Milwaukee. He was ordained to the priesthood on the 15th of March, 1875, at La Crosse, by the Right Rev. Bishop Heiss. He then spent one year at St. Gabriel's Church, Prairie du Chien, as assistant pastor, when he was transferred to St. Patrick's Church at Hudson. During this pastorate he succeeded in opening St. Mary's Academy, which was given to the Sisters of Mercy of Janesville. Later this institution was purchased by the St. Joseph Sisters of St. Paul, who are the present owners. He also erected the present parsonage at Hudson, and organized a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, which is still in a flourishing condition. In 1889 Father Kelley was transferred to Eau Claire, being succeeded at Hudson by the present pastor, the Rev. J. A. Barney of La Crosse.

Father Barney was born in La Crosse, and educated in the parochial schools of that city. His classical, philosophical and theological studies were acquired at St. Francis Seminary. He was ordained to the priesthood at St. Joseph's Cathedral, La Crosse, June 21, 1887, by the Right Rev. Kilian Flasch. His first charge was St. Patrick's Church at Seneca, Crawford County, where he remained about two years. In July, 1889, he was sent to Hudson by Bishop Flasch. His first work in his new field was the erection of a parochial school, which was completed November 1st, of the same year, at a cost of $7,000, and dedicated by Vicar-General Schwebach on the 5th of the same month. This school is in charge of the Sisters of St. Francis from La Crosse. The present regular attendance is estimated at one hundred and fifty scholars. Besides laboring to liquidate the heavy debt incurred by the erection of the school, Father Barney has added many other much-needed and valuable improvements to the church. The congregation of St. Patrick's at the present time numbers about one hundred families.

Rev. J. A. Barney.

St. Mary's Church, Hurley, Wis.

THE congregation of the Blessed Virgin of the Seven Dolors, at Hurley, Iron County, Wisconsin, was established by the Rev. Chrysostom Verwyst, O. S. F., in 1886, during which year he visited the Catholics in that vicinity from Ashland. The building was completed and furnished by the present pastor, the Rev. Father Gilbert Nuonno, O. S. F., who was appointed by the late Right Rev. Kilian C. Flasch to take charge of that pastorate in June, 1886. Father Gilbert Nuonno also began the erection of a large Catholic school in 1890, which was completed and opened with an attendance of one hundred and twenty children on the 5th of January following. This school is conducted by three Sisters of St. Francis. The congregation of St. Mary's consists of two hundred families, of Italian, Irish, Polish, French, and German nationality. The following societies are represented in this congregation: Branch No. 91, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin; Court No. 274, Catholic Order of Foresters; D. P. McNeil, chief ranger; St. Michael's Polish Society, and two Italian Mutual Relief Societies.

St. Mary's Church, Hurley, Wis.

Father Gilbert Nuonno was born in Italy in 1842, ordained to the priesthood in March, 1865, and came to this country during that same year.

The mission of St. Ann's, at Saxon, Iron County, Wisconsin, which is attended by the pastor from St.

Rev. Gilbert Nuonno.

Mary's at Hurley, consists of some thirty-five families, nearly all of whom are French. The church was built at this place by the present pastor nearly five years ago, since which time he has held services there regularly once a month. He also visits a small mission at Iron Belt, Wisconsin, on every second Sunday in the month, and has charge of another at Pierce, which place he visits on the last Sunday of the month. In both of the last named places he holds services in the school house.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Independence, Wis.

THE church of SS. Peter and Paul's congregation, at Independence, Trempealeau County, Wisconsin, was erected by the Rev. H. Klimecki, in 1875, and dedicated by the Rt. Rev. Michael Heiss, then Bishop of La Crosse, on October 7 of the same year. A small parsonage was also built at this time. Father Klimecki resigned his charge May 10, 1882, and from that time until March of the following year this congregation was attended by the Rev. D. Majer, at that time resident pastor at Pine Creek. From March 19, 1883, until November 30, 1885, Father A.

Warnagiris assumed the duties, and from the latter date until March, 1888, the Rev. R. Tomaszewski was in charge. In September, 1886, a brick school-house, just then completed, was dedicated by Bishop Flasch of La

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Independence, Wis.

Crosse. The next pastor assuming charge of this congregation was the Rev. R. L. Guzowski, who remained until February 20, 1890. This pastor built a larger and more commodious parsonage during the year 1889. From February 20 until September 3, 1890, this church was attended by the Rev. A. Kroll, pastor at North Creek. On the latter date the present pastor, the Rev. August Babinski, took charge of the parish. In 1895 the erection of a large brick church, 56x131 feet, was begun. This building was completed during the year 1896, at a total cost of $25,000, and was dedicated on October 28 of that year, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Schwebach. This congregation is in a very flourishing condition, as will be shown by the following statistics, which indicate that on February 1, 1897, it consisted of three hundred and two families, or one thousand five hundred and eleven souls, of whom eight hundred and seventy were communicants. There is a school in connection with the congregation of SS. Peter and Paul's which is in charge of three Sisters of St. Francis, the regular attendance being one hundred and thirteen. Of Catholic societies to which members of this congregation belong, there are: SS. Peter and Paul's Benevolent Society: P. C. Skroch, secretary; Confraternity of the Holy Rosary: Alexius Sygulla, secretary; Confraternity of the Sacred Heart: Jacob Skroch, secretary.

The Rev. August Babinski was born on July 28, 1855, in Long, County of Konitz, Prussian Poland. After obtaining his earlier education at the common school at that place, he took up a course of classics and philosophy at the Gymnasia of Pelphlin and Culm. He was, also, from 1877 to 1880 a student of medicine at the University of Greifswald, in Pomerania. He next took up a course of theology and philosophy in Louvain, in Belgium, where he remained until the time of his ordination to the priesthood in June, 1886. He then came to the United States and was almost immediately appointed to the pastorate of Humbird, in the Diocese of La Crosse, where he remained until May, 1889, when he was appointed pastor at Junction City, remaining there until September, 1890. Since then he has had charge of SS. Peter and Paul's at Independence.

Rev. Aug. Babinski.

St. Michael's Church, Junction City, Wis.

IN 1886 the Catholics of St. Michael s congregation at Junction City, Portage County, Wisconsin, were attended from Marshfield by Father Schaller, then resident pastor of that parish. In the year following, however, Father Krugulski was appointed to that charge, and during the year following completed the church which had already been partially erected. Father Krugulski remained at Junction City for four years and six months, being at the end of that time succeeded in the pastorate by the Rev. Father Babinski. He was succeeded by the Rev. Father Lugowski, whose term of services occupied a period of four years and seven months, he in turn being succeeded by the Rev. Father Meklaszewski, who administered to the spiritual wants of the parish for one year, when the present rector, the Rev. J. J. Miller was appointed to the charge. Since taking up his residence there, Father Miller has enlarged and improved the church edifice to the extent of $2,000, the structure now occupying an area of 96x60 feet. The congregation of St. Michael's at the present time numbers about one hundred families, comprised of people of many different nationalities. There are two Catholic organizations connected with this parish, St. Michael's Society and an Altar Society.

St. Michael's Church, Junction City, Wis.

The congregation of the Holy Rosary (Polish) Church at Sigel, Wood County, Wisconsin, is now attached as a mission to the parish at Junction City. Prior to this, however, as long ago as 1883, it was attended by the resident pastors from Marshfield. Services are held at Sigel twice each month, the congregation at the mission numbering at the present time one hundred families. There are two Catholic organizations connected with this mission, a Holy Rosary Society with forty members and St. Josaphat's Society, which has a like number. There is a parochial school also connected with the congregation, which is in charge of a lay teacher and has a regular attendance of eighty scholars.

Rev. J. J. Miller.

The Rev. J. J. Miller, present rector of the congregations at Junction City and Sigel, was born in the eastern part of Bohemia in 1866, and emigrated to this country in 1883, receiving his education at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, from which institution he was ordained in 1889. Following ordination he was appointed by Bishop Flasch, of La Crosse Diocese, to the Catholic parish at Union Center, where he remained for a year and a half. He then served successively at La Crosse, Bloomer and Dorchester, being transferred from the latter place to Junction City in the spring of 1896.

Church of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Keyesville, Wis.

THE congregation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, at Keyesville, Wisconsin (formerly Ithaka), Richland County, Wisconsin, was established on December 25, 1859, that being the date on which the original deed for four acres of church property was issued for the nominal sum of one dollar by the grantor, Mr. Wilhelm Misslich, and his wife. From that time until 1864, the Catholics at Keyesville were attended at stated intervals by pastors residing in neighboring parishes. Since that date, however, they have maintained a resident pastor, the first to keep that position being the Rev. Theophil Beau, a native of Basel, Switzerland, where he was born in the year 1840. When thirteen years of age Father Beau came to the United States, where, having acquired the necessary education for that purpose, he was ordained to the priesthood on February 2, 1865. This reverend pastor was succeeded at Keyesville by the Rev. F. X. Heller, in 1873, who was in turn followed by the Rev. Albert Mendl in 1875. In the year following the coming of the latter priest to this parish, the Nativity congregation was transferred to the Rev. Michael Heiss, who maintained the charge until 1879. Then the rectorate passed into the hands of the Rev. Henry Koenig, who continued in charge until the time of his death. This pastor was born March 17, 1847, at Pfaffenschwende (Heiligenstadt), province of Sachsen. He was ordained to the priesthood on May 21, 1874, and came to America September 23, 1876. His remains were sepultured in the cemetery at Keyesville. During a portion of the time in which the pastorate was attended by Father Koenig, that is, from 1882 till 1887, he had for an assistant the Rev. Joseph Buss. The next resident pastor at Keyesville, of whom any record is given, was the Rev. Adolph Miller, now of Bloomer, Wisconsin, who came there in 1892. He was succeeded, in the year following, by the Rev. Charles Jungblut, at present located in Phillips, Price County, Wisconsin. Father Jungblut was followed by the present rector at Plain, Wisconsin, the Rev. John G. Laurer, who remained in charge from 1895 until 1897, when he was succeeded by the Rev. August Douven, who was ordained to the priesthood on the 31st of May, 1890. In addition to his work at Keyesville, Father Douven has also charge of eight stations, which are attended by him at regular intervals from Keyesville.

A parochial school was established in connection with Nativity congregation in 1869, the regular attendance at the present time numbering seventy scholars, who are in charge of Franciscan Sisters.

St. Mary's Church, Lyndon Station, Wis.

ONE of the oldest parishes in the Diocese of La Crosse is the Immaculate Conception of Lyndon Station. Half a century has almost elapsed since it was first founded and from this it may be learned that the old landmarks are fast fading from view, and that in a few years nothing will remain to tell the story of pioneer days. At present there are living, a few miles from Lyndon, old homesteaders who delight in speaking of those early days, when they were in the prime of manhood, and relate how they cut the logs and helped to build the first church. From these was learned what little is narrated in the following:

Lyndon Station lies on the Chicago and Milwaukee Railway at about an equal distance from the cities bearing those names. Some six miles to the southeast are the famous Dells of Wisconsin, a part of the parish overlooking Witches' Gulch and Coldwater Cañon. But long before Lyndon was thought of St. Mary's or St. Bridget's, as it was then called, was erected. In 1849, 1850 and 1851 a number of homeseekers, hailing from the "Little Green Isle Across the Seas," came and settled in what is now known as Seven Mile Creek and Kildare townships. Among these were the Taylors, Harveys, Doyles, Greens, Dixons, Smiths, Leonards, Mooneys, Caseys, Hayes and Murrays. One of the first things after erecting their rude dwellings, to claim the attention of those sons imbued with the faith of St. Patrick, was to find a priest to minister to their spiritual wants. Accordingly, in 1851 we see the Rev. Maximillian Gaertner of Sauk City journeying by slow stages (he used ox teams for the major portion of the journey, but also traveled a considerable distance on foot), to pay them his first official visit. On arriving he read Mass and held services at the home of a Mr. Patrick Casey, continuing to do so until the new church was built, which was some time in 1853. This church was named after St. Bridget and located on section five in Kildare Township, at a point known as the McEntur Place. Father Gaertner attended St. Bridget's about four years (1851-1855), and was succeeded by the Rev. Father Godfry. During the latter's administration (1855-56) the removal of the church to the place where the cemetery now lies was agitated, although not carried into effect until the advent of the Rev. Nicholas Stehle in 1856. Father Stehle, besides moving the church, purchased thirty acres of land adjoining the cemetery, whereon was located the first parsonage, he being the first to occupy it as permanent pastor. He was relieved (1858) by the Rev. Dennis O'Neil, who, two years afterwards (1860), gave way to the Rev. Father Montague. About the time of his arrival the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company extended their line through to La Crosse, locating a depot at Lyndon Station. St. Bridget's being two miles distant, it was determined to build a church in the new town. Accordingly, a frame structure 60x30 feet was erected, the same doing service to this day. The wings to the church, as it now appears, were attached some twenty years afterwards by the Rev. John Meurs. Father Montague also purchased the present priest's house and had it moved to where it now stands, but so many changes have been made, within and without, during the thirty-seven years of its occupancy that it would not now be recognized by its original builders. Father Montague attended Lyndon and missions, including Mauston, New Lisbon, Necedah, Kilbourn City and others, for upwards of ten years (1860-1870). He died after a brief illness at New Lisbon, his remains being interred in St. Mary's Cemetery, where they still repose. The next pastor was the Rev. Father Conroy, who remained about seven years (1870-1877), and was succeeded by the Rev. Father Meurs of Prairie du Chien. Father Meurs eclipsed all of his predecessors in duration of pastorate at Lyndon, having charge from December, 1877, to September, 1892. He built the annex referred to, changed the name of the church from St. Bridget's to St. Mary's, purchased the present schoolhouse and had the parsonage veneered. On his resignation, the Rev. J. F. Lang, formerly Counsellor of the Diocese of Fort Wayne, took charge. During his short stay of nine months some five thousand dollars were expended in making improvements on the parsonage and church. The partial indebtedness thus was gradually decreased through the efforts of the Rev. J. F. Kennedy, who was appointed pastor of St. Mary's in July, 1893, but has not yet been entirely removed. Father Kennedy remained in Lyndon a little over two years, when, owing to failing health, he was compelled to retire from active work. He then went to St. Mary's Hospital, Rochester, Minnesota, where he died of consumption on February 25, 1897. The present pastor, the Rev. J. Nevin, took charge of St. Mary's November 1, 1895. He was born in Vernon County, which adjoins the one in which he now lives, August 13, 1861. In the fall of 1882, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, where in June of 1891 he was ordained priest by the Most Rev. Frederick Katzer. Shortly afterwards he was made assistant to the Rt. Rev. James Schwebach, then rector of St. Mary's Church, La Crosse. In this capacity he served seven months, when on the promotion of his Lordship to the episcopate he was assigned to Reedsburg and missions, which he resigned in the fall of 1894 to take charge of Necedah. He is much taken up with St. Mary's and its people and hopes, in accordance with their established generosity, in the near future to erect a new church befitting their Patron Saint as an enduring monument of their zeal, so that fifty years hence their good deeds may not only be emblazoned in the Book of Life, but also recorded in history as examples of unquestionable devotion. The present trustees of the parish are: William Troy and J. T. Doyle; consultors, James Taylor and Thomas Pollard. The census of 1895 gives to St. Mary's a congregation numbering nine hundred souls. There are at present one hundred and thirty-five Irish, fifteen German, seven Dutch and seven Polish and Bohemian families holding pews. A free school has been conducted in connection with the parish for twenty years, presided over by two Franciscan Sisters from La Crosse. It has an enrollment of about ninety pupils, the average attendance being fifty. Lyndon Court, No. 411, of the Catholic Order of Foresters, was organized March 21, 1894, and has enrolled sixty members, all of whom are in good standing. The present officers are: M. F. Conway, chief ranger; Dannie Fox, vice chief ranger; G. J. Hayes, recording secretary; William Troy, financial secretary; J. Welsh, treasurer; trustees, John Caneey, P. J. Cowles and Thomas Tracey. St. Bridget's Total Abstinence Association was organized February 14, 1875; M. F. Conway is now president. Among the most zealous workers in the Society are Joseph Taylor, Patrick Morrisy, Michael Moran and Miss Blake. A Reading Circle was formed in March, 1896, and has about thirty members, with Miss Mary Foley president. A League of the Sacred Heart was started about the same period and has some two hundred and fifty members enrolled. A Ladies' Altar Society has been doing good work for the last forty years. It numbers at present seventy-five souls. Mrs. Blake and Mrs. G. J. Hayes are the secretary and treasurer. There is also a flourishing Young Ladies' Sodality, having for prefect Miss Maggie Blake.

St. Mary's Church, Lyndon Station, Wis.

Rev. J. Nevins.

St. Mary's Church, Marathon City, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Mary's at Marathon City, Marathon County, Wisconsin, was founded in the year 1863. The first priest to minister to the spiritual wants of the Catholics of this place was the Rev. T. Lutz, who was succeeded by the Rev. L. Hengen, as first resident pastor, in 1866. He was followed, in 1871, by the Rev. L. Spitzlberger, who in turn gave way to Father T. Reiser in 1875. During his residence at Marathon City, Father Reiser built the present church, besides making a number of lesser improvements to the church property. The present pastor, the Rev. E. A. Hanses, took charge of the congregation in 1888. There are at present about two hundred and thirty families in the parish. The parochial school at Marathon City, which is conducted by two Franciscan Sisters of the Perpetual Adoration, from La Crosse, has an enrollment of about one hundred and fifty scholars. The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin are represented in this congregation.

Rev. E. A. Hanses.

The Rev. E. A. Hanses was born in the year 1847, in Germany, and was ordained on the 18th of February, 1871. He came to the United States in 1867.

St. Patrick's Church, Marble Ridge, Wis.

NOT unlike the history of other country parishes, that of St. Patrick's congregation, in the town of Bear Creek, Sauk County, Wisconsin, is considerably involved in obscurity. This congregation is composed almost entirely of people of Irish descent. Of the first of these mentioned, are the families of O'Brien and John O'Meara, who moved to the town in 1853. During the year following, Patrick Shea, Patrick Donohue, Patrick and Michael O'Neil, James Quinn, Peter Welsh, Mr. Couly, John Lahey, Mr. Carney, Mr. Kavanaugh, Thomas Murray, W. Rooney, and others, took up their permanent abode in that locality.

In the fall of 1855, James Donohue, a son of Patrick Donohue, was badly injured by a falling tree, and, as his condition was known to be critical, a messenger was at once dispatched for a priest to Sauk City, where the Rev. Father Gaertner then resided, that being the nearest available point from which to obtain succor. Father Gaertner at once responded to the call, and, although too late to administer the Sacraments, conducted the funeral services, saying Mass in the home of Patrick Donohue. This was the first visit made by any priest to the settlement, opening up, as it were, a means of communication with the people, who at a later date organized the now flourishing parish of St. Patrick's.

Father Gaertner thenceforth visited this Irish settlement about once a month until the summer of 1858, saying Mass at the house of Patrick Donohue. This house, where divine services were held from 1855 to 1860, was situated in the extreme northeast corner of Section 9, a few rods west of a little spring. Here the first christening of the congregation was held, the candidate being the daughter of Thomas and Catherine (O'Mally) Murray. The child was born September 23, 1855, and named Mary. This christening took place when Father Gaertner came to Patrick Donohue's house the first time, in 1855. The first marriage in the settlement was celebrated also at the residence of Patrick Donohue in the early '50's. The happy and historic couple were Michael O'Neil and Margaret Maroney.

The Rev. F. X. Weinhart was the second priest to attend this congregation, continuing to do so from the fall of 1858 to that of 1860. He, also, was stationed at Sauk City, Wisconsin, visiting the Bear Creek mission from that place once each month. After he had attended the settlement for two years, and the congregation had increased to about twenty families, he encouraged the faithful to select and obtain a site for erecting a church. But about that time this zealous apostolic Father relinquished charge of the place.

The good people, however, perceiving the necessity of a house of God wherein the most Holy Sacrifice of the Mass might be offered up, and responding to the advice and encouragement of Father Weinhart, began to earnestly discuss the immediate erection of a suitable building. The first site selected was on the present "Ridge Road," on a piece of land belonging to one Flynn, and situated in Section 2. At that place, in the winter of 1861, a meeting was held, but no definite resolutions were adopted, for, upon accurate investigation, it became apparent that the holder of the land had only an obscure title to it. Hence, on March 20 of the same year, another meeting was held, when John Rice offered to donate three acres of land to the congregation for church purposes. This proposition was quickly and thankfully received.

The location having thus been determined upon, the ground obtained and timber bargained for, the zealous little band of Irishmen went resolutely to work to fell trees and hew the logs with which this structure was to be built. The building thus undertaken was 18x24 feet, and when completed cost in cash about $300. Among those who assisted with their services in the construction of the church were Dennis Phalen, James Quinn, James McCarville, John Farden and James O'Maley. It was completed later in the year 1865, and the first services were held in it on the 17th of March, 1866, when it was named after the Apostle of Ireland.

After the Rev. F. X. Weinhart had relinquished charge, in the autumn of 1860, St. Patrick's mission was attached to Mazomanie, Dane County, Wisconsin, whence the Rev. Father Stroker visited it from the fall of 1860 to 1862. He held divine services alternately at the houses of Patrick Donohue and James Quinn, residing on Section 35 of the town of Washington, Sauk County, Peter Walsh, on Section 11, and John Lahey, on Section 14, both in the town of Bear Creek, and was the third priest who administered to the spiritual wants of the faithful. During his time, work on the first log church was begun. Priests in those early days could devote but little attention to temporal affairs, for they had so many missions in charge that they could barely find time to visit each once a month, and then only a day or two.

When Father Stroker ceased visiting the mission, in 1862, the congregation was without a pastor for some three months. But, again, the illness of one of the settlers proved the occasion for a priest to administer to the spiritual needs of the people of this isolated settlement. This time the visiting pastor was the Rev. Father Welsh, of Mazomanie, who afterwards came several times, and, until sometime in 1863, held divine services at private houses, as his predecessors had done.

St. Patrick's Church, Marble Ridge, Wis.

The congregation was again left without a priest for about six months, when the Rev. Wendelin Bernard came as regular pastor from Keyesville, in the spring of 1864, making visits at stated intervals from there until the beginning of 1866. When he came the first time, he said Holy Mass, gave instructions and heard confessions at the house of Michael Callahan, who lived on Section 7, in the town of Bear Creek. During his pastoral administration, the first log church was completed. Up to his time, there was no fixed amount of salary allowed for the pastor, but the people were as liberal as their scanty means permitted, raising whatever they could by private donations. Father Bernard, however, effected definite arrangements with the congregation regarding a certain salary per annum, the amount finally determined upon being $125.

Early in the year 1866, the Rev. W. Bernard was transferred to Cazenovia, Wisconsin, and the Rev. Theophil Beau became his successor at Keyesville and also at St. Patrick's mission. He was its sixth pastor. He came on March 17, 1866, celebrating the first service in the new church. The first baptism, that of William Kearney, was administered by Father Beau on the same date, and the first confirmation by the Right Rev. Michael Heiss, first Bishop of La Crosse, in the spring of 1869. Among those confirmed at that time were John and Andrew Mears, Sr., and John and Sarah Derrig. Prior to this time, however, quite a few had been confirmed at Keyesville. During Father Beau's pastorate, the salary was raised by pew rent and the first regular church committee elected. Father Beau was universally beloved during his administration as pastor of St. Patrick's, which ended in the latter part of 1872.

The Rev. F. X. Heller succeeded the Rev. Theophil Beau as seventh pastor of this parish, continuing in attendance from 1872 to the fall of 1874. During Father Beau's time, the congregation had increased to about fifty families. Thus the little log church had become entirely inadequate to the demands put upon it, and, on the urgent advice of their pastor, the people, realizing the necessity of such an undertaking, gave their unanimous approval to the erection of a larger and more appropriate structure. Accordingly, the Rev. F. X. Heller, during the summer of 1872, perfected plans for a new church, gathering subscriptions in material and money for that purpose. As a site for this building, Michael O'Neil donated an acre and a half of land in Section 4, the location being exactly opposite that of the old one. The work on this building progressed so rapidly that the corner-stone was laid on September 15, 1872, the Rev. Theophil Beau performing the ceremony, assisted by the pastor. The dimensions of the structure were 40x84 feet, including the sanctuary. It was built entirely of frame, the lumber being hauled from Fond du Lac for that purpose. The work was done promiscuously by the day, job and gratis, the total cost of the building when completed being about $4,000. The main altar for this church was built at Cazenovia, Wisconsin, and the Stations were donated by John Cayne, Daniel Carson and John Lahey.

The church was blessed on April 30, 1874, by Bishop Heiss of La Crosse, assisted by the Rev. F. X. Heller, pastor, and the Rev. A. Heller of Muscoda, Wisconsin. He also administered the Sacrament of Confirmation, among those confirmed being Win. and Matthew Derring, and Margaret and Catherine King.

The Rev. Albert Mendl was the eighth priest in charge of this parish, attending from Keyesville, where he resided. His pastorate was quite brief, however, being of but six months' duration. His successor was the Rev. Michael Heiss, Jr., also stationed at Keyesville, who maintained the pastorate from 1875 to 1878. Under his supervision, a steeple was added to the church in 1875, the amount to pay for the same being raised by special subscription.

In 1878 the Rev. Henry Koenig became successor to the Rev. Michael Heiss, Jr., at Keyesville, having care of the souls of that charge and of St. Patrick's mission until October 31, 1889, as the tenth pastor. He blessed the graveyard in 1879. Since the departure of Father Beau, the pastor's salary had again been raised by the means of additional taxation. In 1880 and 1881, the Rev. F. H. Lawler was assistant to Father Koenig, and visited St. Patrick's as the eleventh pastor. Then the Rev. Joseph Buss, assistant to the Rev. H. Koenig from 1883 to 1886, maintained the duties as twelfth pastor of the congregation. On May 7, 1887, both churches and their entire contents were destroyed by fire, and although every effort was made to discover it, the origin of this disaster still remains a mystery. The second church had been insured against fire in 1882 for $2,000, which amount was promptly paid to the owner, the Right Rev. Kilian C. Flasch, D. D., Bishop of La Crosse. After this loss, from May, 1887, to May, 1889, Father Koenig held divine services a few times a year at the private houses of members of the congregation.

Rev. Jas. J. Maguire.

Immediately after the destruction of the church, the people naturally began to talk about building a new one. But the old trouble, so palpably manifest twenty-seven years previous, when the selection of a site for the building was in contemplation, again made its appearance. The people evidently could not agree, and Father Koenig objected strenuously to adopting a position which might under any circumstances be construed as partisan, or subserving the interests of one faction more than those of the other. It was, in fact, evident that he preferred the people should fight the matter out among themselves, without calling the services of the pastor into requisition as arbiter or judge. By this course of action, however, he unfortunately incurred the displeasure of nearly the entire congregation, for there exists but little doubt in the minds of the people that, had he expressed an authoritative opinion concerning the dispute, it would have been adopted without question, and thus stopped all further discussion of the matter. Unable to agree among themselves, and with a pastor who remained determinedly non-committal concerning the matter, the members of the congregation referred the subject to the Bishop, binding themselves to abide by his decision. His ultimate conclusion, that a more central location would be advisable, though favoring the opinion of the majority, proved a hard blow to quite a number, especially those who had relatives and friends buried in the cemetery, which had been plotted as part of the original property and was immediately adjacent to the church. In spite of dissensions, however, the Bishop's dictum was observed, and the church built at a point nearer to the center of the parish, as suggested by him. Ground was broken, and work on the foundation of the building begun, in May, 1888. The dimensions of the building are 36x70 feet, base to steeple, which projects from the main structure, 16x16, 100 feet high. Work on this building was pushed rapidly along, so that divine services were held in it for the first time by Father Koenig on October 21, 1888. During May of the following year, considerable interest was aroused in the congregation by means of a mission given by the Rev. Father De Gurdemus, S. J., of Prairie du Chien. In the summer of 1889, the Rev. J. Campbell, then stationed at Reedsburg, Wisconsin, made a written application to the parish committee, consisting of M. Kissaue, W. A. Dwyer and James Ferguson, for the mission, but the matter fell through. As the health of the pastor now began visibly to fail, and the location of the new church brought that congregation into close proximity to that at Plain, Wisconsin, the Bishop of the diocese decided to transfer the mission to the charge of the pastor of the latter parish, and in October, 1889, he, to the great joy of the congregation, attached it as a mission to Plain, Wisconsin.

The Rev. Stephen Duren, in obedience to the Bishop's orders, took charge of the mission on November 1, 1889, thus becoming the thirteenth pastor of St. Patrick's. He found the congregation in a state of considerable disorder, with a debt of over $600 weighing heavily upon it, and other demands and conditions which made it anything but a satisfactory acquisition to a pastor whose duties were already a trying test to his utmost endurance. As regards the indebtedness of the congregation, the people, or, at least, a majority of them, had assumed a condition of torpidity which augured ill for their emancipation from this incubus on the future preferment of the financial affairs of this community. The old factional fight, too, was ever to the fore, dormant, but never dead, and ever ready, seemingly, to spring into an unwonted state of activity, pernicious and harmful in its effects upon the general surroundings. Into such a fold the Rev. Stephen Duren was called to labor, and it is greatly to his credit that, through his patient and zealous efforts, the people were slowly, but effectually, weaned back to the ways of a consistent and upright Christian life.

After Father Duren's time, St. Patrick's was attended alternately from Keyesville and Plain by Fathers Douven and Laurer until September, 1897, when the Rev. James J. Maguire was appointed first resident pastor of St. Patrick's parish.

Father James J. Maguire was ordained to the priesthood at St. Louis, Missouri, in June, 1895. His first appointment was as assistant to Father Dunne, at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, with whom he remained until appointed to his present pastorate. The congregation of St. Patrick's now numbers about one hundred families.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Marshfield, Wis.

ST. JOHN'S congregation, Marshfield, Wisconsin, is under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of La Crosse, Wisconsin, but no parish in the diocese being conveniently located to supply Marshfield and the missions from Junction City to Ashland, priests of the Diocese of Green Bay visited here in the early days (from 1874 to 1877). The first service in Marshfield was conducted by the Rev. P. Pernin, of Grand Rapids, in July, 1874, in a shanty belonging to Louis Rivers. The second service was given by the Rev. Father Tanke, of Grand Rapids, in 1875, in a little public school house located in front of Lincoln Park, Bakerville. Bakerville was then called Marshfield Settlement. On December 21, 1875, the Rev. A. Seubert, of Menasha, came here and baptized John Seubert, son of George Seubert, and four other children. In 1876 and 1877 the Rev. Father July, of Stevens Point, and his assistant, the Rev. Father Abb, visited Marshfield each year and conducted services.

In 1877 Bishop Heiss passed through here for Colby. George Seubert and Mr. Britten, of Bakerville, learning of this, went to see the Bishop at Colby, and Mr. Seubert petitioned the Bishop for a permit to build a church in Marshfield, and Mr. Britten petitioned to build in Bakerville. The Bishop gave permission to build a church in Marshfield and appointed the Rev. A. Th. Schuettelhofer pastor of Medford, with Marshfield as a mission. He entered upon his duties on Christmas day, 1877, and held his first service in Marshfield on January 18, 1878. The Rev. Father Schuettelhofer held services in a public school house, where Dr. Hayward's house now stands, until the church was built in 1880; George Seubert, A. Schafer and Louis Rivers were the prime movers to get the first church here.

In the year 1880 the Right Rev. Bishop M. Heiss, Bishop of La Crosse, Wisconsin, was promoted to the Archbishopric of Milwaukee, and the Rev. H. Kampschroer, at present pastor of St. Henry's congregation, Watertown, Wisconsin, was made Administrator of the Diocese of La Crosse. During the Rev. H. Kampschroer's administration, the place of residence of the mission priest for this section was changed, and the Rev. Father Schuettelhofer resided at Marshfield from October 1, 1880.

The Rev. Father Schuettelhofer lived in a rented house in block D. The frame church, 40x80, which has been supplanted by the present magnificent edifice, was erected in his time, but was not finished or furnished when he left. He remained here until June, 1881.

The Rev. Father Schuettelhofer is at present pastor of the church of the Holy Family at Shenandoah, Pennsylvania. He is a native of Germany, coming to this country on September 24, 1870.

From June, until August 14, 1881, there was no pastor here.

The Rev. Ignatius Schaller was appointed by Bishop K. C. Flasch pastor of Marshfield and neighboring missions at the beginning of August, 1881. He at once took up the work of finishing and furnishing the church. The church was blessed on July 27, 1882. The following note is found in the records:

"The church was blessed and dedicated to St. John the Baptist on July 27, 1882, by the Right Rev. K. C. Flasch, Bishop of La Crosse, under the assistance of Rev. Charles Beyerle of Grand Rapids, Rev. Theodore Richard of Wausau, Rev. Joseph Baur of Durand, Rev. Ignatius Lager of Medford, Rev. Ignatius Schaller, pastor at Marshfield."

Shortly after his arrival he also built the parsonage, which is in use yet; and in the year 1882 the frame school building was built, and school commenced on November 19, 1882, with eighty-six children.

In 1888, the school rooms not being sufficient to accommodate all the children, the brick school-house was erected and the frame building reconstructed for a dwelling house for the Sisters.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Marshfield, Wis.

The following priests were assistants of Father Schaller: The Rev. D. Reddin, at present pastor of Erin Prairie, Wisconsin; the Rev. Ignatius Lager, afterwards pastor of Medford; the Rev. H. Juetting, who died some years ago; the Rev. A. Gara, at present pastor of Poniatowski; the Rev. J. Joch, at present chaplain of the Sisters of the Sorrowful Mother, at Danville, New Jersey; the Rev. C. Nau, at present pastor of Boyd, Wisconsin, and the Rev. G. Kiefner, at present pastor of Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin.

In September, 1889, the Rev. I. Schaller was removed from here and appointed pastor of Tilden, Wisconsin. His health failing gradually, he remained there but a short time. He afterwards took charge of Fifield; and then for some time of St. Joseph's Hospital at Chippewa Falls, from where he went to Plain, where he worked faithfully until August 15, 1895, when illness compelled him to go to the hospital at La Crosse, where, under the good care of the Sisters, he rallied again, and came to Marshfield on November 17, 1895, to act as chaplain for the Sisters here. But his days were numbered. He took sick again on December 23, 1895, and died on January 20, 1896, at St. Joseph's Hospital, and was buried from St. John's Church, Thursday, January 23, 1896, the Right Rev. James Schwebach and over thirty of his fellow-priests and a large concourse of people attending the funeral.

The Rev. Paul Geyer was appointed pastor of Marshfield by Bishop Flasch in September, 1889. During his pastorate an addition to the parsonage was built, some of the church debts paid, and the St. Joseph's Hospital erected. Bishop Flasch died in August, 1891. His Vicar-General, the Very Rev. Jas. Schwebach, was appointed Administrator of the Diocese, and in December, 1891, was appointed by Rome Bishop of La Crosse. The new Bishop appointed the Rev. Paul Geyer Vicar-General and St. John's Church lost its pastor again on May 10, 1892.

The following priests were assistants of the Rev, Paul Geyer: The Rev. G. Kiefner; the Rev. Birsner, at present chaplain of St. Joseph's Hospital; the Rev. A, Douven, at present pastor at Keyesville, Wisconsin; the Rev. W. Daniels, at present pastor of Hewitt; the Rev. P. Dickopf, at present pastor of Mosinee, Wisconsin, and the Rev. P. Schnitzler, at present pastor of Pine Hollow, Wisconsin.

The Rev. John Eisen was appointed by the Right Rev. James Schwebach pastor of St. John's Church, on April 25, 1892. He arrived here on Tuesday, May 10, 1892. On September 14, 1892, the plans and specifications for a new church were received from Architect Druiding. On September 26, 1892, the bids were opened and the contract let to Henry Hoffman of Appleton, and on September 29, 1892, the foundation was laid out. On May 21, 1893, Penticost Sunday, the corner-stone was blessed, and on Sunday, January 7, 1894 the new church was consecrated. The church, inclusive of furniture, cost about $35,000.

In the fall of 1894, the school rooms proving insufficient, another school room was arranged in the basement of the winter chapel. This, of course, gave only temporary relief, until the congregation felt able to erect a new school building.

On October 18, 1896, the Rev. J. Eisen called a meeting of the congregation, explaining the absolute necessity for more school room. The people, seeing the necessity, decided to build a new school-house which should be at once a commodious and permanent educational structure. This work has just been completed, and now St. John's congregation has not only a magnificent church, but also a school-house which is modern in every detail of architecture, and the largest in the city.

St. John's congregation was incorporated on October 12, 1883, according to the laws of the State of Wisconsin, and the official title is, "St. John Baptist Catholic Congregation, Marshfield, Wisconsin." The bishop is president, the pastor vice-president, and the rest of the board is composed of the Vicar-General of the Diocese, and two lay members of the parish for treasurer and secretary. Anthony Thomas and Robert L. Kraus were the first lay members of the Board, while at present M. J. Kraus is secretary, and John L. Voelker treasurer. The congregation now numbers over four hundred families.

Rev. John Eisen.

The present school-house is of brick throughout, two stories high, with a laboratory occupying the third floor. Its entire dimensions are 80x80 feet, the total cost when complete being about $16,000. The interior arrangements pertaining to this building are most complete, it being heated by hot air, lighted by electricity, and furnished with city water throughout. Of other arrangements, there are eight class rooms set aside for the use of the children, besides a large assembly hall and a roomy library. The general average attendance at the school, which is now in charge of seven Sisters of Notre Dame, is four hundred and eighty-six.

Of Catholic organizations connected with this congregation there are St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, Frank Lukenbach, president; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch No. 74, M. Steger, president; Catholic Order of Foresters, P. J. Lyons, chief ranger; St. Agnes' Society; Altar Society, and Young Men's St. Aloysius Society.

The Rev. John Eisen, pastor of St. John's, was born April 22, 1856, at Weissendorf, Bavaria. After acquiring an ordinary education, he completed a course in classics and philosophy in the City of Bamberg, where he remained from 1870 to 1879. He then went to the American College at Louvain, Belgium, and after completing his studies there was ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. Bishop Adams in Luxemburg, on December 23, 1882. He left his native country in February, 1883, and on the 3d of March following landed at New York. He then came West to Wisconsin, and was appointed by Bishop Flasch assistant to the Rev. Father Goldsmith at Chippewa Falls, assuming that position on March 17. On July 16th following, he was appointed pastor of the Clayfield congregation and missions, and worked there until May 10, 1892, when he was transferred to St. John's congregation at Marshfield. Since he has been pastor, there have been no missions attached, and he has done the work alone, except from November 1, 1895, to July 1, 1896, when the Rev. A. Muehlenkamp was his assistant.

In October, 1892, Father Eisen was appointed dean of the district comprising the parishes in Wood County, Marathon County, also Junction City, and Mill Creek in Portage County, and Colby in Clark County.

St. Patrick's Church, Mauston, Wis.

THE country tributary to the City of Mauston was but sparsely settled when, in 1857, the congregation of St. Patrick's was first organized. What few Catholic settlers there were, however, in that vicinity, were zealous as well as earnest, and so a small church 45x25 feet was at once erected on the banks of the Lemonweir River. Prior to this time the Catholics of Juneau County had been visited at intervals, or as necessity demanded, by Father Gertland, a missionary priest who was stationed at Sauk City on the Wisconsin River, some forty miles distant. Later, or to be more specific, in 1854, monthly visits were made to Mauston by Father Stepley, at that time also a resident of Sauk County. When, however, the first little church was built in 1857, Father Montague, then of Lyndon parish, visited the congregation regularly twice every month. Thus matters took their course until 1862, when Father Roach was appointed resident priest. He remained but a year, the straightened circumstances of the congregation making it impossible for them to meet the necessary expenses. Another attempt was made in 1864, the aged Father Corrigan assuming the duties of pastor, but his untimely death a short time after arriving,—he was killed by a fall from a moving train,—again created a vacancy, which was filled by the appointment of Father Casey in 1865. This devoted priest did much to benefit and strengthen the congregation during his stay. Noticeable among his achievements was the purchase of a larger and more desirable site to which the church was soon after moved. He left in 1867, respected and regretted by all, and was succeeded by Father Laven, formerly pastor at New Lisbon. He was followed in 1871 by Father White, who was also placed in charge of the congregations at New Lisbon and Necedah. Father Math. White accomplished considerable in the way of improvements to the church property at Mauston, and being extremely zealous in his pastoral labors became much endeared to the people placed under his charge. The duties involved in the management of three parishes, however, proved too much of a physical strain, so that after six years of unremitting toil, he finally succumbed to an attack of hemorrhage while still attending to his duties. In 1877 Father Gilbert took up his residence in Mauston, having been appointed to the charges made vacant by the death of his predecessor. He also effected many desirable improvements in the parish. It was during his pastorate that the church at Mauston was so badly damaged by fire that it became necessary to build an entirely new one and also a parsonage. For eight years following the removal of Father Gilbert, in 1885, the Rev. von Droste maintained the pastorate of St. Patrick's as well as that of the mission of Lindina. He was succeeded in 1894 by the Rev. Father Becker, who, since his advent, has added greatly to the appearance and value of the property. A much needed addition to the church was built giving a total area of 40x100 feet, a new furnace was placed in the building and three handsome new altars erected. On the same site with the church and parsonage stands a fine new school-house, which, like the others, is substantially constructed of stone and brick. The value of these properties combined is estimated at $18,000. Since Father Becker's appointment the size of the congregation has noticeably increased, the membership at present amounting to one hundred and seventy-five families. The school, which numbers an attendance of eighty-five scholars, is under the management of three Sisters of St. Dominic, of whom Sister Mechtildes is superior. There are but four Catholic societies in the parish, the largest being the Sacred Heart League, which has a membership of four hundred. Next come the Holy Rosary Society with a hundred members, the Young Ladies' Sodality with seventy-five and the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin with forty-three members. Of this latter organization Patrick Hyde is president, Philip Coleman, vice-president, James Timbers, secretary, and Frank Flynn, treasurer.

St. Patrick's Church, Mauston, Wis.

Rev. P. Becker.

The mission of St. Michael's at Mariontown, Juneau County, consists at the present time of about twenty-five families, among whom are people of German, Irish, Bohemian and Polish nationality. Services are held at St. Michael's on the first Monday of every month, in a neat little frame church which is located about eight miles northeast of the mother parish at Mauston.

The Rev. P. Becker was born at Nettesheim near Cologne, Prussia, in 1858. His earlier education was obtained in the schools of his native country, but on the emigration of his parents to America, in 1871, he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, at Milwaukee. Here he virtually completed his classical and philosophical course, although he afterwards returned to Europe, finishing his theological studies at the Grand Seminary of Liege, Belgium, and was there ordained to the priesthood by the Most Rev. Archbishop Victor Joseph Doutreloux, June 4, 1887. On returning to the United States he was placed in charge of St. Mary's congregation, at Cumberland, Wis., where he remained for two years. His next pastorate was at St. Joseph's Church, Rice Lake, where, during his stay, he built the school and parsonage. He was from there transferred in 1894 to Mauston.

Holy Rosary Church, Medford, Wis.

IN the early part of the seventies Medford was attended by the Rev. Father July, located at that time at Stevens Point, Wis. In 1877 the Rev. Father Schuettelhofer became the first resident pastor at this place. He organized the congregation, and under his direction the first church, a small frame building, having a seating capacity for one hundred and twenty-five persons, was erected. A house was also purchased which served as a parochial residence until 1894. After a brief residence at Medford, Father Schuettelhofer removed to Marshfield, from which place he paid occasional visits to his former congregation. In 1881 he was succeeded by the Rev. J. Schaller, who continued to attend the church at Medford until June 1, 1882, when the Rev. Ignatius Lager became second resident pastor of the Holy Rosary Congregation. Father Lager at once began the erection of a new church at Medford, which was completed under the administration of the Rev. J. W. Ritz, who took charge of the parish in May, 1884. In September, 1889, a parochial school was first opened in the old church building which had been arranged for that purpose. On September 1, 1890, the Rev. F. X. Willms became pastor of the congregation. He signalized his administration of two years by the erection of a spacious school-house. His successor was the Rev. Augustine A. Birsner, who retired in favor of the Rev. Peter Alfes, September 1, 1893. Father Alfes sold the old school building and parsonage, and was on the point of erecting a new parsonage when he died. His death occurred on March 14, 1894, and about six weeks later the Rev. Stephen Duren took charge of the pastorate, and carried out the designs of his predecessor by building a residence as contemplated. On April 13, 1895, the Rev. C. B. Weikmann was appointed pastor of the congregation. He thoroughly renovated and repaired the church and school-house and re-opened the parochial school, which had been closed by his predecessor. The congregation of Holy Rosary now consists of one hundred and fifty families, one hundred and thirty of which are German, fifteen Irish and five of other nationalities. The school is under the direction of Franciscan Sisters from Alverno, Wis., who have had charge of it from the beginning. The number of pupils enrolled is one hundred. Of Catholic societies represented in this congregation, there are the St. Boniface Society,—a branch of the Central Verein,—of which Frank Marcus is president and Max Bach, secretary; the Ladies' Rosary Sodality: Mrs. Chas. Ziemer, president; Mrs. Th. Schupp, secretary and treasurer, and the Catholic Family Protective Association,

Holy Rosary Church, Medford, Wis.

The Rev. C. B. Weikmann was born June 10, 1867, and raised on a farm in Northern Iowa. He began his classical studies with the Jesuit Fathers at Prairie du Chien, Wis., and then entered the Seminary of St.

Rev. C. B. Weikmann.

Francis at Milwaukee, where he completed his philosophical and theological course in June, 1889. He was ordained to the priesthood on December 15 of the same year. After acting in the capacity of assistant to the Rev. Father Boehm of Eau Claire and the Rev. J. B. Wiedmann of the Cathedral at La Crosse, he took charge of the congregation at Fifield, Wis., where he remained for one year. He was next transferred to Colby and from thence to Medford. While at Fifield he built a new parsonage and when at Colby erected a school and Sisters house. He also built a church at Athens.

St. Joseph's Church, Menomonie, Wis.

ST. JOSEPH'S parish at Menomonie, Dunn County, Wis., was founded as early as 1861, by Father Smedding, pastor of Notre Dame Church, Chippewa Falls, Wis., who built a small frame church that year from amounts donated by the mill hands and camp crews in that vicinity. Father Smedding was succeeded by the Rev. Fathers A. Fagan, McNicoley and Keller, the latter building a parsonage in 1874. Father Keller was succeeded by the Rev. A. Michels who remained until 1877. The next incumbent, Father von Droste, began the erection of a new brick church, the dimensions of which were 45x120 feet. Then Father L. Lay assumed the pastorate which he maintained until 1887, when failing health compelled him to retire. His successor was the Rev. S. Rohr, who in 1889 gave way to the Rev. L. Kaluza, who began the erection of a parochial school building in 1890. The Rev. B. Klein, who followed, remained but a short time, and in May, 1892, the present incumbent, Father A. J. Joerres, was appointed. There are now one hundred and sixty families in the congregation. The parochial school, conducted by Sisters of the Perpetual Adoration, from La Crosse, is attended by one hundred and thirty-six scholars. An acquisition to the church interests at this place was made in 1890, when Sisters of the Sorrowful Mother, from Rome, Italy, established a hospital there. Catholic societies represented in the congregation of St. Joseph's are: Sodality of the B. V. M., Third Order of St. Francis, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch 135, St. Joseph's Benevolent Union, Children of Mary and Altar Society. The station of St. Joseph's at Elk Mound, Wis., is also occasionally attended from this parish.

St. Joseph's Church, Menomonie, Wis.

Father A. J. Joerres was born near Cologne, Germany, on July 12, 1862. He was ordained to the priesthood at the Cathedral at La Crosse, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Flasch, D. D., in 1885, his first appointment being at Sparta, Wis., where he remained for three months. He was next assistant to the Rev. Father Kelly, at Hudson, Wis., for nine months, and removed to Colby, Wis., in 1886. He was appointed pastor of St. Nicholas (now Holy Trinity), at La Crosse in 1891, and to St. Joseph's at Menomonie the following year.

Rev. A. J. Joerres.

St. Bartholomew's Church, Mill Creek, Wis.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S church at Mill Creek, Portage County, Wisconsin, was built in the year 1883, by twenty-five Polish families at an expense of $3,000. The first Polish families who settled in Mill Creek, Township of Stevens Point, at the beginning of 1860, and later, were those of Odalbert Makurat, John Pyszka, Jacobus Kubowski, Thomas Niewczyk, Vincent Slusarki, Paul Pliszka and Joseph Wnuk. From that time until 1891, the congregation at Mill Creek was attended as a mission from Junction City, whose pastor visited there regularly once each month. The first of these to attend St. Bartholomew's was the Rev. Father Krogulski, whose pastorate continued until 1887. He was succeeded at Junction City by the Rev. August Babinski, who attended St. Bartholomew's congregation until 1889; then Father T. O. Lugowski became the pastor, remaining until 1891. In that year the Rt. Rev. Bishop

St. Bartholomew's Church, Mill Creek, Wis.

Schwebach gave a regular pastor to the congregation at Mill Creek in the person of the Rev. Konstantin Frydrychowicz, who built a parsonage, besides which he bought three acres of land for the church, making in all six acres now owned by the parish. He was succeeded in 1893 by the Rev. Father Jachimiak, the present pastor, during whose administration a sacristy was added to the church structure and two side altars to the interior furnishings. He also made numerous other improvements in the church, and furnished the parsonage throughout. From the beginning this parish has experienced the most satisfactory results from the efforts of its numerous pastors, and to-day is in quite a flourishing condition, the settlement being continually augmented and strengthened by the arrival of Polish families. At the present time the congregation of St. Bartholomew numbers one hundred and fifteen families or an individual membership of about six hundred and thirty. In spite, however, of the prosperity of the congregation, its financial condition is such that up to the present time there has been no parochial school established in the parish. There is in the congregation of St. Bartholomew a Holy Rosary Society, which was established in 1894, of which Miss Mary Hylewski is president; it has a membership of sixty. There is also a Society of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, which was organized by Father Jachimiak in 1895; it has a present membership of thirty, its officers being: The Rev. Father Jachimiak, president; I. Ziolkowski, secretary, and H. Stowinski, treasurer.

The Rev. Francis Jachimiak was born in Black Dunajec, Czarny Dunajec, in Galicia, Poland, in 1867. After attending the public school in his native town, he entered the Gymnasia at Cracow and New Sanfez, where he graduated with honors. He came to the United States in 1889 and almost immediately entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he remained for two years. He then took a course in theology at St. John's University, Minnesota, from which institution he also graduated with honors. July 11, 1893, he was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Zardetti, and was soon after appointed to his present pastorate at Mill Creek.

Rev. Fr. Jachimiak.

St. Hedwig's parish, at Posen, which, until March, 1897, was attended as a mission from St. Bartholomew's Parish at Mill Creek, has now a resident pastor in the person of the Rev. Konstantin Frydrychowicz. It was organized in 1890 by the twenty-five Polish families living in Posen Township, Clark County, at that time. Up to the year 1893, the mission was attended by the Rev. Konstantin Frydrychowicz, resident rector at Mill Creek, but later was visited at regular intervals by the rector of St. Bartholomew's congregation. At present this parish consists of one hundred and twenty families or six hundred souls. A Holy Rosary Society was organized in the congregation some time ago, which has now a membership of thirty.

It is a well-appreciated fact that the present church at this place was built through the efforts of Father Frydrychowicz. In addition to the church this congregation owns the land upon which it stands, some ten acres in extent. The Stations of the Way of the Cross and ciborium owned by the congregation were bought during the pastorate of Father Jachimiak.

The congregation of St. Boniface at Chetek, Wisconsin, was for a long time attended as a mission by the resident pastor from Mill Creek, but for some time past has been under the administration of the pastor at Thorpe. As, however, the monthly services at Chetek are no longer of regular occurrence, but are held only at long and uncertain intervals, it is probable that the mission will again come under the domination of Mill Creek. The congregation of St. Boniface was organized some seventeen or eighteen years ago, by the Rev. Father Dole, and was incorporated in 1889. It consists of twenty families, all Poles. Other missions formerly attached to Mill Creek have been abandoned, there being but two families in Barron and one in Cameron, while the Catholics living in Dallas attend divine service at Menomonie.

St. Patrick's Church, Minocqua, Wis.

THE Congregation of St. Patrick's at Minocqua, Vilas County, has for its first resident and present rector the Rev. J. J. Mayer, who also attends two small stations at Arbor Vitae and Star Lake, both in Vilas County. The congregation of St. Patrick's was until recently attended as a mission by the resident pastor of Tomahawk, in the diocese of Green Bay.

Sacred Heart Church, Mondovi, Wis.

THE congregation of the Sacred Heart at Mondovi, in Buffalo County, Wisconsin, is one of the youngest organized in the diocese of La Crosse, having been established on August 2, 1896, by the Rev. Edward P. O'Toole. The building of the church at Mondovi was commenced on August 14 of that year, and completed and dedicated under the title of the Sacred Heart of Jesus on December 17, the services on that occassion being conducted by the Right Rev. Schwebach. Previous to the building of the church of the Sacred Heart, the people comprising that congregation attended Mass at St. Patrick's Church in the town of Canton, which is situated some six miles west of Mondovi. St. Patrick's Church, which is now attended as a mission on every second Sunday from Mondovi, was first organized in 1867, the church being built in the following year. This parish was at first regularly attended from Eau Galle and later on from Durand, the visiting pastors being the Rev. Fathers B. Smedding, John Meurs, Fagan, Froehlich, Wirtz, Keller, Mendl, Flammang and Joseph M. Baur. During Father Baur's administration, which lasted from 1881 to 1896, the church was enlarged by the addition of a sanctuary. The two congregations of Sacred Heart and St. Patrick's combined are composed of four hundred members. Connected with the parish at Mondovi are an Altar Society, Ladies' Aid Sodality and Sacred Heart Society.

Sacred Heart Church, Mondovi, Wis.

The Rev. Edward P. O'Toole, present incumbent at Mondovi, was born at Prairie du Chien on August 27, 1871, and graduated from Sacred Heart College in that city in June, 1888. He was ordained priest by Bishop Schwebach at La Crosse on February 17, 1894, under special dispensation on account of age. His first appointment was as assistant priest at Eau Claire and West Superior, from where, after a residence of two years, he was transferred to his present pastorate at Mondovi, in July, 1896.

Rev. Edw. P. O'Toole.

St. Paul's Church, Mosinee, Wis.

THE parish of St. Paul's at Mosinee was at first visited by Father Richard of Wausau, who held regular monthly services there, and it was under his direction and supervision that the original church was built. Succeeding him came the Rev. Gilbert Nuonno, O. S. F., an ex-Franciscan of New York, as first resident pastor, who was followed by the Rev. Albert Mendl. Then came Father Constantine Nau who, during the incumbency, built the parsonage, and still later, the present pastor, Father P. Dickopf, who enlarged and renovated the church during 1895. The congregation, numbering some fifty families in all, is rather mixed as regards its nationality, being composed of French, Germans and Irish. In this congregation are represented a Branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, with Mr. Charles Bernier as president; George Fritz, vice-president; George Songer, secretary, and Carl Kronenwetter, treasurer. Young Ladies' Sodality: Hattie Homier, president; Annie Songer, secretary. The Monica Altar Society: Mrs. Alex Boucher, president; Mrs. Carl Kronenwetter, secretary.

The mission at Halder, in the town of Emmet, Marathon County, is also attended from Mosinee. The church of St. Patrick at this place was built by Father Spitzlberger of Marathon City, in 1875. The congregation is composed principally of Irish, Germans and Bohemians.

Another mission, belonging to the diocese of Green Bay, and at present attended from St. Paul's parish, is at Knowlton, where a church was built over twenty-two years ago.

The Rev. P. Dickopf, present resident pastor at Mosinee, was born December 11, 1865, in the parish of Breitenau, diocese of Limburg, Nassau. His earlier education was obtained at the Gymnasium at Montabaur, after which he took a philosophical and theological course at Louvain, in the American College. He came to the United States in August, 1889, and was soon after appointed assistant pastor at Notre Dame, Chippewa

St. Paul's Church and Parsonage, Mosinee, Wis.

Falls. He next became pastor at Seneca and Cumberland, leaving there to assume his present duties at Mosinee.

It has been stated as an historical fact, that prior to the arrival of the German settlers at Mosinee in 1850, a few Catholic settlers residing in that section, or in the vicinity of Mosinee, were visited at rare intervals by the Rev. Father Dahl, whose first visit dates back as far as the year 1845. A year or two after that time, Father July also came to Mosinee, traveling up the Wisconsin River in a little steamboat which he had built for that purpose. Following him came the Rev. Richard and the Rev. Albert Mendl, then the Rev. Fathers Nau and Dickopf.

Back in the early '50's a band of German Catholics, who, like many before them, had left their native country and home association to seek their fortunes in the new world, came to America. After a long and tedious journey, extending over a period of more than forty-two days, they landed in New York, from where, as soon as they had completed the necessary arrangements, they started for the West. Arriving at Milwaukee they immediately turned towards the north, traveling until they arrived at the geographical point, where now is located the town of Knowlton, but which, at that time, was but a part of the dense and unbroken forest that covered the greater portion of Northern Wisconsin. Here they resolved to settle and at once commenced clearing and preparing to establish themselves permanently. Several crude but comfortable homes were built by these settlers, who, with praiseworthy cheerfulness, made the best of their crude surroundings. In all of the arduous labors pertaining to the building and establishment of a home, these people, however, did not forget their religious training, and those of them who had been members, or in any manner identified with the church in their former homes, would hold occasional meetings and endeavored by some means or another to effect arrangements for regular services. Finally they secured the co-operation of a missionary priest, who labored among the different settlements at that time located in Northern Wisconsin. Thus he would visit the people at Knowlton, going from there to Wausau, which was at that time also a small hamlet, and from hence to Marathon City. Father Stehle (for that was the name of this visiting pastor) came to that section in 1858, making the journey overland from Stevens Point. On this occasion he celebrated the first Mass in the house of Mr. Thomas Stark. In this arduous labor he was after some time succeeded by Father Polack, who was followed also, successively, by the Rev. Fathers Lutz, Cornelius and Schwebach, each, in turn, becoming spiritual advisor of the Catholics in these different settlements. As the number of Catholics at Knowlton increased, they finally obtained the use of a large hall, which had been built at that place and was owned by Leonard Guenther and occupied space at the rear of his hotel. In this manner they managed to hold together until 1874, when Mr. Guenther again exhibited his good will by the gift of an acre of land to the church, with the understanding that it was to be used as the site for a suitable structure for Christian work and church purposes. Father Gundelach, who then had charge of these people, immediately set to work to perfect arrangements for the erection of the new building. During the interval, unfortunately, Mr. Guenther died. His loss was felt keenly by the people of all denominations, but in spite of the fact that in this event the Catholics had lost a valued friend and assistant, they were enabled to complete their work through the continued benevolence of Mr. Guenther's widow, Rosalie Guenther, who made a further gift of $600 towards the erection of the building. Her brothers, also, Anthony, Alois and Wendel Stark, and B. Baumann and C. Weizenicker, did much in the way of financial help. The building was erected and dedicated in honor of St. Francis Xavier, in 1875, the charter members of the congregation at that time being the families of Thomas Stark, S. Redding, Frank Clark and Mr. Pratticker. At about this time Father Richard, the resident pastor of Wausau, succeeded Father Gundelach at Knowlton, ministering to the spiritual wants of that congregation at stated intervals for a period of fifteen years. His successor was the Rev. Father Meyerhofer, who, at the end of a year, was transferred to another parish. He was followed by the Rev. Father Nau, and he by Father P. Dickopf, who is still in charge of the congregation.

Rev. P. Dickopf.

The congregation of St. Francis Xavier now numbers about twenty families.

St. Francis of Assissi Church, Necedah, Wis.

A Catholic church was built at Necedah, in Juneau County, Wisconsin, under the direction of the Rev. Mathias White in 1876, at which time the congregation of St. Francis of Assissi was organized. Father White's successor as pastor of this congregation was the Rev. John F. Kennedy, the first resident pastor of the parish, whose death occurred at Rochester, Minn., in the fall of 1896. The next incumbent of the pastorate was the Rev. Peter Lavin, who died while in charge and is buried at Milwaukee; then the Rev. James Nevin was appointed to the charge and on his transfer to the congregation at Lyndon, the present incumbent, the Rev. James T. Campbell, assumed the duties. The congregation of St. Francis numbers about seventy families. Of Catholic organizations established in the parish, there are an Altar Society, Young Ladies' Sodality and Young Men's Catholic Club.

The mission of St. Paul's at New Lisbon, which is attended from Necedah, is a still older congregation than that of St. Francis, having been established by the Rev. Father Montague in October, 1862. Services are held at this place on the first and third Sundays in each month, the congregation attending, which is composed mostly of Irish people, consists of in the neighborhood of thirty families. There is an Altar Society connected with St. Paul's.

St. Francis of Assissi Church, Necedah, Wis.

The Rev. James T. Campbell, the present rector of St. Francis of Assissi and the out mission of St. Paul's at New Lisbon, was born at St. Lambert's May 15, 1869. He removed with his family to Eau Claire in the fall of 1873. For some years he attended the Sisters' school at that place, after which time he took up a classical course at Sacred Heart College at Prairie du Chien, finishing the same and one in philosophy at the Sacred Heart College, Watertown, in June, 1892. He studied theology at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, and was ordained to the priesthood at St. Joseph's Cathedral, La Crosse, by the Right Rev. James Schwebach, June 15, 1895. His first appointment after ordination was as assistant to the Rev. Father Kennedy, at Lyndon, where he remained for four months. In October, 1895, he was appointed to his present charge.

Rev. Jas. T. Campbell.

St. Mary's Church, Neillsville, Wis.

THE parish records inform us that the congregation of St. Mary's, at Neillsville, in Clark County, was established in the year 1878, at which time a small church was erected. Previous to that year, Catholics residing in that vicinity had received occasional visits from resident priests of neighboring parishes, who conducted services in the houses of the different settlers. From 1877 to 1885 this congregation was attended as a mission by the Rev. Michael Heiss, nephew of the Most Rev. Archbishop, the Revs. L. Spitzlberger, A. Bergmann, C. A. Gunkel and Jos. F. Volz. The latter priest was from 1879 until 1885 a resident of Humbird, from which place he made visits to St. Mary's at Neillsville once in every six weeks. In the year 1884 the first parsonage was erected at Neillsville, and in 1885 Father Volz removed to that place, where he has resided to the present time. The church interests were still further strengthened in 1887 by the establishment of a parochial school and the erection of a building for that purpose. Two years ago an addition was made to the church in the way of a sanctuary and sacristy. The congregation of St. Mary's at present numbers some one hundred and twenty-five families, and the school, which has a regular attendance of seventy-five children, is conducted by two Franciscan Sisters. The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin are represented in this parish by Branch No. 150, which has a membership of twenty-five. Of this the Rev. Father Volz is president, Anthony Hein, secretary, and M. Kapellen, treasurer. Of other societies there are: St. Joseph's Benevolent Society: Jos. Miller, president; Val. Wingerter, secretary; William Geden, treasurer. Ladies' Altar Society, fifty members, and Young Ladies' Sodality, fifteen members.

St. Mary's Church and School, Neillsville, Wis.

The Rev. Joseph F. Volz was born at Prattsburg, Indiana, on January 1, 1857. He might, however, to all intents and purposes, be counted a product of the Badger State, his parents having moved to and settled in La Crosse during that same year. After acquiring an ordinary education, he entered St. John's College, at Prairie du Chien, in 1871, remaining there until 1873, when he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee. Here he completed a thorough course in the necessary studies, and was ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. Bishop M. Heiss, on November 9, 1879, at La Crosse. His first appointment was as pastor of the congregation at Humbird with its attendant missions. From there he was transferred to his present pastorate at Neillsville, in 1885.

The congregation of St. Joseph's at Black River Falls has been attended as a mission from Neillsville since 1885. Prior to that time the spiritual wants of these people were ministered to by the resident pastor at Humbird, and earlier still from those residing at Eau Claire, Tomah and La Crosse. The congregation of St. Joseph's was founded by Father Etschmann, one of the earlier pioneer priests, who traversed the northern portion of the State of Wisconsin. The exact date of its organization is not given, but it is authentically stated that this Reverend Father celebrated Mass in the courthouse at Black River Falls as long ago as 1859. There are now about thirty families belonging to St. Joseph's, who attend regular services at that church once a month. At one time, for a few months during the early seventies, this congregation had a resident pastor of its own in the person of the Rev. Father Lavin, who died a number of years ago. Since that time, however, it has been attended as a mission from one or another of the larger parishes of that section.

Rev. Jos. F. Volz.

Immaculate Conception Church, New Richmond, Wis.

THE records of the parish of the Immaculate Conception at New Richmond, St. Croix County, Wisconsin, were, with much other valuable church property, destroyed by a disastrous fire in 1890. The history pertaining to this congregation is, therefore, though thorough as far as it goes, very limited, being confined entirely to brief and pertinent data, and utterly void of anything pertaining to incidental gossip or of descriptive character. The parish was founded in the year 1884, at which time the Rev. Father De Paradis was appointed its first pastor. He remained two years and was then succeeded by the Rev. Father Sturm. His stay was but of short duration, he being followed the same year by the Rev. Walter J. Fardy, who maintained the pastorate until 1892. During the latter year, Father Fardy was succeeded by the present pastor, the Rev. William E. Degnan. The congregation of the Immaculate Conception is comprised of one hundred families or about six hundred souls, There is one parochial school in this parish, which has an enrollment of one hundred and twenty pupils, who are in charge of School Sisters.

Immaculate Conception Church, New Richmond, Wis.

Of societies connected with the congregation, there are an Altar Society: President, Mrs. Wm. Hughes; Secretary, Mrs. Patrick Philips; Treasurer, Mrs. S. Hawkins. Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: President, Charles Donohue; Vice-President, Nicholas Donohue; Treasurer, John Hagan; Secretary, William Hughes. St. Joseph's Sodality: Nicholas Donohue, president; Charles Phillips, secretary and treasurer.

Rev. Wm. E. Degnan.

The Rev. William E. Degnan, present rector of the Immaculate Conception Congregation at New Richmond, graduated from Mt. St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, Maryland, in 1876. He was ordained to the priesthood in Rome, Italy, in 1891.

St. Michael's (Polish) Church, North Creek, Wis.

THE parish of St. Michael's at North Creek, Trempealeau County, Wisconsin, was organized in the early part of 1875 and a church built, the erection of which was immediately begun, and dedicated by the Right. Rev. M Heiss, then Bishop of La Crosse, October 6th of the same year. At this time the congregation was served as a mission from Pine Creek, the first pastor being the Rev. Hieronymus Klimecki, who took charge of the pastorate March 8, 1876. From May 10, 1882, until March 18, 1883, the congregation was attended by the Rev. D. Mayer, also a resident of Pine Creek. Then the Rev. A. Warnagiris, who was residing at Independence, performed the duties as pastor of St. Michael's, continuing to do so until 1885. From 1886 until 1888, Father Tomaszewski attended the mission, being succeeded by the Rev. R. Gurowski in the latter year. Then the Rev. Father Dutkiewic was pastor from 1887 to 1890 and the Rev. Anselmus Kroll, who built the Sisters' house at North Creek, from 1890 to 1892. After him the Rev. August Babinski, residing at Independence from 1892 to 1893, ministered to the spiritual wants of the congregation, after which the Rev. Constantin Frydrychowicz took charge, remaining until February 4 of 1896. He was succeeded by the present pastor, the Rev. Alexander Sirviec, who since taking charge of the parish has enlarged the church and made several other noticeable and valuable improvements to the structure. The congregation now consists of one hundred and twenty families. The parochial school, a building for which was erected in 1888, was for a number of years under the direction of a lay teacher. In 1896, however, it was placed in charge of Sisters of St. Francis' Convent of Milwaukee, three of whom are now residing at North Creek. The regular attendance of scholars at this school averages in the neighborhood of seventy-five. Of Catholic societies connected with St. Michael's congregation are the St. Andrew's Society, of which Messrs. Simon Sonsata is president; Luke Michalski, secretary; St. Michael's Society, Thomas Sobota, president; Louis Wojcik, secretary; Sacred Heart of Jesus, John Wicizgala, president; Thomas Slavey, secretary; and the Holy Rosary Society, of which Norbert Kupiec and Bartholomew Kecera are the officers.

St. Michael's Church, North Creek, Wis.

The Rev. Alexander Sirviec was born in Russian Poland on the 8th day of July, 1869. He completed his ordinary education at the College of Pinczow, and a course in philosophy in Wloclawek. He then came to America and entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he completed a full course in theology. He was ordained to the priesthood on August 15, 1894, in La Crosse, by the Rt. Rev. James Schwebach. His first appointment was as assistant pastor of St. Hedwig's Church in Milwaukee, where he remained from October 6, 1894, until February 1, 1896, when he received his appointment to the pastorate of St. Michael's at North Creek.

Rev. A. Sirviec.

St. Patrick's Church, Phillips, Wis.

PHILLIPS, Price County, Wis., was visited by Franciscan Fathers from Ashland and by the pastor from Medford occasionally, until in 1888 it became a regular mission and as such was attended by the Rev. Chrysostom Verwyst, O. S. F., of Ashland, Wis., until May, 1890. In the summer of 1888 the first church edifice was erected on the corner of Avon avenue and Chestnut street, and dedicated to the Apostle of Ireland. In 1890 the Rev. C. B. Weikmann was appointed first resident pastor of Fifield, Wis., and Phillips was attached as a mission to it. In March, 1891, Father Weikmann was suddenly removed from Fifield, the Rev. Ignatius Schaller succeeding to the pastorate of that parish and the mission at Phillips, which he maintained for one year. Then the Rev. A. Mendl of Fifield had charge for a few months only, when the Rev. L. A. Riviere, a Canadian Frenchman, was appointed the first resident pastor. In April, 1893, the Rev. B. De Goey, O. S. F. C., became pastor, until in August of the same year the Rev. John Hauck was made his successor. On July 27, 1894, the entire city of Phillips was swept from the face of the earth by fire, and the Rev. Father Hauck soon afterward left his flock. Though the city was rapidly rebuilt the Catholic congregation at Phillips remained without a pastor for nearly a year, until in May, 1895, the Rev. Stephen Duren heroically took upon himself the charge of this neglected parish. After the fire the church lots on Avon avenue were sold to F. Eller, and five new lots purchased on the corner of Chestnut and Argyle streets. A large, new parsonage, according to the designs and specifications of Father Hauck, has been erected and a temporary building for divine service procured and active preparations are in progress for the erection of a new house of worship. The financial standing of the congregation is good, there being five fine lots, no debts, and $500 in the treasury. When the first church was built under the supervision of the Rev. Father Verwyst, there were about forty families, but now, in 1896, estimating those who are and ought to be practical Catholics, there are about two hundred families, consisting of English, Germans, French, Poles, and Bohemians. At least three languages are required of the pastor here, English, German and French. The first baptism recorded at Phillips is that of Herman J. Maentschel, whose death is also the first of which official mention is made, both having been entered by the Rev. Father Verwyst. The first marriage recorded is that of Dan. Sullivan and Elis Perry, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Odilo Ziegler, O. S. F., of Ashland.

Prentice, Price County, is a mission attended from Phillips. During the administration of the Rev. Father Riviere, a neat little church was erected there. The place has a Catholic population of about one hundred and fifty persons, chiefly French. During Father Hauck's time a mission was opened at Kennan, in the same county. It has a population of about one hundred and fifty Catholics, German and English.

The Rev. Stephen Duren, present resident pastor at River Falls, is a product of Wisconsin, and a thorough and most patriotic American, in which fact he has always justly prided himself. He obtained his early education at the public school in the town of Westford, Richland County, Wis. Early in life he experienced a vocation to the holy priesthood. While attending the public school near St. Anthony's Church at Westford, Wis., he took Latin lessons from his pastor, the Rev. Theophil Beau, of blessed memory. He began his collegiate course at Calvary College, Wis., and completed two courses at St. John's College, Minn. The last six years of his preparation for the holy priesthood were then passed at St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he was ordained by Archbishop Heiss on June 24, 1884. He celebrated his first Holy Mass in the same church, where he for the first time received the most Holy Eucharist. Two weeks after his ordination he was made rector of East Farmington, Wis., by Bishop Flasch. He built a fine parsonage there, improved the church building and also the one at the mission of Long Lake. In October,

Rev. S. Duren.
Now Pastor at River Falls, Wis.

1887, he was given charge of Plain, Sauk County, Wis., where he completed a fine stone church, built an elegant rectory, and founded a parochial school. Under his administration St. Luke's Congregation of Plain flourished as but few congregations do. In November, 1891, his health became so poor from overwork that his physicians advised absolute rest. He accordingly obtained a vacation from the Ordinary and made an extended trip abroad, traveling through Belgium, France, Italy, where he visited Pope Leo XIII., Egypt, Syria, Palestine, Switzerland, Tyrol, Germany, Holland, and England. On his return from his tour through the old world, he traveled extensively through Canada and the United States. In October, 1892, he took pastoral charge of St. Patrick's congregation, Seneca, Crawford County, Wis., where he remained for nearly two years, during which time he did most efficient work in the Total Abstinence field, succeeding in making almost the entire congregation one of total abstainers from the use of intoxicants. In May, 1894, he was transferred to Medford, Taylor County, Wis. Here he erected an elegant presbytery and did lasting work in the line of total abstinence; he also founded a Temperance Society for the boys and girls of the parish, which numbers nearly three hundred members. Besides, he organized a Temperance Society in Taylor County, to which he had the pleasure of seeing eight hundred of the best, most prominent and intelligent men and women of the county belong. In May, 1895, he took charge of Phillips, which had been deserted soon after the great fire on July 27, 1895. Father Duren possesses great strength as a public speaker, both in English and German, and he speaks some French, also. On January 20, 1897, he volunteered to make an attempt at saving the River Falls church property from the sheriff's hammer, in consequence of an enormous debt. Bishop Schwebach accepted his offer and he is now doing his best to unite the flock and pay off the encumbrance.

Church of the Most Sacred Heart and St. Wenceslaus, Pine Creek, Wis.

THE Sacred Heart and St. Wenceslaus' congregation at Pine Creek (Dodge station and post-office on the "Green Bay" line), Trempealeau County, Wisconsin, was established on February 7, 1864. This, at least, is taken for granted, as it was on that day that Mr. Paul Liberia and his wife, Antonia, donated a piece of land to the Catholic church in consideration of the sum of five dollars. Three years later, that is, on June 6, 1867, the same parties deeded an additional two acres to the church organization, for which they received one hundred dollars. From the time that the church was first established, the Catholics residing at Pine Creek received spiritual attendance from pastors residing in other parishes, who thus continued to visit them until 1876, when they were given their first resident pastor in the person of the Rev. A. Snigorski. He was succeeded in 1879 by the Rev. D. Majer, and he, in 1884, by the Rev. Raphael Tomaszewski. In 1887 the Rev. Roman L. Guzowski became the rector of this parish, and in 1889 the Rev. Raphael Tomaszewski again assumed the duties. He remained until 1892, when he was succeeded by the Rev. R. Guzowski, who, in 1895, made way for the present rector, the Rev. Lugowski, who was ordained to the priesthood for the diocese of La Crosse on August 15,

Church of the Most Sacred Heart and St. Wenceslaus, Pine Creek, Wis.

1890. There is a parochial school connected with this congregation, which is conducted by a lay teacher, and has a regular attendance of seventy-five pupils.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Pine Hollow, Wis.

THE Catholics living in the vicinity of Pine Hollow, Monroe County, Wisconsin, held a meeting on December 14, 1867, to devise plans for the formation of a congregation and erection of a church at that place. The first church, a frame structure of moderate dimensions, was erected in 1868. On the 24th day of June, 1875, a tornado passed over that section of the country, among other things totally destroying the church edifice and ruining everything pertaining to it, with the exception of the tower bell. During the following year work was commenced on the present structure, which was completed and dedicated in 1877. The congregation was then visited for a number of years as a mission, in fact until 1886, at which time the Rev. Anton Havestadt became the first resident pastor at Pine Hollow. He remained until 1892, when the present rector, Father Peter Schnitzler, was appointed to the pastorate, assuming charge on September 23 of that year. During 1892 the foundation of the parish school was laid, the building being completed and ready for occupancy during the following year. This building cost $2,000. In 1896 further improvements were made in the addition of a sanctuary and sacristy to the church and children's chapel. The congregation now numbers one hundred and sixteen members, and the school, under the direction of Mr. Francis Stoffel, has an attendance of seventy-five scholars. In this parish there are a number of Catholic organizations, among them being: SS. Peter and Paul's Men's Society, with a membership of sixty-four: P. Graw, president; P. Hansen, secretary; Joseph Seitz, Sr., treasurer. St. Mary's Ladies' Society has a membership of eight: Mrs. K. Leuck, president; Mrs. S. Schrier, secretary. Young Men's St. Aloysius Society, thirty-two members: P. Tost, president; John Berens, secretary; Anton Beshens, treasurer. Young Ladies' St. Agnes Society, twenty members: Miss K. Schrier, president; Miss Anna Tost, secretary.

SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Pine Hollow, Wis.

Father P. Schnitzler was born October 8, 1865, at Fronhoven, District of Aachen, Archdiocese of Cologne, Germany. His primary studies were acquired at Innsbruck, the latter course being taken at Mainz, Germany, where he was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. L. Haffner, March 14, 1890. Four months later he came to America, his first appointment being as assistant pastor at La Crosse Cathedral. After a year and a half in that position, he was appointed assistant at Marshfield, Wisconsin, which place he left to assume his present duties. In connection with the pastorate at Pine Hollow, Father Schnitzler attends St. Patrick's Mission at Clinton, a small place about eight miles from his present pastorate. The congregation at Clinton, which was founded in 1872, at present consists of about twenty-eight families.

The mission of St. Patrick's at Bad Axe, Town of Clinton, Vernon County, Wisconsin, was first established and attended by the Very Rev. D. H. Grosse, in 1875. This mission is attended every third Sunday in the month by the resident pastors from Pine Hollow. The congregation at present consists of twenty-five families or about one hundred souls, most of whom are Irish. There is one Catholic organization connected with this parish, St. Mary's Altar Society for ladies.

Rev. P. Schnitzler.

St. Luke's Church, Plain, Wis.

THE earlier settlers came here in 1856 from Waldmuenchen, Bavaria. The first Mass was said in Mr. Ott's house at Plain, Sauk County, Wis., on December 27, 1858, by the Rev. F. X. Weinhart. At a meeting of the Catholic settlers held on May 23, 1861, it was decided to erect a small stone church, Mr. Voelker at that time also donating two acres of ground to the parish. On October 17, of the same year, Bishop Henni visited Plain, to administer the sacrament of confirmation, and at the same time dedicated the church to St. Lucas. After this the congregation was visited by Father T. Beau of Keyesville, and later by Father Heller of the same place. St. Luke was next visited from Honey Creek, the resident priests from that place attending, until 1875, when Father Spitzlberger built a substantial stone parsonage at Plain. From that time the congregation had its own resident pastor, the Rev. E. Sieghardt, being there from January 1 to March 15, 1876; Father Emanuel Moppy,

St. Luke's Church, Plain, Wis.

May 1 to August 1, 1876; Rev. N. Flammang, January to June, 1877; Rev. John Metzler, June, 1877, to January, 1878; Rev. Joseph Buss, 1878 to August, 1881; Rev. Emanuel Moppy, August, 1881, to January, 1884; Father Strickner, May 27 to June, 1884. Then for a while the congregation was attended by the Revs. M. Port, S. J., and Nicholas Simeon, S. J., from Prairie du Chien. In January, 1885, the Rev. F. J. Simonek became the resident pastor, and in September of that year completed a new stone church of 40x80 feet. From August 25, 1885, to the fall of 1887, the Rev. Ignatius Harrier was pastor, and from November, 1887, to November, 1891, Father Stephen Duren resided there. While living at Plain, Father Duren built a new parsonage, costing $1,300, and established a parochial school in the old parsonage. From November, 1891, to March, 1893, the Rev. E. Sturm was pastor of St. Luke's, his successor, the Rev. Ignatius Schaller, remaining until October, 1895. In 1894 Father Schaller built a new school-house as well as an addition to the church. Many additions were also made to the furnishings of the interior of the church at about that time, new altars and some handsome statues being donated by members of the congregation. Father Schaller was succeeded by the Rev. Constantine Baron of Droste-Huelshoff, who remained from October, 1895, to June, 1896, when he was succeeded by the present pastor, Father John G. Laurer. There are one hundred and fifty-five families in this congregation. The mission of St. John the Evangelist, at Spring Green, which has a congregation of thirty-eight families, is also attended from here. The parochial school at Plain is in charge of Sisters of St. Francis, from Milwaukee, and has an enrollment of about one hundred and seventy-five scholars. There are two societies connected with this congregation: The Christian Mothers' and Young Ladies' Sodality, Mrs. C. Brueckel being president of the former and Miss Anna Rueschlein prefect of the latter.

Rev. J. G. Laurer.

The Rev. John G. Laurer was born September 10, 1861, in Osterhofen, Bavaria. He attended the Gymnasia at Passau and Straubing, Bavaria, and completed his course of philosophy and theology at the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, and was ordained June 24, 1887, in La Crosse, by the Rt. Rev. K. Flasch. His first appointment was as pastor of St. Mary's Church at St. Mary, Monroe County, Wis., where he remained until July 5, 1894, when he became pastor at Keyesville. He left there for Plain on June 25, 1896.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Plum City, Wis.

THE first Mass ever known to have been celebrated at this place was held in a new log house built by John Baptist Enders, in September, 1871, by the Rev. Father Meurs. At that time there were about twenty Catholic families in all located at Plum City or in its immediate vicinty. Father Steinberg succeeded Father Meurs in 1872, and was succeeded himself by the Rev. Henry J. Wirtz in the following year. During these three years services, as often as held, were conducted in the same house, which is in existence and in a remarkable state of preservation at the present time. In 1874 the Rev. Father Keller visited the Catholics at Plum City, and on different occasions when he held services there, did so in the house of John Moser. From 1874 until the church was built at Plum City, services were held in the school house, and at the homes of Joseph Oberding and Wendel Moser and finally at Joseph Oberding's again. His successor was, in all probability, the Rev. Father Mendl, who, it is generally supposed, was followed by the Rev. Father Flammang. The possibility of a doubt in the matter is owing to the fact that no records were kept at the time, and none of the members of the congregation are able to give positive assurance as to the names. However, from their description of the men, the present rector is positive that these must be the ones referred to, with both of whom he is well acquainted. It can also be said with reasonable accuracy that Father Mendl's pastorate extended from 1872 to 1876 or 1877, while that of his successor was from about 1876 or 1877 to 1879 or 1880. Father Flammang was succeeded by the Rev. Father Baur, the latter maintaining the pastorate from 1881 to 1884. The next pastor was the Rev. W. Weckes of Eau Galle, who was at Plum City from 1884 to some time during the following year. Toward the fall of 1885, the Rev. Father Klein, also a resident of Eau Galle, became pastor of St. John's, remaining as such until the early part or middle of 1892; then the Rev. Father Reding, who was succeeded by Father Kaluza, the latter becoming first resident pastor of the congregation in 1894. Father Kaluza remained until the latter part of the following year, and during that time succeeded in erecting a neat and comfortable pastoral residence. Father Reding again took charge in 1895, remaining until the following year, when the Rev. H. J. Wirtz, present pastor of the congregation, assumed the pastorate. The congregation, which was at first limited to about twenty families, had gradually grown stronger and from that time attained a healthy growth, numbering fifty-five families in 1883, and eighty-three families or about four hundred and fifty-five members at the present time.

The church at Plum City was built during the year 1883, at the time when Father Baur had charge of the congregation. The size of this building is 24x30 feet, and there is also an addition in the way of a sanctuary 12x14 feet, which gives a total length of forty-four feet in the entire building. In addition to this there is a sacristy of 10x9½ feet. The pastoral residence was built during the years 1894 and 1895 by Father Kaluza, the area of the same being 26x30 feet. There is also an addition 16x20 feet. The real estate owned by this parish within the village limits consists of six lots, the cemetery being about one mile from the church. It is stated as a fact, and on the very best authority, that the congregation at Plum City might be in a much better and far more flourishing condition, were it not for the indifference exhibited by a great many of the residents in that neighborhood and in the village, whose duties as good and consistent Catholics have, to say the least, been sadly neglected. This marked indifference on their part could, it seems, be overcome quite readily by the people who have been educated in a Church, whose history from its very beginning has been one of progress and prosperity. There are two Catholic organizations connected with St.

St. John the Baptist's Church, Plum City, Wis.

John's, consisting of a Ladies' Aid Society; Mrs. Margaret Krings, president; Mrs. Christian Gilles, secretary; Mrs. Margaret Anna, treasurer; and a Holy Rosary Society, of which the officers are Mrs. Margaret Krings and Miss Aggie Cotter.

The Congregation of the Immaculate Conception of Lost Creek, Pierce County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission from Plum City. The first Mass ever known to be held at this place was celebrated towards the end of October, 1874, in a private house, by the Rev. Father Gunkel. During the following year Father Hanses visited Lost Creek, and continued to do so until some time in 1878. His successor was the Rev. Father Flammang, and his the Rev. Father Untraut, who paid occasional visits to that place in 1883. Then Father Eisen became pastor of the congregation, remaining as such from 1884 until 1892. As successor to him came the Rev. Father Miller, who was shortly afterwards succeeded by Father Klein. In 1894 and 1895, Father Kaluza was pastor, and his successor, the Rev. H. J. Wirtz, present rector at Plum City, began his official duties in the fall of 1896.

When Lost Creek was first visited by Father Gunkel, there were twenty-four Catholic families located in or about that place. For a period of nearly twenty years this condition of affairs maintained, a very slight increase in numbers being noticeable. At the present time the congregation consists of thirty-eight families, or about two hundred and ten members. The church at Lost Creek was built in 1882, during the period when there was no regular pastor in attendance. The size of this building is 30x55 feet, in addition to which there is a sacristy 10x14 feet, and a tower 10x10. The cemetery belonging to this parish is laid out in the same grounds on which the church stands.

About twelve years ago (1885) a small church was built at Farm Hill, town of Rock Elm, the foundation having been laid the year previous, and dedicated in honor of St. Nicholas. The people comprising the congregation who attend this church, are served as a mission from Plum City. The first Mass was celebrated at this place in 1882 or 1883 by Father Weckes, at the home of August Jesse, and was celebrated for the first time in the new church in August, 1885, by the Rev. Father Klein, although the idea of erecting such a building at that point and its final construction were the results of efforts made in that direction by the Rev. Father Weckes. At the time this project was carried out, there were about thirty-four Catholic families living in the vicinity of Farm Hill, although but twenty-six of these did anything towards defraying expenses incurred in the purchase of realty, and the construction of the building. After Father Klein had administered to this congregation until 1892, the Rev. Father Baur took charge, he being succeeded by the Rev. Father Reding, who maintained the duties from 1893 to 1896. Father Wirtz then became the pastor.

The cemetery belonging to this mission is also on the same ground with the church. There is an Altar Society connected with the Farm Hill Congregation, of which Mrs. Michael Schwebach, Sr., and Mrs. Peter Ginsbach are the officers.

The Rev. Henry Joseph Wirtz, pastor of the Plum City congregation and its several out missions, was born July 4, 1839, at Birresdorf, Prussia. His primary education he acquired in Leimersdorf, the school at which place he attended until thirteen years of age. There he began his classical studies with the priest of his parish, continuing the same at Petit Seminaire Archiepiscopal de Bass Warre, Province de Brabant, Belgium, which he entered in 1865. Here he remained until 1869, and in addition to completing his course acquired a good knowledge of the French language and a little of the Flemish and English languages. In November, 1869, he came to America, and entered the Seminary at St. Francis near Milwaukee, at which place he was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni, on December 22, 1872. One week later he celebrated his first Mass at St. Joseph's Ridge near the city of La Crosse, after which he was appointed assistant to the Rev. Father Pfaller, Immaculate Conception Church, Lost Creek, Wis.

at that time rector of St. Joseph's Cathedral. Here he remained until 1873, when he was transferred to the pastorate at Eau Galle. While pastor at this place he held services on one Sunday in each month at Menomonie and Durand, and also in what was then known as the Valley Church. He also conducted services once on week days at Wilton, where a little station had been established. He was transferred to the pastorate at Somerset in September, 1873, where he found a congregation of some thirty families, all French. At his new pastorate he endeavored to raise sufficient funds for the erection of a new church, in which he was not altogether successful. His duties here were numerous, having several missions to attend, besides continuing the work of the home parish. At one of these missions, which was at Farmington, there was no church, and the monthly Sunday services held there were consequently conducted in the log house of Patrick Barry. The frame of a church building had been raised at Farmington sometime previous to this, but owing to a division among his people, the mere skeleton was allowed to remain without any attempt being made to complete the building. With the hope that it might be finished, Father Wirtz devoted much time and labor, and finally succeeded to such an extent that Bishop Heiss celebrated Confirmation in the same on August 31, 1874.

About the same condition of affairs obtained in the little mission at Long Lake, where there was also a log church in a partial state of completion. In this community he also experienced considerable difficulty, owing to the fact that there was a division among the people regarding the permanent site of the church building. The location finally decided upon was on property owned by one Lawrence Williams, the matter being settled by a majority vote of the congregation. On this spot a new frame church was erected during the year 1875. During his pastorate at Somerset, Father Wirtz gave a mission at Big River, and also in the Schwalen settlement near Hudson, the people at the latter place expressing a strong desire to be added as a mission of his charge. A new church at Somerset was built during the year 1874, the spot upon which it was erected being adjacent to a plat of land secured and dedicated by Bishop Heiss for cemetery purposes in the preceding year. At about the same time a cemetery was also laid out in connection with the church at Farmington; in 1875, one was platted at Long Lake and in 1883 one was established and platted at Balsam Lake Mission. In the year 1874 the congregations under the immediate charge of Father Wirtz consisted of those at Somerset, Apple River, Farmington, Brossnahan's Station, St. Croix Falls, Long Lake, Balsam Lake, Bear Trap, Wagon Landing and the Schwalen Settlement. Two years later, that is in 1876, Clayton was also added as a mission to this charge, Father Wirtz saying Mass for the first time in the house of John Nolan on August 26th of that year. Another addition in 1879 was the congregation at Clear Lake, and still another, that of Turtle Lake, which was made part of the charge in April, 1880. After eleven years of laborious service at Somerset and its numerous attendant missions, Father Wirtz left that place on November 13, 1884, removing by order of the Bishop to La Crosse. There he remained until June 27th, when he was appointed to the pastorate at Genoa. This was composed mostly of Italian families. During his first season at this place he repaired the little church and added a gallery to the same. A tower was also built on the church, for which a bell was secured. During the following years numerous other improvements were made to the property by Father Wirtz, among the others a new stone sacristy, and the platting of the cemetery, the same consisting of three and one-half acres of land, for which a deed was secured from B. Starlochi.

Rev. H. J. Wirtz.

De Soto is a small mission attached to Genoa. At this place Mass was held for the first time on June 2, 1889, in the house of Peter Loftus. On June 8, 1891, work was begun on the foundation for the new stone church at De Soto, on the lot purchased some years before for that purpose. The corner-stone of this building was laid on October 11 of the same year. The church, which was dedicated in honor of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, has a congregation of fifteen families. On August 9th, 1896, Father Wirtz was transferred to his present pastorate at Plum City, in Pierce County.

Holy Family Church, Poniatowski, Wis.

THERE were few, if any, Catholic settlers in this locality prior to the year 1876, when a slight tide of immigration began to turn that way. The following year, Father W. Bukowski of Stevens Point visited Poniatowski for the first time, and some time during 1879 the Rev. Father Klimecki of Arcadia visited the settlement, making three trips, or one every four months. This he continued to do until 1882, when the Rev. Father Lager of Medford, Wis., took his place. In 1883 the Rev. J. Maczynski became first resident pastor, remaining until 1885, when the parsonage was destroyed by fire. During the following year the Rev. A. Krogulski of Junction City, Wis., visited Poniatowski a few times, and succeeded in building a new parsonage. In the same year the present rector, Father

A. W. Gara, assumed the charge and has been there ever since. In 1891 Father Gara built the present church with great difficulty, as the members of the congregation were poor. But he persevered, obtaining much material aid from other congregations to whose spiritual wants he ministered. The church is beautifully decoted inside, and the high altar, the gift of Father Gara, with its beautiful picture of the Holy Family, is greatly admired.

Besides this parish, Father Gara has charge of the missions of the Holy Trinity German Church at Poniatowski, which consists of thirty families, who are getting together material for a new church; the Holy Redeemer Church of seventy-five families, also German, at Athens, and the Sacred Heart of Jesus, a Polish church at Cassel, seventy-five families. The congregation at Poniatowski now numbers fully one hundred and twenty-five families, and the Holy Family Parochial school, which was built in 1892, and is conducted by a lay teacher, has an enrollment of about one hundred pupils. In the congregation of the Holy Family there are represented the Holy Family Society, St. Joseph's Society, Holy Rosary Society and Temperance Society.

Holy Family Church, Poniatowski, Wis.

The Rev. A. W. Gara, present rector of the Holy Family, was born in 1860 in Jawiszowice, Galicia, Austria, where he obtained his earlier education. He afterwards went to Zywice and the Gymnasium at Wadowice. He then went to the Gregorian University at Rome, Italy, where he took a full course in philosophy and theology. In 1885 he came to the United States and was ordained June 24, 1886, by Archbishop Heiss in St. Francis Seminary. His first appointment was as assistant to the Rev. Ignatius Schaller at Marshfield, Wis. Remaining at that place for two months, he was then called upon to occupy his present position.

Rev. A. Gara.

Church of St. Hedwig, Posen, Wis.

THE Congregation of St. Hedwig's at Posen, Thorp Postoffice, Clark County, Wisconsin, until recently a mission attended by the resident pastor from Mill Creek, has been erected into an independent parish, and has now its own resident priest in the person of the Rev. James Korczyk, who also has charge of a mission at Strickland, Chippewa County, and Weyerhaeuser, also in Chippewa County, where a church is now in course of construction. A more extended notice of this parish will be found in connection with the history of the Catholic congregation of St. Bartholomew's at Mill Creek.

St. Gabriel's Church, Prairie du Chien, Wis.

THE first white settlement in the vicinty of Prairie du Chien was established some time prior to the year 1817. This information we gather from the records of St. Gabriel's congregation, which also informs us of the fact that the Rev. Father Dunand came to Prairie du Chien in April of that year, celebrating for the first time the sacrifice of the Holy Mass for the benefit of the few Catholics residing there. The records also indicate that a Catholic congregation was organized at about the same time, while from the large number of births and marriages recorded, it is also to be presumed that there was a resident pastor attached to the settlement, although such has not been stated as an absolute fact. From other sources, too, particularly the Rev. Alfred Bronson, we learn that the first settlement at Prairie du Chien was made in 1726, by a certain Mr. Cardinelle, a voyageur and trader, but there is nothing whatever of an authoritative nature to vouch for the correctness of this statement. The Rev. Father Bronson also goes on to tell that the second white man to settle in that neighborhood was one by the name of Ganier, whose descendants are still residing there.

Of the previous history of this settlement, we learn from undeniable authority that a French trading post was permanently established at Prairie du Chien in the year 1737, the same consisting of a cluster of buildings around which was erected a stockade, in order that the settlers might better protect themselves from the numerous incursions of the Indians. This settlement was necessarily slow of growth, additions only occasionally being made to the number living there by the advent of some voyageur who would come to the post, marry, and settle down on a piece of land near by.

In an officiel report made to the House of Representatives of the United States in 1818, it is stated that the Government of France established a military post at the mouth of the Wisconsin River in 1755, at which time a number of French families also came and located, founding the settlement and village which at the present time is represented by the city of Prairie du Chien. Tradition has it that this fort was burned to the ground in 1777, but there is nothing of an official nature to be found regarding the occurrence.

As to the name of the place, there is a legend which tells us that it was derived from an Indian chief of the Fox tribe, whose name was Chien (dog), who resided with his people in a village on the prairie, at a point somewhat near to Fort Crawford.

In this vicinity, also, we are told, Governor Patrick Sinclair, of Mackinaw, purchased a tract of land from the Indians, which is described as running six leagues up and down the river, and six leagues back.

One of the earliest settlers at Prairie du Chien was Michael Brisbois, who came there in 1781, remaining for fifty-six years, and until the time of his death, which occurred at the advanced age of seventy-seven. In accordance with his request, he was buried on a prominent bluff back of the present city. According to the testimony of this man, there were, at the time of his coming to Prairie du Chien, between twenty and thirty white settlers living there, and that some twelve years after, that is, in 1793, there were forty-three farms, and from twenty to thirty village lots owned in Prairie du Chien and the immediate vicinity, most of which had been built upon and were occupied. The majority of the owners of these holdings were hunters, traders and voyageurs, who inter-married with the natives, settled down, and went to farming on a small scale. In addition to his business as a trader, Michael Brisbois conducted a farm of some considerable dimensions, besides which he was official baker for the community. This business he conducted by issuing tickets which guaranteed the delivery of fifty loaves of bread for each one hundred pounds of flour. These tickets came into general use, and, in fact, for a considerable period, formed the only recognizable currency used in the settlement.

St. Gabriel's Church, Prairie du Chien, Wis.

Undoubtedly the most notable character in the history of Prairie du Chien during the first quarter of the present century was one Joseph Rolette. He was born in Canada, of a respectable French family, and was raised and educated in the Roman Catholic faith. He came to Prairie du Chien with a Mr. Cameron, in 1804, and remained there till the time of his death, which occurred in 1841. Rolette was an active merchant and trader, as well as an hospitable, generous and progressive citizen.

In 1814 the United States Government sent a company of regulars and one hundred and thirty-five volunteers, under the command of Lieutenant Perkins, from St. Louis to Prairie du Chien, for the purpose of erecting a fort at that place. This structure was known as Fort Shelby, its location being directly opposite to the present pontoon railroad bridge. The building of this fort seemed to be quite a necessary undertaking, for it had not long been completed when an English expedition, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel William McKay, came to Prairie du Chien for the purpose of taking possession of the fort and settlement in behalf of the British government. The result was that, being totally unprepared to repel so large and well-equipped a force, Lieutenant Perkins surrendered the fort to the British on July 21, 1814. In June, 1816, General Smythe came to Prairie du Chien in charge of a detachment of United States troops, his purpose being to build a fort, which was afterwards named Fort Crawford, and for the site of this structure he selected the stockade where the original fort had been erected. A portion of the old structure being still in existence, he rebuilt and enlarged it, so that, when completed, it furnished ample and comfortable quarters for himself and men. One of the first official acts of General Smythe was to arrest Michael Brisbois, who was sent under guard to St. Louis, on a charge of treason, he having taken an active part in the English expedition previously referred to. In 1817 the command of Fort Crawford was transferred to Colonel Talbot Chambers, who was most arbitrary and despotic in his manner of treating the settlers. In 1841 Fort Crawford was vacated, a new and more advantageous site being selected on the high ground east of Mare de St. Ferrole, where a stone fort was erected. This building was occupied by the United States troop until January 9, 1856, when it was also abandoned. On May 27, 1857, the entire military reservation, including the fort and buildings, was sold at auction by the United States, the site of the old fort being made that of the present St. Mary's Institute in 1872.

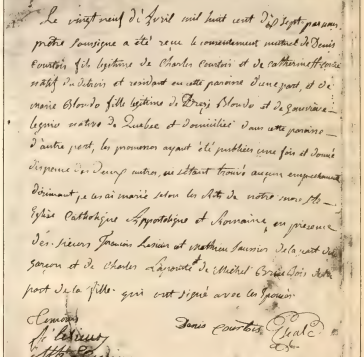
In his history of the Territory of Wisconsin, Mr. Moses Strong states that Father Pierre, a Roman Catholic priest from St. Louis, visited Prairie du Chien in the spring of 1817, but did not long remain. This statement is given but little credence by Catholics living in and around Prairie du Chien, who are firm in the conviction, as heretofore expressed, that a resident pastor was at that time located in the settlement.

The first entries of St. Gabriel's parish appear in the records under date of April, 1817, so that it is accepted on all hands as a fact that the original congregation must have been established at that time, or during that year. It was, therefore, undoubtedly Father Dunand, the French priest previously referred to, who was the means of bringing together and establishing this congregation. These records also show that on the 6th of May, 1817, a cemetery connected with St. Gabriel's was blessed by the same priest. Father Mazzuchelli succeeded Father Dunand, and laid the corner-stone of the new church in 1836. Bishop Loras succeeded Father Mazzuchelli in 1837, and in 1839 Father Cretin was appointed pastor, he being assisted by Father Ravoux, from April, 1840, to September, 1841. Father Ravoux—now Mgr. A. Ravoux—lives in St. Paul at the present day, hale and hearty, and loves to speak of his varied experiences at Prairie du Chien. When Father Cretin was appointed



This is an Exact Copy (Translated) of the First Marriage Certificate Issued by a Catholic Priest within the Territory at Present Comprising the State of Wisconsin.

On the 29th day of April, 1817, have been united in matrimony Denis Courtois, lawful son of Charles Courtois and Catharine St. Come, a native of Detroit and a resident of that place for some time, and Mary Blondo, lawful daughter of Dregi Blondo and Genofiere Blondo, a native of Quebec and an inhabitant of that place; the announcement has been made once and dispense has been given for the other two, as no separating hindrance has been found. I have married them according to the rites of our Catholic, Apostolic and Roman Church in presence of Mr. Frank Lesieur and Mathew Saunior on the side of the boy and Charles Lapointe and Michael Brisbois on the side of the girl, who have signed their names with the married.

Frank Lesieur.	Denis Courtois (Seal.)
Mathew Saunior.	Maria Blondo (Seal.)
Mich. Brisbois.

Bishop of St. Paul, the Rev. E. J. Bonduel succeeded him in the pastorate of St. Gabriel's, from August, 1844, to December, 1846; James Causse, from December, 1846, to June, 1847; Lucien Galtier, from June, 1847, to February 21, 1866. He was assisted by the Rev. C. Perrodin from September, 1857, to May, 1858, and the Rev. A. Godfret, from October, 1849, to June, 1859. Father Gal-tier may be truly called the Apostle of Prairie du Chien. During his administration he baptized one thousand seven hundred and sixty-two persons, heard confessions on the day of his death, although sick in bed, and even to-day his memory is cherished with love and affection by the old settlers of the prairie. Father Galtier is buried in front of St. Gabriel's Church, at Prairie du Chien, the inscription on his tombstone being: "Very Rev. Lucien Galtier, born in France, December 17, 1812, died February 21, 1866. Pray for a sinner." The next to succeed to the pastorate was the Rev. L. Lux, who remained at Prairie du Chien from April, 1866, to June, 1867. He was succeeded by the Rev. A. Koke, from June, 1867, to February, 1872. Father Koke was given an assistant in September, 1870, in the person of the Rev. P. M. Abbelen, who succeeded to the pastorate in 1872. Father Abbelen remained in charge of this congregation till October, 1875. It was during the administration of this reverend gentleman that the Revs. H. Kampschroer, J. F. Durward, C. Von Droste, and Meurs, the latter maintaining the pastorate from October, 1875, to January 1, 1877, during which period he had for his assistant the Rev. F. Banwarth. Then followed the Rev. Chrysostom Verwyst, who, having completed a brief pastorate, was succeeded by the Benedictine Fathers, who administered parochial duties until July, 1880.

The Fathers in charge were: Father Anthony Prior, Father Meinrad, Father Boniface, Father Meinulf, Father Ignatius, Father William, and Father Edward. From July, 1880, till May, 1891, the congregation was attended by the Jesuit Fathers. Father Richard was the first Jesuit at the head of the parish. He was assisted by Father Jutz. The latter, who afterwards gained a national reputation as a peacemaker between the rebellious Indians in Dakota and the United States Government, was one of the most popular priests the Prairie ever had. He is known as Father Minister by everybody, and his kindness won many friends to the Church. Father Kaerling and Father Kaluza followed in the footsteps of their predecessors, and were succeeded by Fathers Greisch—the good Father Greisch, the people say—and Father Sutter. On May 1, 1891, the parish was given to the present incumbent, the Rev. A. Philip Kremer.

When Wisconsin was given its first Bishop in the person of the Right. Rev. Martin Henni, a strenuous effort was made by the Catholics residing in that section of the State to locate the Episcopal See at Prairie du Chien. One of the principal claims advanced on that occasion was, that St. Gabriel's Church was in every way better fitted to represent the new dignity than any edifice extant at that time. This church, built during the pastorate of Father Galtier, was constructed of solid stone, the first of the kind in Wisconsin.

A parochial school in connection with St. Gabriel's congregation has been in active operation for many years. When first started, school was held in a log house, taught by lay teachers. The Franciscan Sisters next took charge of the school, and were followed in 1872 by the School Sisters of Notre Dame. In 1892 a substantial and commodious two-story brick building was erected on the site directly opposite to the present church. This building, when completed, cost seven thousand dollars. The present handsome parsonage belonging to St. Gabriel's was built in 1874.

Where all have been so anxious for the advancement and upbuilding of Catholic interests in Prairie du Chien, it would seem uncalled for to make any distinction whatever, yet the history of this parish could hardly be considered completed were some slight mention not to be made of such zealous and energetic patrons as the late Honorable John Lawler, Mrs. John Lawler, Mrs. H. L. Dousman and Mrs. Nina L. Dousman have been to the community. The congregation of St. Gabriel's at the present time numbers about four hundred families, while the parochial school, which is conducted by Sisters of Notre Dame, has a regular average attendance of three hundred and sixty scholars.

Rev. A. P. Kremer.

Of societies connected with St. Gabriel's there are: The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: D. Cornelius, president; W. D. Merrill, secretary; John Ducharne, treasurer. St. Philip's Benevolent Association: L. Cornelius, president; Theodore Fare, secretary; John Maher, treasurer. Catholic Order of Foresters: Charles P. Cherrier, chief ranger; James Lawler, Secretary; John Nugent, teasurer. Kremer Social Club: Rev. A. P. Kremer, president; Miss M. Murphy, secretary; Frank Cornelius, treasurer. Young People's L. and P. Society: Rev. A. P. Kremer, president; Miss Ida Rosenbaum, secretary; Eugene A. Amann, treasurer. Married Ladies' Altar Society: Mrs. Margaret Welsh, president. Young Ladies' Sodality: Miss Mary Murphy, president, and Young Men's Sodality.

The Rev. A. P. Kremer was born March 25, 1865, educated for the priesthood at St. Francis' Seminary, near Milwaukee, and was ordained from that institution on December 18, 1888, by Bishop Flasch, of La Crosse, saying his first Mass at St. John's Church, La Crosse, on December 22, 1888. His first appointment was as assistant pastor at Notre Dame, Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, which position he left on May 1, 1891, to assume the duties at St. Gabriel's Church, Prairie du Chien.

St. John Nepomucene's Church, Prairie du Chien, Wis.

SOMETIME during the year 1891, the Bohemian members of St. Gabriel's Catholic congregation concluded to organize a congregation of their own, and for that purpose separated from the mother church. This move, of course, was not taken without the permission of the Ordinary, the work of organizing and establishing the new parish being entrusted to the Rev. George Kiefner, who is the present rector of St. John Nepomucene's.

The late Honorable John Lawler, whose name has been associated with the establishment and upbuilding of a large number of charitable institutions throughout the country, donated several lots to the congregation, to be used as a site for the necessary church buildings. With such a stimulus to aid them in their undertaking, the members of the congregation at once set earnestly to work to carry out their intentions, and during the same year a spacious frame church and parsonage were erected on the property at a cost of $6,000. The church was dedicated in honor of the patron saint, St. John Nepomucene, by Vicar-General Schwebach, of the diocese of La Crosse, on December 13, 1891. The incident is made more particularly notable from the fact that it was while he was engaged in conducting the dedicatory services of St. John's that he was handed a telegram which notified him of the fact that he had been appointed Bishop of the diocese.

The congregation of St. John's consists at the present time of about one hundred and sixty families. The parochial school connected with it, the building for which was also donated to St. Mary's Institute by Mr. Lawler, is under the management of School Sisters of Notre Dame, and has a regular average attendance of about one hundred and thirty children.

Of Catholic organizations connected with this parish, there are: St. Joseph's Society, with eighty members, Mr. Alexa, president; Uniformed Knights, forty members, Mr. Cecka, president; Holy Rosary Society, forty-five members, Mrs. Stach, president; St. Anna's Society, twenty members, Mr. Lechner, president, and the Blessed Virgin Sodality, sixty members, Miss Mary Mazera, president. The trustees of the congregation are Frank Uher and Vac. Lechnu.

St. John Nepomucene's Church, Prairie du Chien and St. Wenceslas' Church, Eastman, Wis.

St. Wenceslas congregation at Eastman, Crawford County, Wisconsin, is attended as a mission by the rector of St. John's at Prairie du Chien. Nearly a quarter of a century ago, a substantial stone church was erected at this place, its cost being in the neighborhood of $10,000. The present congregation numbers one hundred and fifty families, ninety of whom are of Bohemian descent, and the remainder are about equally divided between people of Irish and French nationality. The present trustees of St. Wenceslas are John Slama, Joseph Sprosty and Joseph Lechnu.

Of Catholic organizations in the parish, there are: St. Wenceslas Society, thirty-five members; Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, twenty members, organized in 1897; Married Ladies' Society, seventy-five members, Mrs. Theresa G. Honzlik, president.

Prior to the time that St. Wenceslas was given as a mission to St. John's, it was attended successively by the Rev. Father Blaschke, the Rev. Father Kaluza, the Rev. Father Suchy, and the Rev. Father Schulack.

The Rev. George Kiefner, present rector of St. John's, was born May 1, 1863, in Bohemia, where he received his rudimentary and classical education. Completing the latter course, he came to Milwaukee, and entered the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he completed his studies in philosophy and theology, and was ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. Bishop Flasch, at La Crosse, on June 24, 1889. His first charge was as assistant of the congregation at Marshfield, where he remained for three months. He then was transferred to Seneca, which pastorate he maintained until 1891, when he became rector of his present charge. For some time during the summer of 1897, Father Kiefner was absent from his parish on a visit to his native country.

Sacred Heart Church, Reedsburg, Wis.

REEDSBURG congregation is of comparatively recent origin, in spite of which, and its numerical weakness, it is a very promising organization. It offers, in fact, an object lesson which is well worthy the emulation of other parishes, presenting, as it does, an interesting view of the growth and progress of Catholicity in Southern Wisconsin. For many years the pastor attending the Catholics at this point resided at Delona, where a band of immigrants, who had come with the tidal wave of immigration in the early fifties, had erected a church and parochial residence. The names of Fathers Gardner, O'Neill, Conroy, Montague, Von Droste and De Goey are household words among the people of Delona and the neighboring mission of Winfield. Catholicity failed to keep pace with the growth of Reedsburg. For many years the Catholics there could be counted on the fingers of one's hands, so that the visit of a priest in their midst was to the non-Catholic population an object of considerable curiosity. This condition of affairs maintained until a quite recent date—almost, in fact, within the memory of the school boys of to-day; but times have changed, and it is highly probable that before the schoolboy casts his vote the Catholics of Reedsburg and vicinity will constitute an influential factor of the population. Even now they are rapidly accumulating, and are found to-day actively and energetically represented in every profession. At the present time thirty-five families are holding pews in Reedsburg Church, while connected with the mission of St. Patrick's, at Winfield, and All Saints', at Delona, both of which are attended by the pastor from Sacred Heart parish, are thirty-five and forty families, respectively. A discouraging field for many years, the zealous efforts of the pastors who have labored in and about Reedsburg—Fathers Campbell, Fitzpatrick, Nevin and Duffy—are yet destined to yield a goodly harvest. At the present time a new parochial residence is in course of erection, while many little additions and improvements are from time to time being made to the church in general, giving evidence of the desire on the part of the people to rank among the foremost parishes in their section of the country. Quite recently a League of the Sacred Heart of Jesus was established by the pastor of this congregation.

Sacred Heart Church, Reedsburg, Wis.

Rev. R. B. Condon.

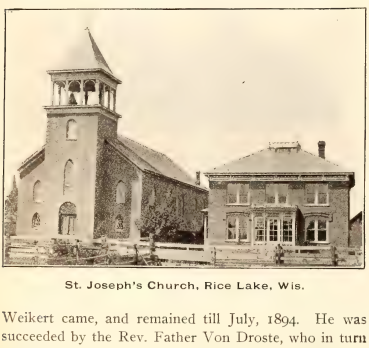
The Rev. R. B. Condon, present rector of the Sacred Heart, of Reedsburg, completed his classical and philosophical course at Canisius College, Buffalo, New York, in 1891. His seminary studies were acquired at St. Thomas' Seminary, Merriam Park, Minnesota, and St. John's University, Collegeville, Minnesota. Before assuming his present duties, he was assistant pastor at Prairie du Chien, and at a more recent date rector of St. Philip's congregation at Soldier's Grove, Crawford County.

St. Joseph's Church, Rice Lake, Wis.

THE English, French and German congregation of St. Joseph's, at Rice Lake, Barron County, Wisconsin, was established in the year 1880. From that time until 1887, it was attended as a mission, when the Rev. M. Schoelch was resident pastor for eight months. After that time it was again attended as a mission by resident pastors of adjacent parishes, till 1889, at which time the Rev. P.



St. Joseph's Church, Rice Lake, Wis.

Weikert came, and remained till July, 1894. He was succeeded by the Rev. Father Von Droste, who in turn was followed by the present incumbent, the Rev. A. Hopdegard, in October, 1895. The congregation at the present time numbers in the neighborhood of one hundred and twenty-five families, most of whom are Canadian French. The parochial school connected with St. Joseph's was established in 1890, and is in charge of Franciscan Sisters of Charity from the Convent at Alverno. The regular attendance is one hundred and thirty. There are three Catholic organizations connected with this congregation, namely: Sacred Heart of Jesus Society, Altar Society and Children of Mary Society.

Father Hopdegard was born in 1856, in the Department of the Seine Inferieure, France, was ordained to the priesthood at Rouen in 1880, and came to America in 1892.

Rev. A. Hopdegard.

St. Mary's of the Assumption Church, Richland Center, Wis.

IT is vouched for as an historical fact, although there are no records to show for it, that the first Mass held in this vicinity was celebrated in the house of Patrick Meehan at Richland Center, in the year 1858, Father Mandeger, from Lyndon, being the celebrant. In those days meetings were quite irregular, intervals of two and three months quite frequently elapsing between them. Until the year 1866, then, services continued to be held in private houses, the mission during that period being visited by Father Francis Stroker, Father Murphy of Crawford County, and Fathers Conroy, Walsh and Bernard. In the year 1866, L. D. Gage donated ground for a church and cemetery, and soon after Father Beau, then pastor at Keyesville, built a small church. In 1872 Father Francis Heller, who was the visiting pastor at that time, enlarged the building to its present proportions. Father Heller was succeeded as pastor by the Rev. A. Mendl, on August 10, 1874, who remained but a very short time, as Father Heiss assumed the duties during November of the same year. On January 16, 1878, the Rev. Henry Koenig took charge of the parish, remaining until September 9, 1886, on which date Richland Center, which had hitherto been visited as a mission by the priests at Keyesville, obtained the first resident pastor in the person of the Rev. J. C. McAteer, who has remained there ever since. Father McAteer at once took steps to increase and build up the church possessions in the parish, and in January of the following year purchased a house and four lots at a cost of $1,600. Having secured a comfortable and permanent residence for the pastor, Father McAteer made necessary preparations for the erection of a new church. In this undertaking, also, he was successful, the corner-stone of the present handsome and substantial brick structure being laid by the Very Rev. James Schwebach, administrator of the diocese of La Crosse, on Sunday, September 20, 1891, which was the feast of the Seven Dolors. The church was dedicated on September 8, 1892, by Bishop Schwebach, the feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin being on that date. The building complete represents an outlay of fully $10,000. There are from seventy-five to eighty families represented in this congregation, making some three hundred and sixty souls in all. In addition to the property already mentioned, the parish also owns five acres of land within the city limits, which has been laid out and arranged for cemetery purposes. The first church built at Richland Center, it must be remembered, was known as St. Thomas', but the new one built by Father McAteer was dedicated to St. Mary of the Assumption. Two missions are attended from this point, one of eighteen families, St. Martin's at Boaz, and the other St. Patrick's, thirty-five families at Melanchton Creek.

St. Mary's of the Assumption Church, Richland Center.

The Rev. John C. McAteer was born at Loretto, Cambria County, Pennsylvania, March 27, 1858. He attended the common schools at his home until reaching the age of seventeen, when he entered St. Vincent's College, near Latrobe, Penn., where he studied for five years. Having by that time completed the classical course, he came to Milwaukee and entered St. Francis Seminary on August 30, 1881. Here he remained for four years, receiving minor orders from Bishop Flasch, on Passion Saturday, March 29, 1884. He was made a subdeacon March 21, 1885, deacon on the following day, and was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Flasch, in St. Joseph's Cathedral, La Crosse, on June 29, 1885. He read his first Mass at St. Vincent's College, near Latrobe, Pa., on July 5, the feast of the Most Precious Blood, after which he was appointed as assistant to the Very Rev. James Schwebach, V. G., of La Crosse, with whom he remained for seven months. His second appointment was to the rectorate of St. Philips in Crawford County, where he remained from February 24 to September 9, 1886, being on the latter date assigned to his present pastorate at St. Mary's, Richland Center, Wis.

Rev. John C. McAteer.

St. James' Church, Rising Sun, Wis.

PRIOR to the year 1868, the Catholics living in the village of Rising Sun and vicinity assembled for the observance of divine services in a dilapidated log shanty. It was in this building, if building it may be called, that Mass was first said by the Rev. L. Galtier, who was at that time resident pastor at Prairie du Chien. He, after a considerable period, was relieved of this duty by the Rev. P. O'Connor, and Father O'Connor was succeeded in turn by Father Montague, who started to build a church at Rising Sun. This was in the year 1868, when the present decent edifice, occupying an area of 32x60 feet, and surmounted by a steeple which stands just thirty-eight feet above the roof, was erected. Two years later (1870) the Rev.

St. James' Parsonage, Rising Sun, Wis.

M. Heiss was stationed at Rising Sun as resident pastor. He remained there in active service for a period of five years, when he was succeeded by the Rev. C. Von Droste, whose administration extended from June, 1875, to March, 1877. The next pastor, for one year, was the Rev. B. De Goey, O. S. B., whose successor was the Rev. J. J. Burns, who was transferred to another charge in June, 1882, at which time the present incumbent, Father Gabriel Momo, assumed the charge. There is in this parish an Altar Society for Married Women, and a Sodality of the Immaculate Conception for Young Ladies. The young men own a spacious hall, which is used for temperance meetings, entertainments, and other honest purposes.

North Italy is the birth-place of Father Momo, he having first seen the light in that part of the world September 6, 1843, his home being Saluggia, which is not far from Turin, the old capital of Piedmont. Here he attended the public school until the age of fourteen, when he entered a college directed by Don Bosco. There he remained till the time of his ordination to the priesthood, which occurred on June 12, 1866. Ten years later he came to America, and was at once assigned to the mission at Genoa, Wisconsin, from which pastorate he was transferred to the present one.

The first steps taken by the Catholics residing at Genoa, Vernon County, Wisconsin, toward the establishment of a permanent congregation there, was on the 9th day of January, 1863, at which date the first subscription was made towards the erection of a church at that place. While it is not definitely stated, it is very likely the fact, that the erection of this building was begun during that same year, or, at least, not later than the year following. The first Mass of which any record has been made was celebrated at Genoa on September 12, 1862, by a French priest from Prairie du Chien, the services being conducted at that time in a small house owned and occupied by B. Starlochi. Be that as it may, it is positively stated that, following this occasion, Father Nicolas gave a mission at Genoa, he being succeeded in the charge of this congregation by Father Rainer, of Milwaukee, who came to Genoa occasionally in 1869, '70 and '71. This pastor was succeeded by the Rev. Father Obermüller, who was followed by the Rev. Father Schwebach, present Bishop of the diocese of La Crosse. Succeeding Father Schwebach, came Father Pius Schmitt, who attended the mission regularly from St. Joseph's Ridge, in La Crosse County, where he was appointed resident pastor in the year 1872.

It was during this pastor's administration that the first church records were made of baptisms, marriages and deaths in this parish. (The former records being in St. Mary's Church, La Crosse.) Father Schmitt was succeeded by Father Momo, who came there in 1875, making his home at Genoa as first resident pastor, where he remained for seven years, until June, 1882. His successor was the Rev. A. E. De Sierro, who remained until January, 1885, when he was succeeded by the Rev. H. J. Wirtz, who remained until August 14, 1896, a period of over eleven years.

At this time the congregation at Genoa numbered sixty-eight families. There is but one active Catholic organization connected with the congregation at Genoa, it being a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, of which A. B. Downey is president; Frank Gianoli, vice-president; Albert Zaboglio, recording secretary; Joseph Loefflad, financial secretary and treasurer, and Charles Ott, George Eck, and Eugene Carey, trustees.

Among the prominent members of the Genoa congregation are: Fritz Roehrer, Adelaide Sedretti, Joseph Malin, Pietro Guiseppe Curti, Antonio Curti, Johann Brendel, Abram B. Downey and Francesco Vener.

St. Bridget's Church, River Falls, Wis.

THOSE sections of Pierce County which border on the shores of the St. Croix and Mississippi Rivers, began to be settled between the years 1845 and 1855. Among those hardy pioneers the sons of Erin were not wanting. Martin McMahon and Daniel Corcoran took up the government land claims in 1854 near what is now the beautiful city of River Falls, where they are still residing. These were soon followed by Thomas Finn, Daniel Collins, Michael Fitzsimmons, John Clifford, Bernard Carrolan, and John and Humphrey Moynihan.

St. Bridget's Church, River Falls, and St. Joseph's Church, El Paso, Wis.

Early in 1860, a settlement was made east of River Falls, on the line between St. Croix and Pierce Counties. Chief among the early settlers found there, were Patrick Kelly, Thomas Pickett, James McLaughlin and Patrick Hawkins. North of River Falls in St. Croix County, a settlement of Irish Catholics was also established about the same time. Among those brave men were John Stapleton, Martin Lenihan, Daniel Sylan, Bonnes and Ross.

In early days those Catholics who resided within the territory which now comprises "St. Bridget's Catholic congregation at River Falls," attended divine services and received the Holy Sacraments at Hudson, St. Croix County, Prescott and Big River in Pierce County. From 1865 to 1878, the Holy Sacrifice of Mass was offered up and the Sacraments administered occasionally in the homes of Martin McMahon, Daniel Corcoran, Thomas Finn, Daniel Collins and James Langdon successively, by the Revs. George Keller, McNulty, Martin Connolly and Thomas Kelly, from Hudson, Wisconsin. Of these, the Rev. Martin Connolly was particularly urging the people to build a church. During the year 1878, a frame church 36x70 feet was erected in the First Ward of the City of River Falls, the ward in question being located in St. Croix County. This building cost about $2,000. This was certainly a serious obligation to assume, but owing to the energetic work and successful financiering of Thomas Finn and John Stapleton, the entire work was paid for as soon as completed. The church was dedicated to St. Bridget of Ireland.

Thenceforth the Rev. Thomas Kelly held divine services once a month on Sunday, coming from Hudson, Wisconsin, until 1885, when the Rev. A. J. Joerres was made assistant at Hudson, administering bi-monthly to the spiritual wants of the congregation for a little over a year. After the departure of Father Joerres, the Rev. Thomas Kelly was again in charge, until the summer of 1887, when the Rev. Martin Connolly became first resident pastor. Under his direction the elegant new parsonage was erected, costing about $2,700. Father Connolly remained only about two years and was followed by the Rev. J. A. Foppe, a Hollander, who returned to his native land in the summer of 1890. His successor after a few months' interregnum was the Rev. B. P. Connolly. Under his administration, the neat little church soon gave way to a large brick edifice of 42x90 feet. The frame church was then sold to a Scandinavian Church organization, the paltry sum of $395 being all that was paid for it. This was really an injustice to the people whom the records of various meetings attest were perfectly willing to build a new church, the cost of which, completed, should, however, be limited to $6,000. But Father Connolly was not satisfied with this and really insisted upon something much more costly. So a $10,000 structure was erected, of which amount he succeeded in collecting $970. When he took charge the congregation was free from all indebtedness and had $600 in the treasury, but at his departure in November, 1896, it was encumbered $8,100.

Father Duren relieved the Bishop from this dilemma by volunteering to go to River Falls and make an attempt to save the church property, and the offer was promptly accepted. He took charge in February, 1897, since which time he has labored assiduously, gradually uniting the members of the congregation into concerted action for the liquidation of the enormous encumbrance which had been piled upon this congregation of barely sixty families.

To particularize somewhat as to the work accomplished by Father Duren, it may be stated that in February, 1897, he established the St. Rose Altar Society, with a membership of sixty, which organization has through the zealousness and activity of its members accomplished a great deal of good. The position and standing of the pastor as an invaluable factor in this effort to re-establish the parish, is still further evidenced in the generous action of the non-Catholics of the community, who in September, 1897, presented Father Duren with a sum of money sufficient for the purchase of a one-thousand-pound church bell. This act on their part is made all the more significant from the fact that it was entirely unexpected. By November 16, 1897, Father Duren managed to pay off the interest on the church debt for the present year, as well as that which had accumulated during the year preceding. In addition to this, he also paid off insurance premiums for a year past as well as for three years to come. With such a hopeful condition of affairs, it is therefore not unreasonable to anticipate his ultimate success in the difficult and arduous task which he has so cheerfully taken upon himself to fulfill.

Rev. S. Duren.

River Falls is as beautiful a little city of three thousand inhabitants as any in the State. It is well lighted, has waterworks, fine business houses and an excellent, thrifty and law-abiding class of people. The city is situated on the banks of the picturesque falls of the Kinnickinnic River, and on a branch of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railroad, and is only an hour's ride from St. Paul, Minn. Here too, is established one of the oldest and most flourishing State Normal Schools, which is attended by nearly four hundred students. The climate is healthful, and the soil is most salubrious, being in the hard wheat belt. Farmers in Pierce County have never known a total failure of crops.

Between the years of 1852 and 1860 Thomas Hurley, John Hurley, Edward Welsh, Andrew McGinley, Andrew B. McGinley, Patrick McGinley, Michael O'Connell, Timothy Harrington and Edward Fitzgerald settled in the township of El Paso, Pierce County, Wisconsin. Two of these early pioneers, Thomas Hurley and Andrew B. McGinley, survive to this day.

From the time of the arrival of the earliest settlers until 1875, several priests visited the Catholics scattered throughout that section, holding divine services in private houses, school houses and town halls. The first holy Mass said in El Paso was celebrated in the log residence of Thomas Hurley by the Rev. J. C. Knauf, at that time resident pastor at Red Wing, Minnesota, and who at the present time is stationed at Hokah, in the diocese of Winona, Minnesota. The next pastor to assume charge of this congregation was the Rev. Joseph Hermon of Clayfield, Pierce County, who, in 1875, drew up the necessary plans and specifications for a new church. At this time the congregation at El Paso consisted of about fifty families, nearly all of whom were Irish. While this church was in course of erection there was no regular pastor in attendance, Father Hermon having been transferred to another parish. In spite of this, however, the congregation succeeded in finishing and paying for it, which speaks well, indeed, for those good people. The church property now consists of six acres, a part of which is used for a Catholic cemetery. The new church, which occupies an area of 36x72 feet, and is of frame throughout, was dedicated to St. Joseph by Bishop Heiss of La Crosse, in 1877. It cost about $3,000. The entire church property is valued at $5,000.

The Rev. Father Casimir, O. S. F., and the Rev. Father Gunkel of Big River, Pierce County, visited El Paso occasionally, until in 1877 the Rev. Father Laffin was appointed its first resident pastor. In 1881, however, it again became a mission, and as such was attended by the Rev. Edward Alexander Hanses from Big River for three years. Then Father Flammang came a few times from Eau Galle, Dunn County, Wisconsin, and in this wise the mission received occasional though not regular attention. Toward the close of the year

1885, the Rev. John Eisen, now dean of Marshfield, Wisconsin, began to visit St. Joseph's once a month from Clayfield, continuing to do so until 1888, when the Rev. James Fitzpatrick was made resident pastor. He remained three years, until 1890, when El Paso became a mission attached to River Falls, Pierce County, Wisconsin. From there it was attended by the Rev. B. P. Connolly for six years, until the Rev. Stephen Duren on February 1st, 1897, became rector of River Falls, also administering to the spiritual wants of El Paso, where he held services on Sundays and alternate Sundays and holy days.

The congregation of St. Joseph's now numbers sixty families, and is entirely free from debt. Since having charge of this mission, Father Duren has established St. Bridget's Altar Society, with sixty-four charter members, of which Mrs. C. H. Gilman is the presiding officer. The congregation was incorporated under the laws of Wisconsin in 1889, the present officers elected in February, 1897, being, John Grant, secretary, Michael Jennings, treasurer, and Thomas Harley and Pat Cunningham, consulters.

St. Andrew's Church, Rozellville, Wis.

THE St. Andrew's congregation at Rozellville, Marathon County, Wisconsin, was established about fifteen years ago, being first attended by the Rev. Father Reiser, then located at Marathon City. Later it was visited by pastors from Marshfield and Hewitt, who continued to conduct services there until the 15th of August, 1893, when the present pastor, the Rev. Aloysius Schauenberg, took up his residence there. The different pastors who succeeded each other in charge of this mission, following the pastorate of Father Reiser, were the Rev. Fathers Joseph Joch, Ignatius Schaller, Winand Daniels, Peter Schnitzler, Charles J. Weber and Father Geyer, besides one other whose name is not forthcoming. The first church built at Rozellville was a frame building, 22x40 feet, which cost, complete, in the neighborhood of $1,000. This has been supplanted by a new and more imposing structure, which was completed last year, when it was blessed by the Right Rev. Bishop Schwebach, on August 8th. This building is 36x76 feet, and is of solid brick, the total cost, including interior furnishings, being in the neighborhood of $7,000. At the present time the congregation is planning to build a new school house, and establish a parochial school in this parish. The congregation of St. Andrew's at the present time consists of some sixty members. There is one Catholic organization in this parish, an Altar Society, which has a liberal and active membership.

St. Andrew's Church, Rozellville, Wis.

Rev. A. Schauenberg.

The mission of Holy Trinity, at Weber's Postoffice, town of Eau Plaine, was established by the Rev. Ignatius Schaller, about eleven years ago. Since 1893 this mission has been regularly attended, but prior to that time the Catholics in that locality were only afforded the services of a priest two or three times a year. This congregation, at the present time, numbers some seventy families, all of whom are of German birth or descent. Services are now held at Holy Trinity by Father Schauenberg once a month.

St. Philomena's Church, Rudolph, Wis.

ST. PHILOMENA'S congregation, at Rudolph, Wood County, Wisconsin, was organized in 1884, the present rector, the Rev. August Van Sever, becoming first pastor of that parish on June 6 of the same year. Prior to this organization, the members of St. Philomena's congregation were occasionally attended by pastors from the adjacent parishes. A parochial school was started in connection with this congregation in 1885, the same being placed in charge of the School Sisters of Notre Dame from Milwaukee, in May of the following year. At the present time, St. Philomena's congregation numbers in the neighborhood of four hundred and seventy-five souls, who are of French, German, Hollandish and Irish extraction. The school is in a quite prosperous condition, the report for the year 1896-97 showing that during that period over one hundred scholars were in regular attendance.

St. Philomena's Church, Rudolph, Wis.

In addition to his duties as resident pastor of Rudolph, Father Van Sever also attends the missions of Babcock and Pittsville, at each of which places there is a church. The congregations at these missions number respectively one hundred and sixty and one hundred and twenty-five members.

The Rev. August Van Sever was born at Ghent, Belgium, in 1857, and was ordained to the priesthood at Jacmel, Haiti, in 1881.

St. Joseph's Church, St. Joseph's Ridge, Wis.

PRIOR to the year 1866, the Catholics living in and around St. Joseph's Ridge, La Crosse County, Wisconsin, received occasional visits from the Rev. Fathers Tappert and Marro, who came there from La Crosse to administer to the spiritual requirements of the people. For some time following the first visit of these Fathers, services were celebrated in the houses of the settlers, but as soon as the people were able to do so, a log church and log parsonage were built. The congregation of St. Joseph's was formally established by the Rev. P. Florentine in 1866, he remaining as resident priest of the church for some considerable period. From that time until the year 1869, services were held regularly in the log church, which building, however, in that year was superseded by a new and more appropriate structure. Four years later, that is in 1873, a comfortable and commodious two-story stone schoolhouse was erected and during the same year a solid brick parsonage was also built. The congregation of St. Joseph's was incorporated under the State laws of Wisconsin in 1887. Upon Father Florentine's removal to another field, he was followed in succession by the Revs. F. L. Yunker, James Maly, Joseph Moder, G. Noever, P. Schmid, F. X. Pfaller, P. Geyer, Theophil Beau, J. M. Wicker, Joseph Lang, Michael Flammang, J. W. Ritz, P. Geyer, A. Mendl, and the present incumbent, the Rev. G. Noever, who once more returned to the charge. There are now in the neighborhood of one hundred and twenty families in the congregation of St. Joseph's and the parochial school, which is conducted by Franciscan Sisters of Perpetual Adoration, has a regular attendance of ninety scholars. There are a number of Catholic organizations to which the members of this congregation belong, among them being a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin.

St. Joseph's Church, St. Joseph's Ridge, Wis.

The Mission of St. Peter's Ridge, in the town of Washington, La Crosse County, Wisconsin, is also attended by the resident pastor from St. Joseph's Ridge. This mission, which is situated in the midst of a quite prosperous community and has a resident membership of not less than ninety families, was established by the present pastor, the Rev. G. Noever, in 1869. There is also a parochial school at St. Peter's Ridge, which is in charge of a lay teacher and has a regular attendance of twenty-six scholars, and still another Catholic school in the town of Portland, Monroe County, Wisconsin, which also belongs to this parish.

Rev. G. Noever.

The Rev. G. Noever was born December 19, 1843, in Gladbach, Rhenish Prussia. After acquiring a rudimentary education, he pursued a course of studies at the Gymnasium at Cologne for nine years, after which he spent one year each in the Universities at Munich, Bonn and at Innsbruck. He then came to America and entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, September 16, 1868. He was ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. Bishop Heiss on July 2, 1869. His first appointment was as pastor at St. Joseph's Ridge, from which he was transferred to that of Eagle's Point, where he remained for a time. He was then successively pastor of the congregations at Brush Prairie, Manitowoc Rapids, Cato, Green Bay and Chilton, being sent from the latter place to his original pastorate at St. Joseph's Ridge, in 1888.

St. Mary's Church, St. Mary's, Wis.

THIS parish was organized in 1856, when it was attended from La Crosse, the Rev. Father Tappert being its first pastor. He was followed successively by the Rev. Fathers Etschmann, Sanders, Marrion, Florhadzior, Genker, Nicholas Stehle, Theodor, James W. Oglikowski, Crowse, Hackner, Wicker, Laurer and J. J. Mayer, who is the present incumbent. The first parsonage was erected at St. Mary's in 1865, and the church, which has an area of 84x44 feet, was built three years later. In addition to the several pastors whose names have already been given, there were others who attended this congregation for short periods, but of whose names no record has been made. There are now some one hundred and twenty families in the congregation and there is one parochial school, which is in charge of a lay teacher and has an attendance of one hundred and six scholars. The school building was erected in 1889. Belonging to the congregation of St. Mary's are a Young Ladies' Sodality, Young Men's Sodality, Christian Mothers' Society, and St. Mary's Society for Men.

St. Mary's Church, St. Mary's, Wis.

A new church has just been completed by the congregation at St. Mary's, its location being at a point five miles southwest of Norwalk. This church is built in Gothic style, and occupies a total area of 138x55 feet, the auditorium representing 48x100 feet of that space. The structure is built of solid stone as high as the main windows, the walls being of brick veneer. The tower and steeple, which is of white brick, reaches to a height of one hundred and forty-eight feet. The interior of the structure is handsomely finished in natural pine; the ceiling is cross-vaulted, being divided into three parts, the center raising twelve feet above the side arches. The windows of art glass, with which the building is furnished, represent liberal donations by members of the congregation. The entire structure is heated throughout by two large furnaces. This church was dedicated on November 24, 1897, the Rev. P. Becker, from Mauston, Father P. Schnitzler, from Cashton, the Rev. W. Hackner, from Fountain City, the Rev. G. Pesch, from Portage, and Father Louis Wurst, of Tomah, being present.

Rev. John J. Mayer.

The Rev. John J. Mayer was born October 31, 1869, at Landshut, Bavaria. He emigrated to the United States in 1884, and, after completing the necessary course of studies at some of the leading theological institutions of the country, was ordained to the priesthood by the Most. Rev. Otto Zardetti, on May 1, 1893.

St. Philip's Church, St. Philips, Wis.

BEFORE a church was erected or parish organized at St. Philips, Crawford County, Wisconsin, Father Galtier, of Prairie du Chien, the first priest who attended to the spiritual needs of the earlier Catholic settlers of the town of Clayton and vicinity, held regular services at the house of James Brady (1857 to 1859). After some visits, Father Galtier advised the people to procure a site for a church and cemetery, toward which, as soon as the matter had been properly agitated, Mr. Gaffney donated six acres of ground, to be used for the church and pastoral residence, while Mr. Garrity presented the congregation with two acres to be used for cemetery purposes. Philip Murphy (first of the Catholic settlers in that vicinity to be laid at rest in the new cemetery), who had been named after the Apostle, St. Philip, suggested that name as an eminently proper one for the parish, which was therefore denominated St. Philip's. The work of building the church was at once begun, a substantial and modest structure being erected during the administration of Father O'Connor, who attended the congregation from Rising Sun, from 1859 to 1862. When Father Murphy succeeded Father O'Connor at Rising Sun, he also attended the mission of St. Philip, the term of his pastorate extending from 1862 to 1868. During this period, the church having become too small to accommodate the requirements of the growing Catholic population, he pointed out to the congregation the advisability of erecting a new and more suitable structure. This advice, which met with the hearty approval of his parishioners, resulted in the erection of a church which was completed in 1870, during the administration of Father Beau, and dedicated to the service of God in 1872. During the latter year a comfortable and roomy residence was also built. Father Beau was succeeded by the Rev. Father Wendelin Bernard in February, 1873, who assumed the duties as first resident pastor of that parish. In the following year Father Bernard was succeeded by the Rev. Father Steinberg, who in turn was followed by Father Walsh. He remained as pastor for about one year. In 1876 the Rev. John Conroy was appointed pastor of St. Philip, and continued as such until his death, which occurred in the February following. The next pastor who assumed charge of this parish was the Rev. Bonaventure De Goey, who built the parish school in 1881. During Father De Goey's pastorate, it was comparatively successful, but, owing to the small attendance of pupils, caused by the long distance they had to travel to the school, for in the near vicinity of the school Catholic families were few and the lack of funds, the school had to be closed during the pastorate of the Rev. J. L. Fitzpatrick, whose term of service lasted from 1883 to 1886. For seven months following the departure of Father Fitzpatrick, the Rev. Father McAteer had charge of St. Philip's, his successor being the Rev. B. P. Connolly, who remained until 1890. Then the Rev. D. A. O'Connor received the appointment and continued in charge until within a few weeks of his death, which occurred in 1894. When Father O'Connor died, the Rev. R. B. Condon was appointed to the pastorate, he being succeeded by the present pastor, the Rev. H. F. Duffy, in July, 1896. The congregation of St. Philip's consists of about four hundred souls.

There are two missions attended from St. Philip's, both of which were organized during the pastorate of Father De Goey. The churches at these missions were also built by him, that of St. Patrick in the town of Scott, Crawford County, having a congregation of about one hundred members, while that of St. Peter's, of Richland County, has a limited membership of forty. There is but one Catholic organization in St. Philip's congregation, an Altar Society, to which all the ladies of the congregation belong.

The Rev. Hugh F. Duffy was born September 19, 1866, in Longford County, Ireland. After a National School education and four years of a classical education at St. Mary's College, he came to America in 1886, and the same year entered St. Thomas' Seminary, St. Paul, Minnesota, where he continued his classical and philosophical course, and graduated in 1891. The same year he entered St. Francis' Seminary, Milwaukee, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1894. He was then appointed assistant to Father Kennedy, of Lyndon, Wisconsin, and at the end of seven weeks was made pastor of Reedsburg and missions, and in 1896 was appointed to St. Philip's parish.

St. Aloysius' Church, Sauk City, Wis.

St. Aloysius' Church, Sauk City, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Aloysius at Sauk City, Sauk County, Wis., was established in the year 1844 by the Rev. Father Adalbert Inama, who was succeeded in turn by the Revs. Max Gaertner, F. Weinhart, P. Voissem, M. Weiss, F. X. Etschmann, G. Hengen, J. Schreiner, A. Durst, F. Sailer, Paul Geyer, A. Mendl, A. Strickner, P. Geyer, E. Wendel, H. Grosse, J. Metzler and G. Sluyter. The present church was built in 1869, and from there the first missions were attended, as far as Portage and Watertown. The present congregation at Sauk City numbers one hundred and fifteen families, and that of the mission at Honey Creek, which is also attended from there, thirty-five families. The Aloysius parochial school is in charge of two Sisters of St. Dominic, there being about eighty regular scholars. In connection with this congregation there are the St. Pius Mutual Benefit Society, for men; a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin; St. Mary's Altar Society, for ladies; St. Agnes' Society for young ladies, and St. Aloysius Society for young men.

Rev. J. B. Wiedmann.

The Rev. Joseph B. Wiedmann, who assumed the pastoral duties at Sauk City about two years ago, was born in Germany in 1855. His earlier studies were accomplished in the schools of his native country, after which he came to the United States. He then entered the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, where he was ordained in 1879. During that same and the following year he was located at Sparta, and from 1880 until 1895 at La Crosse. He then received his present appointment.

St. Patrick's Church, Seneca, Wis.

ST. PATRICK'S congregation at Seneca, Crawford County, Wisconsin, was organized in 1874, in which year a fair-sized frame edifice, 85x50 feet, affording a seating capacity for six hundred, was erected. The first pastor to attend to the spiritual requirements of these people was the Rev. C. A. Verwyst, during whose time the church and a parsonage were built. He was succeeded by the Rev. Fathers J. G. Collins, J. J. Burns, J. T. Durward, J. A. Barney, A. A. Birsner, George Kiefner, Stephen Duren and J. M. Keeley. This parish is in a prosperous as well satisfactory condition, improvements to the property having been made to the extent of $1,200. Of Catholic societies in this parish, there are: St. Rose's Altar Society: Miss Clara S. Garvey, president, and St. Joseph's Branch 172, Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, organized August 15, 1897, the present membership being twenty-four: The Rev. J. M. Keeley, spiritual director; Patrick Maney, president; John W. Keyes, vice-president; Robert J. Joy, secretary; Michael Bernier, treasurer; M. J. Joy, D. M. Kane and Tobias Weber, trustees, and David Joy, sentinel.

St. Patrick's Church, Seneca, Wis.

The Rev. J. M. Keeley, present rector of St. Patrick's at Seneca, was born at Waseca, Minnesota, April 22, 1870, and was ordained to the priesthood at St. John's University, Minnesota, on April 25, 1894, and on May 20th following he was appointed to his present charge.

St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Somerset, Wis.

SOMERSET, which is situated in St. Croix County, Wis., was first settled in 1852 by a few Canadian families coming from Baie du Febvre and Durham. Later, quite a number of French Canadians came from Lanoraie and Deschambault, so that, from the start, the population of Somerset may be said to have been composed of French Canadian Catholics. These people were at first attended by missionary priests residing at Hudson, among whom were the Rev. Fathers Godfrey, Mignault, Nicholas, Verwyst, Connolly and Lavin. The first church was built at Somerset in 1856, on the banks of the St. Croix River. Prior to this, missions had been given by the priests from Hudson in the home of Mr. Joseph Parent, which was also situated down the river at a point not far from the one selected for the church. The first resident priest at Somerset, Father Fleurant, also conducted the school at that place. The first church built here was a frame structure, 48x24 feet, with spire and bell, the latter still being used in the school-house. During the earlier years of this parish, many successful missions were conducted in the old church by Fathers George Keller, Joseph Goiffon and Redemptorist Fathers, whose zealous and faithful efforts are among the many pleasant memories of the older settlers. These missionary priests, as well as others who assisted in ministering to the spiritual wants of the congregation, were almost without exception the guests of Mr. Thomas Parnell, on the occasion of their visits to Somerset, until as late as the year 1873. At this time the population had increased to such an extent that it became absolutely necessary to build a larger church. To that end plans were at once devised and the work begun under the supervision of Father H. J. Wirtz, the pastor. The site selected was some distance from that of the old church, being about four miles up the Apple River. A portion of this building was completed in 1874, but the corner-stone was not laid until the following year. Father Wirtz also managed to build a modest though comfortable priest house, which was completed in 1873, the first year of his administration. This energetic priest remained in charge until 1884, during part of which year, owing to failing health, he was assisted in his duties by the Rev. D. O. Sicard de

St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Somerset, Wis.

Carufel, of Three Rivers, Canada, who was at that time visiting with relatives in the vicinity of Somerset. Dur- the same year Father A. Van Sever, who had been designated to assume the pastorate, visited the congregation on one or two occasions, but did not become a permanent resident. Finally, in November, 1884, owing more particularly to his limited knowledge of the French language, Father Wirtz resigned. For some considerable time following, the spiritual services rendered to this congregation were intermittent. In April, 1885, the Rev. P. U. Brunel came to Somerset, remaining, however, but for a short time. Then, in November, Father Bonaventura De Goey, O. S. F., was appointed. He, too, left within six months, and was succeeded by Father George Keller, who came from the diocese of St. Paul in July, 1886. During his administration, Father Keller made a number of improvements to the church property, among them being the enlargement of the church and the erection of a new parochial school building. Father Keller left Somerset in August, 1888, and was succeeded by the Rev. J. D. Sicard de Carufel, who remained until September, 1889. Father Keller, who, since his departure from Somerset had made his residence at Farmington, again took up the work, making his home at Somerset, while still attending to the spiritual wants of his former parishioners at Farmington. He remained, however, but a few months, when the Rev. L. A. Riviere was appointed to the pastorate, of which he took charge in March, 1890. In the fall of the same year this pastor opened the Catholic school, which was placed in charge of Sisters of St. Joseph, from Concordia, Kansas. Father Riviere remained in charge of the congregation at Somerset until February, 1892, when he was succeeded by the Rev. F. E. Couture, the present incumbent.

Among other improvements made by the Rev. F. E. Couture are a hot air heating furnace, and three new altars, which were blessed on Christmas day, 1896. One of the side altars was donated by M. H. A. Sagrandeur.

The congregation at present consists of some two hundred families, a hundred and eighty-five of which are French Canadians. There are seventy-eight scholars in attendance at the school.

The Rev. Ferdinand Elzéar Couture, son of Major Général Francis Couture, was born in Rimouski, Province of Québec, Canada, on November 28, 1842. He received a commercial training at the Industrial College established in that town by the Rev. Cyprian Tanguay, and then entered Laval University of Quebec, where, after an eight-years' course in classics, literature and natural sciences, he graduated a B. S. His theological training was partially obtained at this University, where he had for his professor His Eminence Cardinal Taschereau, and partly at Rimouski Seminary. In 1867 he was appointed secretary to Bishop John Langevin of Rimouski, and in 1868 was called upon to fill the charge of Prefect of Studies in Rimouski Seminary. Here he remained for fifteen years, during which entire period he was also engaged in teaching mental and moral philosophy and the various branches of the scientific course of studies. It was also in the Cathedral at Rimouski that he was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Langevin, on August 25, 1869.

Rev. F. E. Couture.

In 1876 Bishop Langevin appointed him Canon of the new Cathedral Chapter, which charge Father Couture resigned in 1881, to devote himself entirely to college work.

In 1876 the Laval University of Quebec conferred on him the degree of Master of Arts. In August, 1883, owing to greatly impaired health, caused by excessive application, Father Couture severed his connection with college life and took charge of the parish of Hawkesbury, Ontario, in the Archdiocese of Ottawa. Here he remained for eight years, during which period he built a handsome presbyterial residence, a commodious sacristy and two-story brick school, which he placed in charge of the Gray Nuns of the Cross of Ottawa. He also procured, platted and embellished a magnificent cemetery. On November 3, 1891, Father Couture resigned from the pastorate of Hawkesbury, and during a visit to Minneapolis in the following year, was appointed by Bishop Schwebach of La Crosse to his present pastorate.

St. Patrick's Church, Sparta, Wis.

THE first priest to celebrate Mass at Sparta, Monroe County, Wisconsin, was the Rev. Father Montague of Mauston. After him came Fathers Stroker, Carrigan, Marco and Quigley, the erection of the first church being begun by Father Marco. Then Father Durward of Tomah attended the congregation for six years. The first resident pastor of St. Patrick's was the Rev. J. B. Metzler, who remained from August, 1876, to July, 1877, when he was succeeded by the Rev. J. M. Baur. Father Baur's successors were the Rev. J. M. Wicker, from August, 1878, to August, 1879, and the Rev. J. B. Wiedman, who maintained the pastorate from 1879 to 1881. Then the Rev. Theophil Beau came to Sparta, remaining until the time of his death in March, 1887. His successor was the Rev. John Kennedy, who, however, remained but a few months, when he was succeeded by the Rev. Father H. F. Flock, present pastor of the congregation.

The congregation of St. Patrick's consists of eighty-five families, twenty-five of whom are German. The parochial school, which has a regular attendance of thirty-five scholars, is under the direction of a Franciscan Sister of the Perpetual Adoration of La Crosse, Wisconsin. Besides a branch of the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, of which H. Fanning is president; J. B. Flautt, recording secretary; J. M. Fanning, financial secretary, and J. C. Mullen, treasurer, there are represented in this congregation the Society of Christian Mothers and Young Ladies' Sodality.

St. Patrick's Church, Sparta, Wis.

Rev. H. F. Flock.

The Mission of St. John the Evangelist at Summit, (Rapp P. O.), Monroe County, Wisconsin, was formed by about twenty-five families, who separated from St. Mary's congregation in 1878. These people built a substantial brick church at Summit, which was placed under the patronage of St. John the Evangelist, and is in use to the present day. From the time of its organization, this mission was attended regularly by the rector from Sparta, and is still connected with that parish at the present time. The congregation numbers sixty-five German families, all of whom are industrious and prosperous farmers, as well as honest, practical Catholics. Services are held at St. John's on every alternate Sunday.

St. Columbkilles Church at Pine Hill, Jackson County, Wisconsin, is another mission until recently attended from Sparta. This is an old Irish settlement, situated about twenty miles north of Sparta. About thirty-five or forty years ago, a small frame church was built by the Catholics at Pine Hill, which stands to this day. The congregation, consisting of some twenty families, was attended once a month by the pastor of St. Patrick's. For the time being Pine Hill receives monthly attendance from Tomah.

The Rev. Henry F. Flock, pastor of St. Patrick's congregation at Sparta, Monroe County, Wisconsin, was born at Whitewater, in this state, February 26, 1863. He was two years old when his parents removed to La Crosse, Wisconsin, at which place, when he had reached the proper age, he began attending the Cathedral school. In 1878 he commenced a classical course at St. John's University, Minnesota, and in 1883 entered St. Francis Seminary near Milwaukee, where he completed his philosophical and theological studies and was ordained to the priesthood on June 24, 1887. Almost immediately afterward, he was stationed at Sparta, where he has remained ever since.

Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, Stanfold, Wis.

THE congregation at Stanfold, Barron County, was first established in 1870, when Father Nicholas of Menomonie ministered to the spiritual wants of the few Catholics living in and around that place. Following him Father Goldsmith of Chippewa Falls visited the place and later Father George Keller of Menomonie. The first resident pastor appointed to the charge was the Rev. Joseph Dolé, who came there in 1876 and remained until the time of his death, which occurred on April 2, 1895. The vacancy thus created was filled by the appointment of Father J. F. Brouillard, who assumed the duties of pastor on May 18, 1895. On March 19, 1895, only a short time preceding the death of Father Dolé, the church and adjacent buildings at Stanfold were totally destroyed by fire. There is a parochial school at this place which is in charge of three Sisters of Notre Dame of Milwaukee, and has an attendance of one hundred scholars. The present congregation numbers about four hundred and fifty.

Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, Stanfold, Wis.

Rev. J. F. Brouillard.

Father J. F. Brouillard, resident pastor at Stanfold, obtained his education in the schools of Canada, pursuing his classical studies at St. Hyacinth College and taking his theological course at Grand Seminary in Montreal. He was ordained to the priesthood at Portland, Oregon, on February 12, 1888. Three days later he was sent to the Umatilla Reservation, remaining there until July 15, when he was transferred to La Grande, Union County, Oregon. He continued with this latter charge until May 18, 1895, when he received his present appointment.

St. Bridget's Church, Stanton, Wis.

ST. Bridget's Congregation at Stanton, St. Croix County, was organized on the 8th day of October, 1875. Two years subsequent to that time a church was erected by this congregation on four acres of land, which had been deeded by Mr. James Higgins to the Right Rev. Michael Heiss for church and cemetery purposes. The church was built under the direction of the Rev. Peter Lavin, who was at that time attending the congregation as a mission from Erin Prairie. His successor was the Rev. Father Peter De Paradis, he being followed by Father Sturm, who built the parsonage, and became first resident pastor at Stanton. Father Fardy succeeded Father Sturm, remaining at Stanton for a little over a year, when he removed to New Richmond, from which place he attended St. Bridget's for the four years following. Then Father Lavin again became resident pastor of the parish, remaining for two years, when it was once more served from New Richmond, for nearly twelve months, by the Very Rev. Ignatius Tignan, D. D. At the end of that period, the present pastor, the Rev. B. De Goey, O. S. F. C., took charge of the parish. There are about four hundred and thirty-seven communicants in this congregation. A Ladies' Altar Society connected with St. Bridget's has for its officers Mrs. Jas. Higgins and Mrs. John Quinlan.

Rev. B. De Goey, O. S. F. C.

The Rev. B. De Goey, O. S. F. C., was born September 17, 1824, at Bruggen, Belgium. He entered the Convent of Capuchins at Bruggen, Belgium, on February 14, 1847, and was ordained priest in Gravia, on May 25, 1851. For twelve and a half years succeeding ordination he gave missions in Holland, Belgium, France, Ireland and England and was the first English chaplain in the English Navy after the Reformation. He then, in obedience to the commands of his General and Provincial, came to America, where he arrived in the year 1863. His first appointment in this country was as resident and first pastor of De Pere, Brown County, Wisconsin, then in Milwaukee Diocese, in which he has continuously served until the present time. In the thirty-four years of Father De Goey's pastorate he has ever proved a conscientious and zealous advocate of the church's interest and there are to-day many structures in the way of churches, schools and parsonages which owe their existence to his courageous and earnest labors.

Superior City, Wis.

ABOUT Christmas, 1853, a single log cabin but recently erected marked the spot selected as a site for the future city of Superior. Seven months later (August, 1854) the number of buildings in course of erection and completed was about thirty, while of inhabitants there were fully two hundred, all of whom, with but few exceptions, being men. In September, 1857, the population had reached a total of 2,500 people.

Then a great financial crisis swept over the land. It acted as a death blow to Superior, where "the bottom virtually dropped out of everything," so that when the crash came there was practically nothing to fall back upon. People left Superior as rapidly as they had formerly come to it, so that in 1860, instead of a population of two thousand five hundred, it was almost impossible to gather together five hundred souls. Even of these remaining few, the Civil War took a considerable number, and the place thereafter remained more or less dormant for fully a quarter of a century. From the spring of 1885, however, the West End, or West Superior, as it is better known, began to pick up, so that in a few years improvements in that quarter became pretty general. With this new impetus the place assumed new dignities, becoming, in the spring of 1889 a regularly chartered city. At this time the population was estimated at about nine thousand, while some seven years later, that is, in 1896, it was authoritatively stated to be twenty-six thousand one hundred and seventy-six.

St. Francis Xavier's Church, Superior, Wis.

The first Catholic priest known to have visited Superior after it had been selected for a townsite, was First Catholic Church at Superior, Wis.

House of Franciscan Fathers.
Parochial School of St. Francis Xavier's Church.
Second Cath. Church and Parsonage at Superior (East End.)
Third Cath. Church (St. Francis Xavier's) at Superior (East End.)

the Rev. Angelus Van Paemel. In the winter of 1853-1854, the small-pox having assumed the proportion of an epidemic among the Ojibways living along the shore of Lake Superior, Bishop Baraga, of Sault Ste. Marie and Marquette, Michigan, sent Father Van Paemel into that region, to look after the material as well as the spiritual interests of the sufferers. He arrived at his destination early in 1854, and found the condition of affairs as deplorable as could possibly be imagined. In every direction and in all stages of corruption, lay the festering bodies of the dead, impregnating earth, air and water alike with deadly and pestiferous odors. The visitation was, in fact, awful in its intensity, and on more than one occasion he met with instances where whole families had been wiped out of existence. Yet to this fearful undertaking the good Father gave himself, body and soul; ministering to the sick, offering the consolations of religion to the dying, and, by almost superhuman effort, alleviating, as far as within his power, the scourge of this terrible plague. In this almost divine undertaking he was ably and conscientiously assisted by Mr. Antoine Cournoyer, one of the earliest settlers at Superior. Nobly and energetically they worked together, ministering to the sick ones and burying the dead, until spring, when the disease gradually abated and finally disappeared.

The first Holy Mass said within the limits of Superior was celebrated by Father Van Paemel in the summer of 1854, in the house of Frank Roy, on Second street, near Corcoran avenue. This is the first Catholic service held in this place of which any historical record has been made. It is, however, most likely that Catholic services were held before that time, since it is known that Catholic missionaries were around here long before Superior, as a settlement, was thought of. Over two hundred years ago, whilst working (1665-1669) at the conversion of the Indians in the region of what is now Ashland, Wisconsin, Father Claude Allouez, S. J., is known to have gone to the headwaters of the lake for a meeting with some Sioux Indians; hence it is probable that he came across and even passed, some time, on the present site of the city. Allouez Bay, a part of Superior Harbor, is named in his memory, and for a number of years immediately preceding the founding of the city, the Rev. Fathers Frederic Baraga and Otho Skolla are known to have been in that vicinity.

During Lent, in the year 1855, the Rev. Timothy Carie,[1] while on the way from La Pointe to Fond du Lac Indian Reservation, passed through Superior and spent a week there, holding services in the house of Louis Morisetti, which was near the Nemadji River. Later in the spring Father Van Paemel went again to Superior, and from that time on he made regular records of everything pertaining to the church. Thus, among other things, the first baptism is recorded as having taken place on June 7, 1855, at about which time, also, Father Van Paemel bought a house from a Mr. Vanosse, which, after being enlarged and remodeled, was used as a church until March, 1872. This building was located on Fourth street, on lot 310, between Becker and Nettleton avenues. It was originally intended for an hotel. The church, when completed, was dedicated in honor of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

The first altar placed in this church was made by one of the earliest settlers, J. B. Goslin, a carpenter by trade. Everything, of course, was of the crudest in those days, so that it is not astonishing to learn that, in lieu of a bell, a large trumpet was used to call the worshipers together, which we are assured served the purpose very well. And so other ideas, equally crude and at variance with the usual customs, were thankfully adopted, and proved of the utmost advantage to the struggling settlement. One man in particular, a tinner by trade, named Owen Sheridan, made himself especially useful in the construction of furniture for the church. Among numerous noteworthy innovations introduced by him at that time, were patent candlesticks for the sanctuary boys, a fountain sprinkler, holy water font—manufactured from copper—and last, but greatest of all, a huge chandelier, some six or seven feet in height, and which had a capacity for holding forty-eight candles.

In June and July, 1857, the Rev. Augustin Benoit, S. J., held services at Superior. At the time of his visit he was on his way to Fort Williams, on the north shore of Lake Superior, but on reaching the settlement was compelled to desist from making further efforts to reach his destination, owing to his personal ailments. So he remained for a time with Father Van Paemel, at La Pointe, assisting that zealous priest, and at the same time picking up the English and Ojibway, with which he was entirely unacquainted. Father Van Paemel remained in charge of Superior for five years and eight months. He is described as a man of powerful appearance, being about six feet in height, and strong in proportion. Unfortunately, he was a chronic sufferer from throat disease, which finally caused his retirement and ultimate recall to Belgium. Later we hear of him as rector of a parish in Berkshire, England, where he died about three years ago.

In August, 1858, Father Van Paemel, who was still residing at Superior, received a visit from his Ordinary, the Right Rev. Frederic Baraga, at that time Bishop of Sault Ste. Marie and Marquette, who arrived on the steamer "Iron City." On the Feast of the Assumption, the good Bishop preached in English, French and Ojibway, and confirmed, in all, forty persons. He spent, altogether, eleven days about the place, during which he had some thirty pages of his Obijway prayerbook printed. About two years later (May, 1860) he went again to Superior, and, as he remarks in his journal, found everyone sad on account of having no priest, as Father Van Paemel had left the fall previous. On this occasion he spent nine days, preached on two Sundays in three languages, heard confessions and gave instructions every day, baptized eleven children, and confirmed twenty-two. All this he accomplished alone, there being no one present to assist him. He left June 3d, Trinity Sunday, taking passage on the steamer "North Star." Once again, for the last time, Bishop Baraga visited Superior, in 1866. This was but shortly before he was maimed by the paralysis which latterly caused his death, and it is still a vivid memory with some how weak and frail he appeared on that occasion.

The successor to Father Van Paemel was the Rev. John Chebul,[1] who attended Superior at three different periods, between 1860 and 1875. He first arrived in August of the former year. About this time an organ was procured for the church and a choir organized.

(1) Many odd stories are told about Father Carie during his stay at Superior. Coming to Superior, during the first week of Lent, he performed at once all of the ceremonies pertaining to Holy Week. He is also said, while at La Pointe, to have raised five crosses about twelve feet in height on the beach, on one of which he employed a Jew, then living at the place, to nail a "corpus," which is still in evidence at La Pointe Church. When Bishop Baraga came to La Pointe, however, Father Carie was compelled to leave the place, doing so in the steamer upon which the Bishop arrived.

(1) For many years Father Chebul had been conceded the honors as champion walker of the Northwest, but it seems now to be disputed. Father Valentine informing us that, while on a visit to Calvary, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, in 1881, he was told by Mr. Wolf, a resident of that place, of similar feats performed by the early missionaries there, which equaled, if not surpassed in length and endurance, those which had been performed by Father Chebul.

Of this organization Mrs. Mary Roy, then Miss Mary Cournoyer, was the first director and organist. Another acquisition was a church bell, donated to the mission by Bishop Baraga, who also gave two smaller ones to the Odanah Reservation and Bayfield mission, respectively. But the troubles of the good people of Superior were by no means over, for they had hardly become accustomed to the sonorous tones of the new bell and congratulated themselves upon its posession, when it was struck by lightning and badly cracked. But, though most of the harmony had been knocked out of it through this untoward event, the bell still held its place, doing yeoman service in calling the faithful together until 1872, when it went down in a conflagration which at that time consumed the entire church edifice. For seven years following, the good people of this congregation were again without a bell.

After an absence from this charge of about seven months, during which period the Rev. Charles Magnié assumed the duties, Father Chebul returned to Superior in the early spring of 1868. During the summer following he built an addition to the church, making it longer. One Sunday during August, 1870, two reverend professors[1] of the Salesianum, near Milwaukee, visited Superior and held services in the church. They arrived at Duluth, intending to stay there, but on hearing that Father Chebul was not, nor had been for some time, at Superior, they crossed over in a small boat, arriving just in time to celebrate High Mass. This visit was much enjoyed by the little congregation, who were glad once more to have a priest in their midst and thus be afforded the opportunity of attending service. In consequence of promises to these esteemed guests, Vincent Roy had a birch-bark canoe built by the Indians, which he sent to the Salesianum, where, for a number of years, it was kept in a conspicuous place as a friendly reminder of Superior.

On Christmas eve, 1870, the Rev. Bonaventura De Goey arrived at Superior to become its future pastor. Father Chebul was also making a visit to Superior at that time from Duluth. On Christmas morning, however, Father Chebul returned to Duluth, reaching there in time to hold services in the old Sacred Heart Church, which had been built by him some time previously, and was the first church erected in Duluth or its vicinity. These journeys, some seven miles across the bay, in the winter on snow shoes, were of quite frequent occurrence at times, when Father Chebul was the only priest at the head of the lake, and it is owing to these and similar undertakings that he gained quite an enviable reputation as a pedestrian among the settlers. Sixty to seventy miles on foot are said to have been an ordinary journey for him, although many are the instances quoted of greater distances undertaken. He would go to St. Paul, for instance, making the entire trip in a surprisingly short space of time, so that it was regarded capital traveling, the only road then open between these two points being the old military wagon road, which was known to be one hundred and sixty-five miles in length.

Father De Goey remained as pastor of Superior until the spring of 1872. Friday evening, March 1, 1872, a fire, starting in the vestry from unknown causes, completely demolished the little church at Superior. A monstrance which is still in use, a crucifix that hung on the wall back of the altar at the time of the fire, and an oleograph ($2\times3\frac{1}{2}$) of the Lord's Supper, which was badly scorched by the flames, are still shown as mementos of that sad event.

For a time following the fire, the Catholics at Superior had neither church nor pastor, so that the Sacrifice of the Mass but rarely occurred, and then only when some wandering priest was caught in that vicinity. The people would hire a hall or some other available building, and for the moment enjoy the privileges of which the fire had for the time despoiled them. Such treats were, in fact, of rare occurrence, the only one on record being the occasion of a visit by the Rev. A. Lacombe, O. M. I., now Vicar-General of the St. Albert's diocese of the Northwest Territory, while on his way to Canada, and also upon his return from there. In November, 1872, a building erected by the Methodists for a church was bought for $1,000. This church, with the improvements, both internal and external, which were made from time to time, served its purpose as such until November, 1895. The old building still stands on the same spot, at the northeast corner of Third street and Thompson avenue, where it is now known as St. Francis Xavier's Hall.

In 1873 the Rev. Hugh Quigley, D. D., attended Superior for eleven months, but there was no priest at Superior during the greater part of 1874, in fact until December, when Father Chebul again took up his residence there. He remained, however, for but a short time, leaving again, it is believed, some time during May, 1875. His withdrawal took place at the time when Superior was transferred from the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of Marquette to that of La Crosse. Though originally a part of the Milwaukee diocese, and afterwards of the diocese of La Crosse, Superior, and with it Northeast Wisconsin,[1] had been committed by the Bishops of these dioceses to the administration, at first, of Bishop Baraga, and, after him, to his successor, the Right Rev. Ignatius Mrak, but the purposes for which that commission had been agreed upon no longer existing, this territory returned to the Bishop to whose diocese it had been assigned by the Propaganda. Such being the conclusion arrived at, Superior was henceforth under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of La Crosse.

(1) Archbishop Katzer and Father Innocent Wapelhorst, O. S. F.

(1) It is generally understood that this part of Wisconsin returned to the diocese of La Crosse in the spring of 1875.

From May, 1875, to November, 1878, there was no priest regularly attending Superior, although it was visited, occasionally, from Duluth and other points in Minnesota. Hence it came that the Revs. George Keller, J. B. M. Genin, Ignatius Tomazin, and Joseph F. Buh, now Vicar-General of Duluth diocese, all at one time or another held service at this place. In November, 1878, Superior again obtained a resident pastor, in the person of the Rev. Christoph A. Verwyst.

The church, though in use since 1872, had never as yet been dedicated, so, after it had been given a thorough going over, on August 17, 1879, duly authorized by the Right Rev. Michael Heiss, then Bishop of La Crosse, Father Verwyst blessed and dedicated it to St. Francis Xavier, Apostle of the Indies. He was assisted on this occasion by the Rev. William de la Porte. On the same day a bell was also blessed. Of the expense incurred in the purchase and shipment of this bell—it was cast in Baltimore—Mr. Vincent Roy, a Catholic resident of Superior, contributed seventy-five dollars.

Vincent Roy was a man worthy of more than passing notice, being a noticeable figure in the growth and progress of Superior, as well as of the congregation of St. Francis Xavier. It may be said of him, with as much truth as it can be said of any man: "He was a self-made man." He was the son of a half-breed father and an Ojibway mother, born in 1825, the third of eleven children in the family, the place of his birth being his father's trading post and farm on the Minnesota side of the Rainy Lake River, where it is joined by the Little Fork. His childhood passed by in those surroundings. At the age of fourteen he was brought to La Pointe, Madeline Island, in Ashland Bay, at which place there was a school, which, however, was of little benefit to him, whose entire schooling did not occupy a period amounting to one year. Yet he was indefatigable in learning by himself, so that, in after life, he was found to speak, read and write correctly the English and French languages, besides his own Ojibway and a little Latin. In business he was no less energetic and thorough. He passes as one of the founders of Superior, owning from the outstart in 1854, until it was absorbed by the state, a tract, eighty acres, now known as "Roy's Addition." Until 1868 he followed the occupation of his ancestors, fur trading, and thereafter he conducted a grocery business on Second street, between Hollingshead and St. John. The interests of the Ojibway people, which he never betrayed, saw him twice at Washington, D. C., first in the year 1852, and again in 1866, having opportunity to shake hands with the Presidents, Fillmore and Johnson, respectively. In politics he was an enthusiastic Democrat. At the Chicago Convention in 1884, he was noticed waving his hat on the top of his cane, in the front ranks of the twenty thousand people present. The St. Louis Convention in 1888, and the next convention at Chicago in 1892, also saw him present. In his personal appearance were noted the features peculiar to his race, a judgment singularly clear, a conversation outspoken yet unobtrusive, a taste altogether refined, in his habits of living as well as in every other way. Of his eminent Christian virtues were remarkable his strong, impregnable faith, and the sublime fortitude with which he took the reverses of fortune toward the end of his life. He died on Holy Thursday, April 2, 1896, leaving a wife, but no children, to mourn his loss.

Rev. E. Vollmer.

In 1880 the condition of affairs looked anything but promising even to those who had pinned their faith on the ultimate success of Superior as a business center. The actual wealth of the place was largely represented by the non-resident class, who had been satisfied to invest in Superior real estate as a speculation, but otherwise took little, if any, interest in the place, and certainly did it but little good. Of course, the taxes paid by these people helped to supply the means for current expenses and satisfy the demands of the moment, but it was the actual settler who realized the difficulties that beset his way, and knew, to the full extent of its value, what real privation meant. Still, there was always a little surplus to be found when needs be, so that, in spite of all of the hardships endured by them, the people of Superior have always responded promptly and to the full extent of their means when called upon for aid. As evidence of the markedly charitable proclivities of these people, there are many instances, although one, perhaps, will answer all purposes as an illustration. When, in 1880, Ireland was suffering in the throes of a relentless famine, and in her extremity cried aloud for aid, the Catholics of Superior responded promptly with a donation amounting to $375. This, too, when the congregation had dwindled down to less than fifty families, a majority of which were Ojibway or half-breeds. Of the total amount of this subscription, Vincent Roy gave $25 and Richard Bardon $50.

Bardon was another of the pioneer settlers whose memory will ever remain dear to the people of Superior. He was born in 1814, in County Wexford, Ireland, and, after coming to this country, resided for about twelve years with his family in Kentucky. In 1857 he removed to Superior, where he resided until the time of his death. He was a firm believer in the place and a staunch and loyal supporter of broadly charitable views and much natural goodness of heart, and when he died, on January 11, 1889, was sincerely regretted by the entire community. As others, too, who have borne the toil and hardships of pioneer life and yet been loyal and liberal to their church, may be mentioned such men as James Collier, a native of Queen's County, Ireland, William Crawford, Patrick and John Fay, A. G. Bertrand, the families Cadotte, St. John, Lefeve, Gouge, Bellaire, Osagie, Lord, Morrison, Thomas Garrity, Timothy Simon, Anthony Gallagher, and John Collins.

The first section of the parsonage at Superior was erected in 1881. To meet the expenses of this building, a fair and social was held in the early part of the year, at which four hundred and twenty-nine dollars was realized. Another social during the summer realized nearly as much, so that the indebtedness on the building, amounting thus far to $1,200, was greatly reduced.

As pastor of St. Francis Xavier congregation, Father Verwyst had attained the good of his particular ambition—that of a religious life. Gradually, however, he completed his arrangements for the contemplated change, and, finally, with the full consent of his Ordinary, he associated himself with the Franciscan Order. It was a proviso, however, of this arrangement, that this Order should in the future provide for the spiritual wants of the Catholics at Superior. In accordance with this agreement, and subsequent correspondence with the Very Rev. Vincent Halbfas, provincial of the Franciscan Province, St. Cordis Jesu, the Rev. Odoric Derenthal, O. S. F., arrived at Superior in November, 1881, as his successor in the pastorate of St. Francis. Later, the necessary permission having been obtained from the Sacred Congregation de Propaganda Fidei at Rome, Father Verwyst left in January, 1882, for the Novitiate at Teutopolis, Illinois, where, having changed his Christian name to Chrysostomus, he became a member of the Franciscan Order.

At Superior, Father Odoric at once set to work to advance the interests and improve the condition of the church. In this direction, he, among other things, added thirty feet to the length of the church, built a vestry and otherwise improved the property. On September 18, 1882, the Rev. Servatius Altmicks, O. S. F., assisted by the Fathers Derenthal, O. S. F., and Alphons Schroer, O. S. F., blessed these additions.

Father Alphons, who had been but recently ordained, was even at that time in the last stages of consumption. He died at Superior, March 21, 1883, and was laid to rest in the Ojibway burying ground, on Wisconsin Point, the place of burial having been selected by him some time before his death. Father Odoric now left the Superior congregation in charge of Father Servatius, himself attending to the numerous missions which dotted the country round about Superior and Minnesota. In this particular field, his successors were the Fathers Casimir Vogt, Chrysostom Verwyst and Sylvester Buschkuehler, who continued the good work until 1894. A more adequate idea of the labors undertaken by these zealous priests may, perhaps, be obtained from an inspection of a list of the places visited. At a few, only, of these places were to be found churches, even of the crudest kind, while, in a majority of cases, services were held in the private residences or wherever most convenient. In Minnesota, thus passing along the line of the St. Paul and Duluth Railroad, they visited at Fond du Lac, *Carlton, Barnum, Sandy Lake, Moose Lake, Willow River, Kettle River, Sunrise, Wolf Creek, Mora; along the Northern Pacific: *Papashkominitigong, *Cloquet, *St. Louis Reservation, *Norman; on Agate Bay: Two Harbors, Vermillion and *Mosquito Lake.

In Wisconsin, their journeyings took them to *West Superior, *Gordon, *Solon Springs, *Spooner, Veazie, or Superior Junction, *Shell Lake, Bashaw, Arbuckles' Settlement, Butternut Lake, *Hayward, *Court Oreilles, *Pawquawang, *Bellils Falls, *Mud Lake, Jordan Settlement, Round Lake, Chetek Lake, Lesard's Settlement, Murray Settlement, *Flambeau Farm, *Bruce, Weyerhaeuser, *Appolonia, *Big Bend, Little Dam, *mouth of Fisher River, *St. Anne, Eagle Point

Jimes' Falls, Spring Brook, *Yellow River, Spirit Lake, Yellow Lake, Grantsburgh, Wood River, *Trade River, Apple River, Balsam Lake, Clam Falls, Minong, Frog Creek, Marengo, and *Sanborn.

Some of these places were attended only for a certain time, while those in Minnesota have not been visited since January, 1892. Of those mentioned in Wisconsin, Father Chrysostom still visits a few, and Father Sylvester the greater number. Both have made their home, since January, 1894, in the house of the Franciscan Fathers at Ashland.

A few weeks after the blessing of the church at Superior by Father Servatius Altmicks, on September 18, 1882, the Right Rev. Kilian Flasch, since the preceding year Bishop of La Crosse, visited Superior. He praised the good work which the congregation had accomplished, and the good spirit which he found prevalent may have emboldened him to bid the congregation Godspeed. He noticed, however, with much regret, that as yet no school had been provided for the children of the parish, and though far from feeling disposed to charge the people with neglect, urged compliance with his request for such an institution, at the earliest possible date. He appreciated to a full extent the noble and self-sacrificing efforts of these people in behalf of the Church, and realized the heavy burdens put upon them: still, having all his life been a zealous promoter of Christian education, could not withhold the well-meant and kindly admonition which urged them to early, if not immediate action. That the importance of the cause justified his zeal, none doubted, and least of all those to whom the request was made.

Mr. Richard Bardon.

Then, as is often the case in such emergencies, help came when least expected. Five generous souls, all residents of St. Louis, Missouri, hearing of the condition of affairs at Superior, immediately came forward with the handsome donation of $1,225, from other sources came $400 more, and the Bishop, who believed in practicing as well as preaching, sent his personal check for another hundred; nor was the congregation idle, but spurred on to extra efforts by these spontaneously generous contributors, gathered together some seven hundred dollars, the first to head the list being Mrs. Louis Morisette, a widow of quite limited resources. By May, 1883, the contract for building the new school house was let and work begun. The building was of frame, three stories high, and had a mansard roof. The first and second stories were divided into commodious school rooms, while the third was occupied by the School Sisters for a residence. When finished and furnished throughout, the building cost in the neighborhood of $4,000, all of which was paid off, leaving the property entirely clear by December 3, 1884.

On August 1, 1883, Father Servatius was succeeded by the Rev. Eustace Vollmer, O. S. F., who has remained in charge of the congregation up to the present. September 2, 1883, the new school was dedicated and opened for use. Father Eustace performed the dedicatory services, the Rev. Christopher Murphy, of Duluth, delivering the sermon.

Of additions and improvements made to the church since that time may be mentioned: March 19, 1884, a statue of St Joseph, costing $80, donated by James Bardon and Vincent Roy (this statue was a desired companion piece to the statue of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which had been standing on the opposite side of the altar since May 1, 1880, being the joint gift of Vincent Roy, John Bertrand, and the Altar Society); on August 1st, a new main altar and, as substitutes for side altars, stands for the statues of the Blessed Virgin and St. Joseph were placed in the church at a cost of $362; October 19th a statue of the Sacred Heart, blessed and placed in the niche in the high altar, donated by Mrs. Richard Bardon and daughters.

In the summer of 1889 a dwelling house costing $1,500 was built beside the school, for the Sisters. At the same time, "The Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ," invited by Father Eustace and the people generally, built St. Francis' Hospital, on the northeast corner of Third and Stinson. It is a brick structure, is furnished throughout with every modern convenience and cost

*There is a church at this place.

$34,000. On November 15th the first Sisters placed in charge of this institution arrived from Fort Wayne, Indiana, where the mother house is established, and the Hospital opened for patients. During the ensuing twelve months, eight hundred and sixty-five patients were received and cared for, which augured well for the success of the undertaking. And that it was successful is evident from the fact that, in the fourth year of their residence at Superior, the Sisters built St. Mary's Hospital, at the West End, at a cost of $85,000.

In 1885 the Catholics living in or about West Superior were all members of St. Francis Xavier's congregation, and attended that church, although many had to go a distance of three, and, for that matter, a distance of four miles in order to do so. Occasionally, however, services were held in what was known as the Matt. Carpenter School. Some time in the early part of 1886 steps were taken toward the establishment of a congregation at West Superior, by the Rev. Zephyrin Engelhardt, O. S. F. This idea was carried out to its fulfillment, the church of the Sacred Heart being built by his successor, the Rev. Casimir Vogt, O. S. F., who celebrated the first Mass in that building on July 17, 1887. During the next three years, services were conducted in this church successively by the Rev. Fathers Marcellus Buehlmann, Damien Koziolek, and Bruno Torka. The latter priest caused the first section of the Sacred Heart parochial school to be built, which, when completed, was dedicated by the Right Rev. Bishop, on Sunday, October 5, 1890. From that date the Franciscan Fathers ceased to attend this congregation, the Bishop appointing one of the diocesan clergy as first resident pastor.

On October 5th, also, an important meeting was held at the house of the Franciscan Fathers, at which were present the Right Rev. Bishop Flasch, Very Rev. Provincial Ferdinand Bergmeyer, Father Eustace Vollmer, Pastor, James Bardon, J. S. Ritchie, John Keaugh, Vincent Roy, John A. Bardon, and H. E. Laffitte. It was there decided to build a new church of stone, the location selected being on the northwest corner of Fourth and Stinson. The school building and Sisters' residence, which at that time occupied the site selected, were to be removed to the east of Fourth Street, between Stinson and Newton. Before the adjournment of this meeting, those present subscribed $11,500 toward the erection of the new church—a very fair start for those times. Nothing more was done during the fall and spring, with the exception of having the necessary plans prepared, and there the matter rested.

About mid-summer, 1891, the school building and Sisters' house were removed and the site gotten in readiness for the new church. The plans, which were drawn by Brother Adrian, O. S. F., called for a building of Lake Superior brown sandstone, 150x56 feet, and Gothic in style of architecture. These details were carried out to the letter. On October 5th, exactly a year after the date on which the first meeting was held, work on the foundation of the building was actually begun, and by November 17th the foundation and basement walls were completed. Then the work was allowed to rest for a considerable period. During the summer of 1893, the parochial school building was enlarged, an addition fully as large as the original structure being built on to it. The improvement cost the congregation in the neighborhood of three thousand dollars. The upper story of the new part was first used for a parish hall, but was soon needed for school purposes, as the regular attendance was increasing rapidly.

Mr. Vincent Roy.

On January 2, 1895, St. Francis Xavier's congregation was incorporated under the State laws of Wisconsin. At a meeting held by the Board of Directors of this congregation, soon after, is was decided to build a parsonage at the rear of the church, but owing to the unhealthy business conditions prevailing, it would be unwise to attempt the completion of the church building. The parsonage, a structure 44x40 feet, three stories high, was built of the same kind of material as that to be used in the church. In addition to this, the walls of the church, as much as already built, were roofed in, floors laid, pews and windows put in, and a few other necessaries added in order to make it available for immediate use. The work was begun on both buildings on June 13th, and by the middle of October they were completed. The new church, as finished, was dedicated on All Saints' Day, November 1, 1895, the Rev. Francis Fabian Rechtiene, O. S. F., performing the ceremony, assisted by Fathers Sylvester Buschkuehler, Eustace Vollmer, pastor, and Valentine Dorenkemper, assistant pastor.

At the present time the congregation of St. Francis Xavier's Church numbers two hundred and twenty-five families, or about one thousand two hundred souls. The school, which is in charge of the Sisters of Notre Dame, of Milwaukee, has an attendance of three hundred scholars. The trustees of the congregation are: William J. Leader, secretary; J. A. Bardon, treasurer; and the Consultors, James Bardon, Louis Pratt, and James T. Elliott.

Of Catholic societies to which members of the congregation belong, there are: The Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, chartered January, 1895: J. T. Elliott, president; Dr. H. E. Laffitte, recording secretary; William J. Leader, financial secretary; Louis Pratt, treasurer. Catholic Order of Foresters, Nemadji Court No. 466, chartered January, 1895: Vincent McKinnon, chief ranger; William J. Leader, vice-chief ranger; Patrick Lynch, past chief ranger; Joseph Morisette, financial secretary; David Murray, recording secretary; James Rice, treasurer. St. Joseph's Men's Society, organized in 1882: James Ritchie, president; James Collins, vice-president; Dr. H. E. Laffitte, secretary; Louis Pratt, treasurer. St. Mary's Altar Society: Miss Annie Bardon, president; Miss Mary Bardon, secretary; Mrs. Mary Roy, treasurer. Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, organized 1883: Miss Kate Simon, prefect; Miss Lizzie McCormick, secretary; Miss Lizzie Doran, treasurer. Third Order of St. Francis, organized 1886: Mrs. Georgiana Morisette, president; Miss Mary Bardon, secretary; Mrs. H. E. Laffitte, treasurer.

The Rev. Eustace Vollmer, O. S. F., present resident pastor at Superior, Wisconsin, was born March 2, 1851, at Rietberg, in Westphalia, at which place, when of sufficient age, he attended the progymnasium. He entered the novitiate of the Order of St. Francis of the Province "Saxoniae Stae Crucis," September 30, 1869, in Warendorf, Westphalia, taking simple vows on October 12, 1873. From 1870 to 1872 he studied humaniora, at Weidenbrueck, philosophy from 1872 to 1874, at Duesseldorf, and theology at Paderborn and St. Louis, United States, from 1874 to 1877. He was ordained to the priesthood on June 4, 1876, by the Right Rev. Archbishop Patrick Ryan, D. D., then Coadjutor to Archbishop Kenrick, and said his first Holy Mass on the following day in St. Anthony's Church, St. Louis, Missouri. From 1877 to 1879 he attended St. Hubert's, at Chanhasses, and St. Victory's, at Hennepin, Carver County, Minnesota, and from 1879 to 1880 the congregation at Schuerville, Indiana. From September, 1880, until July, 1883, he was in charge of the congregations at La Pointe and Ashland, after which he assumed his present duties as rector at Superior.

Work Accomplished by the Franciscan Fathers of the Province of Sacred Heart, St. Louis, Missouri, since their Arrival in the Diocese of La Crosse in 1878.

Ashland, Ashland County: Church of St. Agnes, English, German, French, Polish, Bohemian, Italian and Chippewa. Residence of Franciscan Fathers. Church started by the Rev. A. T. Schüttelhofer about 1877, completed in 1880. School built and placed in charge of Sisters of Perpetual Adoration, from La Crosse, in 1881. New church erected and pastoral residence built in 1887. Present magnificent school building erected in 1894.

Bayfield, Bayfield County: Christ Church, English and Indian, built, and day school established and placed in charge of Sisters of Joliet, Illinois, in 1879. Boarding school for Indian girls established in 1880. Present residence of Franciscan Fathers built in 1890.

Bellils Falls, Sawyer County: St. Joseph's Church, French and Indian, placed in charge of Franciscan Fathers and church built in 1889.

Big Bend, Chippewa County: Indian school, attended by Franciscan Fathers. Building in course of erection.

Buffalo Bay (Redcliff Reservation), Bayfield County: St. Francis Assissi Indian congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers. Church built, and school placed in charge of Franciscan Sisters, of Joliet, Illinois, in 1880. New church and school erected in 1893.

Butternut, Ashland County: Immaculate Conception, English congregation, now attended by the Rev. B. Klein, of Fifield, Church built in 1885.

Courtes Oreilles, Sawyer County: St. Francis Solanus, Indian congregation, church begun in 1880, and completed in 1881. School opened and placed in charge of Franciscan Sisters, of Greenfield Park, Milwaukee, in 1885.

Flambeau, Chippewa County: St. Francis of Assissi, French and Indian congregation. French attended by the Rev. Fathers C. S. S. P., of Chippewa Falls, and Indians by Franciscan Fathers of Ashland. Church begun in 1880, and completed in 1881. Pastoral residence begun in 1883 and completed in 1884.

Glidden, Ashland County: Most Precious Blood, English congregation, now attended by the Rev. B. Klein, of Fifield. Church built in 1886.

Gordon, Douglas County: Lady of the Angels, Indian congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers of Ashland. Church built in 1887.

Hayward, Sawyer County: St. Joseph's, English congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers of Ashland. Church built in 1882.

Hurley, Iron County: Blessed Virgin of Seven Dolors, English congregation, attended by the Rev. Gilbert Nuonno, O. S. F. Church built in 1885.

Iron River, Bayfield County: St. Michael's, French and English congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers of Bayfield. Church built in 1892.

Lac du Flambeau, Vilas County: St. Joseph's, English and Indian congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers from Ashland. Church built in 1895.

Lac du Flambeau, Vilas County: St. Anthony de Padua, Indian congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers from Ashland. Church built in 1894.

Mason, Bayfield County: St. Aloysius, English congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers of Bayfield. Church built in 1887.

Mellen, Ashland County: English congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers of Ashland. Church built in 1896.

Mouth of Yellow River, Burnett County: Our Lady of Perpetual Help, Indian congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers from Ashland. Church built in 1887.

Odanah, Ashland County: Lady of Seven Dolors, Indian congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers of Ashland. The church was built by the Rev. J. Chebul in 1863, and the school built in 1882.

Pakwewang, Sawyer County: St. Anthony de Padua, Indian congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers of Ashland. Church built in 1882.

Phillips, Price County: St. Patrick's congregation, attended by Rev. Stephen Duren. Church built in 1885.

Sanborn, Ashland County: English and French congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers at Bayfield. Church now in course of erection.

Saxon, Iron County: English congregation, attended by the Rev. Gilbert Nuonno, O. S. F., of Hurley. Church built in 1892.

Trade River, Polk County: Sacred Heart, Indian congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers of Ashland. Church built in 1890.

White Birch, Douglas County: Our Lady of Good Counsel, Indian congregation, attended by Franciscan Fathers from Ashland. Church built in 1888.

Superior (old), Douglas County: St. Francis Xaverius, English, French and Indian congregation. School built in 1882. New church and new Franciscan residence erected in 1894.

Washburn, Bayfield County: St. Louis, French and English congregation. Church built in 1886. New church and school building erected in 1890. Franciscan residence built 1894.

West Superior, Douglas County: Sacred Heart, French and English congregation, now attended by the Rev. W. Fardy. Church begun in 1886 and completed in 1887. School built in 1889.

St. Mary's Church, South Superior, Wis.

THAT part of Superior known as South Superior is a suburb of West Superior, and is connected with it by a broad and well-paved thoroughfare and street railway. South Superior owes its existence to the Superior boom of 1890-93, during which period a number of people throughout the length and breadth of the country went wild over the possibilities of that place. Considerably less than a decade ago, not one dwelling-house could be seen where the present town now stands, and it was a remarkably busy place, too, as, like many another center of similar growth, it was well provided with factories, such as chair factories, wagon works, stove factories, windmill factories, a large cooper shop and bicycle factory, which offered in the aggregate employment for a large number of hands. Everything, in fact, was done on the rush, the town being crowded with a large number of that particular class of people who drift in and out of every new community, without having sustained any material advantage themselves, or done anything worthy of notice for the good of mankind in general. But there are exceptions to every rule, and among the newcomers were quite a number of substantial Catholics, it being estimated at that time that there were one hundred and twenty families representing that belief, who were of Irish, German, and French birth or descent. Becoming aware of so large a Catholic settlement in that place, Father Sturm, then pastor of the Sacred Heart Church at West Superior, established a mission for them, to which he and his assistants gave frequent and regular attendance. It was during Father Sturm's administration that a temporary frame structure was erected at South Superior, of which the people were very much in need. In 1891 the Rev. Joseph Hermon succeeded Father Sturm in the pastorate at West Superior, and also retained charge of the mission, continuing to visit it until it was given a resident pastor of its own in the person of the Rev. Charles Jungblut, who came and took up his residence there during that year. His stay, however, was of the briefest, as he had barely become acquainted with his people when he was transferred to another field, and the mission again came under the charge of Father Hermon. This reverend pastor did much toward assisting and upbuilding the mission, and it was under his administration that the congregation was incorporated under the name of St. Mary's of the Assumption. At about this time, also, the congregation acquired possession of the six lots which, from point of location and for other reasons, were admirably adapted for the purpose for which they were intended.

St. Mary's Church, South Superior, Wis.

Rev. John Klop.

In January, 1893, the Rev. Charles Weber was appointed pastor of St. Mary's, attending that mission for ten months. The present rector of St. Mary's congregation, the Rev. Father Klop, was appointed to that position in December, 1893, prior to which date, for some considerable time, the temporal affairs of the congregation remained in statu quo. This, of course, was entirely owing to the depressing influences which followed the speculative period which marked the zenith of Superior's aspirations. Since then that section of the country has suffered continuously from hard times, the population has decreased to a large extent, and as a result the congregation of St. Mary's has decreased greatly in numbers. This has made it impossible for Father Klop to accomplish as much as he desired, and might have done under more favorable conditions. The old frame structure originally built at South Superior for temporary use is still in evidence there, and a witness of the intentions of many Catholics who have long since passed to other portions of the country. Those who remain, however, are zealous, as far as their means will permit, and as they are unable to build a structure of their own, they have rented a hall, which has been fitted by them, in which to hold divine services.

At the present time, St. Mary's congregation, which, during its better days numbered not less than a hundred families, consists of forty families, most of whom are zealous and earnest in the performance of their duties.

The Rev. John Klop was born in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg on the 27th day of August, 1866. His primary education was acquired in the schools of his native country, the higher courses being taken in the educational institutions in France. In 1891 he came to the United States, and the year following entered the Seminary at St. Francis, near Milwaukee, as a theological student of the diocese of La Crosse. After spending a brief period of seven months at St. Francis, he went to La Crosse, where he was ordained to the priesthood by the Right Rev. James Schwebach, Bishop of the diocese, and assigned at once as assistant pastor to the Sacred Heart Church at West Superior. Ten months later he was appointed pastor of St. Mary's, at South Superior, and of St. John's at West Superior, of both of which he is still in charge.

St. Peter's Church, Tilden, Wis.

THE first Catholics to settle in the vicinity of Tilden, Chippewa County, Wisconsin, came there in 1855, and for some time following attended Mass at Chippewa Falls. Four years after their arrival they built a little church, which was attended by the resident priests at Chippewa Falls. On July 31, 1869, the congregation was given a pastor of its own, in the person of the Rev. A. Koke, who remained until August 24, 1870. During his administration a parsonage was built. After the retirement of Father Koke the congregation was temporarily attended by the Rev. C. F. X. Goldsmith, and the Rev. G. Backes was also pastor there from May 27, 1871, to October in the same year. His successor was the Rev. G. Noever, who remained from December, 1871, until August, 1874. During his residence at Tilden, a school-house was erected and a school established. The next pastor was the Rev. A. J. Verberk, who was succeeded in November, 1875, by Father G. Keller. He remained but a year, but during that time the present church edifice was begun and completed. After Father Keller came the Rev. B. Stroehle, who was at Tilden from November, 1876, until 1878. Then followed in succession the Revs. A. Mendl, from December, 1878, until October, 1881; J. M. Wicker, from October, 1881, until July, 1882, and A. Mendl, from July, 1882, until April, 1887, during whose pastorate—in 1885—the present school-house was built. Then the Rev. P. Geyer took charge of the congregation in May, 1887, remaining until September, 1889. He was followed by the Revs. I. Schaller, from September, 1889, to April, 1891, and J. M. Wicker, who again took charge in May, 1891, and is still the incumbent. During his present pastorate the priest's house was built. The congregation of St. Peter now consists of one hundred and thirty families, and the parochial school, which is taught by two School Sisters of Notre Dame Convent, Milwaukee, has an attendance of one hundred and two scholars. Of societies connected with this congregation there are two, an Altar Society and a Young Ladies' Society.

St. Peter's Church, School and Parsonage, Tilden, Wis.

Rev. J. M. Wicker.

There is a small mission at Cook's Valley, which is attended from Tilden, and is comprised of some nine families.

The Rev. J. M. Wicker, pastor of St. Peter's at Tilden, was born in 1854. He was ordained to the priesthood in La Crosse by Bishop Heiss in 1877 and has been pastor of the present congregation since May 9, 1891.

Immaculate Conception Church, Tomah, Wis.

THE first resident pastor appointed to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, at Tomah, Monroe County, Wisconsin, was the Rev. W. F. Quigley, D. D. He came in 1868, and remained until 1870, when he was succeeded by the Rev. John Durward, who was resident pastor from that date until 1884. During his residence at Tomah several improvements were made, among them being the erection of a parochial school. Father Durward was followed by the Rev. J. B. Metzler, who enlarged the church and organized a branch of the Catholic Knights during his administration. He left Tomah in 1892, being succeeded by the Rev. William Weckes, who remained one year, when Father Louis Wurst, present pastor of the congregation, took charge. The present congregation consists of one hundred and fifty families, and the parochial school has a regular attendance of seventy-five scholars, who are in charge of two Sisters of St. Dominic. There are four Catholic societies connected with the congregation—the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin: Ignatius Gonderzeik, president; Rev. L. Wurst, secretary; John Mast, treasurer. Catholic Order of Foresters: Edward Graham, president; John Reiber, vice-president; Daniel Crowley, financial secretary; Daniel Sullivan, recording secretary; Frank Ebert, treasurer. Altar Society: Mrs. Crowley, president; Mrs. Schwarty, secretary and treasurer. St. Agnes' Society: Miss Sadie Kelley, president; Miss Nellie Reel, secretary and treasurer.

Immaculate Conception Church, Tomah, Wis.

Rev. Louis Wurst.

The Rev. Louis Wurst was born in Germany in 1866. When still quite a child he came to America, where he entered at once upon a course of study at St. Thomas' Seminary, St. Paul, Minnesota. Later he entered the Seminary of St. Francis, near Milwaukee, at which institution he was ordained to the priesthood on May 3, 1893. On October 15th following, he was appointed resident pastor of the Immaculate Conception congregation, which position he has since maintained.

St. Ann's Church, Turtle Lake, Wis.

THE church of St. Ann at Turtle Lake, Barron County, Wisconsin, was built in 1884. The congregation, at that time unable to support a resident priest, was attended once a month by the pastors from Somerset, and later by those residing at Cumberland. In 1890 the Rev. Fidelis Vollebregt, brother of the present rector, was appointed as first resident pastor. During his pastorate at Turtle Lake, Father Vollebregt purchased and furnished a parochial residence. He was succeeded, in 1894, by his brother, the Rev. A. Vollebregt, present pastor of St. Ann's. The congregation consists of forty-five families.

Rev. A. Vollebregt.

The Rev. A. Vollebregt was born in Holland, and came to America in September, 1891. Since residing at Turtle Lake he has done much towards improving the chuch property at that place. Last year he built a new stone foundation under the church, fixed up the cemetery grounds and repaired the church and parsonage which had been considerably damaged by a cyclone during the previous year.

The congregation of St. Patrick's at Long Lake, Polk County, Wisconsin, which is attended as a mission by Father Vollebregt of Turtle Lake, was first established in 1875, in which year a small but neat church was erected. In its earlier years the Long Lake Congregation was attended first by the resident pastor at Hudson and afterwards, successively, by those living at Somerset and East Farmington; it has, however, been attached as a mission to Turtle Lake for some years past. This little church is furnished with a large bell, has a first-class organ and many other useful and valuable furnishings. The parish, with two or three exceptions, is composed of Irish families.

Another mission attended from Turtle Lake is that of St. Joseph's at Amery, also in Polk County. The church at this place was built about eight years ago, but owing to prevailing hard times, has not yet been completed. The congregation at the present time consists of about fifteen families in all, the majority of whom are Canadian French.

St. Mary's French Church at Apple River is another mission of St. Ann's. The congregation consists of twenty families, who are also all French Canadians. The church at this place was erected in 1889.

Still another mission attended from Turtle Lake is the French and English congregation established at Murray, in Chippewa County. This congregation has, within a short time, joined that of the station at Bruce, which is some twelve miles distant from Murray, where a new church was built during the past year.

There is also a station at Appolonia, which is under the domination of St. Ann's at Turtle Lake. A neat and comfortable little church, built at this place in 1896, is, owing to the hard times, still in an incomplete condition.

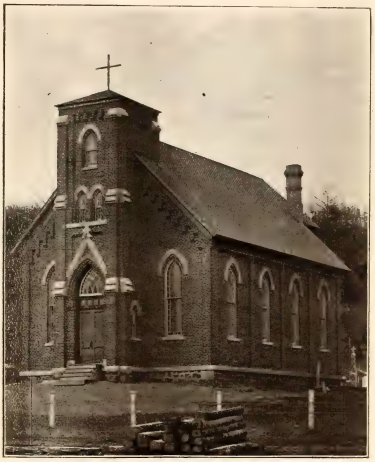
St. Theresa's Church, Union Center, Wis.

THE congregation of St. Theresa's, at Union Center, Juneau County, Wisconsin, was established thirty-six or thirty-seven years ago. For twenty years following it was attended as a mission by the resident pastors from Cazenovia. Then, for a time, it was attached to the pastorates at Lyndon and Mauston, but for the last fourteen years has been under the dominion of the pastor at Union Centre. The congregation of St. Theresa's now numbers about two hundred souls. There is but one Catholic organization, an Altar Society, connected with this parish.

The mission of St. Jerome's, at Wonewoc, Juneau County, which has a membership of about three hundred souls, is attended on every second and fourth Sunday in the month by the resident pastor from Union Centre. There is a large brick church at this mission.

St. Patrick's congregation, at Greenwood, Vernon County, Wisconsin, is another mission which is attended from Union Centre. Here there is a frame church. The congregation numbers about two hundred persons, and services are held at St. Patrick's on every third Sunday of the month.

The third mission attended by the same pastor is St.



St. Theresa's Church, Union Center, Wis.

John Nepomucene (Bohemian), Dilly, Vernon County. There are about three hundred members in this congregation, who receive spiritual attendance on the first Sunday in every month. This mission now owns a fine brick-veneered church, which has a large bell.

Still another mission attended from St. Theresa's is St. Wenzel's, near Yuba, Vernon County, where there are about one hundred and fifty Catholic families. This mission is attended on the first Sunday of each month. In addition to the services as above stated, Mass is said at each of these missions once a month on week days.

The Rev. John E. Prucha, present rector of St. Theresa's and missions attached, was born December 22, 1865, in New York City. He has the distinction of being the first priest born and ordained in this country whose parents are both Bohemian. His earlier education was obtained in the Catholic and public schools of his native city, after which he took a course in the classics at St. Vincent's College, Pennsylvania, after which he entered St. Francis' Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he completed his studies in philosophy and theology. He was finally ordained to the priesthood under Papal dispensation, by the Right Rev. Michael Heiss, on St. Patrick's Church, Hillsborough, Wis.

June 24, 1888. His first Mass was said on July the 8th following, in the church of Our Lady of Perpetual Help (Bohemian) in New York City. On August 1, Rev. John E. Prucha.

1888, he was appointed pastor of St. Wenzel's Bohemian Church, at La Crosse, Wisconsin, from which he was transferred to his present pastorate at St. Theresa's, on July 5, 1892. Since that time he has built a large brick church, English and German, at Union Centre, as well as St. Jerome's new brick church, English, German and Polish, at Wonewoc. This church was frescoed and fitted out with new pews during the year 1897, at an expense of six hundred dollars. Other improvements made by Father Prucha are the new church of St. John Nepomucene at Dilly, and an addition to St. Patrick's English Church, at Greenwood. During the years 1892 and 1893 he also attended St. Joseph's Church, at Kendall, Wisconsin, as a mission from Union Centre.

St. Louis Church, Washburn, Wis.

ACCORDING to the text of the "French Relations," it seems that the old and first chapel of the early missionary Fathers, Allouez and Marquette, was not on the Island of Madaline. It is related on most reliable authority that the first chapel of these pioneer fathers was built somewhere near Fish Creek, a few miles from the present location of Washburn, which is to-day a modern and thriving town of about 6,000 population. This town was laid out in 1884, at which time but few Catholic families lived within its limits. The first priest to say Mass at Washburn was the Rev. Chrysostom Verwyst, O. S. F., who, for want of a church, was compelled to hold services wherever it was most convenient. The first church was built by him in 1865, at which time also the parish of St. Louis was founded. Father Chrysostom Verwyst was succeeded by the Rev. Firmatus Freimuth, O. S. F., he being shortly followed by the Rev. Marian Glahn, O. S. F., who remained in charge from March 15, 1888, until January 29, 1893. Father Glahn was at this time resident priest at Bayfield, from which place he visited the mission at Washburn once each month. The congregation now grew so rapidly that the church soon became altogether too small for their accommodation. They, therefore, incorporated on August 26, 1887, as "St. Louis Catholic Church," under the state law and then at once applied for permission to exchange or sell the property for some more suitable for church purposes. The permission was granted by the Ordinary and in 1889 the present property, on which the second church now stands, was purchased. In 1890 the new building was erected under the direction of Father John Gafron, O. S. F., at that time local superior of Bayfield, to which this mission belonged. The work, though at times delayed, continued right along, the building being completed during December of the same year. The cost of the building was $4,483. In 1891 the parochial school was opened and Sister-house erected, the latter being completed and ready for occupancy in 1892. The school, which is divided into four departments, is under the direction of four Sisters of St. Francis, from Milwaukee. The attendance numbers 250. The expense incurred in the erection of the building amounted to $1,582. During 1892 the Sisters left the mission, and others from Joliet, Ill., took charge of St. Louis parochial school. In the same year $600 was invested in new school furniture, besides which a 600-pound bell was purchased and placed in the adjoining belfry.

St. Louis Church and School, Franciscan Residence and Sisters' Dwelling, Washburn, Wis.

In January, 1893, a change of pastors took place, the Rev. Father Placidus Krekeler, O. S. F., who came from San Francisco, Cal., taking charge of the congregation. Under the direction of the new pastor the Ladies' Altar Society was organized, and enrolled fifty members at the first meeting. During the spring of 1894 the church property was fenced around and the Young Ladies' Society presented to the congregation an elegant and valuable monstrance. The committee having this in charge were the Misses Jane Cavanaugh, Winnie Marsh, Lottie Thebadeau, Mary Ann Arseneau, Lizzie Savage, and Mary Legacy. In August following, the Province of the Sacred Heart accepted the St. Louis congregation of Washburn as a parish and decided to erect a residence there for the Franciscan Fathers. Father Krekeler was appointed the first superior and to him was intrusted the erection of the new building. The contract, which called for a structure 50x34 feet, with stone cellar and foundations, was let on September 19, in the presence of the Rev. P. Odilo Ziegler, O. S. F., pastor of St. Louis, and Brothers Didacus and Paschalis, O. S. F. During the summer of 1896 a new cemetery was purchased, containing ten acres, about twenty minutes drive from the church. In the month of March, 1897, the debt pending on the new residence ($1,400) was cancelled. During the latter part of 1894 Marquette Court No. 474 of the Catholic Order of Foresters was organized, the present officers of which are: Chief Ranger, William Dolan; Vice-Chief Ranger, Phil. O'Leary; Financial Secretary, T. Grogan; Recording Secretary, G. W. Martens; Treasurer, Ubald Ebacher. Other societies are: The Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Branch No. 102: B. J. Hughes, president; J. J. O'Sullivan, vice-president; J. W. Dolan, secretary; Alfred Beausleil, treasurer. Ancient Order of Hibernians: B. J. Hughes, president; Edward Starr, financial secretary; P. J. Bogie, recording secretary; J. W. Dolan, treasurer. The membership of the St. Louis congregation now numbers one thousand and six hundred souls.

The Rev. P. Placidus Krekeler, O. S. F., was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, September 2, 1855, of pious, God fearing parents, who were esteemed by their neighbors for their honesty and integrity. When old enough he attended the school in his native place. The thought of consecrating himself to the service of God had early taken possession of him. Circumstances, however, prevented him from carrying out his intention, and at an early age he was compelled to work on a farm. Here was shown the truth of the words, "God's ways are wonderful," for the hard labor of his position strengthened his arm and steeled his will. He applied himself diligently to his work, so that in a few years he had made much progress. When he was seventeen he thought the time had come for putting into execution his original design of studying for the priesthood. He, therefore, gave up his work and entered the Gymnasium Seraphicum in Cincinnati. There he pursued his classical studies for several years and then entered the Franciscan Order of Teutopolis, Illinois. Here he went through his

Rev. P. Krekeler.

